"A truce?" Aizawa gaped as Joker extended his hand. "Are you sure? Kid, I don't want to force you-"

“Like I said, I don’t want to hate you anymore. Besides, what I have to say is a lot bigger than our little feud.” Joker’s smile crinkled his golden eyes. “Unless you want us to keep going at each other’s throats? It... won’t be easy, but we could have a fresh start?”

Aizawa grabbed Joker’s hand. Suddenly, a surge of warmth in his chest extinguished a sickly, Reversed weight in his heart. The warm and caressing glow was like a phoenix being reborn from the ashes as everything was set right. He barely kept his surprise from showing as Joker took his hand back, staring down at it with a thoughtful frown.

“Interesting.” Joker mumbled as he flexed his hand.

“What was that?” Aizawa asked as the odd warmth faded.

“Nothing to worry about.” Joker shook his head, but all mirth fell away into a grave seriousness when Joker looked Aizawa in the eye. “Eraserhead, your students are in danger.”

Kaito marveled at the band on his wrist. The intricate lines reflected a dull rainbow of colors whenever he held it up to the light. How could something so beautiful be used for evil? This thing was a curse on Akira, but for somebody like him it was a blessing .

Akira smiled as he came up to the front desk. “Getting used to it?”

“Yeah. It’s strange, but it’s not bad. I can’t believe I actually have to ask this.” He looked back to Akira, Morgana perched on his shoulder. “How did it go?”

“It was...” Akira tilted his head and tugged on his bangs. “Nice?”

“I’m sensing a ‘but’ coming up.”

“But it’s a bit weird being on speaking terms with him. He listened to everything we had to say and Eraserhead said he would let Nezu know about the Summer Camp right away.”

“I’m surprised he was so calm. Still, I don’t know what they’re gonna do about it.” Morgana chimed in. “Are they going to cancel it?”

“I doubt it.” Akira frowned. “They didn’t cancel the Sports Festival after the USJ.”

“Yeah.” Morgana sighed.

“Well, I’m glad you came back safe. You two should get some rest.” Kaito leaned back in his chair and lazily swiveled back and forth. “You still look exhausted from your ordeal.”

“You better watch out Morgana, Kaito might take your job.”

“Hey!” Morgana scoffed. “But he’s right. Aren’t you visiting the cafe tomorrow? You’ll need your energy for that.”

“Yeah.” Akira rubbed the back of his head and chuckled. “I don’t know if I’m ready.”

“What’s the worse that could happen!?” Morgana rolled his eyes. “Risumi is probably going to strangle you with a hug or something.”

“That’s exactly what I’m worried about!” Akira pouted. “And Hitoshi… I’m gonna have to make it up to him somehow.”

“Your curry is a good start.” Kaito said. “But you have such a heavy curry debt already, I can’t even imagine how high the interest will be.”

“Yeah, yeah.” Akira walked towards the lounge door. “Good night!”

“Night.”

Kaito smiled after the door shut. The silver band gleamed as he stared at it with a rush of appreciation. Is this what it was like to feel normal, to not know every excruciating detail of the people you lay eyes on?

He could get used to this.

The Blue Lotus had never been so barren by the way the 'closed' sign hanging on the door. Akira shuffled his bag around and wiped the sweat from his palm, grip tightening on the little notebook in his other hand. The chime from the bell rang hollow over the empty booths and bare tables, the silence near deafening until the pounding of footsteps echoed from the kitchen.

The kitchen door burst open and Akira was nearly knocked back by the body crashing into him. Akira caught the faint scent of coffee on Hitoshi's clothes before the boy pulled back, but he pinned Akira with a tearful glare.

"What the hell were you thinking!?"

Akira couldn't squeeze out an answer before Risumi interrupted him.

"Language, Hitoshi!" She rounded on Akira, and he felt guilt creep up his spine at her puffy eyes. She gently hugged him. "Oh sweetheart, we're glad that you're safe."

"Y-yeah." Akira smiled as he melted in Risumi's calming scent. "Good to be back."

Risumi pulled back, but Akira stiffened as he was entrapped in another pair of arms. Ayumu's scent was stronger than Risumi's, with a slight hint of spice that made Akira feel... safe. His throat tightened when Ayumu stepped back and placed sturdy hands on Akira's shoulders, in the exact same manner as when he rescued Akira from that nightmare.

"You know you can talk to us about anything, right?" Ayumu asked.

Akira's eyes flicked to Hitoshi and Risumi, then back to Ayumu. "You didn't...?"

"No, I believe that people have the right to share their dreams only if they want to." He said softly. "I'm not going to intrude on that, but we know that you didn't come out of this completely unscathed."

Akira's gaze fell to the floor, his free hand knotting into a fist.

"I... I just..." A broken chuckle escaped him. "I-it was hard, being trapped down there."

"But you knew you were in trouble." Risumi didn't accuse or sound angry, just... sad. "Why didn't you come to us for help?"

Akira shrank further on himself. "I just didn't want anybody else to get hurt. I thought that if anybody should bare the pain, that it would be me.... and me alone."

"How can somebody so smart be such an idiot?" Hitoshi muttered. "We would've had your back if you just said something!"

"I know. I think... I just let certain things get to my head. I'm sorry, it won't ever happen again."

Hitoshi frantically shook his head and hugged Akira, who chuckled and hugged back. Risumi smiled as she joined in, wrapping both of her boys in sugary warmth. Ayumu smirked as they all pulled away, and he gently ruffled Akira's hair.

"Dear, what's that?" Risumi pointed to the notebook.

"Oh." Akira held it out. "It's my apology, as Hitoshi put it, for being an idiot. There are new recipes for curry and a curry bread that we could add to the menu. Of course there are coffee brands in there that'll enhance the flavors too. It's... it's color coordinated to keep track of everything."

“Thank you, this is a lovely gift.” Ayumu peeked over Risumi’s shoulder as she flipped through it. “But you aren’t suggesting that you want to get back to work so soon?”

“Yeah, you just went through hell!” Hitoshi said. “Do you ever take a break for yourself?”

“Maybe? I’ve been feeling too restless at home.”

Risumi glanced up from the notebook, eyes hardening in a motherly way. “You do look exhausted, Akira. You could always rest in our apartment. My quirk would guarantee that you get a good few hours of sleep.”

Akira’s eyes widened. “I... I would like that. Thank you.”

“No problem.” Risumi beamed. She looked past him when there was a knock on glass. “I hope you don’t mind, but I called a few of your friends.”

Akira glanced over his shoulder as familiar faces peeked in the window.

“We can turn them away if you’re too tired.” Ayumu said.

“No, we can let them in.” Akira sprouted a smile.

Risumi nodded as she went to open the door. Two bodies rushed in and crashed into Akira.

“Aniki!!!”

“Oof!”

Akira was floored as familiar faces flooded the cafe.

Kirishima and Ashido clutched onto him for dear life, a river of tears splotching his shirt.

Iida gasped, his arms chopping wildly. "Kirishima, Ashido, at least give him some room to breathe!!"

"I'm... sorry!!" Ashido wailed into his shoulder. "I never thought I'd see him again!!"

"Same here!!" Kirishima's hug was rib crushing. "Never do something like this again, dude!"

"Can't... breathe..." Akira wheezed. "Do you mind letting me go...? The floor is comfortable, but I don't want to get to know it this well."

Ashido's sobbing turned into a wet cackle, and she unhanded him. Kirishima sniffled, but did the same. They both helped him into standing.

"... Here." Akira reached into his bag and handed a handkerchief to Ashido. "I came prepared."

"Thank you!" She wiped her face as Akira scanned the others.

Iida and Midoriya stood at the door, with the latter looking like a kicked puppy as he stared at Akira in utter disbelief. Uraraka shuffled back and forth, her hands in tight fists.

"I'm sorry, but I had to call them." Risumi said. "They were so concerned about you."

"Y-yeah! We didn't want to overwhelm you with everyone, so we thought a small group would be better." Midoriya, teary eyed, approached, his hands wringing together. "I'm so sorry!"

"I-" Akira's brow scrunched together. "Wait, why are you sorry?"

"You were in trouble, and I never noticed how much you were hurting!" Midoriya's lip wobbled. "A-and after.... we didn't know what to do."

“Yeah!” Uraraka wiped tears from her eyes. “Y-you’ve already done so much for me, but I couldn’t do anything to help you in your time of need! I’m really sorry!”

“But it wasn’t your fault.” Akira said, frowning. “Any of you.”

Midoriya was about to object, but Iida spoke first.

“While I am glad that you’re okay, Kurusu,” Iida gently chopped a hand. “I have some questions, if you don’t mind?”

“Shoot.”

Iida squared his shoulders. “You knew you were going to be kidnapped, didn’t you?”

“... Yes.” Akira sighed as the shocked stares of 1-A pierced through him. “Listen, I know someone who has a quirkless brother who was also kidnapped. She went to the authorities, but they cast him aside like trash just because he was quirkless.”

“Wh-what?” Midoriya’s face fell in horror.

“That’s.... that’s unmanly!!” Kirishima shouted. “Why would they do that!?”

Akira’s expression hardened. “Why do you think?”

The mood in the cafe plummeted.

“Look at it this way,” Akira said softly. “And I don’t mean this against you, but do you remember how you reacted when I first told you that I was quirkless?” Akira sighed when Kirishima flinched, and the others lowered their gazes. “The quirkless are abandoned, bullied, or... worse. The police would’ve jumped in to save any quirked person, but for those of us who don’t have a supposed ‘quirk’, well.... I think you get the idea.”

Risumi and Ayumu exchanged glances behind the counter, Ashido looked like she was about to be sick.

“I know that things need to change, but that doesn’t ignore the fact that you had us.” Iida’s anger was reminiscent of that time in Hosu. “We’re your friends, and that won’t ever change!”

“Iida’s right!” Kirishima sniffled. “We would’ve helped you, no questions asked!”

“I know that now.” Akira’s smiled at Hitoshi. “I was alone before I found this place, and I’ve been rejecting all of the bonds I’ve made here because of that. I... I’m not making that mistake again.”

His job as the Wildcard was to use the bonds he forged as a source of strength. He and Morgana were stranded, and nothing would change that until they were able to meet up with the others and find a way home. And yet, he had pushed everyone from this world away, in turn weakening himself.

Hitoshi grinned.

“But that still doesn’t answer how you were found so quickly.” Iida said. “My brother-”

“Ingenium, right?” Akira asked, to which Iida firmly nodded. “I know somebody who is pretty good at programming, so they made a tracker for me when we figured it was only a matter of time before I was targeted. Ingenium is a good hero, and we knew that he wouldn’t abandon people just because of their quirk.”

It wasn’t the complete truth, nor a complete lie. A perfect middle.

“That’s honestly badass.” Ashido said with wide eyes. “And so smart!”

“If not completely reckless.” Iida sighed.

“That must have been terrifying!” Uraraka said.

“You... you are okay, right?” Midoriya asked. “We saw you on the news when those people were brought to the surface...”

“I... I don’t want to lie and say that I’m fine, but I am recovering.” Akira involuntarily shivered as the doctor’s eyes flashed in his mind. “It’ll just take some time.”

The cafe was stilted in silence, until Kirishima locked both hands on Akira’s shoulders.

“You can talk to us any time!!” Kirishima gently shook Akira. “I don’t care how many times we have to pound it into your head, but you’re not alone anymore, Aniki!”

Akira blinked. “Aniki?”

Kirishima’s face burned. “Y-you know what I mean!!”

“You said that when we first came in!” Ashido shouted.

“D-did I?” Kirishima chuckled as he turned cherry red. “I don’t remember!”

“Of course you don’t.” Ashido elbowed him with a knowing look.

“What are your plans for this weekend?” Midoriya blurted, and Kirishima threw him a thankful glance.

“I don’t know. Why?”

“Oh! Our class is taking a trip to the mall!” Ashido threw her arm over Akira’s shoulders. “How about you come too!?”

Akira blinked as the others looked at him in expectation. Kirishima was giving him the largest puppy dog eyes, and paired with Midoriya’s they were almost too much.

“That reminds me, I have some shopping to do myself. I... I guess I could meet you there?”

“What do you need? We’ll help you out!” Kirishima said.

“Glasses, for starters.” Akira’s smile strained. “My last pair was lost when... wh-when...”

“Say no more, bro!” Kirishima said.

“Whoa, now that you mention it...” Ashido squinted. “Your eyes are a lot more intense without them!”

“If it’s not too much trouble, could I come too?” Hitoshi crossed his arms and playfully glared at Akira. “I feel like I need to keep an eye on this troublemaker.”

Akira pouted. “Hey-”

“The more the merrier!” Ashido had an ear to ear grin. “We’re meeting at the Kiyashi Ward shopping mall!”

“Great.” Akira smiled back. “We’ll be there.”

“Alright!” Iida chopped his arms. “We have checked on our friend, but we don’t want to overstay our welcome!”

“Awww....” Ashido squeezed Akira tighter.

“He’s right.” Midoriya smiled at Akira. “We’ll tell our classmates about this weekend, okay?”

Akira nodded.

Ashido reluctantly let Akira go, and the others waved as they left the cafe in peace.

Risumi stepped around the counter after a moment of silence. “Say, what are your plans for the rest of the day?”

“I’m not sure.” Akira shrugged. “Why?”

“The cafe is closed and you look like you could use a day of relaxation.” She put her hand on his head and smiled softly. “How about a movie day with us?”

“Yeah!” Hitoshi suddenly perked up. “We have plenty of snacks and we could all have dinner together.”

“We have a hefty collection of movies to choose from.” Ayumu smirked. “Trust me.”

Akira looked in between the three Shinsous’.

“You can’t exactly say no to puppy dog expressions like those.” Arsene said. “Though the 1-A class seem to be masters at them, too.”

“My heart, they are too adorable!” Titania cried.

“Please, big brother!? I want to watch movies, too!”

“How can I say no?” Akira smirked.

“Yes!” Hitoshi grabbed Akira’s wrist and he was whisked through the cafe.

Risumi smiled as their excited footsteps raced up the stairs, their mutual laughter made her heart soar. She adjusted her glasses as she began to follow, but stopped when she didn’t hear Ayumu’s footsteps.

“Dear, what’s wrong?”

“Nothing, it’s just...” Ayumu chuckled. “It’s nice to see them smile after everything, that’s all.”

“I agree.” She went over and locked arms with her husband. “Shall we? We shouldn’t make our boys wait too long.”

“Yeah.” They left the cafe behind and went upstairs. “I bet Hitoshi is already digging through the Ghibli movies.”

They poked their heads into the living room and watched Hitoshi ramble excitedly about the growing pile of movie cases on the table. Akira listened with rapt attention, amused. But they noticed how his eyes lit up when Hitoshi held up the first Ghibli movie.

The rest of the day was spent watching movies, sipping hot chocolate, and eating more curry than what should be humanly possible.

Akira didn’t remember much of the next movie they started. He was wrapped up in blankets on a comfortable couch, his eyes slowly drooping. His soul settled as Risumi wrapped an arm around him and held him close.

Between her cozy scent and Arsene’s soft encouragement, he needed nothing more to drift off in a place that smelled like home.

“Uh, how long have they been like that?” Shuichi stared at the scene he just wandered into.

Joker in full costume sat cross legged on the lounge floor, his eyes closed and expression set in calm concentration. Across from him was a four armed, blue skinned being sitting in a similar manner, divine instruments in each hand. The snakes around his body stared eerily at him, their tongues flicking.

“By my count....” Tobita flipped open his platinum pocket watch, which now ticked pleasantly. “Three hours.”

“Three hours!?”

“He’s trying to master his bond with Shiva.” Manami didn’t bother looking up from her laptop.

“Sh-Sh-Shiva!? ” Shuichi felt his scales tingle. “Like.... Shiva Shiva ? The Hindu god of destruction?”

“That’s the one.” Manami stated.

“And you’re not freaking out!?”

“Not really.” Manami sighed as she finally looked up. “You get used to them being around. Like one time Akira and Morgana were cuddling with Cerberus.”

“And when we baked cookies with Alice.” Tobita leaned back on the couch with a sigh. “I hope to do so again. She’s a lovely girl... when she’s not utterly terrifying.”

“Oh, and this morning when Pixie switched the salt and sugar.” Manami cringed. “I never want to taste salty tea again!”

“I’ll make sure to test all of our spices from now on.” Tobita shook his head and chuckled. “They do keep us on our toes.”

“Right...” Shuichi eyed Shiva, his hesitation slowly fading as he set a bag on the table.

“Any luck?” Tobita asked as he peeked inside.

“Yeah!” Shuichi grinned as he dug through it and splayed each item on the table. “I found a decent leather jacket and cargo pants! I even managed to get a pair of combat boots. Oh! I found this Joker mask pin I could put on too! I’ll still have to restock my knives somehow, but it’s a start!”

“What about gloves?” Manami asked.

“Couldn’t find any, but I’ll keep my eye out for something stylish.” Shuichi sank into the couch with a loud sigh. “Hey, are we still training with Shinsou today?”

“Yep!” Manami shut her laptop. “We’ll go as soon as-”

Shuichi screeched when the flash of blue flames blinded the lounge, but Manami and Tobita were unaffected. The light faded and Akira opened his eyes with a grin.

“Another one down!”

Shiva chuckled and bowed his head. “I knew you could do it, Trickster.”

“Thanks.” Akira looked around the lounge, eyes landing on Shuichi and his gear. “Oh, you’re back already? What time is it?”

“Just past noon.” Manami said. “Are you good to go? We’re meeting Hitoshi in an hour.”

“Yeah.” Akira nodded as he stood up and stretched, his joints creaking. “Shiva’s bond was harder than Alice’s. I’m sorry it took so long.”

“Don’t worry!” Manami beamed at him. “We have time.”

Shuichi marveled when Shiva disappeared like fading stardust. His awe locked him in place for a few minutes, and he snapped out of it when Akira waved a hand in front of him.

“Are you coming?”

“Y-yes!!” Shuichi nodded frantically. “Let’s go!”

For once in his life, Shuichi felt as if he finally belonged somewhere.

Hitoshi’s world was a flipped blur as his back slammed into the mat.

“Ouch....” He wheezed as Akira helped him up. “How are you so good at this?”

“Practice. You learn fast when your life is in danger. Remember that you shouldn’t be so flat footed.” Akira took a wide stance and put a fist over his center. “Keep this part of your body lower, and be quick on your feet. Staying still for too long can be fatal.”

“Right...” Hitoshi wiped the sweat from his brow. “Can we practice something else for a bit? I’ve tasted enough of this mat for the last hour.”

“Okay.” Akira stood fully and tilted his head. “You’ve graduated from making lock picks, how are the smoke bombs coming along? Manami said that you’re doing really well with hacking, too.”

“Heh, well enough, but...” Hitoshi grinned sheepishly.

“But what? If there’s something new you want to learn, then just say so.”

“Weeeelll, you use both daggers and a gun, right?”

“Ah, I see.” Akira tapped his chin and studied Hitoshi. “You’re filling out nicely, but you’d need more physical and hand to hand training before I’m comfortable showing you how to fight with a dagger. What about a gun safety lesson? We’re not shooting any targets today though, we don’t want anybody calling the police.”

Excitement lit up Hitoshi’s eyes. “A safety lesson is a good start.”

Akira nodded, and the rush of bright blue flames donned his costume. Hitoshi took a moment to study his friend’s costume up close while Joker took out two pistols and removed their magazines.

“Uh...” Hitoshi blinked at them, his jaw nearly dropping. “Where the heck do you get guns like that ?”

Joker froze. “The Velvet Room.”

“Velvet Room?”

“Yeah.” Joker smiled at him, but Hitoshi saw the sorrow in it. “It’s a place where I could get new friends. But... it was more complicated than that. I could strengthen them or execute them in a certain way to get items and weapons.”

Hitoshi turned bone white. “E-execute?”

Joker solemnly nodded as he held up the guns. He looked over to the angelic gun in his right hand.

“Nataraja, the gun I received when I executed the Voice of God, Metatron.” Joker looked to the wickedly black gun decorated with a demon’s grin on the barrel, devilish wings and other ancient, golden designs were ingrained in the lever and grip. “This one is the Tyrant Pistol. I received this from the one who rebelled against God and fell from heaven, Lucifer.”

Hitoshi sputtered. “What else do you have up your sleeve?”

“Now that you mention it, I’m wearing armor from Satan. Morgana’s weapons are from Mother Harlot and Kohryu respectively... wait, armor...” Joker glanced at his other teammates around the gym. He’d definitely have to arm them with Metaverse gear, anything to give them the advantage in the upcoming showdown. But that was a thought for later. “Anyway, back to the guns. Which one do you want?”

Joker asked pleasantly as one would about the weather. It’s not as if the weapons were remnants of Biblical figures or anything! Hitoshi’s eyes flicked between them.

“U-uh... that one?” Joker nodded and handed him the Nataraja. The silvery metal was ice cold, and divine power thrummed through Hitoshi’s body the moment he touched it. Almost as if it were still alive. “It’s... heavier than I thought it would be. This is pretty cool.”

“Let’s get one thing straight.” Hitoshi jumped as Joker locked a hand on his shoulder, his grip like iron. “A gun is not a toy, it’s a tool you use to either protect yourself or the ones you love. Remember that it’s a weapon that can easily take a life, yours included. I won’t tolerate you using this knowledge to hurt anyone on purpose. Do I make myself clear?"

Hitoshi suppressed shivers. He's never heard such a serious, commanding voice from his best friend before. He swallowed thickly at the thing he held in his hands.

"C-crystal. I promise not to abuse it."

"Good. Now, I'll explain the parts of a pistol and then how to properly wield it...."

Meanwhile, Shuichi whistled from his spot by the far wall.

"How does Joker know all of this stuff?" The lizard man asked. "He's so knowledgeable for a kid his age."

Tobita, surrounded by a swarm of locks, exchanged glances with Manami. Lady Stubbs and Morgana were sunning themselves on the other side of the gym, oblivious to the conversation.

"I'm afraid that is not our story to share." Tobita stared down at the small padlock in his hand, the other twirling the pick. "Perhaps you could ask?"

Shuichi watched when Joker expertly held the gun, staring at an invisible target as if he was ready to shoot. Hitoshi tried to copy, and Joker dropped his stance to fix the flaws in Hitoshi's.

"Stubbs and I are still new to the team. It's too early for another heart to heart!"

"I don't think so." Shuichi furrowed his brow as Tobita sighed, lingering regret etched into his face. "You are one of us now, and I think he might be comfortable enough to tell you. Know that whatever he tells you is the absolute truth. It sounds outlandish at first, but..."

Shuichi tilted his head. "But?"

“We reacted badly when he first shared his story, which caused a big rift between us.” Manami traced a finger around her keyboard. “I think... maybe that’s why he pushed us away when he came up with his last plan. We’re just now rebuilding our trust with him.”

“But you know that it’s not your fault, right?” Shuichi said. “And it’s not really Joker’s either.”

“If... if you say so.” Shame made Manami avoid their eyes.

“Say, how’s your progress my dear?” Tobita asked, and she jumped at the change of subject.

She pinched the bridge of her nose. “I’ve located several of the Wild Wild Pussy Cats’ estates and several mountain lodges, but there’s not a single clue as to which one the hero classes will be training at.”

“Maybe you should take a break, yeah?” Shuichi leaned against the wall. “You’ve been at it for days, and burnin’ yourself out won’t help anything.”

She shut her laptop with a sigh. “Yeah, I just don’t want to fail.”

“We won’t.” Tobita brightened with a smile. “If anything, we could always use Eraserhead to get the location.”

“It’s risky. Joker just got on even terms with him and we don’t want to ruin that.” She frowned, and they looked to Hitoshi and Joker when they heard dual clicks .

“Congratulations.” Joker smirked. “You would’ve fired your first shot had it been loaded.”

Hitoshi, awe-struck, slowly nodded. Joker laughed as a loud rumble echoed from Hitoshi’s stomach.

“Who wants curry at the Raven’s Nest?” Joker called. “No detours this time, I promise.”

“Ooh, me!!” Shuichi yelled.

“Same.” Hitoshi handed the gun back. “I’m starving .”

“I won’t object.” Tobita stood and worked a crick out of his neck.
“We’ve made plenty of progress today!”

Joker tucked the two weapons in his costume pockets, then let the transformation fade away. Hitoshi grinned as they collected their things and the sleepy, sunbathed felines before heading home for the day.

Yatagarasu floated on the summery breeze as he watched his Trickster weave through the crowd below. Hitoshi stuck by his side and they approached the massive building, the Kiyashi Ward Shopping Mall. Yatagarasu landed on the edge of the rooftop.

This mall had no roof, it was open to the sky and allowed Yatagarasu to listen in on several floors worth of boisterous noise. Colors and music adorned the place, and the aroma of distant restaurants wafted in the wind. Sometimes, these vast human constructs still managed to surprise him.

“Ah, I am glad he finally gets time to relax.” Ishtar murmured as the Trickster ventured inside. “The constant action has not been good for him.”

“Indeed. He has been pushing himself too hard.” Yatagarasu sighed contently as the wind brushed over his feathers. “I feel bad that I’ve been out more than anyone else. The Trickster promised that we would visit the beach sometime before the Summer Camp.”

“Don’t worry about it.” Arsene said. “I’ve already had my reward, and everyone will get theirs in due time.”

“Hmph, I only wish for the Trickster to be happy.” Ishtar brushed invisible dust from her silky skirt. “I don’t need any other reward.”

"I have to agree." Shiva danced in place. "He is the only one that matters."

"I'm only happy that I'll see my green child today!!" Cerberus wagged his tail. "That's enough of a reward for me!"

"Of course." Byakko swished his tail as he lounged around the mindscape. "It doesn't surprise me."

"Hmmm, now that I think on it..."

"What is it, Auntie Titania?" Alice asked sweetly.

"Cerberus, aside from Midoriya's hair color reminding you of Orthrus, do you feel a bond with him because he is the Chariot?"

"Ooh!! Maybe?"

"It makes sense." Seth's toothy grin sharpened. "As Kohryu is connected to the Hierophant, Cerberus is connected to the newly dubbed Chariot. Perhaps the bonds are easier to feel now that the Trickster has accepted them in this world."

"Oh-ho?" Black Frost rocked back and forth on his heels. "Does anyone else fe-hee-el connected to the humans here, ho?"

"Hmm," Byakko blinked slowly. "As Temperance, I've rather enjoyed Tobita's company, but that doesn't mean much."

"Well, it's obvious that the Yaoyorozu Heiress is my favorite, aside from the Trickster, of course." Titania said.

"Awww." Alice pouted and scuffed her shoes into the ground. "I haven't felt anybody except for Big Brother!"

"Perhaps we should be thankful that nobody has been labeled 'Death'." Shiva whispered. Alice stuck her tongue out at him.

They looked over to Seth as he cackled and licked his lips.

Kohryu tilted his head. “What do you find so humorous, Seth?”

“The human whom I’ve felt close with is....”

“Is what? Who’s the Tower?” Pixie huffed and buzzed around Seth’s head like a mosquito. “Stop being stingy you overgrown lizard!!”

Seth brimmed with pride. “Bakugo.”

Yatagarasu felt his bond twinge as the Trickster suddenly sputtered.

“H-hey, are you okay?” Hitoshi put a hand to Akira’s shoulder. “Do you need something to drink?”

“I’m fine. Perfectly fine.” Akira chuckled as he settled down. “Just... my friends. Their conversations still surprise me sometimes.”

“R-right. If you’re sure.” Hitoshi let his hand drop. “Where do you think Class 1-A wandered to? You’d think finding a such a loud group wouldn’t be that hard.”

“In a mall this packed?” Akira got out his phone and scrolled through his texts. “I’m honestly not surprised.”

Hitoshi crossed his arms and scanned the mass of people filtering through the vast open space. Idle chatter and footsteps overtook the music playing on the overhead speakers, and alluring scents wafted from the food court nearby. The sticky heat of summer clung to their skin, and Hitoshi was half tempted to get an ice cream or something.

“Kurusu! Shinsou!”

“Ashido.” Akira smiled as Kirishima, Jiro, and Kaminari trailed behind her. “I was wondering where everyone was.”

“Sorry, dude!” Kirishima, as always, had a sunny smile. “Our class already met, a-and we tried to make Iida wait for you, but....”

“Kurusu and Shinsou can meet up with us after!!” Ashido deepened her voice and chopped her arms. “We should stick to this ridiculous schedule I have to get everything we need!!”

Kirishima grinned. “Yeah, that’s pretty much it.”

“Whoa.” Kaminari lingered behind them, gaping at Akira. “So it’s true? You really did escape from a- Yeowch! What was that for, Jiro!? You got me right in the eye!”

“Nothing.” Jiro she crossed her arms, her ear jacks pointed at Kaminari. “You just tend to ask stupid questions. Ignore this idiot, Kurusu.”

“It’s okay.” Akira said. “So when do we meet up?”

“The food court at 3!” Ashido gently elbowed him. “We’ll eat and hang out after!”

“Is everyone here?”

“Nah.” Kirishima rubbed the back of his neck. “I tried to get Bakugo to come, but he wouldn’t budge. Todoroki and Yaomomo said they had an appointment or something today, so Iida is getting their stuff for camp. How about you?”

Akira checked his list. “There’s a shop on the second floor I need to visit.”

“Aww, all of our stuff is on the first floor.” Kirishima said.

“Hey, we’re meeting up at 3, right?” Akira smiled at him. “We’ll see you then?”

“Yeah!”

“See you in a bit, Kurusu!” Ashido said with a wink.

“I’m... glad that you’re safe, Kurusu.” Jiro mumbled and she wouldn’t look him in the eye. She grabbed Kaminari by the elbow and dragged him off, the others followed.

“I’m sorry! It was just a question!” Kaminari shouted as they disappeared into the crowd.

Hitoshi chuckled. “To the second floor, then?”

“Yeah, let’s go.”

Akira paused when he felt a shiver go down his spine, and he looked over his shoulder with a frown. He didn’t see anything suspicious within the crowd, but there were so many people. Whatever the reason, the sensation was gone as fast as it came.

“What’s up?” Hitoshi whispered.

“Just had a weird feeling.” Akira shook his head. “It could be nothing.”

Hitoshi deadpanned. “Knowing our luck, it’s something bad.”

Akira snorted. “Let’s just keep an eye out, okay?”

“Right.” Hitoshi sighed. “Hey, at least I know how to tell when I’m being followed.”

Akira smirked. “You have a pretty good teacher, huh?”

Hitoshi playfully glared at him.

He checked over his shoulder one last time before they headed towards the second floor.

As it turns out, Akira isn’t the only one who could attract trouble.

Fuyumi led them through the hospital ward. There were plenty of windows to allow sunlight inside, and wide open spaces with plush seating to make it more comfortable. Momo remembers the large garden they passed on the way here, full of fragrant summer flowers and floating butterflies.

“Are you sure about this?” Momo bunched the hem of her shirt with her fists. “I... I wouldn’t want to be intruding on anything private.”

“Don’t worry about it!” Natsuo lightly nudged her on the shoulder. “Actually, I think this visit might help you out.” Natsuo frowned. “You know, about your parents.”

Shoto pursed his lips, but nodded.

“Besides, I told her all about you.” Fuyumi beamed. “She’s been wanting to meet you, so please don’t feel as if you are intruding in our lives, okay?”

“Okay.” Momo returned her smile, if a bit small. “Thank you.”

“Don’t mention it, dear.”

They reached the room. Momo didn’t know why she was so frightened. It was simple as walking through the door, but it was a door that held secrets that shouldn’t ever be for her ears. Shoto must’ve seen her expression and gently grabbed her wrist. His hand seeped with gentle warmth.

“It’s okay.” A minuscule smile shown through Shoto’s stoicism. “We’ll go in together.”

“Don’t worry, Momo-chan!” Natsuo grinned. “If you need some privacy, then Fuyumi and I can step out for a couple of minutes.”

“Yeah, I’ve been wanting to see the koi fish they put in the new pond in the garden.” Fuyumi said. “We’ll be just outside?”

“Okay.”

“We’ll see you in a bit, then.” Shoto said.

Natsuo winked at Momo, before the two siblings walked down the hall.

“I don’t know why I’m so intimidated.” Momo whispered.

“You shouldn’t be.” Shoto slowly blinked. “I’m sure she’ll treat you as family.”

Shoto opened the door before Momo could say anything more. The room wasn’t much, but it was homely. Pictures of the Todoroki siblings hung on all of the walls, and the vibrant flowers on the table added a small touch of color to an otherwise monochromatic room.

A woman sat at the edge of the bed, hair as white as snow falling down her back. She looked up from the book in her hands, smiling. This woman had the same sort of delicate beauty as a forest in the middle of winter. A solitary, still sort of scenery where golden sunlight twinkled from freshly fallen snow, that same twinkle that sparkled within Todoroki Rei’s gray eyes.

“Momo, thank you for coming.”

Rei set her book on the table and Momo found herself wrapped within the woman’s arms. Momo was encased in the pleasant scent of juniper berries, and all of her anxieties were washed away as she melted in the embrace. Rei pulled back with her hands on Momo’s shoulders. She stared at Momo as a mother would when she was proud of her child. She gave Shoto the same loving expression as she hugged her son.

“Come, sit!” Rei gestured to the chairs in front of her bed. “Are you hungry? Thirsty? I can have the nurses get something.”

“No, I’m alright. Thank you.” Momo said as she sank into one of the chairs.

“Shoto?” Rei frowned. “Are you okay?”

Shoto tore his eyes away from the amaryllis flowers in a glass vase on the table.

“Yeah.” He took the other chair, his hands resting on his knees.

“Why don’t you tell me a bit about yourself, Momo?” Rei asked as she sat at the edge of the bed, Iida would sing praises at how perfect her posture was. “Natsuo and Fuyumi have said a lot! And Shoto-”

“Mother.” Shoto stared at the floor as the tip of his ears turned red.

Rei chuckled. “In any case, I’m glad that the both of you are here.”

Momo tucked some stray hair behind her ears. “I’m afraid there’s not much to say. I want to be a hero, I’m the Vice Class Rep of 1-A. Um... my favorite color is red?”

Shoto huffed. “You’re selling yourself short.”

“What? How?”

“You’re really smart and courageous.”

“O-Oh, I don’t think-”

“No?” Shoto glanced at her with an odd intensity. “We used your plan in our final exam. Aizawa-sensei didn’t know what hit him, and we were one of the first to pass. You can’t say that you’re not smart because of that.”

“W-well, I guess...” Momo ducked her head.

“And doesn’t your quirk make it so that you have to know the molecular makeup of everything you make?”

“Th-thats...”

They were interrupted by a giggle. Rei put a hand over her mouth to hide her smile.

“Oh, I’m sorry!” She said. “You two are just adorable, that’s all.”

Shoto and Momo exchanged glances, then hastily looked away from one another. One could barely see Shoto’s smile, but the redness on Momo’s cheeks was blatant for the world to see. Shoto recovered first by clearing his throat.

“Mother, do you know why we brought Momo here?”

“... Yes.” Rei sobered and glanced between Momo and Shoto. “Are you sure you want to share this, Shoto?”

Shoto nodded. “I’m sure. This might help Momo make a decision on whether she wants to forgive her parents or not.”

Momo’s heart pounded. “I’m sorry, but what are you talking about?”

Both Todoroki’s stared at her. All happiness drained out of Rei as a heavy weight settled on her shoulders. Shoto’s hand traced down his scar, and Rei put a hand over his with a sad smile.

“It’s about Shoto’s scar. I.... I’m the one responsible for it.”

Momo startled. “... What?”

“It’s a long story.” Rei withdrew her hand and stared out the window, her eyes misting over in the memory. “I wasn’t a good mother. Being the number two hero’s wife wasn’t... easy. Eventually I couldn’t take the pressure and I snapped.” Shoto glared at the floor as Rei looked at him, and then her eyes trailed over Momo. “Shoto’s left side reminded me too much of my husband. That night as I was boiling water for tea, well....”

Momo’s eyes went wide. She looked in between Shoto and Rei in alarm.

“You mean...?”

“Yes. He was only five years old.” Rei sighed and looked down at her hands. “I didn’t even realize what I was doing until I heard Shoto screaming.” Rei’s voice shook as tears came into her eyes. “I-I tried to make it better with my quirk, but.... the damage was already done.”

Silence overtook the room.

Momo didn’t like the implications. Natsuo was always sour whenever he talked about Endeavor, how Shoto had not used his fire until the Sports Festival, how pained Fuyumi became whenever she spoke of either parent. And now, with this...

It didn’t paint a good picture of Endeavor.

“It took a long time for me to work up the courage to see her again.” Shoto said. “It wasn’t until this year that I saw her for the first time in a decade.”

“Do you... do you blame Endeavor?” Rei and Shoto stared at her in shock, and her face burned in shame. “I-I’m sorry, I shouldn’t have-”

“No, it’s alright.” Rei patted Momo’s knee. “Do you see those flowers?”

Momo looked at the red and white flowers. Shoto did too, but his expression became pinched.

“My husband delivers fresh flowers every morning. He’s not allowed to see me yet, but the nurses change them every day.”

“He... he does?” Shoto sat at the edge of his seat. “But why?”

“The amaryllis has many meanings in the flower language.” Rei stood up and went to the table, her hands cupping the largest one. “This type of amaryllis means love and passion. They are my favorite flowers, and I told Enji that on our very first date together. He remembered after all this time. I think, in a way, he still cares for us.” Shoto scoffed. Rei’s hand dropped from the flower and turned towards them. “I know, Shoto. This doesn’t mean that he’s a good person, or that he should be forgiven, but you’ve told me that he is trying to change. That has to count for something.”

Momo studied the flowers, her brow wrinkled.

“It’s the same for your parents too, dear.” Momo jumped and looked up at Rei’s kind smile. “All parents make mistakes. We’re all human. But, as Shoto chose to forgive me for what I did, you have the choice of forgiving your parents for their actions. Of course, your forgiveness doesn’t excuse them.”

“You can take as long as you need.” Shoto pinched his bangs, right where the red and white colors bled together. “It doesn’t matter how long it takes.”

“I... thank you.” Momo rose from her chair and wrapped her arms around Rei, who chuckled and reciprocated the hug. “You’ve given me a lot of think about.”

“It’s no trouble, dear. Thank you for coming to meet me.”

They parted when there was a knock on the door. Fuyumi and Natsuo poked their heads in.

“Should we come back later?” Fuyumi asked.

“N-no.” Momo said. “It’s okay.”

Rei smiled. “Please, come in.”

“So, we looked at the koi fish in the garden!!” Natsuo beamed as he stormed inside. “And there was this huge black one with white spots around its face-”

Fuyumi sighed. “Wait until you hear what he named it.”

“Oh come on, sis!” Natsuo threw his arms up. “You can’t say that it doesn’t remind you of Joker!”

Momo covered her chuckle as a wheezing cough escaped Shoto.

“Joker the koi fish?” Shoto said incredulously. “Seriously, Natsuo?”

“Come on, Shoto! You have to see it to believe it! Hey, maybe it could be one of Joker’s mythical friends!”

Fuyumi facepalmed as Rei laughed.

“It is almost lunch time.” Rei said with a smile. “And I’ve yet to see the pond. Should we have a picnic in the garden? You can introduce us to Joker the koi fish.”

“Heck yeah!!” Natsuo beamed.

Momo couldn’t help her smile. Her eyes lingered on the amaryllis flowers for a few moments before they trailed out of the room. Rei saw her staring, and gently squeezed her hand. Momo squeezed back.

Perhaps....

There might be a glimmer of hope for her parents yet.

Izuku wandered through the crowded mall, thinking about which stores to visit when an arm curled around his shoulder and a husky voice whispered in his ear.

“You were the one who got all beat up at the Sports Festival, right? Would you happen to be the one who ran into the Hero Killer in Hosu, too?”

Izuku froze.

“Man, I seriously can’t believe I’d ever see you again in a place like this.” A deathly cold hand clutched his neck. “This must be something like fate, or destiny.”

Izuku’s blood turned into ice when he stared into Shigaraki’s blood red eyes. They gleamed with malice, and his cracked lips were spread into a manic grin.

“Why don’t we have tea or something, Midoriya Izuku?” Shigaraki chuckled as Izuku’s breath hitched. “Oh, calm down. You wouldn’t want to attract any attention, right?”

“You...” Izuku grit his teeth together, sweat beading on his face. “You know I could just shout for help. The heroes would be on you-”

“Oh?” Shigaraki’s grin widened further, a site that sent shivers down Izuku’s spine. “It’s pretty crowded today. How many people could I kill before they even show up? Twenty? Thirty? Fourty ? How many lives will be reduced to dust?”

The faces of his friends, of Akira, flashed in his mind. All of these people wandering around, going about their day would be.... He rapidly blinked the tears from his eyes as his hands curled into tight fists. His shoulders relaxed, even as biting pain came into his palms.

“Good. Now, come on, I just want to talk.”

Izuku stumbled as Shigaraki dragged him over to a bench underneath a tree. They were quiet for a while, and Izuku wondered if Shigaraki could feel his pounding pulse.

“You know what really pisses me off?” Shigaraki grumbled. “It used to be the Hero Killer and his stupid ideology, but now nothing makes me more pissed off than Joker. Look at this.” Shigaraki glared at a nearby store with Joker merch. “Why is nobody even looking at me anymore? The League Of Villains’ name is all but dust. What made people follow Stain? Why do people look up to Joker so damned much? What’s the difference between me and them, Midoriya?”

“I don’t agree with the Hero Killer, but...” Midoriya swallowed despite Shigaraki’s clammy fingers. “But I can understand him. For both me and the Hero Killer, it began with All Might. At the very least, he wasn’t destroying everything just because he wanted to. He didn’t just abandon it in vain like you did.”

“... And Joker?” Shigaraki growled.

Izuku’s hair stood on end from the bloodlust seeping from Shigaraki’s eyes.

“With Joker, h-he’s...”

Meanwhile, Akira and Hitoshi wandered through an accessory shop on the second floor. Akira held up the gray framed glasses and noticed the little stripes of colors on the sides. He frowned. They were pretty cool, but not what he was looking for. He put them back and looked around the other shelves.

“How do I look?” Hitoshi asked seriously.

Akira looked at Hitoshi, and bit back his laughter. “What are you wearing?”

“What?” Hitoshi grinned as he pushed up the large glasses with googly lenses, a fake nose, and a curly mustache. “Is it not my style?”

“Oh, it totally fits you perfectly.”

“Why don’t we go somewhere else?” Hitoshi took off the glasses and set them back in the case. “Like that Joker merch shop on the first floor?”

“Really? You... Oh.” Akira stepped around Hitoshi and picked up some bright yellow gloves. These looked exactly like Skull’s. A sudden lump in his throat made it hard to breathe, and the leather creaked as he held it tightly.

“Akira, are you okay?”

“Y-yeah.” He cleared his throat and held up the gloves. “I just... Shuichi said he couldn’t find any gloves the other day. He might like these ones.”

Hitoshi frowned, but he didn’t push anything as Akira paid for the gloves and they swiftly left the store. They stopped next door and looked into the glass display. Hitoshi squinted into their reflections.

“Well, I don’t see anybody following us.”

Akira huffed. “Trust me, I would know if people were following us. But hey, it’s good practice for you.”

“Yeah, good practice being paranoid.” Hitoshi muttered.

Akira chuckled. He was about to say something when Alice gasped.

“Oh, this is -!!”

“Alice? What is it?”

“Akira?” Hitoshi frowned when he saw Akira go rigid. “What’ wrong?”

“This feeling! I’m sensing.... a Reversed Death!!”

“Wait, what do you mean a Reversed Death?” Arsene asked.

“What are you-”

Alarm spread through the mindscape as Alice forced herself into reality, Yatagarasu squawked as he was thrown back into the mindscape. Nobody saw the flurry of sapphire cinders as she burst out of the nearby store. Hitoshi jumped out of his skin when he saw the rush of a blue dress fly past.

“Alice, return at once!” Arsene shouted.

"No, this is important! I must know who bears this bond!"

"Alice!" Akira hissed as he bounded after her.

Hitoshi sputtered, but shook himself out of it and followed.

Alice's small form weaved between the crowd with ease, and she skipped down the escalator to the first floor. Akira nudged past people with Hitoshi at his heels, but it was so crowded. Alice came to a stop about thirty feet from a tree, where familiar figures sat under its shade. It took Akira and Hitoshi a moment to catch up, and Alice frantically tugged on Akira's sleeve.

"There." Alice whispered as she pointed at Shigaraki. "That's him."

Midoriya was as pale as a ghost as Shigaraki's hand grasped his neck. Akira looked around the oblivious crowd, a surge of anger swelling in his stomach.

"Hitoshi, stay back." Akira ordered.

Alice disappeared as Akira stepped forward, Hitoshi was too stunned to move.

"-spired hope in a lot of people. He gives them what they need to continue through their day, no matter how hard their lives are. He's extremely powerful and charismatic, but he also shows compassion and kindness. With him.... he's somebody that people can aspire to be."

"I see." Shigaraki dryly chuckled. "Oh, it's like a weight off of my chest. Why they piss me off, why you irritate me so much.... I truly understand now!" Izuku struggled to breathe as the grip on his neck became a vice. "Everything is because of All Might, and the hope that he brings alongside Joker."

Izuku's vision became spotty and he clawed at Shigaraki's fingers.

“Why was I so worked up? I just need to kill that hope that I hate so much! Oh, I’m so glad we had this talk, Izuku!”

Suddenly, the air around them became heavy, the shadows at their feet wavered. Shigaraki’s head snapped towards a boy with blazing silver eyes chalk full of wrath. This aura... it was coming from the boy as he stepped closer.

“What do you think you’re doing to my friend?” Akira whispered oh so calmly, but his voice sprouted shivers upon the other two. “Let him go. Now .”

Terror chilled Izuku to the bone. He couldn’t let Akira get hurt! Not after he already failed Akira once before! Izuku just imagined him turning into dust-

“I-it’s fine!” Izuku wheezed. “Don’t come close!”

“Oh, it looks like I’ve attracted quite a crowd!” Shigaraki beamed as he threw his hands up, his malice and giddy madness all but gone. “So you’ve had friends with you? Sorry about that.” He leaned in and whispered to Izuku. “I’ll get angry if you follow me, so don’t even try.”

He shoved his hands in his pockets as he began to stroll away.

Izuku gasped for breath and rubbed his bruised neck. Akira rushed to his side, rubbing smooth circles around his back as he regained control of his breathing.

“W-wait, Shigaraki!” Izuku called.

Shigaraki stopped and looked over his shoulder.

“What does All For One want?”

Shigaraki smirked. “Who knows?”

With that, he walked away, the crowd weaving around him until he was gone.

“Izuku, are you okay? Who was...?”

“It was Shigaraki Tomura.” Izuku muttered. “That same guy who attacked the USJ.”

“Should we call the police?” Hitoshi approached as he looked at Akira with uncertainty.

“Yeah.” Akira handed over his phone to Hitoshi. “Speed dial 4 is for Detective Tsukauchi. Tell him what happened.”

Hitoshi reluctantly nodded as he took Akira’s phone and dialed.

“That wretch is long gone.” Arsene growled.

“How dare he touch my green child!!” Cerberus howled with rage.
“I’ll... I’ll-!!”

“Calm yourself, Cerberus.” Shiva placated. “Midoriya will be alright.”

“Yes, but there was something else.” Seth rumbled. “A name. All For One. Shigaraki seemed to know him, so he must be a part of the League.”

“But... we’ve never heard that name before.” Ishtar said.

“Izuku.” Akira tightly grabbed Izuku’s shoulder to ground him. “Who is All For One?”

Izuku flinched and flailed his hands. “N-Nobody!! I-”

He broke off with a coughing fit, and Akira decided to ask nothing more despite his deadly curiosity. The police swarmed the mall a few minutes later. The place was evacuated, Izuku was taken to the police station and the rest of 1-A split off to go home. Akira and Hitoshi blended into the retreating crowd, but a familiar face rooted Akira to the spot.

“Detective.” Akira tensed when Tsukauchi approached. “Do you need something?”

“I just wanted to make sure you were okay.” Tsukauchi held up his hands in placation. “I know you wouldn’t want to go to the station, so you’re free to go.”

Akira narrowed his eyes. “Just like that?”

Tsukauchi bore that stupidly soft smile. “Just like that. I’ll take care of Midoriya, so you don’t need to worry.”

“... Thank you.”

“We should go home.” Hitoshi clutched Akira’s arm. “My parents are probably worried.”

“Right.” Akira smirked at Tsukauchi. “See ya.”

They crept away from the sound of police sirens and into the safety of the alleyways. Akira grabbed his phone from the bag, and let out a long sigh.

“How much do you want to bet that Manami is going to murder me?” Hitoshi snickered as Akira dialed and held it up to his ear. “Manami-”

“WHAT DID YOU DO NOW!?” Akira held it away from his ear. “It’s already on the news! We can’t even leave you with Hitoshi or any of the hero course students!? Ugh, why do we never learn...”

“Hey, it’s not my fault this time!” Akira grumbled. “It was the Handy Man from the USJ and Hosu. He nearly got Midoriya.”

“What!? Is he okay?”

“Yeah.” Akira frowned. “Handy Man got away, though.”

“I can check the cameras?”

“You could, but he’s long gone. Smokey probably got him out the moment he could.” Akira sighed, but that nagging sensation yet plagued him. “Can you do me a favor?”

“Anything!”

Akira looked around to make sure the coast was clear. “Can you look up somebody named All For One? Midoriya said that name to Shigaraki, so he might be connected to the League.”

“Okay, I’ll do my best!” She let out a long sigh. “Are you guys coming home?”

“Yeah, we’re on our way.” Akira hesitated. “I promise. We’ll be home in no time.”

“Alright, we’ll be here!”

With that, he hung up. Hitoshi pinched the bridge of his nose as they exited the alleyway and blended into the crowd.

“I’m craving caffeine.”

Akira snorted. “I’ll make you some coffee when we get back.”

“And you’ll tell me what the hell you’re planning next.” Hitoshi muttered. “Don’t think I can’t see what you’re putting together.”

“You’re too smart for your own good.” Akira shoved his hands in his pockets as they approached the station. “We don’t have a solid plan yet, but I’ll explain everything as best as I can. No secrets this time.”

Hitoshi glared at him. “Promise?”

Akira grinned and held out his fist. “Cross my heart and hope to die.”

Hitoshi smiled and fist bumped back.

He learned a hell of a lot on the train ride home.

“It’s not your fault, Midoriya.” Tsukauchi smiled from across the table. “You kept calm and prevented a lot of people from getting hurt. That’s more than what a lot of pros would be able to handle.”

“But I gave him advice .” Izuku frowned into his cup of untouched tea. “He said he wanted to kill All Might a-and Joker. What if something really does happen to them because of me?”

Tsukauchi reached over and patted his hand. “We’ll do everything in our power to prevent that, I promise.”

There was a knock on the door, and Tsukauchi allowed Officer Tamakawa inside.

“Midoriya’s mother is here to pick him up.” He said.

“Right.” Tsukauchi gestured to the door. “You have my card. Feel free to call me if you need anything, alright?”

Midoriya nodded, and Sansa escorted him out. Tsukauchi ran a hand down his face with a long sigh, and left to go into the viewing room next door, where Aizawa and Nezu waited.

“This is no coincidence.” Nezu said as the door closed. “Joker warns us of an impending attack on the Summer Camp. Only a few days pass before an encounter with Shigaraki Tomura.”

Aizawa glowered. “You’re still going through with it.”

Nezu smiled calmly.

Tsukauchi only felt impending doom. “You have a plan to counter it?”

“Of course I do!” Nezu’s beaming grin sent shivers down their spines.

“You’re not going to tell us about your ‘brilliant’ plan until afterwards, aren’t you?” Aizawa grumbled.

“My dear Eraserhead, you know me so well!” Nezu hopped down from his chair and swung the door open. “I’ll let you gentlemen know how it turns out!”

Tsukauchi and Aizawa could only stare at each other with mutual dread when Nezu’s chuckles echoed down the hallway. The mouse-bear-dog wandered through the halls, stopping when his ears picked up chatter by the back exit, the door open by just a crack.

“Do you also have times where you can’t save everyone?” Midoriya asked.

“I do. A lot. There could be any number of people suffering right at this very moment, and yet my hand cannot reach out to help them. I’ve failed more people than I dare to count.” Nezu’s ears pricked at Toshinori’s pained voice. “But Young Midoriya, you cannot wallow on those you can’t save. You remember their brave sacrifice and strive to do better in the future. Does this make sense?”

“Y-yes!”

Nezu smiled.

Perhaps All Might could be molded into a fine teacher yet.

Akira groaned as he opened his eyes to a familiar ceiling.

“Hey, sleepyhead.” Hitoshi chuckled from the armchair. “How are you feeling?”

Akira sat up and rubbed his eyes, the fluffy pink blanket pooling around him.

“Better.” He said as his eyes landed on the coffee table. “Uh, what are those?”

“They’re for you.” Hitoshi set aside his laptop and pushed the massive pile of cards towards Akira. “From the regulars. Most of them came by today and wouldn’t take no for an answer. I stole some of the chocolate that Haru-san dropped off though, I hope you don’t mind?”

“Knock yourself out. I don’t think I can eat this all by myself.”

“Sweeeet.” Hitoshi shamelessly plucked a kit kat from the pile.

Akira chuckled as he opened the first get well card from Akane. He smiled at the officer’s attempt at sketching their signature coffee and curry combo. Akira opened his mouth, but Hitoshi beat him to it, his lips stained by a chocolate smudge.

“The cafe has been really quiet today. Everyone knows that mom and dad wanted some space. Oh, and they left plenty of tips for you downstairs.”

“What time is it?”

“Just after five.” Hitoshi huddled down in the chair. “You slept pretty hard, but its understandable. Yesterday was crazy.”

Akira chuckled as he set the card down. “I’m never taking your mother’s quirk for granted. Or Titania’s Dormina for that matter.” He stood and stretched. “Do you think your parents will let me work today?”

“Eh, maybe.” Hitoshi said as he balled up the empty wrapper. “Like I said, it’s been a quiet day, so I think they’d allow it.”

Akira nodded and made his way to the bathroom to wash up. He stared at himself in the mirror. His face had more color, and he felt rather refreshed after his quirk-induced nap.

“I didn’t have any nightmares.” Akira’s Personas surfaced.

“Ah, that is good.” Ishtar smiled.

"We made sure that you had a peaceful slumber." Arsene said.

"Thanks." Akira frowned as he turned on the faucet to wash his face.
"I... I had a nightmare when I was at that lab. It wasn't pretty."

"Big brother..."

"I'll eat any of Master's nightmares!" Cerberus said, grinning.

"You can't eat nightmares." Byakko huffed.

"You don't know that!!"

Akira chuckled as he wiped his face with a fresh towel and did his best to tame his wild floof. An impossible task in its own right, but he didn't want any customers to be turned away because he had constant bedhead. He left the bathroom with a shake of his head, smirking as Hitoshi swiped another candy bar.

"You'll make a decent thief at this rate." Akira slipped on his shoes.

"Hey, I have a pretty awesome teacher." Hitoshi said over a mouthful of chocolate. "Just don't push yourself too hard, okay?"

"Yeah, I know." Akira reached for the door. "Morgana should be around here somewhere. I'll be fine."

Akira trekked downstairs. The usual scents calmed him as he crept into the kitchen, where Ayumu had just got a fresh batch of cookies out from the oven. He glanced over at Akira, smirking.

"Did you sleep okay?"

"Like a baby."

"Good. Here." Ayumu shoved a warm chocolate chip cookie in his hands. "I have a feeling you're going to ask if you could work. You need some energy."

Akira took a bite. "Is this a new recipe?"

"Yep!" Ayumu grinned as he moved the cookies onto a cooling rack. "We've been getting enough customers to buy better ingredients. This one has a decent quality chocolate that I cut into chunks, and paired with some flaky salt... well...."

"It's probably the best cookie I've ever had." Akira wiped his hands on his pants.

"Thanks, kid." Ayumu nodded to Akira's apron. "Go ahead. Risumi is at her usual station."

Hitoshi was right. The cafe was much quieter than usual, with only a handful of patrons in the booths.

"You look better." Risumi smirked from the register. "Amazing what a little bit of good sleep can do. Right?"

Akira ran a hand through his hair. "Yeah. Thanks."

"Don't mention it." Risumi scanned the cafe.

"Do you need- hey, what's wrong with your hand?"

"Oh, I-" Risumi startled when Akira suddenly grasped her bandaged hand. "Akira, it's okay. It was just an accident."

"Accident?"

Risumi nodded as Akira reluctantly let go. "A customer accidentally dropped a plate, and I cut my hand when I cleaned it up. They apologized profusely and offered to bandage the wound. I'm fine, dear. Promise."

"O-okay." Akira took a breath. "If you say so."

"Yes, well..." Risumi looked around the cafe. "The dinner rush is already over, but I thought there would be more customers today."

Akira shrugged. "Hey, maybe the curry craze is finally calming down."

"I hope not. That's our main source of income!" She shook her head, still smiling. "Oh, and your tips are in that jar over there. You've got quite a haul!"

Akira gaped on the jar filled to the brim with yen notes.

"I can't take all of this."

"Sweetheart, the regulars love you." She ruffled his hair. "They were so worried after what was shown on the news. They wanted to do more, what with all of the cards, but they felt that it was the least they could do to make you feel better."

Akira blinked slowly. "You're trying to make me feel guilty so that I'll take it, aren't you?"

"You deserve it, kiddo." She smirked. "Is it working?"

"I....yes."

Their stock was a little bit depleted thanks to Hatsume and supplies for camp, and Akira giving his last paycheck to Daichi certainly didn't help. Akira had no regrets, though. The rest of the evening was rather quiet and unassuming. Risumi handled the patrons, while Akira stood back and washed dishes, occasionally going into the kitchen to steal another cookie from Ayumu.

It was later in the evening when Risumi quietly cursed under her breath.

"What's wrong?" Akira frowned as Risumi stared down at her phone.

"It's nothing." She sighed as she pocketed the device. "A shipment of our usual ingredients will be delayed, and I'll have to figure out something else until they get here."

“Oh.”

“It's no big deal. I'll use the office computer. We have enough funds stored away to have some ingredients expedited.”

“I can hold down the fort.”

“Are you sure? It's okay if you still don't feel well enough.”

“Gee, I don't know.” Akira watched as the last patron put yen on the table and left. “I don't think I can handle this crowd.”

Risumi laughed. “I suppose you're right. I'll just be in the office, and Ayumu is always in the kitchen. Just shout if you need anything, okay?”

“Will do.”

Risumi walked away with graceful, silent footsteps, and disappeared down the hallway to the main office. Akira sighed as he leaned against the counter in an unusually silent cafe. The quiet made it easy to think.

They were running out of time.

He had channeled Arsene's mother hen energy (he ignored Arsene's indignant huff) when he texted Midoriya or any of the other 1-A kids to see how they were coping after the mall incident. They assured him that they were doing fine, but...

They won't be fine after the Summer Camp.

Manami had no luck narrowing down the locations. Akira might be forced to swipe somebody's phone and place a tracker on it like Oracle did that one time, or maybe break into Aizawa's apartment and do it that way. That didn't sit right with him, though.

And All For One...

There was nothing, aside from rumors about a bogey man of the underground, but the forums Manami found it on were ancient, enough to where nobody from that forum would still be alive today. And yet... something significant had passed between Midoriya and Shigaraki yesterday, they acted as if the legendary bogey man was still alive.

All thoughts were cast aside the all of the wind chimes outside rang. His fear sparked his Personas' ire, and he felt their powers creep under his skin as he stared out the door. The bell rang, and Akira had just stopped himself from gaping as none other than Principal Nezu stepped inside. The rat's beady eyes intensified as he spotted Akira before he dove into a booth, entwined paws on the table top.

"What is he doing here?" Arsene growled.

"Shall I erase his memory, Trickster?" Vasuki whispered. "It will give us time to flee."

"No." Akira swallowed as he grabbed a notepad. "We don't even know if he knows yet."

"But considering Eraserhead's promise to let him know the League's plan, well...." Arsene's dark power swelled, but he wouldn't release it until Akira gave him the green light. "You can't call it a coincidence."

"What can I get for you?" Akira put on his best smile, his pen at the ready.

"Ah, I'll take two cups of your finest tea!" Nezu chirped.

"Alright. I'll be back in a few minutes."

Akira tried not to make it seem like he ran from the table, or that he was scanning the cafe for all possible exits. Should he get Ayumu or Risumi...? No, they shouldn't be dragged into this. Akira took a deep breath to steady his hands, making the golden brew just as Tobita did countless times.

With both warm cups in his hand, he went back to the table. He set one in front of Nezu, but frowned as he held the other one.

“Waiting for a friend?” Akira asked.

Nezu took a sip. His eyes were blown wide and his immaculate fur suddenly stood on end. “This tea is absolutely superb!!” He said as his eyes turned to Akira, then to the other cup in his hands. “But to answer your question, no. Why, the other one is for you!”

Thankfully Nezu couldn’t hear the frantic whispers in his head as the rat-bear-dog-thing waved a paw to the opposite side of the table.

“Please, sit. We have much to discuss. Don’t worry, I came here alone and nobody else knows of my current whereabouts! You may do as you wish, but I would suggest hearing me out.”

Akira sank into the end of the booth, drawing on his Personas’ strength to keep a good poker face. Hopefully Nezu couldn’t see his bouncing knee.

“I don’t know what a simple barista would have to talk about with the principal of a hero school.”

“Oh, I think we both know that you’re no simple barista, Kurusu Akira. Or do you prefer that I call you Joker? You go by many names, don’t you Ren?”

The temperature in the cafe plummeted.

“I don’t care how cute he is, I’ll let my teddies take care of him!”

“No, let me eat him instead.” Seth growled. “He’d barely make a mouthful, but I’d love to hear the crunch of his bones within my jaws!”

“Eugh, no Seth.” Ishtar sneered. “Haven’t we warned you of the diseases that rats carry?”

“Hush, everyone.” Arsene slowly spread his wings. “We cannot distract the Trickster right now!”

“I have no idea what you’re talking about.”

“Please don’t play dumb. It’s unbecoming of you and it wastes our precious time.” Nezu took another sip, his smile never falling.

“Besides, we have far more in common than one would think!”

Akira narrowed his eyes. “How do you figure?”

“I wasn’t always the chipper principal you see before you!” Nezu gently swirled his cup. “I do love children. The reason why I became a teacher is because young minds still have room to grow, to nurture, to learn kindness and compassion for their fellow peers. Quite unlike the adults that kept me captive in a laboratory. I still remember the experiments they enacted upon me, their wicked smiles have haunted my nightmares for years. It was like....” Nezu slowly looked up to Akira, unblinking.

Akira understood. He found himself answering softly.

“Like you’re a lowly pawn in a game played by those who consider themselves gods.”

“Precisely .”

They didn’t know how much time had passed as Nezu and Akira stared at one another, but one such powerful bond, shared by nobody else on the planet, was forged. Someone that truly understood . Akira’s throat clogged, the words refusing to form.

Nezu’s eyes softened, as did his smile. He reached into his vest pocket and produced a card.

“What’s....” Akira cleared his throat as his voice trembled. “What’s that?”

“This-” Nezu waved it. “Is the time and place where you shall send your raven to Aizawa, who will provide the location to the Summer Camp.” Nezu’s smile widened as Akira straightened. “I will give this card to you, but know that if you take it you will be agreeing to what I propose.”

“And that would be...?”

“A partnership. I know that you and your team would find a way to the Summer Camp anyway, so how about we make this easier for the both of us? Take this card, and I will work something out with the Wild Wild Pussy Cats. We would team up to protect the students.”

“But how are you going to convince them to work with me ? Why not outright cancel the camp to save yourself some trouble?”

“And waste this opportunity? If I cancel it now, then we would have no knowledge of their plans for the future! We would lose our biggest advantage over the League.”

“But Giran probably left out a lot of details. This attack could be bigger than we imagine, and with all of these unknown elements, how do you plan to keep the students safe?”

“Well, then isn’t it for the best that we pool our resources together to prevent a tragedy?” Nezu’s grin turned wicked. “Do you think they will account for us teaming together? A united front stands a better chance of being successful.”

“How do I know that you won’t just turn on me after its done? I’m not walking into a trap.”

“I’m afraid that you’ll just have to take my word that your safety is guaranteed. I know it’s not the most ideal situation, but what would you be willing to sacrifice to ensure that these children make it through unscathed?”

An ultimatum. An honest choice with no pretty lies tied to it. Akira could refuse, find some other way, or he could take the deal. They wouldn't have to hide from the group of heroes this way, but on the other hand-

"Would the students know about me being there?"

"I'll leave that up to you." Nezu said. "But know that the Wild Pussy Cats and any U.A. staff would be informed of your presence, deal or no." Nezu chuckled as Akira's expression soured. "Did I mention that they have excellent hot springs? You'd be able to use them and any other accommodations freely with such a partnership!"

Oh yes, Manami mentioned that all of the Pussy Cats' locations had hot springs.

"But this deal is a bit unbalanced, don't you think?" Akira leaned back, eyes narrowed. "My team would be the most at risk from both sides."

Nezu smirked. "Then what do you propose?"

"You let my team walk after this whole ordeal is over, and..."

"And?"

Akira stared the rat in the eye. "You let Mona and I investigate the USJ."

"Oho, why the USJ?" Nezu tilted his head when Akira didn't answer. "Ah, well I suppose you wouldn't mind if Eraserhead and I tagged along? It's still on U.A. grounds, and I'm interested in what sparked your attention!"

"Fine."

It might be the best deal, all things considered. Slowly, Akira reached over the table. Who would have thought that taking such a small card bore the weight of an entire world?

“Excellent!” Nezu beamed.

“I don’t want the students knowing I’m there.” Akira said. “At least, not at first.”

“We’ll do everything to keep it as such.” Nezu finished his tea and sighed happily. “Well, the tea was delicious, young man. I won’t overstay my welcome.” Nezu slid from the booth and straightened his vest. “I bid you a good night, Kurusu Akira.”

Nezu grinned at him one last time before he vacated the cafe. Akira sat there, his untouched tea had long lost its warmth as he stared at the white card. This location was on U.A. grounds, and within two days time.

“Okay, I’ve taken care of - Akira?” Akira hastily tucked the card away as Risumi stared at him. “What are you doing?”

“Uh, nothing.” He stood and collected the cups. “A friend stopped by. I served them some tea. That’s it.”

“Yes, well...” Risumi pursed her lips when Akira wouldn’t look her in the eye, instead choosing to wash dishes in a heavy silence. “How about we close early? It has been a rather slow day.”

“Yeah, sure.”

Risumi ignored the familiar sprout of worry as she grabbed a paper bag and stuffed it full of sugary treats. She packed the mass of tips inside too, protected by a plastic bag.

“Here.” She gently shoved it in his hands, he blinked down at it before she wrapped him in her arms. “Come here anytime you need a break, okay? We’ll be here for you. Always.”

“I will, promise.” He chuckled. “You can tell Hitoshi to keep all of the chocolate upstairs. I’ll pick up the cards next time, okay?”

“Okay.” She set a hand on his absurdly fluffy hair. “See you later?”

His eyes gleamed as he grinned. "Later."

Risumi only kept the tears away until Akira left.

Akira walked on in a semi-daze.

"Akira, where are we going? What did Nezu want? Do you think he's setting up a trap?... Akira? Akira, answer me!" Morgana sighed as Akira kept quiet, instead focusing on the breeze he commanded. "Well, nobody is following us, at least."

Morgana didn't know where Akira was going, but this wasn't the way to the Raven's Nest. Akira himself didn't realize where he was until he stood in front of an apartment door, his hand raised to knock. It opened to a familiar woman with kind green eyes, who brightened upon seeing him.

"Kurusu!!" Inko attacked him with a warm hug, not that he objected. She stepped back with a grin. "Sweetie, I'm so happy to see you! Would you like to come in?"

"Actually, I wanted to talk to Izuku." Akira gave her his best version of the puppy dog eyes. "If that's okay?"

"Of course!"

She ducked back inside and Izuku emerged minutes later. He took one look at Akira's crestfallen expression, his eyes wide.

"Mom, we'll be at Dagobah!"

"Alright, be careful, okay? Text me if you need anything!"

"I will!" Izuku shut the door and they were off.

An amicable silence floated between them as they walked the darkened streets, their shadows dancing under each street light they passed. Akira spoke when they heard the sound of waves and the air took on a familiar saltiness.

"I like your shirt." Akira smirked. "Very fashionable."

"Thanks?" Izuku laughed, his shirt literally said 't-shirt' on the front. "My classmates don't find it very funny though."

"They're missing out on good humor."

Akira stopped when they reached the seawall stairs, planting himself on the top step as he hugged his bag to his chest. Morgana didn't dare move. Izuku shuffled on his feet, but he sank next to Akira, his eyes staring out into the vast ocean.

They took a moment to admire how the moon painted the sea a beautiful silver.

"Are you okay, Akira?" Izuku asked softly.

"I was going to ask you the same, honestly." Akira looked at Izuku with a frown. "I know that guy didn't leave without giving you scars, even if they aren't visible."

Izuku swallowed. "That's not as bad as being kidnapped and almost experimented on."

"Since when was this a competition? We both went through something traumatic." A beat of silence passed before Akira nudged Izuku. "What a pair we make, huh? Trouble makers to our core."

"Yeah." Izuku's smile dropped as he looked down at his scarred hands. "Why did you want to talk to me? N-not that I'm complaining or anything!! It's always nice to talk to you but I guess I'm just curious?"

Akira snorted as he ruffled Izuku's hair. "I wanted to see you before you left for that camp. That's soon, right?"

“Yeah!” Excitement sparked in Izuku’s eyes. “I honestly can’t wait!”

“Yeah...” Akira stood and dusted sand from his pants. “I’m sorry I can’t really talk long, but I wanted to ask something before you left.”

Izuku stood. His smile made Akira’s heart hurt even more.

“Of course! You can ask me anything!”

“I just...” Akira looked down at his shoes, his voice just above a whisper. “We’ll always be friends, won’t we?”

Izuku blinked several times, his mouth dropping. Akira’s pounding heart counted the seconds that ticked by, with only the sea breeze washing over them.

“How can you ask that?” Izuku beamed. “Of course we’ll always be friends, no matter what!”

“Right. Of course.” Akira rubbed the back of his neck with a sheepish grin. “Thanks, Izuku.”

“No problem!” Izuku glanced at Akira’s bag as he heard a phone chime. “Do you have to go?”

“Yeah.” Akira shook his head. “I should’ve been home for dinner a bit ago. They get worried when I don’t respond. I should get going.”

“Do you want me to walk you home?”

“Nah, thanks for the offer though.”

Akira waved as he walked down the street, leaving Izuku on the seawall stairs. Izuku watched until he saw Akira blend in with the shadows.

If only Izuku knew that would be the last time he ever set eyes on Kurusu Akira.

“Kurogiri, are Compress and Twice done yet?”

“Not quite, but they are close.” Kurogiri said as he finished wiping his favorite mug. “Why are you in such a rush, Shigaraki Tomura?”

“You know why.” He snapped.

“... Of course.”

“Toga.”

“Hmm?” Toga leveled him a sadistic grin as she clutched a vial with a tiny globule of blood inside. “What’s up, Shiggy?”

“I told you not to call me that.” He muttered. “I want you to keep an eye on Mr. Compress when we launch the assault.”

“Oooh?” Her cat-like eyes narrowed. “So you noticed he’s been acting different, too?”

“No shit. That’s why I’m asking.”

“Sure! But you owe me big time! Can I cover Compress in pretty red!?”

“It’s not wise to rush.” Kurogiri sighed. “We should wait and watch until we are certain of his intentions. Besides, Sensei made it clear what would happen to Compress if he ran or became a turn coat. I wouldn’t wish that fate on anybody.”

“Fiiiine.” Toga splayed herself over the bar with a dramatic huff. “I’ll watch him. Hey, Kurogiri! Make me a drink!”

“You are not old enough, Miss Toga.”

“Ugh, nobody wants to have any fun! I’m bored!”

Shigaraki ignored their bickering.

Sensei was adamant that he wanted Joker first, and what Sensei said goes. However, any potential betrayers and the hero brats were fair game.

He couldn't wait to watch them all struggle like worms.

"That's when I accepted this card from Nezu- what, hey!"

Manami snatched the card from Akira. "Okay, so we'll have the location, but I want us to get one thing straight, mister!"

Akira swallowed as the others looked at her in surprise.

"What would that be?" He asked.

Manami puffed her cheeks and put her hands on her hips. She was rather intimidating despite her tiny stature.

"Whatever plan you make, we all have to agree on it." Manami raised her chin in a challenge. "We're all in this together ! Got it?"

"But I'm never really alone, remember?"

Manami repressed her urge to kick him. "You know what I mean!"

"She has a point." Kaito said over his plate of curry. "Neither Hitoshi or I will be there to look after you, so you should rely on one another while you're there."

"We are all a team, are we not?" Tobita said as he took a sip of freshly brewed tea.

"Yeah!" Shuichi crackled his knuckles. "We have your back!"

"Merp!"

Morgana cackled at Akira's side. "We can't really argue against that, can we Leader ?"

“Okay, okay.” Akira held up his hands. “We are a team, and I realize that now.”

“I’ll hold you to it, mister!” Manami said. “I know you broke some promises before.”

Akira huffed. “... Sorry.”

Manami shook her head. “In any case, we should discuss our first problem.”

“Er, problem?” Shuichi raised a scaly brow. “What problem?”

“Think about it!” Manami paced around the lounge. “This is a Summer Camp .”

“Yeah, and?” Akira asked.

“Meaning that there won’t really be any trains to take us to whatever mountain lodge the camp will be at! How are we going to get there?”

“That’s true.” Tobita set his cup on the table. “You don’t think we could ask U.A. for transportation?”

“No.” Akira wrinkled his nose. “I’d prefer not to owe them any favors. If it comes down to it, we can always ride Seth. He’s grown in size so he would be able to carry everyone.”

“No, no, NO!!” Morgana was on all fours. “No more dragon rides! Nope! Nu uh! I can’t take it!”

“Then what do you suggest, Morgana?” Akira asked.

“Well, if you have to ask....” Morgana grinned at him.

A smirk bloomed on Akira’s face. “Wait, do you mean...?”

“Yep!”

Kaito slowly blinked. “Do you mind sharing with the rest of the class?”

Morgana chuckled. “It’ll be easier to show you. Come on!”

He hopped down and sprinted out to the front. Excitement bubbled in Akira’s chest as he followed, with his confused teammates right behind him. He got out his phone as they went outside.

“What are you doing?” Kaito asked.

Akira’s grin widened. “I have to get your reactions. It’ll be great.”

“You know, that just scares me more.” Manami said.

“I’m sure it’s nothing to worry about?” Tobita asked as he patted her head.

“Okay, it looks like the coast is clear!” Morgana said as he looked up and down the street. “Manami, the cameras around here won’t catch anything, right?”

“Right! My program still loops old footage so that we won’t be seen leaving the Nest.” Manami crossed her arms, frowning. “... Why?”

“It’s finally my time to shine!!” Morgana cackled as he balanced on his back legs, waving his front legs in a wide arc.

“Morganaaaa....transfoooooorm!!”

He jumped into the air with a fantastic spin, and Akira bit back his laughter when everyone cried out at the puff of smoke, before a large black van crashed onto the street. This van had three yellow stripes painted on the left side of it. Morgana’s blue eyes were the headlights, with his ears at the top, and a tail sticking out from the bumper.

“Wh-wh-wh-” Manami wasn’t the only one lost for words.

Akira snapped a picture of everyone’s faces, laughing.

“Wait.” Akira walked over and patted Morgana on the hood. “How long could you transform like this?”

“I felt the change a while ago!” Morgana’s voice echoed from the radio. “Why?”

“You could’ve, I don’t know, told me about it earlier?”

“And ruin the surprise!?” Morgana bounced on his front wheels, the headlights brightening. “You’re not the only one who likes to keep their cards close to their chest! I had to wait until the right moment! So, aren’t I amazing!?”

“Is that why you made that Spotlight post!?” Shuichi frantically circled the van, taking in the details. Lady Stubbs was sniffing Morgana’s front bumper. “That’s so cool!! Stubbs, can you turn into a van too!?”

Lady Stubbs jumped back with a hiss.

“Wha- No I’m not insinuating that you are fat!”

“Merp!”

“Yes, we all know it’s just the fluff!”

Akira sighed.

“Alright.” Tobita blinked several times as he approached the driver’s side. “Does anyone have a license?”

“Does that one weird dream with Nezu count?” Akira asked.

“I’m afraid not.” Tobita chuckled.

Akira opened the passenger door and stuck his head inside. “But I never needed a license to drive him around.”

“Ah, then perhaps I should drive this... er... Mona?” Tobita’s expression twisted in amused confusion. “If that is alright? I do have my license, and I would rather us not get in trouble with the authorities before we get to the Summer Camp.”

“Fine by me!” Morgana prummed. “Just go easy on my meowtory engine, it’s really sensitive! You hear that? Be gentle!!”

“... Meowtory engine?” Kaito whispered.

“I-I’m.... not going to ask.” Manami stated.

“Don’t worry!” Tobita laughed as he pet Morgana’s hood. “After all, I am not called Gentle Criminal for nothing!!”

“Oh, this will be entertaining.” Arsene muttered.

Akira had to agree.

“Everyone line up in alphabetical order!!” Iida chopped his arms as his classmates loaded their luggage.

“But it’s open seating, Iida!” Ashido cried as she dove inside.

Aizawa snorted as Yaoyorozu gently patted Iida’s shoulder. A rustle came from above, and he looked into the branches of the tree he lingered under.

“About time.” He said to the three legged raven. “I thought you would be too late.”

Yatagarasu shook his head as he dropped from the branch to perch on Aizawa’s shoulder, the talons digging into his skin.

“Joker is never late.” Yatagarasu said. “Now, the location?”

“... Right.” Aizawa dug into his pocket for piece of paper. “This is where the camp will be. The buses will be leaving soon, so I would suggest following behind at a reasonable distance if you don’t want the students to see you.”

“Got it.” Yatagarasu opened his wings.

“Wait, aren’t you going to take it?”

“No need.” Yatagarasu chuckled. “I’ve already sent the location to the Trick- to Joker. He has heeded your words as well. He promises to take along his fair share of coffee so that you won’t run out.”

Aizawa’s eyes widened. “You can communicate telepathically?”

The bird’s eyes twinkled before he took off in a rush of feathers. Aizawa sighed as he crunched the piece of paper and stuck it back in his pocket.

Todoroki looked skywards at the darting shadow, only catching a glimpse of a strange bird before it disappeared over the tree line. The rustle of grass drew his eyes over to Aizawa, who walked out from the same direction. His teacher exchanged glances with Vlad King with a firm nod.

For some reason Vlad King’s frown deepened, but he returned the nod.

“Strange...” Todoroki muttered.

“What’s wrong?” Midoriya asked.

“Nothing.” Todoroki pushed his luggage into the compartment. “Do you want to sit together on the bus?”

“Sure!”

The thought of the strange bird stayed in the back of Todoroki’s mind as they prepared to leave.

“Alright, I think that’s everything.” Akira stared at the list as he listened to the Monabus’ gentle purring. “You doing alright, Morgana?”

“Yeah, I’m fine!” Monabus huffed. “We’ll be late if we don’t leave soon!”

“Shotgun!” Manami cried as she was the first to dive inside.

“Hey, I wanted that!” Shuichi cried.

“Too late!” Manami smirked. “First come, first serve!”

Shuichi sighed as he hopped in back with Lady Stubbs. “Fine, you win this one!”

“I’m still having trouble coming to terms with this.” Hitoshi leaned against the wall, frowning. “How is it that Morgana can turn into a bus ?”

“Human cognition is a powerful thing.” Akira closed the back doors and stepped onto the sidewalk. “Its how our abilities grow more powerful here.”

“Wait. Oh my god.” Hitoshi gaped. “He’s the cat bus from Totoro!”

“Wh-what!?” Monabus beeped. “There’s another cat bus!?”

“It’s from a show, Morgana.” Akira chuckled. “But maybe that’s where this power originally came from?”

“Huh, maybe!”

“Wait, you’re a sentient cat bus, so can you drive yourself?” Hitoshi asked.

“No I can’t drive myself!!” Monabus shouted. “Why do you think Tobita is driving me!?”

At that moment, Tobita walked out with Kaito.

“Ah, I see you’ve finished loading up.” Tobita said with a smile. “Shall we be off, then?”

“Yeah.” Akira turned to look out into the city. “Yatagarasu said the buses will leave in a few minutes.”

Kaito crossed his arms, eyes falling to the ground.

“Hey, lighten up Kaito.” Akira patted him on the shoulder.

“‘Lighten up’, you say.” Kaito scoffed, but it had no anger in it. “As if that will help anything. You know how this looks.”

Hitoshi bit his lip as he stared at Akira.

“Yeah, it could easily be a trap from either side. Not to mention Giran probably withheld information.” Akira scratched the back of his head as he felt everyone’s eyes on him. “Listen, we’ll meet up back here if we get split up. If anything happens-”

“Nothing will happen, right?” Hitoshi’s hands balled into fists. “Nezu gave you his word... right?”

“Yeah, but still.” Akira shrugged. “We’re going to be prepared for anything.”

Tobita reached into his breast pocket for the Yaoyorozu watch. “Come now, we will be terribly late if we linger around.”

“Right.” Akira shifted his weight as Tobita hopped into the driver’s seat. He smiled at Hitoshi. “Keep up your routine while we’re gone, okay?”

“And make sure to keep practicing on your laptop!” Manami cried from inside the Monabus. “Remember what I taught you!”

“I know.” Hitoshi smirked, but it slowly fell as his eyes flicked back to Akira. “Be careful, okay?”

Akira winked. “Don’t worry about us.”

He turned on his heel and hopped in back with Shuichi and Stubbs. Akira waved at them one last time before he shut the door. The Monabus lurched with motion, and Kaito and Hitoshi watched as it drove down the street and turned a corner.

Hitoshi dragged out a sigh. "Doesn't he understand that we always worry?"

"That's just how he is." Kaito shook his head. "You want to come inside for some curry? I swear Akira left me with an entire month's supply. I hope it doesn't go bad."

"I'll help you make a dent in it." Hitoshi snorted. "You know, you could just come to the cafe now that you have that suppressant."

"Yeah, I guess you're right." Kaito looked at the silver band on his wrist. "I'll think about it."

"You're always welcome."

Kaito smiled and they trailed inside to feast on curry, unknowing of the world shattering events lingering on the horizon.

Welp, there you have it. We'll be going straight to the Summer Camp after my break is over ;))

Also, if anybody happens to be confused by the 'weird dream with Nezu' that Akira had, then go ahead and read chapter 4 of the Thieves Den! It's a scene that crashed into my brain and wouldn't let go, and there are other extra scenes written by some of the lovelies in Discord! I might also be putting more scenes/scenarios on it eventually as well.

I hope you guys have a good September. See ya in October! <3

Edit: I've seen a lot of comments on this chapter guessing if the story either ends at Kamino or right after. No worries, it doesn't! There's at least one-third of the story left to go even after Kamino ends. The best way to split this story would be into 3 'acts', the first act being chapter 1 to Price, act 2 is Price to Kamino, then act 3 is Kamino until the end.

Meaning that this story isn't ending any time soon xD

Aria Of The Soul

Chapter 56: Aria Of The Soul

Hello there ;3

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

FANART By aariaart

A somber melody trilled through the room draped in soft velvet, accompanied by the constant echo of piano notes. Lonely chains swayed to and fro within the isolated cells as if disturbed by a ghost, the lowly rings of metal only adding to the desolate song.

Welcome to the Velvet Room.

Lavenza dearly wished she could hear her Master say those words. Their guest hadn't made an appearance since he was torn away from this world, his cell without a door remained vacant. Lonely. She held the Compendium close to her chest, hoping that the Trickster's other selves could soothe the emptiness within.

She opened the book to Arsene's page, then Seth's and Titania's. Pixie and Ishtar.

All of the Personas the Trickster brought to the final battle were painted over by some unknown force, like ink carelessly splotched on the pages. The blackness, which started at the center of the page, slowly fanned out over time. Now, they were nothing but pages of midnight.

Her chest tightened.

This ache in her heart came whenever she thought of the Trickster. What of the strange lump forming in her throat? Her eyes that burned and blurred her vision? As a Ruler Of Power, she could not get sick in the way humans could. Or perhaps...

Were these human emotions?

She wiped her eyes with a delicately gloved hand.

"Are you alright, Lavenza?"

"Y-yes." Lavenza turned to her Master. "I'm troubled that we have not been able to reach the Trickster. Something is amiss. Why hasn't he come here since Yaldabaoth banished him? Is he... unable to hear our calls?"

"The Velvet Room is a place between dream and reality, mind and matter." Igor's eyes fell to the empty cell. "We should have no trouble calling the Trickster here, and yet we've received nothing but silence. What an odd turn of events."

Lavenza's eyes fell in shame. "My sincerest apologies, Master."

"Hmm?" Igor turned his unblinking gaze on her. "Why are you apologizing, my dear?"

"My lack of strength has failed you, and it has ultimately failed the Trickster."

Igor intertwined his fingers. "This is no fault of yours, Lavenza. We have yet to recover our full power." He leaned forward with a sigh. "I suspect that Yaldabaoth's interference has made it impossible to summon the Trickster in our current state. The false god has bent the rules of the game out of fear for his own demise, but in truth he has only delayed the inevitable."

"Bent the rules..." Lavenza's golden eyes widened. "Master, if Yaldabaoth has twisted the rules of the game, then why can we not do the same? Can we not even the score?"

Igor's grin widened by a fraction. "It is forbidden for me to directly interfere, but you are not bound by such chains. The Rulers Of Power are free to do as they wish."

Lavenza became overwhelmed by a surge of emotion. Fires of exhilaration flowed from her pounding heart until it thrummed loudly in her ears. A sudden longing made her stomach ache. Resolve to see her Trickster once again thrived within every part of her being. How peculiar that humans experience such a wide range of emotions every single day.

"I... Yaldabaoth's new powers prevent me from stepping into this world, so I cannot confront him directly. But how else would I reach the Trickster...?" Her grip on the Compendium tightened as her eyes turned towards the vacant cell. "Oh, what should I do?"

"The Trickster uses his bonds for a source of strength. Remember that he did not walk alone."

"Master?"

"All of the guests in this room did not shoulder their journey by themselves. The other Attendants and I always watched over them." Igor spoke as if he was only thinking aloud, oblivious to the bright light bulb in Lavenza's mind. "Ah, I do wonder how the other Attendants are doing."

"That's it!" Lavenza paced back and forth in front of her Master's desk, her long hair flowing behind her. "If we bring together the previous Rulers of Power, then it might break through whatever machinations Yaldabaoth set in place! We could find the Trickster with our own portal. Would my siblings answer such a plea for help? After all, they are busy with other duties, and Elizabeth has left the Velvet Room altogether to pursue her mission..."

“There is the chance that they will not heed your call.” Igor leaned back in his chair as he scanned the Velvet Room. “However, it is not only this world that will fall to Ruin should they refuse. Many realms lay on the brink. Yaldabaoth’s strength has only grown since his influence has seeped into those worlds.”

“Meaning they have to answer should they not wish for total annihilation of many worlds.”

“Correct.” Igor said, grinning. “As I said, I cannot meddle in such matters. That would outright break the rules, so everything lies in your capable hands.”

Lavenza closed her eyes and opened the Compendium, gathering whatever fragments of power laced within her small body. A tiny wind swirled around her, rapidly flipping the pages as her hair and long velvet dress fluttered with the breeze. Igor watched the Compendium glow faintly as the wind died, stopping the book midway.

Several butterflies emerged from the Sea kept within. Lavenza smiled as they fluttered off on crystal wings, leaving dim trails of sparkling light in their wake.

“Please, everyone.” She whispered as the butterflies disappeared into the unknown. “I need your power if we want to win this unjust game!”

And so, they would wait.

At least Belladonna’s timeless song made it bearable.

This is the opening chapter to Act 3 of DTESH! Act 1: Chapters 1-29
Act 2: 30-55 Act 3: 56 -???

UPDATE SCHEDULE for the next few chapters!!

Oct 9

Oct 16

Oct 30

Nov 6

Nov 20

Also important! The update schedule could always change! I'll be honest with you guys, I'm really glad I took a break over September. If I didn't, if I simply rushed these upcoming chapters and updated through September anyway, then I really would have crashed mentally and then this story would have to be put on hiatus anyway. Plus, these chapters wouldn't nearly be as polished as they are now.

I'll let you guys know if there are any changes to this current schedule, because I would like to take the time to perfect a chapter rather than publish a half arsed one because I didn't have enough time to properly polish it. Comments demanding more chapters also won't be tolerated :) Thanks for everyone's understanding and patience.

With that out of the way, buckle up everyone. Its about to get real! :D

Memories Of A Summer Day

Chapter 57: Memories Of A Summer Day

“It’s you.” Mandalay crossed her arms, scrutinizing him from head to toe.

“Were you expecting someone else?” Akira said with a playful tilt of his head. “Like a knight in shining armor? I’m afraid those are a dime a dozen these days.”

Hey guys! We reached some more awesome milestones for this story!! 300k hits, over 6k kudos, past 1250 bookmarks!? It still amazes me just how far this story has come, and I want to really thank you guys for sticking with me for so long! <3

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

“Is this satisfactory, Shigaraki Tomura?”

Shigaraki peered into cases set on the bar. “Is this everything?”

“Yes.” Kurogiri said, nodding. “The final gift from Giran.”

“‘Gift’, huh?” Shigaraki scoffed. “That traitor tried to run away.”

“He will no longer be a problem.” Kurogiri said as he gestured to the equipment. “However, the quality of this gear is guaranteed, as he had promised before his... departure. I assured his contacts within the black market that they would continue to get business with us if everything goes well.”

“Whatever.” Shigaraki plopped on the bar stool and scratched at his neck. “As long as we show the world that that infuriating secret boss isn’t so indestructible after all, that U.A. is just a training ground for violence. The League’s name will be forced into the spotlight and many villains will come out of hiding.”

“Yes, Shigaraki Tomura. Shall I disperse the gear to everyone?”

“Fine by me, they should already be at the meeting location.”

“Right away.”

Kurogiri bowed his head, then he and the equipment disappeared into a black cloud.

“Ah, this will be so fun.” Shigaraki grinned as he was left alone in the dimly lit bar. “Joker, U.A.... your days are numbered.”

“Merp!”

“Merp!?”

“Merp.”

Akira gasped as he put a hand over his heart. “Merp...?”

Lady Stubbs nodded sagely. “Merp.”

“What in the world are you two talking about?” Manami looked at Akira sitting in the back seat with Lady Stubbs on his lap.

“I didn’t even think you understood cat!” Shuichi said from beside Akira. “Even I don’t know what they’re saying. Just how many versions of ‘merp’ are there!?”

Akira tapped his temple. “It’s a secret between a lady and a gentlemen.”

Shuichi squawked as he glanced at Lady Stubbs, who turned away with her nose in the air.

“Oh, the betrayal!!” Shuichi collapsed against the door. “How could you do this to me, Stubbs!?”

“Merp.”

“Hey, calm down back there!” Monabus shouted. “Tobita, are they distracting you?”

“Not at all.” Tobita glanced into the rear view mirror, smiling. “At least they’re having fun.”

Manami rolled her eyes as she stared at her laptop. “We’re almost there, anyway. We should pull off because the 1-A bus is slowing down.”

“We’ve been on the road for a good few hours.” Akira looked out the window to lush mountain scenery. “They’re probably just taking a break?”

“Maybe.” She said. “Stop here, there’s a good spot where they won’t see us.”

The pulled into a small overlook. A perfect view of rolling waves of greenery and lush mountains spread before them like a thick carpet. The word solitude described this stretch of land, for there wasn’t a so much as a building or any hint of civilization in sight. There was a lodge hidden somewhere within the miles of vibrant expanse, but nothing else.

Lady Stubbs jumped of Akira’s lap as he reached for a pair of binoculars in the back seat. Akira threw open the Monabus door and stepped out. He took a breath of fresh air before he walked to the edge of the overlook and crouched behind some loose foliage. He used the binoculars to look at another overlook just down the road, where Class 1-A poured out from their own bus.

Akira frowned when he spotted a black vehicle parked close by.

“See anything?” Shuichi crouched next to him.

“There’s a black vehicle.” Akira asked as he handed the binoculars over. “It’s too close to my liking.”

“I’m sure it’s fine! You don’t think... wait, some people are getting out! They have a little kid with them! It looks like Pixie Bob and Mandalay.”

“Do you see Ragdoll anywhere?”

“Negative!”

Akira snatched the binoculars back, snorting. “Okay, I know the Wild Wild Pussy Cats have a cat theme, but I still can’t believe their costumes have giant paws and literal tails on the roster.”

Panther’s costume had more panache and elegance, without ruffled skirts and ridiculous oversized paws.

Manami huffed. “We studied their files before we left. That included their quirks and costumes!”

“I know, but it’s a whole other ordeal seeing them in person. You would think those ruffled skirts get in the way of actual rescue work.... wait.” Akira’s stomach dropped at the sudden panic on 1-A’s faces.

The blue Pussy Cat, Pixie Bob, placed her hands on the ground. Tremors shook the mountain and clouds of dust spewed into the air, accompanied by the screams of 1-A as they were forced into the forest below.

“They’re crazy!” Shuichi gaped at the plume of dust. “They’re just kids!”

“Yatagarasu, check if they’re okay.”

"Leave it to me, Trickster." Yatagarasu materialized and soared over the cliff, the wind carried the students' groans and mutters. "They're unharmed, if a bit dusty."

"You have three hours!!" Mandalay, the red Pussy Cat, called from the top of the cliff. "Get to the facility on your own two feet! Prepare yourselves, because you'll have to make it through the Beast's Forest!!"

"Waaaah, what is this!?"

"We have to what!?"

"How is this fair!?"

"It's training." Akira chuckled as ominous rumbles echoed from the forest. "They'll be fine... I think."

Yatagarasu gracefully floated down to 1-A's bus. "I do not see Ragdoll anywhere. Wherever she is, it isn't here."

"Good." Akira said, smirking. "We all know what to do when we see her. Can you listen in on Grampus and Mandalay?"

Yatagarasu hopped to the edge of the bus, tilting his head to listen in.

"This is a crazy schedule, Eraserhead." Mandalay said, frowning. "Are you sure you want to do this to them?"

"Yes, this is essential training that they'd usually get in their second year. This whole trip is going to be insane no matter how you look at it. Besides, we all know what's at stake, and what's coming." Aizawa said, before his eyes trailed out to the lingering dust clouds. "With the world being so chaotic, they need to learn how to properly defend themselves. So much has changed in such a short time, and they need to keep up."

They ignored Pixie Bob's squeals of delight as more dust clouds exploded into the sky.

"I suppose you're right." Mandalay said. "But the hero classes aren't our only guests. When do we get to meet our... 'extra security'?"

Yatagarasu warbled.

Aizawa stared up at the bird with a sigh. "The coast is clear, you can come over."

Mandalay blinked. "Eraser, why are you talking to a bird?"

"Just wait." Aizawa crossed his arms and leaned against the bus. "They'll be here soon."

Aizawa didn't know how Joker and his crew would follow them. They didn't ask for a vehicle, and he half expected Joker to come sailing in on one of his dragons with that irritable grin plastered on his face. Instead, they heard the purr of an approaching engine and watched as a black van rolled to a stop behind the Pussy Cats' car. The door flew open and a familiar face hopped out.

Kurusu Akira donned simple jeans and a t-shirt. The kid's usual glasses were missing, showcasing his intense silvery eyes. A few other people got out, including a lizard and a cat that wasn't Mona. They waited by the van as Akira approached them by himself, tension lining their bodies. He wasn't bothered by any pillars of debris or Todoroki's massive glaciers jutting from the trees.

The raven soared to Akira's shoulder. Akira pet the soft feathers and smiled at the heroes.

"It's you." Mandalay crossed her arms, scrutinizing him from head to toe.

"Were you expecting someone else?" Akira said with a playful tilt of his head. "Like a knight in shining armor? I'm afraid those are a dime a dozen these days.”

“No.” Mandalay smiled, but it was tense. “I’ve heard the rumors, but I’m still surprised that you’re so young, that’s all. I’m happy that you’re here. Nezu assured me that you two came to an agreement. We’re not going to take his word lightly.”

“Yeah.” Akira donned a smile of porcelain. “Happy to be here.”

“Who is he?” The kid spat. “Another stupid hero?”

Akira smirked. “I’m no hero, kid.”

The kid flinched back, eyes wide.

Mandalay sighed as she placed herself in between them. “Kota, do you remember what we told you? He’s our extra security from U.A. You can’t tell the students about them, okay? It’s our secret.”

The kid rolled his eyes. “Fine by me. I don’t want to talk to those losers anyway!”

Akira snorted. This kid reminded him so much of Shinya. He even wore a red hat, though it had golden horns sticking out of it instead of the words ‘Get Smoked’.

“Ohhh!” Pixie Bob jumped up and down, “Eraserhead, you have some real powerhouses in your class!! I can’t wait to see where they’ll be in three years!”

“They’re good kids with a lot of expectations placed on them.” Akira’s eyes narrowed. “You aren’t going easy on them, right?”

“Of course not!” Pixie Bob whirled around to him, grinning viciously. “Plus, this is good practice for my beasts, for when it goes down.”

Kota gave her a skewed look.

“Alright, we’ve spent enough time here.” Mandalay said as she glanced at Akira. “We should get to the lodge before 1-A beats us there. You’ll follow us down the mountain so we can park our vehicles.”

“They might get there by noon.” Pixie Bob licked her lips. “Or maybe not, since they’re moving pretty slow. Hey, at least they’re sticking together! Wait a sec, is that van modeled after a cat!?”

“It does have ears and a tail…” Mandalay chuckled. “The engine even sounds like a kitten’s purr.”

“Trust me, the meowtory engine is not to be trifled with.” Akira said.

“Meowtory engine!?” Pixie Bob cackled and held her stomach. “It’s purrfect!!”

“In any case, we should go. Kota,” Mandalay held a squishy paw down to the boy, “We’re leaving!”

“Whatever.” Kota growled as he trudged to the black car. “This is all pointless anyway.”

“Don’t be like that, Kota.” Pixie Bob said, then she glanced back at Akira. “Ragdoll and Tiger are at the lodge, best not to keep them waiting!”

Akira nodded to Yatagarasu, who vanished to ash. His team scrambled back into the Monabus and they followed the heroes down a long, winding road. The air was occasionally peppered by a shock wave from the battles within the forest, but it was an otherwise peaceful drive until they reached a large clearing. The lodge looked more like a traditional resort than anything. They pulled into a garage around the back and parked next to Aizawa’s bus.

A stiff moment of silence doused the Monabus’ cabin.

“Are you ready for this?” Manami asked.

“Yes.” Akira watched Aizawa exit the school bus, their eyes meeting through the glass. “Everyone stay on your toes.”

“At least we won’t have to worry about our vehicle being tampered with.” Tobita said with a tiny smirk.

“No kidding.” Akira stepped out, the others followed his lead.

Mandalay kept a safe distance as they unloaded their bags. “Your rooms will be on the opposite wing from the students. The classes shouldn’t suspect anything as long as we’re careful.”

“Noted.” Akira said as he threw a duffel bag over his shoulder.

“By the way, where’s Mona?” Aizawa raised a brow as the group exchanged humorous glances. “I figured he would be with you.”

“Oh, he’ll meet up with us later.” Akira shut the door as all of the luggage was taken out.

“Okay...” Aizawa grumbled. “What’s that supposed to mean?”

“It means he’ll meet up with us later.” Akira’s grin stretched from ear to ear.

“Fine, let’s just get settled in.” Aizawa ran a hand down his face.

“Mandalay, Pixie Bob, can you show us around?”

“Right!” Pixie Bob dove towards a door. “Follow us!”

“Come on, Kota.” Mandalay held her hand down to the boy, but he sneered and shrugged her off.

The woman sighed as the rest of them trailed inside. The interior was like a traditional Japanese inn, complete with tatami mat in most of the rooms while the other floors were polished hardwood. The office space was modern, as was the cafeteria kitchen. Akira couldn’t wait to dig through everything.

“There you are!”

They turned to a smiling woman with emerald green hair and round yellow eyes. She donned a yellow version of the Cats’ hero costumes. Ragdoll stared oddly at Akira for a long moment. The initial wave of panic was washed away by his snickering Personas.

“Play time!” Alice called as she became his mask, before throwing it to Seth.

Seth cackled as he tossed the power to Arsene, who in turn gave it to Titania. Orpheus grumbled as he tossed the mask duty to the closest Persona. Ragdoll’s face skewed as Akira continued to change masks, the Personas laughing as if they were playing a game of hot potato.

Ragdoll’s quirk was dangerous. Too dangerous. Being able to sense any weaknesses could be detrimental, so they came up with this idea of overloading her quirk by rapidly switching between Personas. A tiny smirk bloomed on Akira’s face as Ragdoll shook her head, blinking as if to keep a headache away.

“Ragdoll!” Mandalay glanced between Akira and her companion.
“Where’s Tiger?”

“He’s... he’s waiting in the conference room. The bedrooms are this way.” She turned her back to Akira and led the group down a long hallway. “The hot springs are down this hall, but it connects to where the students will sleep. Be careful when you bathe.”

They rounded a corner and climbed the stairs to the next floor. Akira cataloged all possible routes that their opponents could sneak in or ways for his team to sneak out. Tobita and Shuichi did the same throughout the whole tour, while Manami kept her eyes on the Wild Pussy Cats. Lady Stubbs’ unblinking gaze watched Eraserhead, who lingered behind.

All in all, they moved as a team. Even now when there was no action, they had each other's backs. Was it wrong of him to feel proud? He didn't think so. Arsene hummed in approval, too.

Finally, they reached their quarters. It was quite spacious and enough room for all of them. Akira noted how this room was in a corner of the building, the windows open to a panoramic view of the mountain side and the clearing. He set down his bag and approached a window, letting the fresh breeze and the sound of cicadas wash over him. Sunlight streamed in and painted the floor with splotches of gold. A pleasant heat seeped into his skin, and Akira couldn't help his honest smile.

"We made sure that you'd be close to the tree line." Ragdoll slowly blinked. "That way you could sneak out and go on patrol without the students seeing you in the hallway."

Manami set down her bags. "Wow, this place isn't bad!"

"Don't you want a separate room?" Mandalay frowned at her. "This one is for the men-"

"And be separated from my boys?" Manami plopped down on her bags with an indignant huff. "I don't think so."

Aizawa's eye twitched. "If that's how you want to be, then fine."

"Wait, are you rooming with us?" Akira asked.

"No. My room is on the first floor, specifically close to my students." Aizawa rolled his eyes. "That way I can keep an eye on them and prevent them from getting in trouble."

"Speaking of which." Pixie Bob said, giggling. "We'll show you to your room, Eraserhead!"

"The conference room is right across from the main office." Mandalay nodded at Akira. "We'll let you get settled in before we have the meeting. Sound good?"

"Yeah." Akira bowed. "Thank you for the hospitality."

Mandalay's eyes widened. Pixie Bob and Ragdoll exchanged glances.

What, were they expecting him to be rude or something?

"Think nothing of it!" Pixie Bob grinned from ear to ear, her tail flicking wildly. "See you in a bit, kittens!"

"Kittens? Kittens!?" Byakko grumbled as the heroes vacated the room. "Shall I show them that I'm no mere kitten!?"

"Easy, Byakko." Arsene said. "They didn't mean it that way. Probably."

Akira snorted as the others explored the room.

Shuichi threw open the closet. "Ooh, futon located!"

"Ah, and they have a set for making tea!" Tobita beamed into another closet. "Wonderful!"

"Boys." Manami shook her head as she rummaged through her bag for her laptop. "We have to stay on our toes. We can never be too careful with these heroes."

"That's a good idea. Getting too comfortable can be used against us." They smiled as Morgana gracefully jumped in through the window, shaking himself. "Boy, it feels good to be a cat again!"

"Oh, so you are a cat?" Akira shamelessly smirked.

"I-I mean, no!" Morgana arched his back. "I am NOT a cat!! How could you say that!?"

Their antics were silenced when a creak came from behind the door. Akira smirked as he put a finger to his lip, before throwing the door open. Kota stumbled back onto his behind.

“What are you up to?” Akira asked as he leaned on the door frame. “Did the grownups send you to spy on us?”

“No!” He snapped as he got on his feet. “Why the hell would I listen to them if they did!?”

Akira tilted his head. “Wow, you got quite a mouth on you.”

“Sh-shut up! I was curious because you said you weren’t a hero.”

“We’re not heroes.” Akira raised a brow. “Why do you care?”

“Who said I cared!?” Kota growled. “This whole camp is stupid! I don’t get why you’re even wasting your time, the grownups won’t tell me anything!”

Akira blinked at the tiny ball of rage glaring at him. There was something more than anger in those eyes. Sorrow and confusion nestled inside, and Akira would recognize that tiny glint of betrayal anywhere.

Akira knelt to Kota’s eye level, his tone soft. “You lost someone, didn’t you?”

“Wh-what!? You don’t know anything about me!”

Kota bolted down the hallway, the pounding of his feet faded into nothing as he raced downstairs.

“Oh my.” Tobita glanced down the hallway. “He’s quite young, but there’s a heavy burden on his shoulders.”

“Poor kid.” Shuichi grumbled.

“We shouldn’t let him distract us.” Morgana climbed on Akira’s shoulder. “Come on, let’s meet with the heroes.”

They trekked downstairs, much quieter than Kota, and faint voices emanated from the door across from the main office. Akira exchanged glances with everyone before he opened it. It was a smaller space tucked away from the main foot traffic, complete with cream colored walls, a round table, and enough chairs for all of them.

All eyes fell to the largest hero in the room.

The final member of the hero team, Tiger, was a six foot wall of muscle in a chestnut version of the Cats’ costume. Skirt, tail, bells, and cute paws included.

“Oh, you’re here!” Pixie Bob called, grinning as she looked to her team. “Guys, you know what time it is!”

Mandalay took the lead. “Lock on with these sparkling gazes!”

Ragdoll winked as she threw her paws outwards. “We’ve come to lend a paw to help!”

Tiger flexed behind them, his muscles bulging. “Coming out of nowhere....”

“Stingily cute and catlike!!” Pixie Bob said as she leaned against tiger, her gloves revealing deadly claws.

“Wild Wild Pussy Cats!!” They shouted in unison.

Akira blinked as the Cats stayed in their feline poses. Morgana cringed. The others stared at the Pussy Cats as the awkward silence stretched. Eventually, Shuichi leaned close and stage whispered to Akira.

“Uh... they aren’t expecting us to do something like that, right?”

Akira looked at Aizawa, who shrugged, and the atmosphere popped like a balloon when the Cats broke out in chuckles. The tension in Akira's team drained away with smiles. Still, despite the bubbly air, Akira picked up how the Pussy Cats' eyes were sharp, their bodies wound as if to leap into action at a moment's notice. There was another door behind the Cats, so that their backs weren't to the wall.

"It's a shame we don't have a flashy introduction like that." Akira said as he sauntered to the table. His team followed his lead. Tobita and Manami on his left, Shuichi and Stubbs on his right. "Our group is called the Phantom Thieves."

The Cats dropped their poses and approached the opposite side of the table.

Nobody sat down.

"Welcome, Phantom Thieves!" Their skin prickled at the intense aura Tiger exuded. "It will be a pleasure working with you!"

"Like wise." Akira said.

"Ohh, Mona is so cute!! When did he get here!?" Pixie Bob waved her paws. "His pictures on Spotlight don't do him justice!"

"Thanks." Akira pet Morgana as the not-cat glared at her. "There's something I want to clarify before we start."

"What is it?" Ragdoll asked, her face skewed from quirk overload.

"Look, we appreciate how you've been kind and hospitable, but it's obvious that you don't trust us." The Pussy Cats stiffened, Aizawa sighed. "We need to be transparent with one another if we're going to be protecting the students."

"Ooh, Nezu was right. He's as smart as a whip." Pixie Bob smirked at Akira. "I like him!"

“Yeah!” Ragdoll said with a tilted head. “Anyone else would have glanced over our suspicion. Well done.”

“I’m sorry.” Mandalay nodded. “We found this whole situation incredibly difficult to believe, but I’m willing to cast aside my doubts to apprehend these villains before any students get injured.”

“Nezu and I will vouch for Joker and his team.” Aizawa’s eyes trailed over to Akira. “We trust them to do this job.”

Akira firmly nodded as tension finally melted away from the heroes.

“Ooh, this is exciting, but no more distractions!” Pixie Bob smirked. “Tiger, show them the map!”

“This is the surrounding area of the lodge!” Tiger said as a holographic map, in an array of different colors, appeared over the table. “These two green areas are the lodge and where the students will train! The red is where Pixie Bob will increase security with her beasts.”

“Yep, yep!” Pixie Bob waved a paw. “I’ll create a specialized area for the students to train with their quirks. It’ll be enough space to keep them all in one area.”

Akira leaned closer. “Aside from those areas, the rest are blank.”

“That’s where you’ll come in.” Ragdoll’s eyes scanned over the group. “We’d like to hear your thoughts and adjust our plan accordingly.”

“Alright.” Akira clutched his chin with his thumb and forefinger. “My team will scout the outer perimeter while the students are busy training. Pixie Bob,” The woman perked up, “How long can your beasts last?”

“All day and night, kitten.” She purred.

"I would like them to work alongside my companions." Akira kept his head as Manami glared. "They could cover a bigger area if we organize them into teams with one set leader."

"Oh, do we get to see Cerberus!?" Pixie Bob gasped. "Wait, no, how about the white tiger!?"

"Byakko might be the best choice for this terrain."

"Your white tiger is Byakko?" Mandalay leveled him with shock and awe.

"Yep." Akira smirked as he turned to Ragdoll. "My raven can help keep track of everyone during the day whenever Byakko isn't needed."

Pixie Bob leaned forward, "Say, you're talking about Cerberus and Byakko, so does that raven of yours have a special name?"

"Yatagarasu."

"Yatagarasu..." Ragdoll poked her cheek.

"Like... like the messenger of Amaterasu?" Mandalay asked, her face slack. "That Yatagarasu?"

"The one and only." Akira let that fact simmer for a few moments, before glancing at his team. "As for everyone else..."

"My quirk will allow me to travel though the forest with ease." Tobita said with a pleasant smile. "It should be no trouble for me."

"I brought extra cameras." Manami put her hands on her hips. "I can set them up to cover any blind spots around the lodge."

"Lady Stubbs and I can help out during the day!" Shuichi said. "My quirk is perfect for this terrain!"

“And you can count me as a jack of all trades.” Akira waved his hand over the map. “I’ll fill in wherever I’m needed.”

Tiger nodded as he messed with some control panel that they couldn’t see. The unlit portions of the map gained a deep blue hue.

Aizawa scratched his stubble. “Limiting the students to one or two areas isn’t a bad idea, but we’ll need to keep a strict leash on them during their free time. The last thing we need is for them to figure out that Joker is here, or wonder into a place they have no business being.”

“Indeed! We’ll keep the students away from the blue areas, and have them eat outside, too.” Tiger said with a nod.

“I have a way for us to communicate.” Akira looked at Manami. “La Brava?”

She slid a small container across the table.

“What are these?” Aizawa asked.

“Communicators, one for each of the Pussy Cats, Eraserhead, and Vlad King.” Akira shook his head. “We have them too so that we can all stay in touch. We don’t have a definitive time frame for when the villains attack, so we should be prepared for anything. However, when the time comes you should let my team and I handle the villains. You heroes should focus on protecting the students as the next line of defence.”

“We know how powerful you are, Joker.” Mandalay said. “We’ll leave it to you, but don’t you dare underestimate us, okay? We can take care of ourselves when it comes down to it.”

Akira nodded.

“Okay, so we have a makings of a plan.” Ragdoll clapped her hands together. “But we still have some time to kill before the students get here.”

“What do you propose?” Akira asked.

“Weeeeelll,” Pixie Bob fiddled with her visor. “The kiddos aren’t even halfway across the forest. My best guess is that they’ll arrive late afternoon, maybe early evening.”

“We planned to make dinner for the students once they arrive, we could use a helping hand in the kitchen.” Ragdoll smiled at Akira. “Are any of you good at making curry?”

Akira grinned.

“Kota, bring those vegetables in here please!” Ragdoll called.

Kota set the box at the edge of the kitchen before he turned tail. Akira stepped around Caterpillar Aizawa to grab the box, he knew Aizawa was only pretending to be asleep. Something about his presence relaxed Akira, perhaps it was that same sort of comfort that Sojiro offered near the end of his stay in Tokyo. The others were off preparing, otherwise he’d be alone with Ragdoll.

The hero never spent too long looking at him. His Personas took pride as they continued their little game.

“I hope you don’t mind Kota.” Ragdoll said as Akira set the box on the counter. “I apologize if his behaviour is.... abrasive.”

“I don’t mind. He’s grieving, after all.”

“... Yes.” Akira ignored Ragdoll’s falling expression when he passed her the sacks of potatoes. “How did you know?”

Akira shrugged as he picked up a knife and twirled it around his fingers. “I know how he feels.”

Ragdoll waited, but he offered nothing else.

They busied themselves by chopping vegetables in silence. Brewing curry was second nature to him and it kept his hands busy, the clang of pots and the bubbles of boiling water allowed everything else to fade into obscurity. Akira stared into the concoction. He dipped a spoon into the sauce and tasted it.

“This isn’t bad, but its pretty bland.” He looked over his shoulder to Ragdoll. “Do you have any other ingredients to spice it up?”

“No. This lodge isn’t used often, so we thought it best to keep to simpler ingredients.” Ragdoll stirred the pot next to his. “Unless you had something in mind?”

“Something to intensify the flavors a bit...” Akira snapped his fingers. “Coffee!”

Aizawa’s eyes opened a fraction.

“Coffee?” Ragdoll opened a cabinet. “Well, I suppose we have some you could use.”

“No need. I brought my own.” Akira smirked as Alice burst into reality with a childish giggle. “You know where it is?”

She beamed when Ragdoll dropped the bag of coffee grounds onto the counter with a splat . Alice had no weaknesses, after all. Aizawa had both eyes wide open.

“Of course, big brother! I’ll be right back!”

Alice raced from the kitchen, her polished shoes drumming against the flooring. She hummed a familiar Velvety tune as she skipped up the stairs and reached her big brother’s room.

“Yeah, that place is perfect!” Manami chuckled from her laptop. “Aaaand, it’s online! Gentle, can you go to the next area while Spinner finishes up there? Oh, hi Alice!”

“Hiya, big sister Manami! Big brother wants me to get his coffee!”

Manami smiled. "His things are over there."

"Thanks!" Alice opened one of Akira's bag, and the immediate aroma of coffee wafted over her nose. With a proud smirk, she snatched it. "Later, big sis!"

Alice, excited for any praise from the Trickster, rushed back downstairs. She veered into a stop when she nearly crashed into a body smaller than her. The boy went white as he stumbled away.

"Who the hell are you!?"

"I'm Alice!" She tilted her head, her pale hair spilling over her shoulder. "What's your name?"

"Kota." He blinked rapidly. "What are you doing? How did you even get here?"

"I'm with my big brother!"

"Big... brother?"

"Yep!" Alice swayed her hips. "The boy you yelled at earlier."

"Oh, him." Kota's expression soured.

"He lost the ones he loved, too."

Kota's head snapped back. "Wh-what?"

"Yep. All of his friends, his family, his.... everything . All gone in a flash." Alice walked past him, but stopped to stare back into Kota's wide eyes. "I think you should give him a chance. He used to not like heroes either."

Kota remained speechless as the strange girl left him behind, and it wasn't much longer before heavenly aromas drifted from the kitchen.

"How's Midoriya?" Joker whispered over the comm.

"His pride took a hit, but he's fine" Morgana huddled on a branch overlooking the clearing. "I'm surprised that Kota would punch him... there."

Joker chuckled. "That kid is ballsy in every sense of the word."

Morgana shook his head. Class 1-A devoured curry like starving wolves at a fresh kill. He hoped he didn't have to heal anybody should they choke or something.

"Doesn't this.... taste familiar?" Ashido said between mountainous spoonfuls. "It's... so good!"

"You don't think it kinda tastes like Kurusu's curry?" Kaminari scooped another mound of curry onto his plate.

Nearby, Bakugo froze. He peered down at his plate as if he could combust it with just a glance.

"What!? I mean, maybe?" Kirishima said. "It tastes slightly different though!"

"But they are similar!" Midoriya, recovered from Kota's devastating blow, had curry sauce staining his lips. "It has the same smell from the cafe!"

Todoroki suddenly choked.

Iida flinched and patted Todoroki's back. "Are you okay!? Were you eating too fast!?"

"I'm fine." Todoroki put his spoon down and scanned the treeline.

"Dude, you've been acting weird since we left U.A.!" Kaminari jabbed his spoon towards Todoroki. "What's wrong?"

Todoroki looked to the Pussy Cats', who scrambled to get the final servings of curry to the famished teenagers. Aizawa leaned against the wall beside the front door to the lodge, his hand to his ear as if he had a communicator or something. The other Pussy Cats weren't reacting to him though, so who was he talking to?

"I don't know." Todoroki glared down at his plate. "I just get the feeling that the heroes are keeping something from us."

Kaminari chuckled. "I think you're just tired! We worked our asses off today!"

Todoroki rolled his eyes.

"Alright, kittens!" Pixie Bob shouted. "You will bathe and go straight to bed after you're done eating! You'll be up at five-thirty tomorrow for some hardcore training!"

A collective groan swept through the clearing.

"We have some ground rules before anybody moves." Mandalay put her hands on her hips, her expression unusually stiff. "You are forbidden from leaving your rooms once we call lights out. The second floor is off limits to everybody."

"Yep, yep!" Pixie Bob winked. "Our rooms are up there and we don't want anybody snooping through our stuff!"

"Also, if we suddenly summon you back to the lodge during any part of your stay, you will come back immediately. No questions asked. Am I understood?"

Todoroki's gut twisted as his classmates agreed. Aizawa stared at something in the trees, and Todoroki witnessed a dark shape retreating into the leaves before he could make it out. He hesitantly followed his sluggish classmates into the lodge, but a certain pair of red eyes drilled into the back of his head.

He lingered behind as they split off into the male and female baths, ignoring the shenanigans and excitement as he hovered in front of a locker.

“What do you want, Bakugo?” Todoroki asked when they were alone in the locker room.

“You know something.”

“About?”

“Don’t give me that!” Bakugo’s voice echoed, but the others didn’t seem to hear it. “You know something, don’t you? I’ve noticed it too. Why else would the heroes be acting this way? Why would the curry taste like that bastard’s back at the cafe!?”

A cold realization trickled through Todoroki, but he kept his stoic mask.

That curry did taste like Kurusu’s. Did the recipe just happen to be similar? The Pussy Cats didn’t introduce any other staff members. If Kurusu was here, then did the heroes know that he was Joker?

But why would they want Joker here?

“I saw that hobo talking to someone, too.” Bakugo narrowed his eyes. “There has to be someone else here.”

“Why don’t you go ask?”

A vein in Bakugo’s forehead bulged. “You think he’d really answer!?”

“I guess not.” The conversation stilted as Todoroki fidgeted with his hands. “Look, we can speculate later, but we’re going to miss our turn in the onsen if we keep standing around.”

“Fine .” Bakugo hissed as he stomped back to his locker. “But this conversation isn’t over.”

The thoughts kept swirling in Todoroki's mind after he stepped into the hot onsen, past the incident with Mineta, and haunted him as he lay in the futon, the rest of their classmates snoring away. Bakugo's eyes swept over him occasionally, but it wasn't a bother as sleep finally took him.

"It'll be so hard you'll feel like dying, but try not to actually die." Joker deepened his voice, his feral grin matching Aizawa's. He dropped his facade and glanced to the tree on his right. "Really, Eraserhead? You didn't terrify them enough yesterday?"

"Keep it up and you might be able to scare away kittens with a smile like that." Aizawa droned.

"Hey, my grin has terrified villains, thank you very much."

Aizawa stared at him oddly, but shook his head. "Like I told Mandalay, they need all of the training they can get. They've already experienced situations that real Pros would have trouble handling. They need to be ready for what the world is going to throw at them."

Joker's expression sobered. He stared into the clearing, where Pixie Bob molded small mountains and caves, and a vast clearing where all manner of quirks were being honed under the heroes' watchful eyes.

"You're right." Joker said as he stood on the branch, hand stabilizing himself on the trunk.

"Eraser," Pixie Bob's voice trickled through the comms. "Vlad King arrived with the 1-B kids, so you better get down here!"

"I'm on my way." Aizawa was about to hop down from the tree.

"Wait." Joker tossed him a small thermos. "The same coffee from our little rendezvous on the rooftops. I have a feeling you'll need it."

“Thanks.”

“Oooh, coffee!?” Pixie Bob shouted, “You better have enough for us!”

“Nope,” Aizawa said as he clutched the thermos to his chest. “Get your own.”

Joker snickered as Aizawa dropped and expertly rolled into his landing. He watched as Aizawa calmly walked out into the clearing to greet the other class, while Joker turned on his heel. It was about time he went to his area to patrol, anyway.

Hours whittled away as he explored deeper into the forest.

Afternoon sunlight filtered through the branches and splashed the ground with speckles of gold. The mountain air was free and clean from the contaminated stench of a busy metropolis. He would be hard pressed to say that he missed his small town surrounded by mountains. Joker hopped to the next branch, careful that he didn’t slip on the moss blanketing the tree. Another hour or two of exploration made him rather bored.

He tapped into his comm. “Everyone, status report.”

“Mona, reporting in! Mercurius and I scouted the western edge of the forest. All clear.”

“The cameras haven’t picked up any strange activity around the lodge.” La Brava said. “All clear.”

“All clear in the northern glades! We’re working hard, Joker!”

“Merp!”

“I see nobody from the tops of these cliffs.” Gentle Criminal chuckled. “It is quite a fun challenge using my quirk to maneuver in such an unknown terrain.”

“Keep up the good work, everyone. Byakko hasn’t seen anything out of the ordinary, either.”

Joker paused when the bushes rustled below. He smirked as he crouched down under the shade of leaves.

“I have a Peppermint in sight.” He whispered below the breeze. Joker switched over to the channel they shared with the heroes. “Hey, why don’t you come pick up your student? Todoroki shouldn’t be wandering around here.”

“On it!” Tiger called.

“Lunch was almost over, anyway. Wait, Bakugo is following him.” Ragdoll said. “What are they doing all the way out there?”

Todoroki crossed through brush with a purpose. The vigilante’s colorful footsteps followed silently through the trees. It wasn’t long until they reached a small clearing peppered by vibrant wildflowers flowing with the breeze. Todoroki knelt by a white one as Joker stepped to the next branch.

Snap .

Todoroki jumped and stared into the canopy as Joker froze. Todoroki’s eyes narrowed, but he couldn’t see much from the sunlight draping the clearing. He opened his mouth to speak when the bushes behind him parted.

“Young man, you shouldn’t be out here.” Tiger put a firm hand on his shoulder. “Lunch is over and you should return to your training!”

“... Right.” Todoroki gently shrugged off Tiger’s hand. “Sorry.”

Todoroki glanced towards the upper branches one last time before Tiger urged him on. Joker breathed a sigh of relief when they disappeared back into the forest.

“Eraser, a question.” Joker balanced precariously on the next branch, his tailcoat weaving elegantly with the wind.

“What?” The man droned.

“Why didn’t both classes arrive simultaneously since their buses left at the same time?”

Aizawa sighed. “Vlad King wanted to have a camping day with his students. They will stay the day after Class 1-A leaves for additional training, that is, if this were a normal training camp.”

“Don’t you think that was dangerous?”

“I told him it was illogical, but he didn’t listen.”

“I can hear you.” Vlad King grumbled. “You just gave me one of these communicators, Eraser.”

“Oooh, you guys got busted.” Pixie Bob chuckled. “Joker, my turn to ask a question!”

“Go ahead.”

“How is it that Byakko got my beasts mobilized so quickly? They respect him like a leader, and are prowling the forest like a united pack!”

“What do you mean they respect him? Aren’t your beasts made of earth?”

“Ah, well.... Earth Flow allows me to freely manipulate the earth, but it also allows me to sense how the earth ‘feels’. To me, the earth is not just a dead thing that I have control over, it has life to it that not many people know about.”

“I understand where you’re coming from, Pixie Bob. My comrades also have a life and mind of their own.” Joker leaned against the bark, listening to the birds sing and myriad of insects chatter, his eyes were drawn to a line of ants marching on the trunk. “Byakko is the King Of Beasts, so that warrants some respect.”

“All of your friends have a will of their own? Doesn’t that get noisy?” Ragdoll asked.

“Sometimes. Like right now we’re keeping Arsene on a tight leash.”

“Why?” Ragdoll asked.

“We’re Gentleman Thieves,” Joker’s smirk turned dangerous. “And he made a vow to punt Mineta for what he tried to pull on the girls while they were bathing last night. Kota is okay, right? That fall didn’t hurt him?”

“Yes, Midoriya caught him.” Mandalay muttered. “He’s fine.”

“I already reprimanded Mineta for his behavior.” Aizawa said. “He’ll go through more training as punishment.”

“Bah, such indecency needs to be severely reproached! Additional training simply won’t do!” Arsene howled. “You will allow me to punt that wretched runt, right Trickster?”

Joker laughed. “Yes, in due time.”

Arsene nodded, satisfied, and they resumed their patrol.

The next day was peaceful, all things considered, as Joker thumbed through a list of Metaverse gear he gave to his teammates the night before. Spinner and Gentle Criminal wore the same armor as Joker underneath their clothes, but he didn’t let them know that it was armor from Satan. La Brava got the only female armor that Joker had with him. It wasn’t the strongest, but it would do.

Mona allowed Spinner to use his scimitar, granted that he treated it with respect. There were more than enough Life Stones to pass around. A few buffing items too. Everyone received a Smoke Bomb for good measure, among a few other things in case they needed a quick escape. He reached into his pocket for a Balm of Life and one of the two remaining Somas.

"You have not given anybody revival items." Ishtar asked. "Why?"

"We still haven't told them how Mona and I can revive the dead." Joker frowned as he rolled the items between his palms. "It's one thing healing grave injuries or an entire hospital, but bringing the dead back to life? That's the kind of attention we don't want."

"And the Soma?" Shiva asked.

"They're our best healing item." Joker held the glittering gold liquid up into the light. "Emergencies use only."

"Ah, it seems Bakugo has some decent knife skills." Yatagarasu interrupted as he watched 1-A make curry in the clearing. "But... oh dear."

"Kirishima, no! You don't put those spices together!" Alice tugged on her hair. "Oh no, now its going to taste bitter!"

"This is blasphemous." Arsene put a clawed hand over his heart. "Todoroki started the flames at the right temperature, but Kaminari added too much fuel. It'll be burned at this rate."

Joker pocketed the items and as he sat at the edge of a tall cliff overlooking the forest. "It's too bad we can't throw in a cooking lesson." He sighed. "I should've gave them tips at the cafe."

"There's nothing we can do about it now." Ishtar shook her head. "Although it's adorable how they are trying to copy your technique and utterly failing."

"Yeah." Joker frowned as he looked skywards, where twin stars pierced through the purple dusk.

Another cluster of six diamonds shone on the horizon. They looked so close to one another from here, but the reality was that they were separated by light years worth of cold, empty space. The mere thought weighed on his heart.

“Do you think everyone is holding up?”

“You aren’t talking about Mona and the others, are you.” Arsene stated.

Arsene’s answer came in the sudden suffocating weight in Joker’s chest.

“Damnit.” Joker scrubbed at his watery eyes. “I was fine two seconds ago!”

“Yatagarasu, switch with me.”

“Yes, Lady Ishtar.”

Delicate arms wrapped around his shoulders and pulled him close. Ishtar’s long hair brushed against his face as she tucked his head into the crook of her neck.

“It’s natural that you’re still grieving. There’s no strict time limit for such things. Your friends meant the entire world to you.” She whispered in his ear, her fingers threading through his hair. “But we will always be here to support you.”

“I know. We have Mona and everyone else now too.” He pulled back and wiped the stray tears in his eyes. “I’m sorry.”

“You don’t need to apologize.” Ishtar’s smile was as sweet as a ripening peach. “How about we do something to get your mind off of it?”

Joker blinked. “Like what?”

“Well,” She tilted her head and twirled a bit of hair between her fingers. “How about you focus on my bond? We haven’t had time for such training recently, and I have a feeling that Titania loves lording the fact that you mastered hers quite a while ago.”

“Alright.” Joker scratched the back of his neck, then closed his eyes to concentrate inwards. Ishtar’s bond stood out immediately. “I can feel it.”

Ishtar’s eyes sparked with joy. “Fantastic!”

Chains of snow white lilies woven together with ivy, with bursts of vibrant colors from poppy and achillia flowers. The blooms were locked in a cycle of life and rebirth, of love and war.

The flowers repeated their cycle deep within his psyche, their scent wafting over him like a heady perfume. He allowed the aromas to surround him in love and warmth, and yet there was a spicy scent within, almost like cinnamon. The flowers drew him in close, the scents grew stronger until it bathed his mindscape in it. There was a click deep inside of him, and his costume faded away.

“Well done.” Ishtar ruffled his hair. “You’re getting better at mastering our bonds. It may not be long before you’re able to attempt Kohryu’s once more.”

“Thanks?” He looked down at his gloveless hands. “But I honestly don’t understand how this power works. With Cerberus, I had to walk into the middle of that fire tornado. With you, I just had to let those flowers’ scent overcome me. We didn’t have to do things like this back home.”

“Perhaps it’s part of the mystery of being in a new world.” Ishtar looked up at the cluster of stars. “By accepting our bond, you also accept a deeper part of yourself. Something within you stirs with each bond you’ve mastered. Can you not feel it?”

“I do, like puzzle pieces falling into place.” Ishtar tilted her head as her Trickster rubbed his chest. “But then there’s Arsene’s bond. I don’t know what happened before. No other bond had such a bad effect on me.”

“He is different from everyone else.”

Akira frowned. If he concentrated he could hear the chains rattle. A shiver coursed through him. An inkling of immense power flared deep within, but the chains kept it sealed, tamed... trapped . Truly, no other bond harbored this sense of unease.

“I am your true other self.” Arsene shook his head. “Think of what we were about to accomplish before Yaldabaoth banished us. Were we not about to shatter the chains of fate that bound us?”

“I-”

A rustle came from the path leading down into the forest.

Ishtar vanished as Akira rushed into the cave nestled within the cliff wall, his costume reappearing in a shroud of ash. Joker’s hand reached down to unsheathe his dagger, only to breathe a sigh of relief as Kota emerged, face cherry red and brows knotted together.

Joker bit his lip as Kota sniffled and sat in the same spot where he and Ishtar were moments ago. The kid jumped as heavier footsteps came from the path. Joker tensed as Midoriya came out from the bushes holding a plate of curry.

“Oh, there you are!”

“Go away!!” Kota scrambled to his feet, hands curled into fists. “This is my secret spot and you’re not allowed!”

Midoriya blinked rapidly. “I... I know why you’re so angry, Kota. You’re the son of the Water Hose duo, aren’t you? The heroes who passed away when fighting a villain? I've noticed that you don't like quirks either."

"S-so what!?" Kota shouted. "What's it to you!?"

Midoriya stared down into the curry, frowning. "Nothing, it's just... you remind me of a friend. He pushed everybody away when he was hurting and in the end it only hurt those around him. He didn't trust anybody. Didn't... didn't let anybody in until it was too late. You're like that too, aren't you?" Midoriya shook his head. "You're not alone, Kota! Your cousin, Mandalay, really wants to help you. There are different ways to think about these situations, but it'll only keep hurting you more if you keep rejecting your quirk and your family, just like my friend."

"Shut up, SHUT UP!!" Kota put his hands over his ears. "What is it with you heroes!? Why do you always have to stick your noses where they don't belong, huh!? That's how people like you die! Just leave me the hell alone!!"

Midoriya flinched. "I-I'm sorry, I didn't mean to make you upset." He set down the plate of curry. "I'll just leave this here, okay? Please eat it if you're hungry."

Midoriya turned away and vanished down the path. Joker held his breath as Kota glared at the offering. Kota scuffed his shoe in the dirt, but he eventually snatched up the plate and planted himself back at the edge of the cliff.

"What should I do?"

"You understand how he feels." Arsene said.

"I know, but we saw how he reacted to Midoriya." Joker grimaced as Kota shuddered and tears dripped down his face. "For now, I think he just needs some space."

"Very well." Arsene sighed. "Why don't we call it a night? The hero team promised to take over so that we can rest."

Kota was none the wiser about his eavesdropper receding into the shadows.

"Why can't we attack noooow?" Toga whined.

"Be patient." Dabi said coolly as they stood atop a tall cliff at the edge of the Pussy Cats' base. "Twice isn't done scattering those orbs, remember?"

"Meat... fresh meat..."

Muscular scowled at Moonfish's insane ramblings. "Ugh, this is stupid! Why can't we go down there and kill them already!?"

Dabi glanced back at Muscular, "Remember who's down there, morons. It's not just the students or the heroes, but Joker too. Do I need to remind everyone how he shrugged off every hero he's encountered? Do you really want to mess with him before everything is ready?" His cerulean eyes scanned everybody as they lowered their gazes. "That's what I thought. Let the Nomu and our copies distract Joker and the heroes, while we target the students."

Toga giggled as she clutched the vial hanging from her neck. She and Dabi exchanged significant glances before Kurogiri appeared behind them.

"Everything is almost in place." Kurogiri said.

"Just one more night." Dabi smirked as the wind swayed his torn jacket. "Then we can have some fun."

Shuichi burst from the pool of steaming hot water with a dramatic gasp.

“Can you believe we have this place all to ourselves!?” He shouted, his voice echoing.

Tobita relaxed against a rock with a content sigh. “Indeed. This water feels good after such a long day.”

“It’s too bad Morgana and Lady Stubbs aren’t here.” Akira waved his hand, splashing water droplets everywhere. “They’re really missing out.”

“Eh, they’re cats. Plus, they’re not the only ones. We’ll have to tell Manami when we get back to the room.” Tobita said. “She hasn’t taken any time for herself to just... relax.”

“It’s understandable though.” Shuichi lazily swum laps around the giant onsen. “We’re under a lot of pressure here!”

“Still, we have to pace ourselves if we want this mission to be successful.”

“I’m glad you finally see that.” Tobita gave Akira a knowing look. “After all, you have been working the hardest among all of us.”

Akira sank chin deep into the water. “I’m the Leader, isn’t that natural?”

“Yeah, but we’re a team!” Shuichi splashed water at Akira. “Right!?”

“I know.” Akira smirked as Shuichi sent another small cascade. “Hey, knock it off!”

Tobita chuckled as the two of them kept splashing one another, their laughter melding into the steamy onsen.

“Ah, and the stars are lovely tonight as well.” Tobita said, the other two paused to glance at the sky. “I’ve never seen so many stars before.”

“You’re right.” Akira smiled as he leaned back against a rock. “I’ve been having a lot of nostalgia since we got here.”

“... Nostalgia?” Shuichi sank back into the water and exchanged a glance with Tobita.

“Yeah...” Akira trailed off, his eyes misting over. “I used to stargaze a lot when I lived in my hometown. Stargazing took my mind off everything, whether I was just having a bad day or wanted to get away for a day or two. It was in the mountains, so it you didn’t have to go too far from town. I haven’t really seen them like this since I was booted to Tokyo.”

Shuichi and Tobita stiffened.

“I... I didn’t know the stars held such a powerful meaning for you.” Tobita said.

“Yeah, man.” Shuichi’s eyes were wide. “That’s kinda cool. Looking at them now, I agree with you. They make you realize how small we are, you know?”

Akira chuckled. “Here we are, getting philosophical in the onsen.”

“Hey, even I can be smart sometimes too, you know!” Shuichi shouted.

Tobita frowned when a ruckus came from the locker room. “Wait, do you hear that?”

Akira and Shuichi froze at the sound of voices. Lots of them.

“Shuichi!” Akira whispered. “I thought you said the classes already bathed!”

“I did!” He held up his hands. “I made sure of it!”

“But which class was it?” Tobita’s eyes widened. “You waited until both classes had their turn, right?”

Shuichi flinched. “Uh....”

The noise grew louder as students filed into the locker room, now only separated from them by a thin shoji door.

“They can’t see us!” Akira hissed as he scanned for an exit. “We can’t go out the front.”

“Ah, I believe that should be our escape.” Tobita looked at the giant wall splitting the onsen in two. “It will have to do.”

“I’m so sorry you guys.” Shuichi muttered as they exited the bath wearing nothing but their towels. “It must’ve skipped my mind.”

“Don’t worry about it.” Akira placed his hands on his hips, craning his neck up to stare at the wall. “Tobita, do you think you can...?”

“Leave it to me!”

Tobita snatched Akira’s wrist and they jumped. Akira shivered as the air chilled the water droplets clinging to his skin, but they made it to the top with no trouble.

“Hey, what about me!?”

Akira grinned down at Shuichi. “You can climb walls, can’t you?”

The lizard squawked. He skittered up the side in record time as the 1-B boys threw open the doors and trickled inside. The thieves huddled down as the students’ voices echoed across the onsen accompanied by splashes of water. More voices and giggles came from the girl’s side, but like true gentleman, they wouldn’t dare peek. They were as silent as ghosts when they followed the wall, which led to a door back inside.

“That was close.” Akira muttered as he shook water droplets from his hair. “Too close.”

“We have a new problem.” Shuichi said as he looked down on himself. “We don’t have our clothes!”

“Oh dear.” Tobita smoothed down his facial hair. “We cannot return to our room like this. Manami and Morgana would have a field day.”

“I have no idea what you’re talking about.” Joker leaned against the wall in full costume, his face split with a devious smirk. “I’m perfectly fine.”

“Akira!!” Shuichi clutched his vibrant pink hair. “First Lady Stubbs, now you!? The betrayal cuts so deep!!”

“No need to be dramatic.” Joker winked. “What kind of thief would I be if I let my friends hanging like this? Stay here, I’ll be right back. If the students haven’t noticed our lockers yet, then they need serious training in situational awareness.”

Later, Manami scoffed as the boys shuffled into the room, unable to look her in the eye.

“What took you so long!?”

“Yeah, I was about to go looking for you!” Morgana rushed to Akira’s side and rubbed against his ankles. “Did somebody spot you!?”

“We just lost track of time in the onsen.” Akira said, unabashed. “It’s fine. We’re fine .”

“Yep, that’s what it was!!” Shuichi nodded vigorously. “We encountered no problems whatsoever!”

“Indeed!” Tobita traipsed over to the closet and threw it open. “Well, it has been a long day. We need our rest!”

“I couldn’t agree more.” Akira pulled out his futon and laid it out. “Good night!”

“Er, good night?” Manami and Morgana exchanged long glances.

They shrugged it off and decided to call it a night.

Akira yawned as he walked through the first floor of the lodge, a plate of fresh cinnamon rolls in his grasp. They were Ayumu’s own recipe.

He turned a corner and smiled. “There you are.”

Kota jumped out of his skin and whirled to Akira.

“What the hell do you want?”

“Nothing.” Akira shrugged, then stared down at the plate. “I was wondering if you wanted any? They’re homemade! Still warm from the oven, too.”

Kota rolled his eyes. “Like I’d want anything from you. I don’t even know who you are!”

“Is that so?” Akira tilted his head and blinked like a lazy cat. “Well, I’m not a hero or a villain. Hell, I don’t even technically have a quirk. ”

“You... you don’t have a quirk?” Kota’s expression softened.

“Nope. Do you still have a reason to not trust me?”

Kota scrutinized him, but he visibly relaxed. “What’s your name? The heroes are still being stingy when it comes to you.”

“Akira.” Akira knelt down and looked him in the eye. “Is it okay if I call you Kota?”

“Y-yeah, I guess.” Kota ducked his head to hide beneath the rim of his hat. “You’re different from everyone else.”

“How so?”

“You... you’re not trying to be a hero. ” Kota bunched up his shirt with tight fists. “You haven’t lectured me on how I shouldn’t be angry, or that I should be proud that people die for nothing! How is sacrificing yourself for the ‘greater good’ something to be proud of!? They just leave everyone else behind!”

Akira’s stomach withered at his words, but this wasn’t about him.

Kota flinched as Akira laid a hand on his head. “You really loved them, huh?”

“Yeah.” Kota’s lips wobbled. “B-but I don’t want to talk about it!”

“Alright.” Akira nodded as he let his hand drop. “Then I won’t ask.”

Kota’s head snapped up, his watery eyes wide. “Really?”

“Really. I wouldn’t want you to share something you don’t want to.” Akira looked down at the plate, then held it out with a kind smile. “Do you want these? They’ll get cold if nobody eats them.”

Kota stared at the plate. Slowly, he took it from Akira’s hands, looking every which way to avoid Akira’s eyes. His cheeks gained a slight red hue.

“Thanks, mister. Er, Akira.”

“Let me know how they taste.” Akira winked. “I can make more if you’re still hungry.”

“I will.”

Kota rushed down the hallway with the goods intact.

“You can come out now.” Akira stood with a sigh. “I know you’ve been following me this whole time.”

Mandalay rounded the corner behind him, looking abashed. The hero bowed.

“Thank you.” She stood fully, with guilt and sadness written in her expression. “How did you do that? I’ve been trying to get Kota to open up to us since his parents passed away, but he always runs away or gets angry with me.”

“That might be your first problem.”

“What?”

“You need to respect his boundaries.” Akira shoved his hands in his pockets and leveled her with an intense glare. “Although he’s young, he shouldn’t be treated like a little kid that doesn’t know any better. He’s been through too much to be pitied by the ones taking care of him.”

Mandalay felt the hairs on the back of her neck raised as Akira’s eyes flashed molten gold.

“I... Sorry.” Akira chuckled as his eyes cooled to silver. “Do you remember how I said my companions have wills and emotions of their own? A few of them are quite protective of kids, and sometimes that leaks through.”

“It’s alright.” Mandalay frowned as Akira began walking away. “Wait, where are you going?”

“Upstairs to take a nap while I have the chance.” Akira rubbed his eyes. “Today is the third day. We need all the rest we can get before showtime.”

“Right...”

Mandalay let him go, but his words would stick with her for years to come.

“This is a bad idea.” Joker muttered as he perched on the branch draped in absolute darkness.

“The heroes were adamant.” Mona said, his nose wrinkling. “Still, why is this familiar? People who don’t listen to reason, going off on their own ideas...?”

Joker sulked as Mona chuckled dryly.

Still, a rock sank in Joker’s stomach. There was something on the breeze that he couldn’t quite put his finger on. It was that same sort of feeling he experienced the night before taking the Treasure in a Palace, a sense of unease mixed with the thrill of excitement.

“At least they have a plan in place.” Mona griped. “The tiny patch of forest is the most heavily guarded, and its right outside the lodge. Even if the villains attack, it won’t be easy to get through.”

“I guess...” Joker shook his head. “But even an army of stone beasts will be no match against certain quirks. We’ll have to stay on our toes.”

“Agreed.” Mona’s eyes sharpened. “For now, we’ll keep an eye out.”

Joker nodded as his Personas’ anticipation crawled under his skin.

“Noooo!” Ashido cried from the cocoon wrapping around her. “I want to have fun too, sensei!!”

“This is torture!” Sero cried.

“This totally isn’t manly!!” Kirishima shouted.

“I guess this is what we get for failing....” Sato sagged within his sensei’s grip.

“Oh, if only you weren’t pathetic like the rest of your class!” Monoma cackled.

“Hey, you failed your exam too!” Kaminari snapped.

Monoma flinched. “Well, that’s just because-”

“Enough.” Aizawa tightened his grip on the capture weapon. “Take this as a lesson to do better next time.”

“Yes, sensei.” Ashido accepted her fate as they were dragged back into the lodge.

Mandalay clapped her hands to get the rest of the students’ attention.

“Alright everyone, since you’ve been training so hard we’ve decided to let you have some fun with a scavenger hunt!” She smiled as excited whispers broke out. “I’ll be splitting class A and B into teams, and you will venture into the forest to recover Beasts to bring back to the lodge. Each Beast will be one point. However!” She held up a finger and smirked. “Whoever finds a Wild Wild Pussy Cat and brings them back safe will be get 50 points! Ragdoll will be on the Class A side, Pixie Bob is on the other. Tiger will be going back and forth between them. The game ends once all Cats are back safe. Whoever has the most points wins! Any questions?”

Iida’s hand flew up first. “You say that we’ll be split into teams, but how will it be fair if Class A is lacking in numbers?”

A Class B student snickered. “Well, you should’ve thought about that before so many in your class failed!”

“Tokage!” The red-haired Class Representative smacked her classmate on the arm, before smiling at her rivals. “I’m sorry. She didn’t mean it.”

“Alright, enough.” Mandalay said. “You are right. Therefore, both teams will be split into four teams of five, with one member per team being a Beast on the 1-A side. Class 1-B will have only one beast to make up for the loss.” She put her paw to her headset. “Did you hear me, Pixie Bob?”

“Loud and clear!!”

The earth molded like clay behind Mandalay. These Beasts took the form of stone wolves as tall as a man. Mandalay formed the teams with ballots and each beast split off into the respective groups.

“Oh, one last thing, kittens!” Mandalay smiled as she scanned the students. “There will be no sneaking into the other territory to sabotage! Anybody who breaks the rules will be disqualified by Ragdoll. Now, let the game start!!”

“Alright everyone, let’s go!!”

Class 1-B ventured into the dark forest as a united group, while some teams of class 1-A split off alone.

“This is stupid.” Bakugo glared at his team of Midoriya, Todoroki, and Koda. The stone wolf wagged its tail.

“C’mon, Kachaan!” Midoriya attempted a smile. “It could be fun!”

“W-we should go.” Koda whispered, his eyes darting away from Bakugo. “We’ll be the last team in if we don’t hurry.”

“Unless you want the other class to win, Bakugo.” Todoroki said.

“Whatever. Let’s just kick 1-B’s ass!”

“We won’t be doing that.” Todoroki said coolly. “We’re just on a scavenger hunt, remember?”

“You know what I mean, IcyHot!!”

Midoriya sighed.

Their team stepped into the shrub. Koda shrunk in on himself as the sounds of the night echoed all around them. Crickets, snapping twigs, the rustle of leaves made a shiver go down Koda’s spine. He unconsciously cowered beside the stone wolf as his three other teammates walked a few paces ahead.

"Team B has brought back two beasts! Team A - 0, Team B - 2!" Mandalay broadcast with her quirk.

"Already!?" Midoriya cried. "We just started!"

"It's because we're moving too damn slow!" Bakugo trudged through some brush. "It'd be a lot quicker if I were on my own!"

"I doubt they'll let the teams split up." Todoroki glanced through the trees. "We could be disqualified."

"B-besides, we should stick together!" Koda waved his hands. "W-we might run into the King Of Beasts!"

"Huh!?" Bakugo glared at Koda. "What bullshit are you spouting, Rock Face!?"

"I-it-s' not..." Koda sighed as he stared at the ground. "S-something is in this forest. While I was p-practicing with my quirk, a lot of the birds told me about the King Of Beast's arrival. I-it's been working alongside the Stone Beasts to patrol around the forest!"

"The... the King Of Beasts?" Midoriya's eyes widened. "Are you sure it's not another one of Pixie Bob's creations?"

"N-No!" Koda shook his head. "The birds say that the King is alive. He arrived the same day as us. The birds s-speak of other strange things too, b-but they're too scared to share much!"

"That doesn't make any sense!" Bakugo scoffed. "What, do we have a stalker or something?"

"Ignore him." Todoroki looked at Koda as Bakugo snarled like a dog. "Did they tell you what kind of beast it was? Like, a wolf or something?"

“Y-yes...” Koda swallowed. “They said.... they said it was a white tiger!”

Midoriya flinched back. “A white tiger...?”

“Who cares what it is?” Bakugo’s face lit up as his palms crackled. “I hope we encounter it, because then I’ll be able to kick its ass and show it who’s the real king!”

“Team A - 6 points, Team B - 10 points!!” They ignored Mandalay’s voice.

“Wait.” Todoroki said. “If this ‘King’ is working with Pixie Bob’s Beasts, then they know about it. Were they going to hide it from us this whole time? They’ve been trying to keep us out of certain parts of the forest and the lodge, too.”

“You have a point...” Koda whispered.

“A white tiger.”

“Yes, a white tiger!” Bakugo rolled his eyes. “What’s gotten into you, Deku!?”

“Nothing!” Midoriya paced back and forth. “But.... if this is true then...”

“Then... what?” Todoroki’s stomach sank as Midoriya looked him in the eye.

“Then it matches either Baihu or Byakko, which is the King Of Beasts.”

“Yeah, we figured that out already, dumbass!”

“N-no! If it’s really a white tiger then....” Midoriya took a shaky breath. “Then it might be one of Joker’s companions.”

“Team A - 11 points! Team B - 17 points!!”

“Huh!?” More pops exploded from Bakugo’s palms.

“The curry...” Todoroki turned unnaturally pale as he looked at Bakugo.

“That-” Bakugo bristled, his face turning red as rage boiled over.

“That asshole !! He’s been lying this whole time!? I knew something was off! I’m going to kill him!! This whole freaking time he was-!?”

“K-kacchan, calm down!” Midoriya said as Bakugo grasped Todoroki’s shirt.

“How long have you known, Icyhot!?”

“A few weeks, if that.” Todoroki bat Bakugo’s hand away.

“Why the hell didn’t you tell me!?”

“Why would I tell you ?” Todoroki scoffed. “You’d probably march in there and attack him on the spot.”

“Guys!” Midoriya shouted.

“What do you want, Deku!? Can’t you see IcyHot and I are having an important conversation!?”

“Does something smell off to you? Like... smoke?” Midoriya asked.

“L-look!” Koda pointed towards the direction they came, which gained an unnatural blue glow. “What’s that?”

Sudden heat smothered them as azure flames devoured the brush with deafening crackles. An unnatural fog lazily drifted through the trees.

“Something is wrong.” Koda said, backpedaling.

Then, they got the message that chilled them to the bone.

“Everyone!!” Mandalay shouted. “All teams return to the lodge as quickly as possible! Pixie Bob Beast’s will escort you back, but if you’re confronted by villains then I give you permission to defend yourself with your quirks! Phantom Thieves and heroes, to your stations!”

Dabi smirked as blazing blue flames erupted from his fingertips, the united footsteps of several hulking Nomu marched past him, their blank eyes twinkling with the growing cerulean pyre.

“Now... it begins.”

See you all next week :)

Last Surprise

Chapter 58: Last Surprise

Hello! This chapter was one of the most difficult to work on. With All Of The Things happening everywhere and All At Once, I hope I got the balance right without having another 15k+ monster of a chapter or having to splurge every single character's point of view.

I'm so very tired xD

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

Fanart by aariaart!

“Ugh, I’m sooo tired.” Ashido whined as she lay her head down on the desk.

“No dozing off.” Aizawa tapped on the board and glared, his eyes glowing red. “You failed your exams, so this information is more important than ever.”

“Monoma, this is for your sake, too.” Vlad King said as he crossed his arms.

“Yes, sir...”

A familiar buzz prickled their minds. The students sat up ramrod straight while a certain seriousness overcame the heroes.

“Ooh Mandalay’s quirk always makes me jump!” Ashido said, shivering.

“Right? Same here.” Sero said.

"It only goes one way though," Kaminari leaned back on his chair, "So really it's more annoying than anything-"

"Quiet!" Aizawa snapped.

"All teams return to the lodge!" Mandalay shouted. "Pixie Bob Beast's will escort you back, but if you're confronted by villains then I give you permission to defend yourself with your quirks! Phantom Thieves and heroes, to your battle stations!"

"Wha- villains!?" Kirishima said, standing.

"Wait..." Monoma's eyes widened. "Phantom Thieves ?"

"Vlad, take care of the students!" Aizawa bolted towards the door. "I'm going to the front!"

"Er... wait, sensei!" Kaminari felt a bead of sweat on his forehead as Aizawa left. He gaped at Vlad King. "What's happening? Is this some sort of training?"

"Sensei..." Monoma stood from his desk, his expression unusually stiff. "Please tell us what's going on. You're acting differently. You've been hiding something from us, haven't you?"

"N-now that you mention it..." Kaminari mumbled. "Todoroki said the same thing."

Vlad King sighed. "I heavily objected to this mission, but Nezu wouldn't take no for an answer."

"Mission?" Ashido swallowed. "What's that supposed to mean?"

"It means that, as heroes, you have to take on assignments that you don't always agree with." Vlad King said, scowling out the door. "Unfortunately, this is one of those times."

"Our friends are in trouble!" Kirishima shouted. "We can't just sit here and do nothing!"

“Kirishima!” The red head jerked back as Vlad King sighed. “I know how you feel, but orders are orders. This is the safest place for you right now. It would be irresponsible for me to allow you into the battlefield, you’re only first years without a license. Stay put, that’s an order.”

The students exchanged glances, before Kirishima slowly sank into his chair, hands tightly folded on the desk.

They could only imagine what horrors lingered outside.

Dabi’s eyes roamed over the lodge. Familiar heat kissed his skin as blue flames sizzled around his fingers.

“I’m afraid that’s as far as you’ll go!”

Dabi stopped as a man dropped down in front of him. “You’re-”

“Gentle Criminal!” He said as he did a full showman’s bow. “I cannot allow you to go any further.”

“I already know who you are. No need for the fancy introduction.” Dabi smirked. “I was going to say that you’re expendable.”

Gentle Criminal blinked. “What?”

The clearing became drowned by unbearable heat and light as bright flames exploded from Dabi’s skin.

Gentle threw up a barrier, the fiery blast colliding in a hail of cerulean and flowing azures. The sheer beauty was lost to him as sweat broke out upon his body, his throat burning from the super heated air around him.

The flames stopped as fast as they came.

Dabi had no time to think as a silvery capture weapon coiled around him and wrenched his body towards a fuming Aizawa, whose eyes gleamed like red hot coals.

Gentle Criminal recovered as the hero slammed Dabi to the ground, his knee digging into Dabi's back.

"Do you really think you'd get past us so easily?" Aizawa growled. "We already know your plans, so do yourself a favor and surrender."

"Oh, you've figured us out, have you?" Dabi's laugh came out strangled as Aizawa tightened his capture weapon. "But here's a real head scratcher for you. Are you sure that you're the one who wove the spider's web, or are you the trapped fly about to be devoured? You flies deluded yourselves into being the spider."

"... What? Stop talking in riddles." Aizawa scowled. "Explain, unless you want your arm broken."

Dabi grunted, but he held his tongue.

Gentle Criminal's stomach squirmed as Dabi's arm snapped.

Aizawa swore as the villain melted into sludge. "His quirk...?" Aizawa glared at the muck clinging to his hands and weapon. "No, the flame was his quirk."

"A quirk of another villain, perhaps." Gentle Criminal offered a handkerchief. "We figured Giran would keep information from us. Joker was right to prepare so heavily."

"... Thanks." Aizawa took the offering and wiped down his hands. "How about we switch roles? I'll head into the forest to help my students."

"Yes," Gentle Criminal stared into the blazing forest and wondered what demons lay in the deepened shadows. "I believe my quirk would be more suitable for keeping the villains at bay while the students return here."

They glanced at the blackened earth. A small patch of earth was untouched. If Gentle didn't throw up his barrier at the last moment... he shook his head. Now was not the time to count his lucky stars just yet.

With a nod, hero and vigilante split up.

~ A few minutes earlier...

They jumped as a piercing scream echoed from ahead.

"Villains!?" Midoriya shouted.

"Todoroki, wait!" Koda snatched Todoroki's wrist. "You heard what Mandalay said! We have to go back!"

"You heard that scream!" Todoroki wrenched his wrist away. "We have to help our classmates!"

"Kota, please come back! I'm sorry, but I don't know where you go sometimes, just please return safe!"

"Kota..." Midoriya whipped around, his quirk sparking to life.

Bakugo cackled, a devious smirk splitting his face in half. "Like hell I'll run with my tail between my legs! I'll lead the way, IcyHot!"

"W-wait..." Koda tried stopped his friends. "We can't disobey the heroes!"

"Koda, can you return to the lodge by yourself?" Todoroki asked, tensing as if he were ready to run. "It's not that far away."

"What!? Well, yeah, but-"

"Then go back and stop slowing us down!" Bakugo called before leapt into the darkness.

Todoroki cursed, but followed after him.

“I’m sorry, but I can’t leave Kota behind!” Midoriya’s pupils were pinpricks. “He’s just a little boy!”

“I-it’s okay. You can save him!” Koda nodded. “G-go!”

What else could he say? His classmates wouldn’t listen to reason. Midoriya threw him a grateful glance as he shot off in another direction. Koda looked to the stone wolf.

“We should go, Mr. wolf!... Mr. wolf?”

Koda placed a hand on the unmoving statue, but it crumbled into a pile of dirt.

“Mr. Wolf!?” Koda shivered.

He gathered what little courage he had and turned towards where he thought was the direction of the lodge, but the foliage made it hard to see the path. Perhaps if he got some of the birds to help him-

He whirled around at the snap of a twig.

“H-hello?”

The bushes parted. All the blood drained from his face.

A ferocious Nomu towered over him. It’s beady, dead eyes stared straight through Koda’s soul. An inhuman screech gurgled from its lips as it raised a hand adorned with gleaming, curved talons. The bright blue of the encroaching flames highlighted their razor sharp edge.

Koda scrunched his eyes shut as the Nomu’s talons fell like the reaper’s scythe.

"I told them this was a bad idea!" Joker rushed through the tree branches with Mona on his shoulder. He scoffed as he turned on the comms. "Status report!"

"Encountered a Nomu- ahg!" Spinner shouted as clattering metal overcame the comms. "I'll be able to handle it, though! I won't let this one get the better of me!"

"Merp!!"

"La B-Brava, reporting in! I'm picking up multiple readings scattered around in the forest. Pixie Bob and Ragdoll are unresponsive!"

"Eraserhead and I encountered a villain outside the lodge!" Gentle Criminal said. "The scoundrel was just a fake, and Eraserhead rushed into the forest! I'm staying at the lodge to protect any students that make it back."

"Good idea. Mandalay can you support him?"

"Yes, I'm heading there now! Tiger, where are you?"

"On the 1-B side evacuating students! Some students are unconscious because of this gas."

Mona gasped. "Wait, I sense something over there! A student and... a Nomu!?"

Panic struck Joker like a viper. Cu Chulainn's entrance blended with the wild blue flames around them. Joker dropped to the ground and sprinted towards the Nomu, clawed hand ready to claim its first victim.

Joker burst from the bushes and tackled the student as the claws came down. Lancing pain arched down his back, splatters of crimson peppered nearby foliage. The student's shriek was drowned out by the raw howl of rage from Cu Chulainn as he hurled his spear.

It flew through the air with a deadly whistle. They would never get over the horrible squelching noise or the image of the spear tip bulging out from the Nomu's chest. The monster's inhuman yowl went silent as it melted into sludge, the spear clattering onto the ground along with a wet slap.

"Joker, are you okay!?" Mona cried.

Cu Chulainn rushed to his Trickster, nose wrinkling at the blood trailing down his back. A trill of bloodlust coursed through his veins. Cu Chulainn craved more. Arsene's warning growl wiped the bloodlust away before he could lose himself in it.

"Y-you guys are overreacting. It's not as bad as it looks thanks to Cu Chulainn's defence." Joker, with a deathly pale face, reached into his pocket and broke a Bead. Cu Chulainn held back a sigh of relief as the Trickster's wounds closed. "See? All better!"

"You idiot!!" Mona shouted as he swiped Joker's face. "You could've.... you could've.... Aaargh!"

"Y-you...." They stared at Koda, who was rooted to the spot, mouth gaping. "Y-you s-saved me...."

"No thanks needed." Joker smiled as he stood and brushed dirt off of his pants, before holding out his hand. "Long time, no see, Rocky. Are you hurt? Do you feel woozy from the gas?"

"N-no..." Koda took his hand.

"Good. Come on, you'll be safe at the lodge."

"W-wait!" Koda shifted on his feet. "Y-you're working alongside the heroes, aren't you?"

"Yes." Joker sighed as Koda's eyes grew wide. "Look, I don't have time to explain. We need to move."

“O-okay, but what about the flames!? They’re spreading fast! A-and the weird mist, too...”

“Easy.” Joker smiled when Seth cackled. “I’ll summon the god of thunderstorms. The forecast didn’t predict any rain, but they’re always wrong anyway.”

Cu Chulainn faded into ash. The flames painted Seth’s black body with vibrant cerulean. Koda gasped as Seth took to the sky, thick smoke and remnants of purple mist streaming from mighty wing beats that bent the trees.

“Come on!”

Joker snatched Koda’s wrist as Seth’s trumpeting calls echoed throughout the mountainside like a whale song from the deep. Thunderheads gathered. Icy trickles plopped on Koda’s face as they ran. Their little dash through the forest couldn’t have been longer than a few minutes, but it felt like an eternity.

“This is your stop, Rocky.” Joker let go of Koda’s wrist. “Stay safe, alright?”

“What about you?”

Joker winked. “I still have a job to do.”

Koda reached out, but Joker was already retreated into the shadows.

“Seth, can you check that cliff where Kota was?”

“I sense the Chariot with the boy!” Seth hovered directly above.
“And... oh? Unimaginable power courses through the Chariot. He has the power to protect the boy.”

Joker breathed a sigh of relief. “Good. He’ll be safe with Midoriya.”

“Joker!” Aizawa emerged from the brush, breathing heavily as he stopped in front of them.

“Eraser! What are you doing here?”

“I found Asui and Uraraka in the forest and got them back to the lodge.” Aizawa said. “Thanks for saving Koda.”

“No problem. Actually, this is perfect timing. We should split up to cover more ground.” Joker said. “Mona, go with Eraserhead.”

“W-wait!” Mona startled. “Wh-what are you saying!? What’s your plan?”

“I’ll locate the flame user.” Joker and Mona shared a long look. “You aren’t immune to fire and you can help Eraser find the one who’s responsible for this mist. The rain keeps the mist and fire at bay, but more students will get hurt if the sources aren’t taken care of.”

“Fine!” Mona said as he hopped down. “Just be careful, okay!?”

“I’m always careful!” Joker winked before he dove headfirst into the brush.

Mona’s ears drooped as he stared into the darkness.

“It’s normal to be worried.” Aizawa said softly.

“Who said I was worried!?” Mona scoffed as he scrambled onto Aizawa’s shoulder. “Let’s just go!”

“... Right.” Aizawa kept quiet as Mona gave him directions. Several minutes of racing over ferns and ducking under sharp twigs gave him doubts. “Where’s the villain controlling the mist? We’re just wandering through the forest.”

“Keep going in this direction! They’re not much farther.”

“How can you tell?”

“Just trust me!” Mona griped. “We’re almost at the center of the fog!”

"If it weren't for the rain-" Aizawa adjusted his capture weapon turned mask, "Then it would have spread a lot farther."

"Yeah." Mona's expression turned grave. "Let's split up. I'll go around back and take them by surprise. I'll keep fresh air around you to stave off the gas, but don't get too cocky, okay?"

"Shouldn't I be saying that to you?"

Mona scoffed and leapt into the trees.

Aizawa stepped through the brush with wisps of purple fog clinging to his feet. The likeness to Midnight's quirk made him uneasy, but he pushed through to the clearing Mona specified. His eyes widened as the villain aimed a revolver right at him.

Not a villain. Just a kid, a boy wearing a middle school uniform. The oxygen tanks strapped to his back were nearly as big as he was. Tubes connected the oxygen to the green gas mask decorated with piercing red eyes.

"Stay back!" The boy yelled. "Or I'll shoot!"

"What's your name, kid?"

"I'm not a kid."

"Okay." A flash of déjà vu hounded Aizawa as he took one step forward. "How old are you?"

"None of your business." Aizawa's ears rang as the gun went off, the bullet piercing the ground in front of Aizawa's feet. "I said stay back."

"Why are you out here?" Aizawa asked as he looked up from the smoking hole in the ground. "Did the villains threaten you?"

"No, I joined them by myself." He stepped forward, the boy's smirk oozing from that terrifying mask. "But you know what, hero ? I've had enough talk.” He raised the gun. “I’ve always wondered what it felt like to kill somebody.”

The crack of the gun sounded before Aizawa could move. They were blinded by a flash of blue flame as a mythical being rose up in front of Aizawa. A splash of multicolored ichor spewed from the bullet wound in its shoulder.

A giant yellow boxing glove appeared behind the boy, its merciless punch broke the gas mask. He gasped as the revolver fumbled with the gun. The mythical being waved his staff with a flourish, the buffeting winds dragging the purple mist.

The boy fell to his knees as the purple tornado consumed him, hands scrambling in vain to block the holes in his mask. It only took a few seconds for him to collapse forward, unconscious. Aizawa watched as the mythical being flapped his wings, the refreshing winds eradicating the last of the gas.

Mona dropped from the treetops. “Mercurius, are you okay!?”

“I am fine, Magician.” He said, putting a hand on the wound to stem the colorful bleeding.

“No you’re not, so don’t pull a Joker!” Mona shook his head. “Here, just let me take care of it.”

A flicker of white light illuminated the clearing and Mercurius’ wound closed.

“Your powers are just like Joker’s?” Aizawa asked as Mercurius rolled his shoulder.

“It’s... a bit more complicated than that.” Mona avoided Aizawa’s eyes. “But yeah, somewhat.”

“... I see.” Aizawa turned to Mercurius with a bowed head. “You took that bullet for me when you didn’t have to. Thank you.”

Mercurius snorted. “Think nothing of it, human.”

Aizawa studied the fleet-footed god. Mercurius could easily be mistaken for a hero on the job, what with the navy blue jumpsuit and hood, with golden accessories around his shoulders and on his gloves. The staff swirled with gold and silver, with a wing motif at the top. Speaking of wings, the vibrant blue and white wings might be a match against Hawks, but even Hawks couldn’t control wind with just a flutter of feathers.

“So, what’s going to happen to him?” Mona said as he went to the boy’s side, drawing Aizawa out of his thoughts. “Is he going to be thrown in prison, too?”

Aizawa’s stomach churned. “In normal circumstances, he would be labeled as a villain and sent to Tartarus.”

“B-but he’s so young!” Mona cried.

“I know.” Aizawa knelt next to the boy. “Maybe there’s something we can do for him. Nezu would jump at the opportunity to help a child, and Ryukyu wanted to open a center for people like him. He’s needs serious psychiatric help, but there might be hope for him yet.”

Mona scrutinized him as Aizawa scooped the boy in his arms.

“Why are you staring at me like that?” Aizawa asked.

“Nothing. It’s just...” Mona shook his head. “You’ve changed since that time we met on the rooftops before the raid.”

“... Thanks?”

“We’ve been here too long.” Mona turned away, his tail flicking. “Joker, what’s your status?”

Aizawa’s brow furrowed as Mona’s eyes went wide.

“... Joker?”

Aizawa's comm picked up nothing but static. "It looks like they jammed our communications."

"Wh-what!? But... but La Brava's network has been flawless until now! How could they...?"

"We'll find out when we return this boy to the lodge. Come on."

"Wait."

"What?"

Mona exchanged a long glance with Mercurius. The former nodded as Mercurius returned to his other self.

"Something just isn't right." Mona, despite Aizawa's protest, leapt up into the branches. "I'm going to find Joker!"

Aizawa swore as he was left with the young criminal in his arms.

He'd find Joker and his crazy feline later, but for now he soldiered on with ominous gurgles of Nomu echoing within the shadows.

Seth soared through skies stained with smoke.

"Nomu infest the forest like ants!" He shouted to the Trickster.

"Take out as many as you can while we search for the oldest Todoroki." Seth heard the faint sound of gunshots from the Trickster's direction. "But focus on protecting any students in immediate danger first!"

"Got it." Seth licked his lips, eager for the taste of battle.

One such disturbance exploded from the cliff face on the other side of the forest. The cliff where that small human called his 'secret hideout'. Seth sensed the Chariot's power thrum through the air. Perhaps he should drop by and watch the battle-

When much more familiar explosions popped from the ground.

His Tower.

Cackling as he spotted his first plaything, he dove, the wind whistling ominously under his wings.

~A few minutes before... ~

“Stay behind me, IcyHot!” Bakugo shouted.

“Can you forget who’s in the lead?” Todoroki snapped. “This is serious!”

“I know this is serious, dumbass! Just follow my-”

Crunch.

Bakugo froze and looked at his feet, where half of a headset cracked under his boots.

“Hey, isn’t that Ragdoll’s?” Todoroki asked as Bakugo picked it up, their eyes wide.

“Yeah. But this is...” Bakugo scowled as crimson stains overwhelmed the bright yellow, with more pools around their feet.

Bakugo suddenly whipped his arm out, an explosion ringing in Todoroki’s ears Bakugo knocked them both to the side. They scrambled to their feet, with Bakugo falling into a battle stance, the broken headset dropping from his grasp.

Todoroki stomped his right foot and shot out a glacier as long, jagged knives weaved through the air at blinding speed. They heard the thunks as the knives impaled it.

“What the hell?” Bakugo growled.

“Ahh.... I was so close.... I want to see more beautiful flesh... the last one screamed so beautifully....” A deranged voice trickled in their ears, slowly rising above the ice. “Give me... your flesh!!”

Bakugo and Todoroki paled as a villain, bound in restraints tightened over a body bag, hovered over them. His whole body was covered, the only opening was his gaping mouth. The restraints pulled his lips back into a frightening leer. Those previous knives were the villain’s teeth, which he used to impale the ground and hover over them with ivory spires.

The insane villain sensed them, his elongating teeth grated together like claws down a chalk board. Todoroki threw up another glacier, before he and Bakugo’s footsteps pounded down the dark path.

“What the hell is wrong with this freak!?” Bakugo spat.

“I don’t know. Just run!”

The maniac chased them in fervent desperation, his mutterings of ‘flesh, beautiful flesh!’ assaulting their ears. The villain’s teeth impaled trees and ripped apart the earth, Todoroki barely had time to throw up another glacier before the spikes could gut them like fish.

The villain turned towards the sky when a whistling noise came from overhead.

“... Flesh?”

The black dot in the sky descended with frightening speed, and it collided with the villain with the force of a lightning strike, a thunderous landing followed by the dancing light show overhead. Thunder rolled over them as they gaped at the smoking crater in the ground.

“Something’s coming!” Todoroki said as a vast body moved within the smoke.

A flash of yellow eyes pinned them to the spot as Seth's head parted the billowing dust. The dragon cackled as it climbed out, wings squelching on the wet earth.

"That never gets old!" Seth shook his head and then peered down on them. "My Tower! And... the Hanged Man?"

"You!!" Bakugo stomped over to Seth.

Todoroki reached out, but Bakugo harshly shrugged him off.

"You have some explaining to do, you dumb lizard!!"

"Me?" Seth licked his lips as he lowered his head to be eye level to Bakugo.

"Yeah, you! Tell that asshole Joker to get over here so we can give him a piece of our minds!"

"Oh? And ruin the fun I'm having?"

"FI-flesh...." The villain tried pulling himself free of the crater.

Seth rolled his golden eyes as his tail struck like a whip. The guttural crack sent the villain careening into the forest, where his body crumpled into a tree. He fell like a pathetic lump. Seth snorted when the villain didn't have the audacity to get up again.

"Well, the fun I was having." Seth muttered. "I wished he put up more of a fight! No matter, I'll have more fun as soon as I get you two to safety. The Trickster's orders."

"What ?" Todoroki asked.

"'Safety'? 'Trickster's orders'!?" Bakugo ran a hand down his face as he hollowly laughed. "Are you freaking kidding me!? We didn't need your help!"

Todoroki held up a hand. "Bakugo-"

“You hear me!?” Bakugo threw an explosion in Seth’s face.
“Everything Joker did, everything he’s ever said, was nothing but bullshit!! Was he enjoying himself when he paraded around as a weak, quirkless barista!? Does he love staring down on me!? Tell him that if I ever see him again, that I’ll kill him myself!” He punctuated every sentence with another explosion. “If you want to play hero, then piss off and go rescue the extras in the other class! I don’t need that lying jerkwad’s help! I CAN TAKE CARE OF MYSELF!!”

He finalized his rant with one more blast, panting heavily as stray sparks fell into mud and the sweet smell of caramel stung their noses. The smoke faded away. Seth wasn’t even singed.

“Well said!” Seth cackled. “I knew I’ve always liked you, Bakugo! If anyone held the Tower Arcana, then I am glad it is one as tenacious as you!”

Bakugo stiffened. Pain thrummed through his joints, but he only felt the gnarled confusion as Seth stared at him in pride. The dragon raised a wingspan greater than any of the trees towering over them.

“Very well, my magnificent Tower!” Seth bellowed. “Then I shall take my leave to save the weaker ‘extras’! I wish you a good bloodletting!”

“Bakugo!” Todoroki shielded his face from the buffeting wind as Seth took off. “What did you do!? You scared off our one chance to get help!”

“We’ll do this on our own! We don’t need that lying son of a bitch!” Bakugo turned on his heels, shoulder checking Todoroki as he walked down the path. “Are you coming or not, IcyHot!?”

Todoroki glanced between the sky and Bakugo, before pinching the bridge of his nose and following.

Bakugo’s anger just doomed him to a worse fate.

“Merp!”

“I know!” Spinner grimaced as more Nomu emerged from the blackness.

Joker’s equipment was on another level.

He didn’t think those wooden sticks would do anything, but the light that surrounded him after he broke them fueled his body with power and speed. He tossed bombs of ice and lightning and strange psychic energy to keep the Nomu’s numbers down.

Mona’s gem encrusted scimitar sang in his hands. The whistling slices through the air crescendoed over gurgling Nomu, the silver and gold blade slicing through their flesh like a hot knife through butter. Splatters of sludge painted the ground, and squelching footsteps heralded the endless wave of Nomu marching ever closer.

It filled him with a primal sense of dread, but at the same time, pride.

If these Nomu were focused on him, then it gave the students a bigger chance at escaping their clutches.

“Merp!!”

“Ahg!”

That Nomu’s punch should have sent him flying farther or broke his bones into dust. Perhaps both. But he stood, almost unharmed save for some soreness, the weightless armor under his costume muted most of the damage.

“Heh, this stuff really is something else! I’m going to have to thank Joker when all of this is over!” Spinner grinned as he pointed his blade at the hulking beasts before him. “Is that all you got!? Bring it on, you spineless chumps!”

During the thriving heat of battle, some small part of him wondered: What would have happened if he chose to follow Stain instead of

Joker?

Would he even be here? Or would he have thrown himself in with the League, perhaps aiding in this attack? The mere thought made him shudder, but he had no time to think on it as more monsters flooded around him.

He chuckled.

This wasn't like that Wolf Nomu. He would make sure that these kids would be able to go home at the end of the night!

He released another battle cry and charged at them with the singing blade, the sound of Lady Stubbs' own hissing cries trilling in his ears.

"Grow, grow!!" Komori Kinoko backpedaled as several dozen mushroom sprouted on the Nomu's bodies and the surrounding ground, but they weren't slowing down. "Kendo!"

Kendo's giant hands sliced through the Nomu. It turned to sludge and splattered onto the ground with a sickening splash, but other Nomu easily took its place.

"Look out!!"

Kendo jumped back as Tsuburaba's air barrier blocked a Nomu's strike.

"Thanks, Tsuburaba!" Kendo said as she took a stance. She was smiling, but her heart pounded as the flames silhouetted the hulking bodies trudging through the forest. "How's Awase!?"

"I-I'm fine..."

"You're not fine, dude!" Tsuburaba looked to the classmate he carried on his back, his headband stained with red.

Kendo scowled as another Nomu approached, its eerily dead eyes piercing through them.

“You guys go!” She commanded as she shifted her stance. “I’ll distract them!”

“No!” Komori frantically shook her head. “I’m not leaving without you!”

“Same, Class Rep.” Tsuburaba smirked.

“But there’s too many-”

“Here they come!” Kinoko said.

Kendo stood in front of her friends with a fierce scowl. That fear died when a gigantic body crashed onto the Nomu like a crack of thunder, the shock wave throwing Kendo and her friends onto the ground.

Kendo rolled through the fall and enlarged her hands to shield her classmates, but what she witnessed made her jaw drop. The gigantic dragon’s tail swipes leveled the trees and Nomu alike. His head whipped like a battering ram and his wings sent merciless gusts of wind.

Nomu after Nomu turned to slush. All the while the dragon laughed as goopy carnage splattered everywhere.

“Th-that’s-” Tsuburaba pointed a shaky finger. “Isn’t that...?”

“L-Look out!” Kinoko screamed as another form loomed over them.

A stream of crimson flame whooshed over their heads. The Nomu screeched and thrashed in pain, but even the sludge was reduced to ash. They looked back over to the dragon, who closed its smoking jaws with a snap .

The once towering trees were reduced to splinters for several hundred feet all around them. Piles of sludge were the only evidence of the Nomu. Great claw marks gouged the earth, destroying the ferns and wild flowers.

“Stay back!!” Kendo screamed as the dragon crept towards them, the smaller wings on its neck flaring. “Stay back I said!”

“Wait!”

Relief crashed into them as Tiger crossed through the destruction.

“Hmph, I did your job for you, hero .” The dragon’s bone deep voice rumbled. “Twice!”

“And I’m grateful that you protected them.” Tiger stood between Kendo and Seth, her hands shrinking to their normal size. “Most of 1-B is in the clearing.”

“Wh-what about 1-A?” Kinoko asked.

“A few students are still MIA, but-”

“Joker is battling the Nomu around 1-A’s area.” The dragon stated. “They should be safe from the Nomu’s grasp.”

“J-Joker...?” Kendo’s eyes widened. “He’s here ?”

The dragon snorted. “Get these children to safety before more Nomu appear!”

“Wait!” Tiger bowed his head. “I have a favor to ask you.”

Seth narrowed his eyes. “What?”

“I must search for my teammates! Pixie Bob and Ragdoll haven’t responded. Can you take these students to the lodge in my stead?”

“You want him to do what!?” Tsuburaba shouted.

Seth bit back his retort when a sudden sense of longing trickled from the Trickster. Ah, it was the word Tiger used. Teammates. Seth curled his lip. He had an inkling that Tiger used that word on purpose.

“Fine.” Seth’s eyes flicked to the students as he lowered his neck. “Hop on before I change my mind.”

“But there’s no saddle?” Kendo said. “We’ll just fall to our deaths!”

“I-I... can help.” Awase chuckled as he stared at Seth in awe. “My quirk will... make sure w-we don’t fall off.”

“Awase....” Kinoko glanced between her classmate and the dragon.

“Just don’t push yourself, okay?” Kendo swallowed down her pride as Tsuburaba helped Awase.

“Got... it!”

Seth curbed his rage as the 1-B student fused their bodies to his skin like some sick, half botched execution from the Velvet Room. He was fine with the Trickster riding on him, he had deserved that right. Maybe even the Tower and the Hanged Man, too. But this? These... extras as his Tower called them? They weren’t worthy, and never would be.

The child nodded when it was done.

Seth leapt into the air without warning. He took great pleasure in their screams of terror as the ground was ripped out from underneath, the flora below becoming nothing more than a blur.

The clamors of 1-A’s quirks echoed on the other side of the forest, and he felt the Trickster’s satisfaction as he dual wielded Nataraja and the Tyrant Pistol, the head shots turning a wave of Nomu to sludge.

Then, Seth saw him.

A flicker of cerulean fire sparkling within the same colored eyes. Such eyes stared blankly at Seth as he zoomed overhead.

“Trickster! I have located the elder Todoroki sibling!”

“I’m making my way there now!”

Explosive power came from the cliff overlooking the forest.

“What’s happening over there!?” One of the whelps shouted.

“Trickster-”

“I felt it, too.”

“Hmm, I thought the Chariot could handle this battle on his own. I’ll make my way there after I get these children to safety.”

“Wait!” Cerberus shouted. “I want to go!”

“Why?”

“If the Trickster has me active, then Todoroki’s flames will heal instead of deflect! I want to see my green child!”

“Cerberus....”

“Alright.” The Trickster swung through the trees with a acrobatic flip.

“Seth, switch out with Cerberus after you’re done!”

“Understood.”

Seth burst into the clearing with the fury of the storm at his back, his landing shaking the lodge like the rolls of thunder overhead. He lowered his head as students swarmed him, apprehensive. Relief crept into 1-B as the last of their classmates unmounted.

“About half of 1-A is missing, Trickster. The whole of 1-B is in the clearing, now. Some have minor wounds or are unconscious from the gas, but no deaths thus far.”

Seth ignored their annoying clamors as he studied the edge of the forest.

Gentle Criminal leapt around with grace, his stretchy barriers preventing Nomu from getting inside. Mandalay and Vlad King worked in tandem to beat back any trespassers, a sizable amount of sludge staining their boots.

“... Good.” Joker said. “Switch out with Cerberus.”

“Dude.” Kirishima took a tentative step towards Seth. “You’re-”

Seth snorted, not deigning to hear their words as he returned to his other self.

Joker never knew what to expect with this mystery Todoroki.

Red or white hair, perhaps a mix of both like Peppermint’s. What he did not expect was the pitch black hair and cerulean eyes simmering with hatred. Purple scars marred his jawline and under his eyes, the patchwork skin held together by thick surgical staples. More scar tissue matted his collar bone and down into his clothes.

Joker’s vision was snuffed out by a blast of flame. He smirked as he walked through them untouched thanks to Cerberus.

The older Todoroki’s eyes widened as Joker continued walking, flames crackling in a magnificent dance. An otherworldly glow painted Joker as he stared Todoroki in the eye.

“Not bad. Your flames are hotter than Endeavor’s.”

“Don’t ever compare me to Endeavor.” Todoroki scowled as the flames died within his fingers.

“Why?” Joker tilted his head. “After all, you are-”

“You don’t know shit about me.”

“Are you sure?” Joker tapped his chin. “I wonder how your family would react if they knew you were alive, Todoroki Touya ?”

The brilliant blue splashed Touya’s face in harsh contrast as terror morphed into rage, and again twisted into a sickening ear-to-ear grin. The staples pulling at his skin created a ghastly expression.

“Oh, so you have me figured out, huh?” Touya’s manic chuckle sent chills down Joker’s spine. “You really think you know me? Don’t give me that crap, Joker!”

That expression, that same level of hopelessness, it reminded him of-

Joker flinched as Touya sent another wave of azure flames. Hissing rain turned to tendrils of steam. Nearby trees were ignited without mercy, being reduced to nothing more than withering black husks. The way the flames flickered made Touya look nothing short of insane, his eyes piercing Joker with intense hatred.

“Do you think I care about any of them!?” Dabi shouted over the roar of flame. “The only thing I care about is seeing Endeavor squirm .”

Joker paled. “Why do you want revenge against your father?”

“Why? Why!? ” Touya’s arms steamed as he cooked his own flesh. “I was the first. His ‘masterpiece’! But my body couldn’t handle the heat of my quirk, so I was abandoned and tossed to the side like trash. He made my life a living hell, but when Shoto was born-”

“Your brother is in this forest! Your family! ” Joker took a step forward, kicking up a small cloud of ash. “What about Fuyumi and Natsuo? Your mother trapped in a mental ward? Do you know how happy they would be reunited with you!?”

“I don’t care.” Touya smirked. “Actually, I would be ecstatic to see how Endeavor reacts if the rest of his children turned to ash under my flames.”

“That’s bullshit. Do you know what happens when he crumbles and there’s nothing left for you!?” Joker snarled, hot rage pounding through his veins. Touya narrowed his eyes as Joker waved his arm. “You’ll become an empty husk! It accomplishes nothing! You are so consumed by revenge that you don’t see the bigger picture!”

Touya tensed as Joker held out his hand.

“I would give up everything to see my family again, and I know yours would be the same! They are people who’ll support you through anything. You don’t have to go through this alone, Ake-” Joker shook his head. “Touya! It’s not too late to change things, but you have to be the one who reaches out first! Take my hand. I can heal your scars and we can- ”

“Shut up!” Touya knocked Joker’s hand away, frantically laughing. “Who the hell do you think you are? What right do you have to offer me anything when I already vowed to take revenge!? I- ” Touya’s shoulders slumped, and he shook his head. A frightening grin reappeared on his face as his eyes pierced through Joker. “You know what? This conversation is pointless.”

Heat waves distorted the area as the temperature skyrocketed. Joker jumped back when a wild torrent of white hot flames erupted from Dabi’s body. The fiery pillar rose so high in the sky that it pierced the heavens. Dabi’s arms collapsed into sludge, the rest of his body crumbling after. This was just a copy. A fake.

But that didn’t stop Joker’s panic.

“Stop!! ” Joker screamed. “At this rate, you’ll-”

“Have fun with all of the Nomu, Joker!!”

Dabi sent him one last manic leer before a cataclysmic explosion threw Joker back.

Joker's body crashed into something, and there was a sharp pain in his head before everything went black.

He didn't even hear Morgana's screams.

~Ten minutes earlier...

Cerberus's paws scattered clumps of dirt as he pounded up the mountain trail.

His ears picked up his green child screaming . He jumped onto the cliff with the fires of hell flowing through his veins, releasing a mighty roar.

"A-another villain!?" Kota scrambled back from Cerberus.

Midoriya, shirtless and covered in blood, had both of his arms marred with deep purple bruising. A massive villain lay behind him, unconscious and beaten to a pulp.

"Kota, th-that's not a villain..." Midoriya's eyes went wide as Cerberus approached, his tail wagging.

"My green child!" Midoriya sputtered as Cerberus pressed his nose against Midoriya's forehead. "Are you okay!?"

"I-I'm okay..." Midoriya staggered back, nearly tripping on his own feet. "But... but if you're here, then that means Joker really is..."

"Joker!?" Kota's expression became pinched. "But... wait, that means he was...."

"We have no time for chatter!" Cerberus shook his mane. "I will get you both to safety!"

“No!” Midoriya shook his head.

Cerberus tilted his head. “No? But you are hurt!”

“I still have something I need to do, Cerberus!” Midoriya said. “Can you get Kota back to the lodge?”

“What!?” Kota glared at him. “What about you!?”

“I-I can’t leave my friends behind! They’re still out there, aren’t they?” Midoriya looked at Muscular. “He said that anybody was a target! They’re after Kacchan, too!”

“All of 1-B is safe at the lodge! But...” Cerberus’ ears flattened. “Lots of 1-A still in forest! I...” He sensed his Chariot’s determination and will power, despite his grave injuries. He would go no matter what Cerberus tried. “Alright, I will take this tiny human to safety!”

“Kota,” Midoriya knelt down with a weak smile. “Mandalay is waiting for you, remember?”

Kota sniffled, but he nodded with watery eyes. Cerberus ignored the pit in his gut as he lay down and allowed the child to clamber up on his back, his tiny hands grasping white fur.

“You better come back too, okay!?” Kota shouted.

“I will! Promise!”

Cerberus trotted alongside Midoriya as they went down the mountain path, but they split off as soon as they reached the forest. Kota buried his face in Cerberus’ mane, his trembling hands pulling tightly on the fur.

Several gasps broke out as he emerged from the bushes, his bright eyes scanning the clearing. No other Nomu or villain were attacking for the moment, so the heroes were regrouping. He passed by Gentle Criminal, who nodded at him, and bounded towards Mandalay.

“I brought your child!” Cerberus announced as he lay down to reveal his passenger.

“Kota!!” Mandalay rushed to his side and hugged him tightly. “I’m so glad you’re okay!”

“I-I’m fine!” Kota tried to brush her off, but he eventually melted in her arms when the tears came. “I’m fine . Y-you don’t need to cry!”

A white pillar of flame erased the dark of the night, casting everything in light and deep shadow.

“Master!” Cerberus felt the moment that the Trickster was tossed.

Cerberus turned to cinders as the Trickster knew nothing but blackness.

Joker coughed and opened his eyes to a pitch black sky. He peeled himself from the shattered tree that broke his fall and studied his surroundings. There was a massive crater where the fake Touya sacrificed himself, any tree in the surrounding several hundred feet were reduced to nothing . Grass, trees, flowers, all of it burnt to the ground.

“Hello? What’s everyone’s status?” Joker frowned. “... Hello?”

He took the comm out of his ear. The bit of metal and plastic was melted beyond repair. It was probably due to Cerberus that it didn’t destroy his inner ear. He cursed under his breath and tossed it aside.

“Yatagarasu.” The bird immediately materialized at his side, ruffling his feathers. “Scan the forest and give me an update.”

Yatagarasu shuffled his feathers. “Perhaps you should regroup with the others-”

“Yatagarasu .” The bird flinched. “Please.”

“....Very well.”

The raven took off into the sky as Joker wiped the layers of ash from his costume, his body sore. The silence around him was... deafening. No animals or even a gust of wind stirred. It was too still. The acrid smoke coated his mouth and throat, and it would take ages to wash it out of his hair.

“Trickster!” Panic coursed through Yatagarasu as he hovered over the clearing. “The Magician is-”

A pang of fear coursed through Joker when he lay eyes on a blackened shape in the distance. His vision tunneled as he rushed over to where Mercurius was curled around Mona, his clothes blackened and stained by dull ichor.

“Mercurius! Are you...” Joker swallowed as Yatagarasu switched with Ishtar, who hovered over the pair. “Is Mona...?”

“H-he is... safe...” Mercurius rasped. “I-I tried-”

“Shhh, don’t speak.” Ishtar whispered. “Hold still.”

The soothing light of a Salvation did little for their appearance. The burns smoothed over and Mercurius visibly slumped in relief. Mona, however, didn’t stir even as the patches of burnt skin healed.

“Mona? Mona!”

“He’ll be alright.” Mercurius clutched his other self to his chest. “His body needs time to regain strength. Our bond nearly broke when I protected him from those white flames.”

“Like with what happened to Kohryu?” Joker uttered in horror.

“... Yes.”

“He... he almost...” Joker’s gloves creaked as he knotted his hands into tight fists, unbearable heat flooded his chest and his throat tightened. “They almost killed him.”

“Trickster...” Ishtar reached out, but Joker brushed her off.

“Mercurius, get Mona to safety. That’s an order.”

Mercurius gravely nodded. With a shuffle of his wings and a gentle breeze, he was gone.

“Yatagarasu, what else did you see?”

“I... there are Nomu-”

“More of them?” Joker swore. “How many are left?”

“The numbers from before were nothing compared to this. They were swarming the lodge. I couldn’t see if Gentle Criminal’s barriers are holding up, but at this rate...”

‘Have fun with all of the Nomu, Joker!’

Is that what Touya’s signal was!?

He needed a plan... anything to get the Nomu away...

Gentle Criminal and La Brava were at the lodge, but most of Joker’s skills were too catastrophic for such a small area, and potentially harming the students was out of the question. He didn’t know where Spinner was. Mona was too hurt.

He reached into his pocket for a Limelight, a Metaverse item that would make any and all enemies target whoever used it. A bubble of laughter escaped him.

“Seth.”

“Trickster, this plan is too dangerous! Don’t let your anger control you!” Arsene’s words fell on deaf ears.

Ishtar disappeared and Seth's claws crunched over blackened ground.

Joker looked up at him with fury in his eyes. "Can you do it?"

Seth cackled. "That's not even a question! Hop on, Trickster!"

"Seth!!" Arsene howled.

Joker, with the Limelight in hand, jumped onto Seth's neck. A cloud of ash scattered as Seth took to the sky, soaring into the heavens like a freshly shot arrow. Seth breathed in deep, filling his lungs just as they reached the thunder clouds.

Lightning danced in bright spiderwebs behind them, fracturing the dark clouds like glass. Then, Seth opened his jaws and released his song with the beat of thunder. The bone deep cry traveled for miles within the surrounding mountains, reaching the ears of everyone in range.

Joker stood upon Seth's neck, painted in bright whites and purples from the light show above. The Limelight was used, and Seth saw the change in the forest below as all Nomu came after the Trickster. Joker smirked as the flood of unnatural monstrosities prowled through the destroyed forest in an undulating wave.

"Let's go."

Seth plummeted from the sky, pulling up as the first Nomu leapt within range. A tail swipe splattered it into sludge. Seth howled with laughter when they soared over the trees with the army of Nomu at their heels, until they reached the furthest depths of the forest.

"Land there!"

Seth dropped into a clearing and Joker hopped down onto green grass. The Nomu Hoard snapped trees and frightened hundreds of birds from their nests. Seth faded, and Joker smirked as he switched masks in quick succession.

Ishtar for Heat Riser.

Titania for Concentrate.

He pulled Black Frost into reality, the evil sprite eagerly bouncing on his heels.

“Are you ready?” Joker asked as nearby trees collapsed, and the vibration of a hundred footsteps rumbled through the earth.

“Ready when you are, ho!”

Joker waved his arm as he saw the whites of the Nomu’s eyes.
“Now!!”

“Heeee hooo!!!!”

Glacial shards erupted across the forest. Joker smirked as the Nomu were encased in ice, the first Nomu’s clawed hands extended towards him.

Black Frost vanished with a snap of his fingers, and Cu Chulainn stood tall, his cape waved gently with the breeze. Their bodies lit up with a Charge. Joker took a moment to admire the mystical beauty of an entire forest and a horde of monsters locked within crystalline ice. Joker tapped the closest Nomu’s extended claws, and it gave off a pleasant ding .

“Do it.”

Cu Chulainn grinned. “With pleasure!”

The Persona released a battle cry as he twirled his spear and stabbed it into the ground. The earth rumbled and split under Cu Chulainn's empowered Gigantomachia, tearing the mountainside apart in a merciless swath of destruction. The clouds of dust parted.

Joker whistled as he and Cu Chulainn stood at the precipice of a great crater several hundred feet wide. Trees jutted out of broken earth like toothpicks, and there was not a single Nomu in sight. An eerie silence plagued the mountains. No birds or wildlife stirred within the broken earth, just a deadened wind singing a funerary timbre for all that was lost in one fell swoop.

A nearby crack could easily be mistaken for crumbling foliage.

“That takes care of that.” Joker frowned at the heart rending destruction before him. “Good work.”

Cu Chulainn, in lieu of the Trickster’s sorrow, disappeared with a bow of his head. Joker’s vision swirled and he put his hands on his knees, panting. Gigantomachia took a good chunk of health with it. He hasn’t used such a taxing physical skill in this world yet, perhaps the toll was heavier than it was in the Metaverse.

He gently swore under his breath as he swayed. Joker reached into his pocket and snapped a Life Bead, his dizziness and exhaustion easing.

“Great, now we just have to regroup with the others-”

“Handy little item you used there.”

Joker whirled around to see Mr. Compress approaching, the last wisps of dust wafting from his jacket.

“How did you...?”

“Joker.” The man jovially tipped his hat, but there was an undertone of urgency in his voice. “Listen to me-”

“Why should I listen to you?” Joker smirked as whipped out Nataraja. “Last time I checked we were on opposite sides.”

“Yes, well... times do change.” Mr. Compress ran a finger under the rim of his hat. “I’ve come to offer you a way out of the danger that awaits you.”

“What are you talking about?”

“The League is not being led by Shigaraki, not really. The man who hired me to break into the Yaoyorozu estate is an individual who far exceeds that man-child in every possible way. He’s a figure who makes the worst villains tremble by just hearing his name.”

Joker narrowed his eyes. “Would that name happen to be All For One?”

Mr. Compress stiffened. “Yes.”

“He’s the one who’s behind everything?”

“Yes.”

“Why?” Joker shook his head. “Why is he doing all of this?”

“I don’t pretend to understand all of the plans that man has concocted, but I do know that part of this attack was for you .”

Joker’s stomach sank. “Me?”

“Yes. Everything he’s done was to test you like some lab rat, to see what makes you tick so he could use it against you. The fires, our encounter at the Yaoyorozu manor, among others.” Mr. Compress took a step forward. “Don’t you understand? He’s done all of this because he’ll do anything to get you under his thumb!”

“So what do you propose, then?” Joker’s laugh was hollow. “Tell me your ‘great plan’ to escape this legendary bogey man of the underground.”

“My quirk.” Mr. Compress looked down at his hand. “I could tell them that you escaped me, that way I could whisk you to safety after-”

“Don’t make me laugh. Me, trust you ?” Joker shook his head. “How do you expect me to follow along when you could be lying? I’m not making that mistake again. You make a shoddy replacement for Giran.”

“Joker, hear me out.” Mr. Compress sighed. “My first encounter with you has... changed something within me. I can’t explain it. I’ve finally met someone else who has suffered the wrongs of this society and sought to change it through gentleman thievery!” Joker stiffened when Mr. Compress reached into his jacket and pulled out an old book. “You see this? This is the original copy of Arsene Lupin, Gentleman Burglar.”

“So what?”

“Witnessing Arsene Lupin, the true Gentleman Burglar, in all of his glory was a wake up call.” Mr. Compress held the book to his chest. “I know what path I must take, and it’s the same one you walk.”

Joker lowered his gun. “You’re telling the truth?”

“I have no reason to lie. I-”

A purple cloud expanded behind Mr. Compress.

Panic flashed through Joker’s eyes, but his shout came too late. Mr. Compress gasped as a wicked knife impaled through his shoulder, the book dropping from his grasp. Crimson seeped into his coat at an alarming rate.

“Did you really think we wouldn’t notice?” Toga giggled as she ripped her knife out and kicked Mr. Compress in the back. He tumbled over, grasping his shoulder. “Your copy did a good job at faking it, but you know how Twice can’t keep a secret from me. Ah well, I got to cover you in pretty red, so what do I care?”

Joker snarled as he pulled the trigger. Toga laughed as she danced around the whizzing bullets.

“C’mon, Joker!” Toga’s giggles ignited fire in Joker’s blood. “Don’t play hard to get, unless you want Bakugo’s blood on your hands?”

That fire turned into ice. “What are you talking about?”

“Oh.” Toga blushed as she grinned at a groaning Compress. “He didn’t tell you, huh? How Compress used his copy to kidnap Bakugo? He was going to throw someone e/se under the bus in order to save you, Joker!”

“Sh... shut it...” Mr. Compress could barely lift his head from a puddle of his own blood.

“What about Bakugo?” Joker growled as he aimed at Toga. “You better not-”

“If you don’t want to hurt Bakugo, then don’t get too trigger happy, Aki-chan! It doesn’t suit you.”

Joker lost all color in his face. “What did you just say?”

“Do you not like my nickname?” Toga sauntered closer, her finger trailing down her bloody knife. “Kurusu-kun is too formal and not cute at all!”

Joker’s mouth went dry as he stood like a deer in the headlights. His Personas’ frantic whispers were lost to him as Toga retrieved a small vial of blood, which she popped open and allowed the crimson bead to drip on her tongue.

Toga began to change.

“Well, Akira? How do I look?”

It looked like Risumi, sounded like Risumi, but the twisted smirk upon the loving woman’s face was alien to him. The frantic giggles and the way she clutched that knife made Joker feel sick.

“Do you not like it, sweetheart?” Not-Risumi asked in a sickly sweet voice, her silent footsteps approaching. “Should we fetch Hitoshi to make you feel better? Ayumu? Or maybe Haru-san? She’s such a sweet old lady, she’d do anything to-”

“What do you want?” Joker snapped as tears stung his eyes.

“What do I want?”

Not-Risumi hummed as she stepped up to him, Nataraja dropped from his grasp as the fake entwined her fingers in his own. Then, she led him into a dance. It was in a sick mockery from those weeks ago, the roles reversed. He was the puppet helplessly locked into the flowing movements, their only audience was a man bleeding out and a sentient mist cloud that watched in disinterest. No stars or brilliant moonlight shown down upon them, only darkness and the despair running rampant in Joker’s heart.

Risumi’s scent, mixed with a coppery undertone, washed over him. It took every part of him to not show his revulsion.

“I want nothing more than to love, live, and die the way I want, to become the people that I love so dearly.” Not-Risumi’s skin melted away like hot wax, revealing Toga’s sharp grin. “Haven’t you ever loved someone so much that you wanted to become them, Akira?”

“I thought I stole your heart on our last dance?” Joker asked in a shaky voice, “Does that not count?”

“I love you, a-and I love Midoriya too!” Toga huddled herself to his chest, close enough to hear his erratic heartbeat. “You were one of the first people that didn’t look at me like I was a monster. I’ll never forget our first dance. It was so romantic!”

“I’m sensing a ‘but’ coming.”

“But this isn’t about what I want, Aki-chan.” Toga pulled back, her smile fading as well as the light in her eyes. “I still value my own life over everything else. If I go against the League now, then I'll end up sharing Giran's fate. All For One doesn't let people walk away."

She took advantage of Joker's dismal shock, wrapping her arms around his neck and leaning closer to him.

Kurogiri cleared his throat. "Toga, enough messing around. Sensei is waiting."

"Don't you know not to interrupt a girl's first kiss, Kurogiri?" Toga clutched onto Joker. "I don't want to let him go just yet! At least let me kiss him?"

"Toga." Kurogiri warned.

"Fiiine." Toga winked at Joker before stepping back. "So, what's your answer, Aki-chan? Come with us peacefully, otherwise it won't just be Bakugo who gets the axe."

"I will go with you, but-" Joker pointed at Compress. "You let him go and leave everyone else unharmed."

"Bakugo will remain under our care, your good behaviour might spare him any pain." Kurogiri said. "But I can promise that those residing in the Blue Lotus and the rest of the hero students will be left alone under those same conditions."

"And Mr. Compress?"

Kurogiri's yellow eyes turned towards the bleeding man. "I don't think Compress is too long for this world. Such a shame that we have to leave him."

"Joker... no..." Mr. Compress reached out as Joker stopped in front of him. A tiny thunk landed right beside his hand, Joker masking the noise by scuffing his boot. Toga and Kurogiri were oblivious to the Bead in Mr. Compress's reach. "Please! You don't have to-"

“Sorry.” Joker whispered as he turned away. “But it would be better to walk alone.”

Kurogiri expanded his body as Joker approached.

Mr. Compress could only watch on as Joker willingly walked through the portal.

Toga never gave him a second glance as she skipped into a different portal, before Kurogiri faded into nothing.

~15 minutes earlier

Inhuman screeches wailed in Gentle Criminal’s ears as raking claws and teeth pushed his barriers to the limit, his breath leaving in rasping gasps as sweat made his clothes stick to his body. He couldn’t tell one Nomu from another from the endless, undulating wave. The nasty eyes and brains and snapping mouths bled together into one horrific body. He bounced to the next glaring hole in their defence like a speeding bullet, elastic air preventing the swarm from stepping a foot inside, which slowly grew smaller and smaller like a tightening noose.

“There’s too many!” Vlad King howled as he raised spires of hardened blood. “Mandalay, get the children into the lodge! Now!!”

“You heard him!” Mandalay waved her arm in an arc. “All students inside the lodge!”

“Mandalay!” Iida called. “Let us help! We can-”

“No!” Vlad Kind panted as another crimson tower rose over them, but he picked up the crackling noises as Nomu tried to punch through.

“Listen to Mandalay! That’s an order!”

“We’ll all die if we do that!” Ashido called.

“We’ll die if we stay out here!” Monoma, wide eyed and frantic, shouted.

That’s when the first of Gentle Criminal’s barrier snapped . Writhing pain coursed through him, but the fire in his heart fueled his breaking body, leaping over the screaming students to stand valiantly in front of the wretched monster. Dead eyes pinned him to the spot as he threw up his hands, the Nomu and its brethren reciprocating the act.

Gentle Criminal gasped as the claws came down into his quirk, his own death lingering between a thin layer of air. The Nomu pressed down with all of its strength, his creaking joints forced to kneel into the dirt.

“Gentle!” La Brava rushed to his side, panting.

“My dear, get to safety!” Gentle Criminal yelled. “I don’t know how much longer I can hold them back!”

“No!” Her pigtails bounced as he shook her head. “I’ll help buy us some time!”

She grasped his pant leg and activated her quirk.

Power shot through him with the force of a lightning strike, striking every fiber of his being like a red hot hammer. Wild energy flowed out of them as their bodies burst with pink light, the students’ cries meshing with the gurgles and animalistic yowls.

Gentle Criminal released a hair raising battle cry. He was the only bulwark between these students and certain death. Pain wracked his body as he pushed his quirk to the limits, fusing all of the individual barriers into one bubble encompassing the whole clearing.

“You can do it!” La Brava’s words fueled him to push on just a bit longer .

Warm wetness trickled down his nose. Despite the bone crushing pressure squeezing his body, despite the flabbergasted heroes and students staring at him as if he were their last hope of survival, despite screaming until his voice gave out, he stood against the swarm.

Then, a forbidden song from the deep echoed through the mountains, vibrating their bones and filling their bodies with the innate sense of fear. Their eyes were drawn to a form hovering above the forest, his vast body painted by lightning and heralded by thunder.

Another regal form stood valiantly on the god's head, coat tails flaring. An unknown force pulled on their souls and refused to let them look away, Nomu included.

One by one, the roiling waves of Nomu retreated into the forest.

One by one, the students fell to their knees as their imminent death knell went silent.

Gentle Criminal's barrier faltered as the last Nomu vanished into the tree line. He collapsed into La Brava.

"Gentle!" Her warm hands caressed his face. "Hey, stay with me!"

"I-I'm fine, my dear." Gentle Criminal looked up, stray hair sticking to his sweaty forehead. "The students...?"

"E-everyone's okay." La Brava hugged him close and he wrapped his arms around her. "They're okay!"

"That's... good..."

"Hey, no!" La Brava shook him, "Don't fall asleep, you have to stay awake! Gentle!!"

Gentle Criminal drifted in and out of consciousness, not knowing how much time passed when the world turned black and hazy gray, but far away noises and voices trickled into his ears.

The fall of an entire mountain shaking the earth to its core, the screams of sirens and pounding footsteps came within the next wave of consciousness.

"Hey, what are you doing!?" La Brava screamed as several callous hands ripped them apart, the cuffs slapping on his wrist stung like ice.

"They protected the students!" Aizawa roared. "They're with us-"

"Orders from the top." A cold voice resonated. "All villains are to be arrested and processed. No exceptions."

"You can't just-!"

"Aizawa, let me handle this." Tsukauchi said. "I'll see if I can-"

The voices cut off when his body was thrown in a police vehicle, the slamming doors eliminating any noise from the outside world.

Joker stepped from the burning forest and plunged into a black void. No sound or scent reached him within this drop of space. He was about to activate Third Eye, when a voice rang out.

"Welcome to my stage, Joker ."

Joker shielded his eyes as beams of light flooded the arena one by one, the curtains of blinding white becoming focused on a singular man hovering ominously in the air.

He wore a basic suit without a tie, but the black skull-like mask shielding his entire head had all manner of tubes and wires jutting out from it, leaving nothing but a grotesque image burned into the minds of whoever laid eyes on it. The masked man's grin prickled across Joker's skin, and just then, a forbidden bond was forged, one of a handful that would never be in his original deck. Joker's breath was stolen from him as the bonds hovered within his psyche.

Councilor.

Faith.

Hope.

Apostle.

But this man held the worst of the lot. It was voracious and evil, one filled with the promise of a grisly demise. Joker shuddered as if he were a rabbit facing a mad, starving beast that would never be satiated.

This bond was...

H U N G E R

NEXT TIME on 'Dost Thou Even Steal Hearts?'!!

"Would you die for me?"

Confrontation

Chapter 59: Confrontation

“Would you die for me?”

Welp, this is it guys, your last warning. I promised that I would not hold back any punches and I plan to keep that promise in every sense of the word.

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

FANART by mew-trainer-rose

A swirling torrent of souls swam around the arena like a maelstrom. Reds, blues, and greens. Violet and cerulean. A flicker of amber surfaced before it was devoured by the raging storm. The Sea of trapped spirits flowed around the man in the skull mask, the pinnacle of agony to which these poor souls were ensnared.

“Hmm, what’s with that face?” The hovering man held his arms out, the pose like a god staring down an ant. For a moment, his visage blurred with the False Igor’s. “You look like you’ve seen a ghost.”

“You must be All For One.” Joker said as Third Eye faded, masking the terror in his heart with a buttery smirk. “It’s a pleasure to meet you.”

“My, my. Your manners do not disappoint, my boy.” A chuckle, deep and resonant, reverberated from All For One’s mask. “I’ve been watching your progress for quite some time and have been eager to meet you, young man.”

This was it.

The man who pulled the strings behind every conceivable curtain in this world for more than two centuries. A voice who rallied armies, the hand that leveled cities to smoking craters. One who reaped the souls out of people.

“Oh?” Joker raised a brow. “To what do I owe the honor? Clearly, you went through a lot of trouble.”

All For One nodded cordially. “I want to make a deal with you.”

“A... deal?”

“I shall grant you the opportunity to make a deal with me. Should you wish it, I shall return the world to its prior state- one rampant with distorted masses.”

“You forcefully dragged him into the Metaverse and imposed an ordeal he did not deserve!” Lavenza had shouted at the false Igor. “Yet you still intend on toying with him!?”

“The Phantom Thieves will be praised and gain fame. The world will escape ruin as well.” The false Igor’s smile widened as his soulless eyes peered into Joker. “... What say you?”

“The terms of this deal are simple.” All For One’s invisible grin slithered across Joker’s skin. “Bend your knee and serve me, and I’ll aid you in finding a way home, Kurusu Akira.”

A chill broke over Joker’s body. The man chuckled at the silence plunging the arena in despair.

“Yes. I know who you claim to be.” All For One tilted his head. “But I do wonder if its the same name you used back in your own world?”

"How... how did he...?" Arsene whispered, aghast, and for the first time.... terrified.

"Kurusu Akira, you do want the Blue Lotus to remain in one piece, right? For the Shinsous' heads to remain upon their shoulders? And what of Bakugo? His blood will be on your hands if-"

Joker whipped out the Tyrant Pistol and fired a single shot, the noise ringing in his ears as the bullet whizzed by All For One's head. The gun let out a ribbon of steam, the barrel trembling in Joker's hand.

"Do us all a favor." Joker's voice, while strained, reached the edges of this false stage. "Skip the villain monologuing and get to the point."

"I applaud your valor." A heaviness weighed in the air, as if demon's claws strangled Joker and he swore all of those souls were screaming from the void. "But I don't like being interrupted. There will be dire consequences if you do so again. I have laid out my terms of the deal, boy. What is your answer?"

Joker lowered his gun. His shoulders dropped as he lowered his head, his raven black hair shielding his eyes. All For One waited as the boy seemed to think it over, but-

Joker laughed .

It began as a bubble escaping his lips. Joker ran a hand down his face as he devolved into a gasping fit, grasping his cramping stomach.

"Trickster, get a hold of yourself!" Arsene shouted.

Arsene's words brought him back to his senses. A final chuckle escaped him as he bared all of his teeth at All For One.

"You know-" Joker spat. "The God Of Control offered me an attractive deal once."

"What happened with Yaldabaoth?"

“Simple.” Joker ignored that cursed name uttered from All For One’s lips, “He promised me that he would set the world right again, except it wouldn’t ever be right. It would be full of distortion. He tried to tempt me into keeping my powers. But you know what? I’ll say the same thing to you that I said to him.” His eyes burst with liquid gold. “I refuse .”

“You...” The hairs on the back of Joker’s neck raised as All For One’s body sparked with black lightning. “What a Fool.”

“You have no idea.” Joker aimed his gun at All For One as his Personas howled their battle cries.

“Finally!” Seth cackled. “An opponent worthy of my might!”

Blue flames and black lightning danced across the stage as Seth emerged from the mindscape. Seth beat his wings and sapphire stars blew on the wind whipping at Joker’s coattails. Seth’s earth shaking cries called forth streams of amber lightning around his body.

Joker smirked as Seth charged, but his mirth dissipated as All For One raised his hand, the black lightning crackling around his arm.

A jolt of panic shot through Joker. “Seth, fall back! Something isn’t right!”

Time slowed as All For One’s fingers shot out red and black tendrils. A shower of ichor sprayed the air as those tendrils skewered through Seth’s flesh like wet paper. A fleeting moment of surprise flowed back to Joker.

“Y-you...” Ichor spurted from Seth's wounds as he struggled, flames burning bright in the back of his throat. “Y-you think th-this will g-get the better of me!? I am Seth! I AM-”

All For One twisted his hand, the knives digging deeper into Seth’s body. An airy whine and cold smoke escaped from Seth's throat, before his twitching body went limp over All For One's tendrils, his wings hanging lifelessly like funerary veils.

"Seth...?" Joker reached towards Seth as black dripped from both of their eyes. "Seth!!"

"Interesting." All For one hummed. "Seth can repel fire, is completely immune to physical and wind damage, but... what are these last two? Light and dark? It seems Seth has a glaring weakness to light, but I didn't even need that. What a shame."

All For One ripped out the tendrils and Seth's body plummeted to the ground with a dull thud .

Joker's ear's rang as the golden sands of Seth's bond blew away in a dry wind, the Persona's body crumpling to ash and cinder. A crack rippled through the mindscape as hot agony flooded Joker's chest. He bowled over as his costume flickered in and out of existence, pools of black raining from his eyes and mouth. The pungent taste muted his other Personas' screams of terror as he collapsed.

"Oh, look at that. I did bring you to your knees." All For One watched Joker wretch another pitch black glob. "I didn't think it would be that easy to kill him. Pierce has been an invaluable quirk in my arsenal for ages. Being able to penetrate any defence is quite useful. Paired with springlike limbs, and several strength and speed quirks, well, you saw the result yourself-"

The man's voice ebbed away as if Joker were deep underwater. The remaining shards of his mind and body faded as he collapsed face first into the stained dirt. His vision blackened and he was consumed by a void, his last breath leaving his lips in a strangled rasp.

That darkness was expunged by a maddening scream.

Fire flooded Joker's veins as he was forced to breathe, the pain in his chest dulling with renewed heartbeats. That scream of sorrow ripped the remaining Personas from the brink of death, all except for Seth. Joker's body screamed in agony as it hung before the void.

Orpheus... Endure...

A new, overwhelming power bled into the mindscape, summoned by Orpheus' painful wails.

"Orpheus, no!" Kohryu screamed. "Contain yourself! That power is not for the Trickster!!"

The power subsided, but Orpheus collapsed onto the edge of the mindscape, grasping his head.

"How intriguing. To think the health of your companions impacted your own on such a deep level!" All For One clapped his hands. "Your heart stopped. You died, and yet you've been revived without my interference. Your power continues to surprise me, young man! I wonder... if Seth was only a small portion of your power, then what does the source feel like?"

Joker screamed as All For One speared him through his hands and shoulders. The Personas' howling voices raged on as white hot anguish consumed them. The fragments of his soul were torn at the seams and the edges of the mindscape crumbled into stardust.

Another sensation flooded Joker, the chattering and scraping of a flood of insects skittered under his skin, trampling all over his mindscape in a writhing infestation. Their world ending hunger gnawed on his bonds and the bare fractals keeping his soul together.

"Trickster!!" Arsene's voice became shrouded within the noise.

His Personas' wails were getting farther and farther from his grasp...

He had no more strength to fight -

"Stop!!!"

A small form materialized in front of Joker.

"A-Alice...?" Joker rasped as she skipped away.

"Please, stop hurting my big brother." Alice wiped tears from her eyes as she stopped under the villain. "Please!!"

The hunger eating away at Joker paused.

"What will you give me if I stop hurting him?"

"I-I'll..." Alice sniffled as she got on her hands and knees. "I'll become your Persona!"

"... Persona?"

"Yes, that is what we're called. I am thou, thou art I." Alice stood and curtsied. "It is a sacred bond that binds us to our users. If you leave my Big Brother alone, then I'll become your Persona!"

"But you're just a little girl."

"Yes," Alice smirked. "But I am the embodiment of Death. I am one of the most powerful Personas that Joker has in his stock. Don't you want control over the power of Death? I know you can sense it."

Joker gasped as the tendrils were ripped out of his body, crimson and black bleeding together underneath him.

"Can you do something for me before I become your Persona?" Alice sniffled as All For One floated down to the ground to put his hand upon her head. "It's really easy, I promise!"

"What?"

Alice's hair wriggled like thrashing serpents, her body glowing purple and black. Her too wide eyes bored into All For One as the aura of death flooded the underground arena. All For One tore his hand away as she stood up, her voice whisper soft, yet loud enough for any angels and devils on earth to hear.

“Would you die for me?”

High pitched squealing echoed as several forms materialized.

Joker would recognize those giant teddy bears strapped with TNT anywhere, their bloody BANGS and sparkling pink auras chasing after All For One like hounds from hell. All For One leapt into the air, but Alice glowered at him with eyes that belonged to no child, pointing her pale finger at him as the last teddy bear exploded.

“Just die .”

The pungent smell of ozone drowned the underground arena before a cataclysmic explosion, the brilliant light eradicating anything it touched. Alice giggled as the light faded and All For One was nowhere to be seen. Her smile fell as she whirled around and rushed to her Trickster’s side.

“Big brother!” She gently shook his shoulder and he hissed in pain.
“Hang in there!”

Alice reached into Joker’s pockets for a Soma. She popped the cork open and held it to Joker’s lips, where he drank it greedily. The holes in his hands and shoulders closed, but nothing could heal the damage that has been done to his soul, evident by another bead of black leaking from Joker’s mouth.

“It’s okay.” Alice whispered as she helped him sit up. “You’re going to be okay!”

“B-but... Seth...”

They looked at the grave site of the God of Chaos and Storms, a mere pile of smoldering ash.

"Seth is... His bond is no more. All ties with him have... ceased. He's gone, Trickster. We cannot stay here." Arsene said. "Kohryu, can you get the Trickster out of here? You'd be the only one-"

"What an impressive display." Alice and Joker jumped when All For One's shadow draped over them. "So, you will not bow, and your power is more trouble than its worth. Sentient creatures are always a pain to control, especially when they prefer their original hosts."

Joker forced himself on shaky legs, Alice holding him up. "I doubt you'd let us go."

"No, but there is one final way for you to be useful. My last deal for you." All For One snapped his fingers. Implosions of gray goop appeared throughout the arena and dropped several dozen Nomu into the fray. "Fight with all of your might against my Nomu. Battle until your last breath. Let the world witness their beloved vigilante's demise."

"Or... what?"

"If you try to break free from my stage or become a rogue actor, then I'll level the Blue Lotus and deliver the Shinsous' lifeless bodies here."

Hitoshi. Risumi. Ayumu.

Their bloody corpses flashed in his mind.

"How many deaths will it take, Joker? You came back once, but no man is truly immortal. I know from personal experience." All For One laughed. "Many look up to you as a hero of the people. I wonder how many will riot as they witness your final moments. Don't worry, we'll put your body to good use in the next generation of Nomu. After all-" All For One tossed three tiny little pieces of plastic into the air, which landed in front of Joker. "The doctor would love to see you again."

Joker stared at the broken pieces of La Brava's hairpin tracker, swallowing thickly.

"I'll also have to personally thank La Brava for her virus. It will be useful in making your death a spectacle for all to see." Joker's stomach plummeted when blinking red lights appeared in the walls and ceiling. Cameras. "What was it you said in that video, my boy? Oh, that's right."

All For One did a showman's bow as Kurogiri's portal opened behind him.

"It's showtime!"

On cue, the small army of Nomu turned towards Joker with bloodthirsty growls. Joker picked up the Tyrant Pistol and grit his teeth. His knees shook, but he would rather die on his feet than on his back.

"Big brother..."

"It's okay." He wiped the stains from his mouth, his red glove stained with smudges of black. "Everything will be alright."

"... Trickster?" Arsene whispered.

"All For One made a mistake." Joker said. "He won't know how our power works until its too late."

"The masses..." Kohryu flicked his whiskers. "I feel them. It's just a trickle now, but it will soon swell into a tsunami!"

"If it's a show he wants, then it's a show we'll give them!" Ishtar seethed as Joker reloaded the Tyrant Pistol. "If he thinks we'll roll over, he has another thing coming!"

"Let us at the Nomu." Titania's voice went feral. "I'll give everyone a beautiful view of my power! Do not underestimate the Queen of the Fae!"

"I as well." Cu Chulainn twirled his spear.

"Let at them." Pixie chortled. "LET ME AT THEM!"

"I have not felt the call of Destruction yet, " Shiva said as he danced in place. "But I shall make an exception this time!"

"Vengeance for Seth!" Cerberus howled.

"I'll tear out their throats!" Byakko snarled.

"We are at your back, Trickster." Arsene flared his magnificent wings. "Shall we give All For One the performance he desires before we turn the tables!?"

Joker grinned at the cameras. "It's showtime!"

That was his catchphrase, thank you very much.

Hitoshi groaned as he smooshed the pillow in his face. Maybe it'd knock him out so he could get some sleep. Unfortunately, it didn't happen. With a groan, he threw the pillow at the end of his bed and sat up.

He hasn't slept well since Akira left.

A sinking rock in his gut told him that things would go south. Maybe he should just get up and start his morning routine to get his mind off of things. He rubbed the non-sleep from his eyes as his other hand reached for his phone on the nightstand. The phone lit up with dozens of messages from his Herocord chat and other news notifications.

"Wh-what the... !?"

'BREAKING: Infamous Vigilante, U.A. Student, and Heroes Missing in Summer Camp Disaster!!'

'Media Hound U.A. Campus- School Remains Silent.'

'Gentle Criminal and La Brava Arrested! Believed To Be Part Of Joker's Team!'

"N-no." Hitoshi rushed to his computer. "No no no no..."

His fingers shook as he clicked on the live stream.

Hitoshi stared in horror as he watched his best friend back flipping to avoid a Nomu's punch, Arsene appearing in a brilliant curtain of flame that painted his iridescent wings with a rainbow of colors. A pool of dark energy oozed at their feet and the Nomu were blown back with a wave of Joker's hand. Joker stared up at a camera with a devilish smirk.

Hitoshi shivered.

Joker was.... something was wrong . He grinned and knocked back the Nomu with ease, but his eyes.... his eyes . They were glowing, but the color was muted as if something beyond Hitoshi's comprehension had died within them. His grin didn't reach those hollow eyes and his usual fluid movements were jerky and desperate.

"Shit!" Hitoshi pounded his fist on the desk.

"You have to stay calm." Akira's voice replayed in his mind.
"Panicking only worsens the situation."

"I know...." Hitoshi took a deep breath to calm himself. "I know ."

Hitoshi looked at the stream counter. A few thousand watched the battle.

"Human cognition is a powerful thing." Akira had said. "Its how our abilities grow more powerful here."

Japan had millions of people.

If he could hack this domain and spread it to every corner of Japan, then it might give his friend a fighting chance! He cracked his knuckles and lunged at his keyboard, but he froze. His eyes were drawn to the black fox mask hanging on his wall, the golden crescent moon on the forehead seemed to call out for him. His eyes flicked back and forth between the mask and the computer screen, a sharp grin pulling at his lips.

“Screw it, just this once.”

Hitoshi snatched the mask and put it on. It felt... oddly natural in the way it fit his face. With the mask secure, he got to work. His screen flowed with the rows upon rows of code that Manami hounded into him the past few weeks. There must be something, anything, that her code could do to crack this. He slammed the enter key and the virus plunged into Japan’s vast network.

Hitoshi waited.

He didn’t know whether an eternity passed or if it were just a handful of minutes before the ping rang across his room.

Hitoshi stared at the dot in Kamino. Another window opened, flooding his screen with lines of code.

“I... I found it? But... wait... She showed me this virus. It’s the one from the Yaoyorozu manor. She did say there was strange coding from there. Holy shit.” Realization hit like an ice cold wave. “They were being set up from the start.” Hitoshi’s hands curled into fists as heat slithered around his heart. “You picked a fight with the wrong group.”

The mishmash of code had traces of La Brava’s viruses, but it was copied line for line and woven into an entirely different program. One he wasn’t familiar with. The other code was sloppy. Amateur work. A sick sort of delight welled within Hitoshi when he created a backdoor to the domain.

“But even if I get this right... no, I can’t do it alone.” Hitoshi tapped his fingers on his desk. “If there was someone who could spread it even further...”

Hitoshi opened one of his drawers and snatched a list of contacts Akira slipped him before they left, his eyes trailing down to a certain name.

T-san.

“Okay, let’s do this.”

He unlocked his encrypted phone and stared down at T-san’s number, the plan blooming into a full blown mission.

Step 1: Get as many people watching as possible, tip the heroes about Kamino.

Step 2: Hack into the police network to see if he could find out where La Brava and the others were located.

Step 3: Pray to Shiva, Kohryu, and any other gods in Joker’s stock that they’d all make it out of this ordeal alive.

Step 4: If everyone was able to make it through, then avoid Kaito’s wrath and make sure that he didn’t end up killing Joker himself.

“Hang in there, everyone.” Hitoshi muttered as he opened a new text message. “It won’t be much longer...”

“Taneo, would you sit down already!”

“How can you expect me to stay calm, Mitsuo!?” Taneo pulled at his hair. “Joker’s missing! Nobody knows where he is and people are going crazy-”

“I get that,” Her face hardened as she grasped his arm. “We’re all concerned about him, but flying into a rage doesn’t solve anything!”

Besides, you're scaring Yuma and Minato."

Taneo turned to his co-workers, who huddled down in their desks and tried to hide behind their computers.

"... Sorry."

Mitsuo dragged him to his desk. "Sit down and take a breather, then we can figure out what to do. Okay?"

"Fine." He dropped into his chair.

The next twenty minutes were stifled in silence. The turn of a page, the creak of their chairs, even the light tap tap of their keyboards became magnified to obscene levels. His phone vibrated, making Yuma jump. He picked up his phone, his heart leaping into his throat.

[???

Greetings, T-san.

I know this sounds insane, but I'm one of Joker's allies and he desperately needs our help. His very survival depends on how well we pull this off. We need as many people watching this live stream as possible.

The popularity of your blog, and my hacking skills, could go toe-in-toe in getting Joker what he needs.

Please, there's nobody else we can count on.

Taneo's chair flew back and he bolted from his chair.

"Taneo!?" Mitsuo jumped as he shoved his phone in her face. "What is this!?"

"How many favors can you call in with the media? You wanted something that would surpass our live interview with Joker, right? Here's our chance!"

“I...” Mitsuo bit her lip as she watched Joker fight, her eyes turning up to see the frantic light in Taneo’s. She took a deep breath and rose from her chair. “I’ll make a few calls.”

“Hey, what’s going on?” Yuma shrunk back. “You two have those scary looks in your eyes again.”

“Simple.” Mitsuo smiled darkly. “We’re going to aid one troublesome vigilante, and it’ll outclass that interview we did months ago.”

Haru-san beamed as she watered her beloved plants, the warm morning sun streaming in through her windows. The news played in the background as she checked on each of her little darlings. The newscaster’s voice was erased by a blanket of static.

She tutted as she wobbled over to it. “Darn thing, you can’t fix these new TV’s like you used to...”

The static cleared. A horrible image came onto the screen. She gasped as the water keg dropped from her hands, splashing a tiny tsunami all over the floor.

“Oh... you poor boy...” She ran her fingers down the screen as Joker flitted across it, vanquishing ugly beasts with a cascade of ice, but the monsters stitched themselves back together. “What’s going on? What are they...?”

She sank to her knees, not caring that her dress soaked in the water. Haru-san put her hands together and prayed for his safety, unknowing of how her prayers reached the young boy she adored.

“Kid...” Midnight placed her phone face down and pinched the bridge of her nose. “Damn it.”

“I know, Midnight.” Nezu, who sat at the head of the table, said. His fur was frazzled and unkempt.

“Should we really be sitting here doing nothin’?” Snipe asked as he leaned forward. “What about the media? I can still hear them poundin’ on our doors from here. This is a disaster!”

“I’m sorry.” Toshinori slumped forward, hands grasping his hair. “I should’ve gone with.”

“No, this is my fault.” Nezu said. “I believed that Joker’s immense powers would be enough to protect everyone. From what we gathered from the students, there was a vast army of Nomu there. He saved them.”

“Nezu...” Midnight murmured. “But that doesn’t explain why Joker vanished during the attack, or why... why this live stream is... it’s horrible!”

“My theory is that the villains cornered him somehow.” Nezu shook his head. “Perhaps he sacrificed himself to ensure their safety.”

“He collapsed an entire mountain and a huge chunk of the forest!” Mic threw his hands up in the air. “My heart nearly stopped when that helicopter flew over the destruction!!”

“How can you talk about Joker when Bakugo still got kidnapped!?” Snipe exclaimed.

‘I am here! I am here!’

Toshinori flinched as he silenced his phone.

“Apologies, but I must take this.” He said as he rose from his chair and left the room. Toshinori answered and held it to his ear.

“Tsukauchi, do you have anything?”

“Good news, Toshinori!” Tsukauchi said, “We’ve located one of the League’s hideouts. A friend from a task force in Kamino located a bar where they think Bakugo is being held.”

"That's fantastic!" Toshinori said as he held a hand over his heart. "Do you think Joker is being held in the same location?"

"I... we don't know. Given the size difference of the bar and the underground area where Joker is being -" Tsukauchi cleared his throat. "We don't have a location yet."

"I see..."

"If we launch a rescue for Bakugo, then there might be clues as to where- Sansa? What's wrong?" Shuffling noises and other voices came through the line, and Tsukauchi gasped. "An anonymous tip!? This location... but we have La Brava in custody? How could that code-"

Toshinori's heart beat faster as the muffled voices continued.

"Toshinori, we might have Joker's location!" Tsukauchi shouted. "We just need some time to investigate further, but if this other location is legit..."

"Then we can rescue both of them! Wonderful job, Tsukauchi!"

"We can't rest on our laurels. We have work to do."

"You're right!" One For All pulsed under Toshinori's skin. "Keep me updated, alright?"

"Yeah, I'll gather heroes together and call you as soon as a meeting is set up!"

With that, the detective hung up.

"Young Bakugo... Joker..." Toshinori clutched his phone over his heart. "We're coming!"

"Momma...." Mei's lip wobbled as she tore her eyes from the screen. "Joker's gonna make it, right?"

Ichinose frowned. Their workshop remained explosion free for two days . Normally, she would rejoice at not having to clean up after her daughter, but the lack of Mei's cackles and bright smiles unsettled her. This live stream, paired with the mysterious T-san's efforts to spread it across Japan, was almost too much for her to bear.

"I don't know." Ichinose shook her head, her thick braids bounced, "Why don't we turn this off and get our minds off of it? I don't think-"

"No! Joker's the reason why we can clear our names, right!? I'm not giving up!" Mei curled her hands into fists. "You know what!? I'll make babies a-and I'll rescue him myself!"

"Mei, that's not- you can't! You have to leave this for the heroes!"

"I have to try!"

Ichinose reached out to Mei as she scrambled into the workshop, the familiar sound of clanking and hammering echoing through the shop. She ran a hand through her thick braids and glared at the television, where Joker summoned a surge of holy light under the Nomu's feet. The camera angle changed before she could see which mythical being was responsible.

"You know, Whistler," The little teapot stared at her from the counter. "He better make it, otherwise all hell will break loose."

"Kacchan!!"

"Midoriya, there's too many!!" Todoroki shouted as a hundred Nomu descended upon them.

"Deku, run!" Bakugo shouted, his voice hoarse from where Dabi grasped his throat. "Save yourself!"

"KACCAN!!"

Dark Shadow's arms wrapped around Midoriya and Todoroki as a swarm of Nomu separated them from the villains holding Bakugo. The quirk had reeled them back as Bakugo disappeared into that portal.

He remembers crying out for his childhood friend until his voice went hoarse, but it was all a hazy blur from there.

Midoriya's eyes snapped open.

A chill broke out over him as he broke out in a cold sweat. He blinked several times, staring up at a white ceiling, the iconic smell of industrial strength cleaner invaded his nose. He sat up as best he could with his arms bound in thick casts. Warm sunlight streamed in from the large window on his right, and his stomach churned as he looked to the left. A plate of sliced apples and a note from his mother sat on the table next to him.

'When you wake up, eat this and call me.'

There was a knock on the door before it opened, and Kaminari stuck his head in.

"Midoriya! You're awake!" Kaminari leaned back out into the hallway. "Everyone, he's up!"

Midoriya's heart soared as his classmates flooded into the room. Well, most of them. That elation withered as the last few shambled in, looking entirely broken. He'd never seen Kirishima and Ashido look so distraught before, even after Akira's incident.

"How long have I been out? What's happened since... since...."

Todoroki stepped up when the others avoided his eyes.

"You've been out for over a day. They've been keeping our class under observation for now, but aside from a few unconscious from the gas, nobody else has been seriously injured. Well, except for you.”

“W-wait... Bakugo... he still got kidnapped?”

Todoroki’s expression pinched. “Yes.”

“He’s not the only one.” Ashido whispered.

“What...?” Midoriya whispered in horror.

Iida cleared his throat. “You wouldn’t know, but aside from Bakugo... they.... the villains...”

“I think it’s better for us to show him rather than explain.” Tokoyami approached Midoriya’s bed and offered him his phone, which was open to a live stream. “This went live an hour after the attack.”

Midoriya’s jaw dropped as he watched Joker battle a swarm of Nomu in some underground arena. The vigilante’s movements were slow and the cameras zoomed in on his face, revealing the darkness beneath his eyes.

“What’s going on? Do the heroes know anything?”

“No.” Ojiro crossed his arms and glared at the floor. “The teachers won’t tell us anything!”

“That’s the other thing bothering me.” Iida adjusted his glasses. “The heroes had to know that Joker was at the camp. But why keep it a secret?”

“H-he was there!” Koda fidgeted with his hands. “Joker saved me from a Nomu! A-and he confirmed that he was working with the teachers.”

“Seth and Cerberus came to the lodge.” Kirishima said. “It was wicked to see them in person!”

“Some virus has been running rampant around the country!” Ashido said. “Like big screens in Tokyo and Hiroshima glitched out and have been playing the live stream ever since! T-san’s blog exploded, too!”

“The media has been up in arms about the whole camp.” Todoroki said. “I don’t think people will take this for much longer.”

“What do you mean, Todoroki?” Midoriya asked, wide eyed.

“We all can see how exhausted Joker is. We don’t know if the heroes have any clue where Bakugo is, either.”

“I don’t like this.”

“I know, Kiri.” Ashido patted her friend’s shoulder.

“No, I mean...” Kirishima gripped his hair and groaned. “I don’t like this! Any of this! First, our teachers lie to us. Why didn’t they trust us enough to tell us what was going on!? What are we supposed to do now that our friends are in danger!?”

“I’m sure they had their reasons.” Iida adjusted his glasses. “We have to trust them to handle the situation-”

“Screw that!” In a bout of rare anger, Kirishima scowled. He glanced at Midoriya with fire in his eyes as he held out his hand. “You know how I feel, right? We were forced to stand aside and do nothing when Akira was kidnapped, a-and I couldn’t do anything to help anyone from the lodge! And now, with Bakugo, a-and Joker too....” He shook his head. “I’m not gonna stand around and do nothing when the people I care about suffer!”

“I-I... it’s my fault.” Midoriya’s vision blurred. His classmates stiffened as the waterworks ran down his cheeks. “M-my quirk... Aizawa-sensei warned me about becoming useless, but it was all I could do to save Kota! I sent Cerberus away to make sure that he was safe, but because of that... Bakugo... he...”

“We can still save them!” Kirishima curled his hands into fists. “We can still reach out, can’t we!?”

“Now, hold on!” Iida chopped his hand. “What are you suggesting!? You’re not saying that we act against the law and use our quirks to rescue them?”

“But where would we even start?” Todoroki asked as he locked eyes with Kirishima.

Iida jumped and stared at his other classmate. “Todoroki!”

“What?” Todoroki blinked. “I agree with Kirishima. I think our teachers should have been honest with us from the start. Who says we can’t start our own investigation?”

“We can’t!” Asui poked her cheek. “It’s as Iida says, we could be expelled or go to prison for breaking the law. It’s not our place as students, kero.”

“I know!” Kirishima’s voice broke. “I know that! But we couldn’t do anything while we were stuck at the lodge, watching the forest burn, watching Gentle Criminal keep us safe from that Nomu Hoard, a-and them seeing them arrested for it!? Wondering if our friends were dead or...” He shook his head. “We sat in the sidelines when Aniki was in trouble. No more! If I don’t do anything now, if I turn my back on them again when they need us most, then what kind of man am I, huh!? I wouldn’t be a hero or a man anymore!”

Ashido blinked rapidly. “Kiri...”

“Dude, we’re in a hospital.” Kaminari said. “Calm down!”

“I...” Yaoyorozu glared at the floor. “I cannot stand by and let this happen either. My parents might see Joker as an enemy, but he has saved me and several other people from grim fates. I simply can’t sit still when Bakugo is in danger.”

“Yaoyorozu...” Kirishima smiled and turned back to Midoriya. “So, what do you say?”

“I... I-I...” Midoriya looked down at his arms. “I can’t sit around either.”

“Yaoyorozu! Midoriya!” Iida shouted, aghast.

“Kirishima’s right.” Midoriya glanced at Iida with a frown, his brows furrowed. “Can we really wait around like we did with Akira?” Todoroki suppressed a flinch, “We might not know where to start, but we should be able to come up with something if we put all of our heads together!”

“Iida, you should know this better than anyone when I say that sometimes we must take things into our own hands.” Todoroki said, “Am I right?”

Iida sputtered. He opened and closed his mouth so many times, but eventually grit his teeth and glared at the floor. The tension in the room skyrocketed as their Class Representative remained silent, stewing away in a whirlwind of jagged emotions. Then, their little bubble was popped with a knock on the door.

A doctor stepped inside, his eyes scanning the crowd of students.

“Apologies for interrupting, but I’m here to do Midoriya’s exam.”

“Alright...” Kirishima nodded. “We’ll find out what we can and go from there! Right?”

Midoriya nodded, and the doctor sighed when the flood of students vacated the room, and they were alone.

“You sustained heavy damage to your arms, Midoriya.” He said after the casts were removed. “Recovery Girl was in quite a tizzy after she came and healed you a couple of times. I got special permission to take a look at your files and...”

“... And?”

“I’m going to be frank with you. The human body has natural restraints so that our quirks don’t go past 100%. But you’re a special case. If you push your body past it’s natural limits two or three more times, then I guarantee that you’ll lose the use of your arms.”

Midoriya looked at his arms. His flesh was mottled with new scars, the largest was a missing patch of skin from his right shoulder down to his elbow.

The doctor discharged him after a few basic tests, and he was free to his own devices. He picked up his bag as the evening sun painted his room in golden light. His thoughts drew him away from the hospital’s white hallways as he made his way out.

Kacchan... Joker...

He watched Joker’s death match. News outlets grew frantic the longer Joker fought, and the current viewers of the stream shot into the tens of thousands, not counting the people watching the screens in bigger cities. Joker’s Spotlight account flooded with heroes’ support.

Midoriya’s stomach churned.

Joker had chugged something from a small thermos about an hour ago, and that seemed to stave off some exhaustion, but....

How much longer would it be before he fell?

What is Joker’s limit? Has he reached past 100%, or was it yet to be seen?

His movements were sloppy, and one Nomu had knocked his dagger from his slackening grip. His face was pale and plastered with sweat, which was highlighted by the ever growing number of mythical beings summoned in dazzling flames.

Arsene. Byakko. Cerberus. Shiva. Titania. A small Pixie. A terrifying little girl.

The list kept growing, and although Joker looked as if he was getting physically weaker, the mythical creatures' attacks grew stronger . Some of the cameras glitched out as Cerberus howled, and many Nomu were swallowed within a vast pool of bubbling lava. Joker chuckled as the lava quickly cooled, but the Nomu clawed themselves free-

"Midoriya!"

He looked up to see Kirishima and Todoroki hovering at the hospital gate. Yaoyorozu was here too, hugging herself.

"Oh, I'm outside already?" Midoriya said.

"I might be able to get something from my father," Todoroki said. "He's been acting strange and he might know something."

"Really!?" Kirishima grinned. "But... do you really think it'll be that easy?"

"Probably not."

"Do we have a choice?" Yaoyorozu asked. "Maybe we can-"

"There you are!" They turned to see Iida marching out of the hospital, his eyes laced with fury. "You're still going through with it?"

"Yes." Todoroki said, "We're going, no matter what."

"You...." Iida grit his teeth together as his shoulders trembled. "Why? Why does it have to be you guys of all people!? You guys who went after me when I.... when we received amnesty for what we did! Why are you making that exact same mistake!? We're still minors and U.A. is in a bad position as it is!"

"It's not like that!" Midoriya said. "We don't think that this is okay, but-"

Yaoyorozu gasped as Iida threw a punch, and Midoriya fell to the ground. His phone clattered to the pavement.

"You don't think I'm frustrated too!?" Iida shouted. "As class Rep, it's only natural to be worried! I don't want anyone else to get hurt like my brother did! We can't just rely on Joker's miracle powers like we did before! How can you be so reckless!?"

"Enough!" Yaoyorozu stepped in between them, her eyes hardening.

"Momo...." Todoroki said.

Kirishima helped Midoriya to his feet, the pair speechless.

"Iida. Midoriya." She turned to stare at the other two. "Shoto. Kirishima. Arguing solves nothing. How are we going to stage a rescue if we waste time and fight like this? Iida, we both know that they will find a way to Bakugo, no matter what. Why don't we tag along and make sure they stay out of trouble?"

Iida furrowed his brow.

"That's right." Todoroki said. "We're not going to attack the villains head on. We'll use our quirks for rescue only."

"Yeah!" Kirishima pumped his fist. "Covert action!"

"I trust everyone here, Iida." She said, smiling. "But if anything happens, then we'll put a stop to it."

"I... I suppose I'll have to tag along and make sure you don't do anything reckless."

"Iida!" Midoriya beamed at him.

"Let's go!!" Iida marched towards the gate.

“Wait, Midoriya!” Kirishima picked up the phone. “I think you want this back?”

“R-right!” Midoriya took it, wincing at the singular crack in the bottom of the screen. “Thank-”

He froze in his tracks.

“Midoriya?” Todoroki asked as he watched his friend’s face lose color.

“Dude, what’s wrong?” Kirishima said.

Midoriya showed them the screen.

[???

Greetings, Deku.

I know that which you seek, but do you have the strength within you to rescue them?

You were going anyways, right?

“Th-that’s-!?” Kirishima gasped as the others drank in the message. “How did they-”

[???

Deku’s microphone picks up everything, Kirishima.

Now, give your answer.

We don’t have time to mess around.

“But how can we trust you?” Iida glared at the phone’s camera. “You could just be leading us into a trap!”

[???

Don’t insult me, Ingenium Junior.

Joker is my closest friend, and I would do anything to see him rescued.

Midoriya, hands shaking, typed back.

[Deku]

Yes, tell us where they are!

[???

Very well, but know that you are not the only one that this knowledge is shared with.

Tread lightly.

They sent over files and a map of... Kamino?

[???

The live stream signal is coming from this location.

Be careful, Deku.

“Kamino?” Iida clutched his chin. “We can get there by train, but we should hurry. The last one will leave soon!”

“Let’s go!” Kirishima said.

“Wait.” They paused and looked at Yaoyorozu. “There’s one thing I want to make clear. If we do this, a-and something happens... if it comes down to the wire and we have to make a choice between Bakugo and Joker, then we have to choose Bakugo.”

Midoriya and Iida exchanged glances.

“But...” Kirishima opened and closed his mouth, but he had no words.

“She’s right.” Todoroki said. “I think that’s what Joker would want, too.”

“Y-you’re right.” Midoriya took a deep breath and looked his friends’ in the eye. “I know Joker would be upset if Bakugo wasn’t taken to a safe place first.”

“Right.” Iida adjusted his glasses. “Now, come on! We don’t have time to waste!”

The group boarded the last train going to Kamino, unknowing that they were about to witness legendary devastation that would be marked down in history.

“Hitoshi hasn’t come out of his room.” Risumi said as she paced in front of the TV, where Joker fought tooth and nail.

“I know.” Ayumu, his hands clenching together with bone white knuckles, scowled. “H-he’ll... come out when he’s ready.”

“What do we do?” Risumi looked to him, desperate. “We can’t just sit here and do nothing!”

“I don’t know.” He swallowed thickly. “There.... there might be nothing we can do.”

Risumi teared up as they turned back towards the TV. Joker had summoned a massive serpent with a human head and several waving arms. It breathed out a cloud of Stagnant Air, but the following spell didn’t affect the Nomu. They witnessed the flash of fear and frustration upon Joker’s face before he wiped it away with a grin.

But they all saw it.

He was getting exhausted. His dagger, lost to the unknown. The ammo in his gun had run dry. Terrifying black tears dripped down Joker’s face.

“The only thing we can do is cheer him on.” Risumi sank beside her husband, wincing as Joker took another blow. “I... he better make it through.”

“He will.” Ayumu took her hand and held it tight. “I know he will.”

They exchanged a long glance before turning their gaze before the battle, oblivious that their hope, and the growing hope of thousands, awakened something in Joker.

Screams echoed within the mindscape as lightning blasted the Trickster and Cu Chulainn was thrown back into the mindscape.

“Cu Chulainn!” Arsene knelt by the warrior’s side and helped him up.

“How do they know our weaknesses every time!?” Titania cried.

“That vile man in the black mask....” Shiva, his expression dark, said bitterly. “He almost stole us away. We saw the Sea Of Souls he’s hoarded, so it’s not impossible for him to take quirks. He may have stolen Ragdoll’s quirk. The Nomu might have something similar.”

“Take this.” Vasuki hissed as he cast Makarakarn. “It should help.”

“But you can’t keep casting it, Vasuki!” Ishtar said, “Our SP won’t hold up, and the Trickster doesn’t have many recovery items left.”

Orpheus’ throat tightened.

The Trickster... no...

An unknown energy simmered in his heart ever since he pulled the Trickster back from the brink. He couldn’t use his true strength, lest the Trickster’s soul be torn apart, but a new power rose within him, waiting to be unleashed. His hands shuddered as he grasped the beautiful lyre on his back.

“Then we must stick to those without weaknesses.” Arsene growled. “But it’ll greatly limit the number of our attacks. Trickster, are you alright?”

“Y-yes...” The white lie was plain on his tongue.

“I’ll go next.” Ishtar’s fury laced the mindscape as her hands crackled with a Wild Thunder spell. “I’ll show them the true power of lightning!”

“Take this with you, darling.” Titania lay a hand on Ishtar’s shoulder and Concentrate’s blue aura glowed upon them.

Ishtar was powerful, but Orpheus’ fires of rage consumed his soul. His wild cry startled the others as he allowed himself to be consumed by blue flames.

“Orpheus!?” Arsene called too late. “ORPHEUS!”

A flash of an image appeared in his mind, tucked away between the space of reality and the mindscape. His Wild Card smiling at him. The longing within Orpheus skyrocketed as the image faded. He entered reality birthed in a blue pyre, his cries echoing within the vast underground prison.

He swung his lyre, the satisfying crunch of a Nomu's skull trembled through to his hands. He plucked a sting, manifesting a miniature sun over his head. The blazing ball of fire spewed a laser over the ground, summoning walls of flame wherever it touched. The Concentrated Inferno blinded the cameras.

"Orpheus?"

The Persona turned to his Trickster, who knelt on the ground, eyes impossibly wide. His hair fell limp over his pale face. Traces of black smudged his features. His tattered mask held the same cracks like his broken soul, and his costume was scuffed from battle.

He plucked another string, the lovely tune casting a soothing Cadenza.

"No, my new name is Orpheus Picaro. I am thou, thou art I." He held a hand out to Joker, now donning a vibrant black and red color scheme. "I apologize for making you wait so long, Trickster."

Joker smirked, his teeth stained with crimson and black, as he took his Persona's hand. Joker staggered, but Orpheus Picaro steadied him.

"It's almost time." Orpheus Picaro said as the fire walls died down. "We just need to hold on a little bit longer."

Joker knew it, too. The steady thrum of power lingered just under the surface, but it wasn't enough. They needed just a bit more .

"Right." Joker waved an arm. "Let's do this, Orpheus Picaro!"

They stood together in the face of the regenerating Nomu, the sound of chains rattling within the mindscape.

Tsuragamae looked to the strongest raid party in recent history. One side of the room, where eight of the top ten heroes stood in a line like soldiers. The ones from Joker's group were hardened and energized, ready to attack at a moment's notice. Other heroes were peppered in there, such as the former Ingenium, Nighteye, Gran Torino, and Tiger.

Tsukauchi stood at the center, with police armed with riot gear on the other side of the room.

"You all know what's at stake." Tsuragamae's voice commanded everyone's attention. "The raid parties will be split as thus: All Might, Endeavor, Hawks, Tsukauchi and half of the police force will strike the bar and secure Bakugo. The rest of you will investigate the warehouse, except for Nezu, Eraserhead, and Vlad King. Iida Tensei and his sidekicks will help the police in securing these areas."

"What will Nezu be doing during the raids?" Hawks asked.

"Simple!" Nezu chirped. "We will call for a news conference. I will say that we are working to locate Bakugo and Joker, and we may be able to find them soon."

"They're going to slaughter you." Hawks stared at Nezu. "Japan has imploded since the Summer Camp incident, and it's only been getting worse since with that... live stream."

"I know." Nezu frowned. "But it will be a perfect distraction and give the villains a false sense of security."

"I have one question." Edgeshot crossed his arms, his eyes scanning over a particular group of heroes. "I sense your tension. I know that we are all ready for action, but there's something off putting about you in particular."

Gran Torino snorted. "I agree, you're awfully tense for being in the top ten. Have you whipper snappers never been in a raid this large before?"

"It's not that." Gang Orca growled.

“How do we know that this information is reliable? I trust Tsukauchi’s team to locate Bakugo, but this other location is suspect.” Endeavor growled. “Is it tied to T-san and the live stream?”

Tsuragamae’s eyes fell to Joker’s hero group. He locked eyes with Ryukyu and nodded.

Ryukyu squared her shoulders. “We figured out that it was La Brava and Joker that reported the locations of those smuggling rings. But La Brava is in custody and we know the current situation with Joker. We can only guess that it was another in his team that-”

“Wait a second.” Gran Torino’s eyes went wide. “Joker was your inside man? He was responsible for tracking down those illegal rings!? You could lose your hero license if you work with criminals.”

Gang Orca growled, but Gran Torino didn’t back down.

“Please keep an open mind before anyone judges these heroes.” Eraserhead leaned forward, the bags under his eyes visible to all. “Because they put aside their bias, those criminals were taken down and several dozen people can go home to their families. I ask you all to do the same.”

“Yeah.” Gang Orca uttered, his eyes alight with fire. “This young man has risked his neck more times than most would even dare.”

Miruko cackled as she cracked her knuckles. “Anyone who has a problem will meet my fists!”

“It’s still illegal.” Edgeshot said coolly. “But... I don’t doubt Joker’s heroic spirit.”

“Damn straight, ninja boy!” Miruko shouted.

“Enough, this is not the time or place, and we have work to do. This meeting is adjourned.” Chief Tsuragamae rose from his chair. “The assigned groups will gather and wait until I give the signal to attack.”

Most of the heroes and police vacated the room, but a few lingered behind with All Might. “These kids...” Aizawa cursed under his breath and pinched the bridge of his nose.

“Don’t worry, Aizawa!” All Might boomed. “We’ll rescue them!”

“Then shouldn’t you be saving your time for that ?”

Steam wafted from All Might’s body, and he shrank down to skeletal form.

“Are you sure you even want to be part of this raid? With your strict time limit...”

“No. I must .” Toshinori’s eyes blazed cerulean. “I have failed Joker once already, and now he and our young student need us! I won’t fail, time limit be damned.”

“Bah!” Gran Torino snapped. “All of this chaos has gotten to your head, Toshinori! But... I’m beginning to understand how Joker has wormed his way through your hearts.”

“There you have it.” Nezu turned towards the door. “Come, we’re scheduled for several sleepless nights, and our date with destiny won’t wait!”

“Fantastic.” Aizawa said dryly.

Aizawa didn’t say it, but Nezu knew he was worried just as much as he was.

Tsukauchi watched the disaster of a press conference from his phone. Footsteps and hushed whispers were all around him, but his focus was on Principal Nezu, Eraserhead, and Vlad King bowing to the flashing camera lights.

They sat down and a man sauntered to the front. Tall. Wavy black hair. Mismatched pupils. A smirk that spelled trouble for anybody on the other end of his questions. Tsukauchi recognized him. This was the same man who stared him down at Musutafu General, and he was present during the press conference after the Yaoyorozu's were exposed.

This man spoke with a purpose, more so than the other irate reporters. Almost as if he had a personal stake in this.

"Tsukauchi." Sansa approached, his fur standing on end.
"Tsuragamae gave the green light."

The detective nodded as he tucked away his phone and adjusted the bullet proof armor over his chest. He looked up at the plain building housing the bar, a small army of armed officers and heroes surrounding him.

"Commence the attack!"

"Oooh, the live stream is spreading so fast!" Toga swung her legs from the bar. "And look! The League's name is all over the news!!"

"Our name is finally carved into history. The idea of seeing Joker die on live television is just the icing on the cake." Shigaraki peered towards Bakugo, who seethed in silence. "Have you thought about my offer? Oh, right. You're probably uncomfortable in that. Dabi, release him."

Dabi blinked. "I'm not sure that's smart."

"We're here to recruit him," Shigaraki growled, "That's kind of hard to do if we don't treat him like an equal."

"... Fine, but I'm saying 'I told you so' if he explodes."

Shigaraki snickers. "I'll just have Kurogiri put him to sleep. You know to be on your best behaviour, don't you, Bakugo?"

Bakugo's heart pounded as Dabi undid the restraints. The giant metal piece over his hands fell to the ground with a thunk. Bakugo leapt to his feet, an explosion blinding Dabi.

"You brat!" Dabi shouted as blue flames lit up the bar.

"Dabi, no!" Kurogiri shouted.

The flames died as Dabi backpedaled, his blue eyes piercing through Bakugo, who backed himself against the wall.

"I've listened to you drag on and on for ages!" Bakugo snarled like a feral dog. "I say to hell with you! Do you really think I'd join you after all of the bullshit you put me through!?"

"Why?" Shigaraki tilted his head as he scratched at his neck.

"Bakugo, you've been labeled as a villain ever since the Sports Festival. Don't you want to take revenge against the people who looked down on you?"

"Screw you." Bakugo spat. "I'll be the best damn hero and show those nerds that they were wrong!"

"What about Joker?" Shigaraki grinned as he stared at the screen.

Joker's body tumbled and rolled several times on the ground after he took a hit from a cowardly Nomu looming behind him. The dust settled. Joker didn't move. The camera zoomed in, but Joker was out cold.

"Oh, would you look at that." Shigaraki grinned from ear to ear. "We have the most powerful vigilante at our mercy now."

Bakugo willed the nerd to move, wake up, anything! Get up, you asshole!!

Shigaraki turned back towards Bakugo, “So, what do you want to do to Joker?”

“What?” Bakugo’s voice tightened like a pulled string.

“I saw the look in your eyes when the live stream came on. You hate him too, don’t you? It took a lot of grinding, but his HP is finally in the red.” Shigaraki grinned from ear to ear. “We can execute him for you, right here, right now. You could even do it if you want to.”

“No.”

“What ?”

“You really think Joker will keel over from something like this?” Bakugo leaned forward with a dangerous smirk. “Sure, he’s a filthy liar and a complete asshole, and I’d love to give that dipshit a piece of my mind, but he has more balls and willpower than you’ll ever have! Just you wait and see, he’ll get back up and kick your ass in a heartbeat!”

A beat of silence passes, only to be broken by a knock on the door.

“Kamino pizza delivery!”

The wall suddenly imploded as All Might crashed through as if it were made of paper. They had no time to act as a hail of vibrant red feathers rained in and impaled their clothes to the wall.

“Kurogiri!!”

“Yes-” Kurogiri stiffened.

“Kurogiri, what’s wrong!?”

“The Nomu.... the ones in the warehouse are gone!”

Shigaraki’s eyes widened. “What!?”

Edgeshot slipped in through the door and unlocked it, revealing a squad of armed officers behind him.

“Ah, did you really think that we didn’t know about the other location?” All Might said. “By now, the other group would have already restrained them. Nobody is coming to help you, so just give up!”

Kurogiri’s body flared. “Don’t think it will be that-”

Kurogiri gasped as his shoulder was pierced by a red ribbon. Dabi’s body was bathed in blue flames, but the rushing form of Gran Torino flew in from the hole in the wall and kicked him in the face. Dabi’s head snapped back against the bricks before the villain went limp.

“Bah, youngsters like you need to learn your place.” Gran Torino said as he landed on his feet and looked across the bar.

“You killed Kurogiri!?” Twice shouted as he struggled against Hawks’ feathers.

“Not quite.” Edgeshot reformed his head from a thread of ribbon, which hovered inches from Kurogiri. “I just temporarily cut off the blood circulation to his brain. He’s still alive, just unconscious.”

“Young Bakugo!” All Might rushed to Bakugo’s side and locked a firm hand on his shoulder. “Don’t worry, you are safe now! I am proud of you for how brave you were, my boy.”

“I...” Bakugo’s lips wobbled, but he said nothing despite the tears of relief in his eyes. “It’s not like I was scared!”

“You!”

All Might, his grin immovable, turned towards the villain. “Shigaraki, it’s over for you!”

“You... you!!” Shigaraki’s body trembled as all of his hatred pooled in his crimson eyes. “Don’t be ridiculous. I’ve only just begun. Justice...

peace... hope... I'll turn them all and this sham of a society to dust! Do you really think that this is the end!? I'll rip you and Joker apart! Disappear. I hate you!!"

All Might's insides squirmed as Shigaraki continued to thrash, mixed with a stab of pity.

"All Might." Hawks hovered outside the hole All Might made. "The others confirmed that the Nomu and the missing Pussy Cats are secure. I bet it won't be much longer before they locate Joker-"

Bakugo bowled over as gray sludge poured from his mouth. The villains cried out as they were slowly being devoured by it. Other spurts opened and several Nomu dropped out of the nothingness. Screams and gunshot echoed from the streets below.

Hawks threw a tiny feather into the goop as Bakugo was torn from All Might's grasp, his fingers spewing with muck.

"Nooooo!!" All Might howled.

"All Might, they've been taken to the warehouse!" Hawks shouted as he drew his feather blades and slashed at the Nomu. "Go, we'll cover you from here!!"

"I owe you one, Hawks!!" All Might bellowed as several Nomu scrambled over his body, "Oklahoma smash!!"

The force ripped the roof from the bar and sent Nomu flying. All Might launched himself into the sky.

~5 minutes earlier...

"Can you see anything?" Todoroki whispered.

“It’s really dark in there.” Kirishima pressed himself against the warehouse window high above, using Iida’s shoulders as a stepping stool. He adjusted the night vision goggles. “Wait... I do see something!”

“What is it?” Iida whispered.

“I-its....It’s....!?” Kirishima shoved the goggles to Midoriya, who stood on Todoroki’s shoulders next to him. “Look! Back there, on the right...”

Midoriya took them and looked inside. “Those are... Nomu tanks!?”

“What!?” Iida yelled, face paling.

“You don’t happen to see Joker or the Pussy Cats in there, do you?” Yaoyorozu whispered.

“I... yes! I see Ragdoll and Pixie Bob!” Midoriya said. “We have to rescue them!”

“But what about Joker?” Todoroki asked as Midoriya and Kirishima jumped down.

Yaoyorozu crouched in the cramped alleyway, her shoulders nearly touching either wall. “Can’t you feel something? Going by that live stream, it appears that Joker is underground somewhere. Did you see a door or an elevator in the warehouse?”

Kirishima and Midoriya exchanged glances, but shook their head.

“Wait.” Todoroki held up his hand. “I hear something-”

Kirishima saw the large form in the sky, “Watch out!”

Their screams were wiped out by howling wind and dust invading the alleyway.

“Go, go!” Best Jeanist shouted as police and heroes swarmed the warehouse.

Ryukyu, still in dragon form, ripped the brain dead Nomu from the tanks. She gagged as their slimy taste invaded her mouth, but she kept on until all the Nomu were secured by Jeanist’s quirk.

“Ragdoll!!” Tiger rushed to the tank and dragged his unresponsive teammate out. “Hey, are you alright!? What did they do to you!?”

“Pixie Bob is here!” Gang Orca called from another tank. “I’m glad that they are safe.”

“But... what’s wrong with them?” Tiger clutched Ragdoll to his chest. “Why are they....?”

“We’ll get them to safety.” Gang Orca said as he pulled Pixie Bob’s body out. “I’m sure they’ll be alright.”

Best Jeanist scanned the dark warehouse. “But... I don’t see Joker anywhere.”

“I sense faint vibrations below us.” Ryukyu pressed her ear into the ground.

“Yep, I sense it too!” Miruko said. “Maybe he’s-”

They were silenced by somebody clapping.

“Sorry, Tiger.” A deep voice echoed from within the darkness. “But your teammates had excellent quirks. It was the perfect opportunity and I just couldn’t help myself.”

“Who’s there?” Best Jeanist stepped to the front, eyes narrowed. “Does anybody have a light?”

“It took quite a while to rebuild my stock of quirks after my body was reduced to this.” A shadow slowly stepped into the light.

Ryukyu's instincts told her to run, but she stayed put and flared her wings. "Stop! Don't move-"

The man wearing a basic suit stepped into the light. A black mask covered his entire head. The aura he gave off made Jeanist leap into action, his quirk binding the man's arms and legs.

"Jeanist-!" Ryukyu shouted. "He could be a civilian!"

"No, there's something off about him." Jeanist tightened his quirk. "Who are you?"

"I'm glad you asked, Best Jeanist." The man said as black lightning sparked over his body. "Let me show you."

It happened in the blink of an eye.

The heroes screamed as an explosion split the sky and rumbled the earth. The moon shone down on roaring flames and plumes of choking smoke. Buildings, their windows shattered, lay crumpled and broken, a few teetering dangerously on their sides. The whistling breeze sprinkled embers over the massive crater, buildings jutting out from the sides were akin to broken bones sticking out of a diseased wound.

One form floated over the destruction, the singular man who wiped clean the face of the earth like a ravaging angel. The fetid aura he exhumed invaded the minds of the 1-A students cowering behind an untouched slab of wall, casting images of blood and rot, of their own fetid corpses bathed in blood. The hallucinations born from fear entrapped them.

"Tomura finally started thinking and acting for himself, and I finally acquired a most valuable test subject. I wish you wouldn't have gotten in the way of our progress."

Despite the fires sprouting across the city, a cold wind washed over All For One. He idly wondered if the ghosts of those he'd just slain were cursing him with their dying breaths. But he'd revel in that later. Now, he clapped as he stared down at Best Jeanist, the only hero laying in the crater.

"You manipulated everyone's clothes to get them out of the way in an instant? Your quick skills and decision making are superb. You must have nerves of steel."

"Y-you..." Jeanist struggled to sit up as straps of cloth impaled the ground. "You fiend-!"

All For One flicked his finger, and a jet of concentrated air shot towards the hero.

Midoriya wasn't the only one to hold his stomach as they heard the wet squelching. Best Jeanist only knew pain, his lower torso split open, before he fell back, unmoving. His eyes glazed over.

Another noise, like splattering water, invaded the stillness.

"Eugh! What the hell was that!?" Bakugo screamed.

Other villains were thrown from the goop, coughing and gagging. Dabi and Kurogiri's unconscious bodies splattered onto the dirt.

"Ah, I'm glad you could join us." All For One floated to the ground. "I apologize for all of this ruckus, Bakugo."

"What!? You..." Bakugo stepped backwards as the villain walked towards them.

"Ah, I almost forgot one guest." All For One chuckled. "How rude of me."

Goosebumps broke out on Bakugo's arms as another body landed beside him in a dull thump. He would recognize that head of raven hair anywhere, fancy costume or not. Bakugo couldn't breathe as he stared down at the unmoving vigilante.

“Sensei!” Shigaraki called as he sank to the ground.

“Tomura, it seems like you’ve failed again, but that’s alright.” All For One walked over to his protege and held his hand down. “You only need to try again. Do it over as many times as you need to. That is why I am here, this was all for you .”

All Might, with the full moon shining at his back, dove for All For One. The villain laughs as he holds All Might’s fists in his palms, the earth cracking beneath their feet as dueling winds snapped through the clearing.

“I’ll have you return everything, All For One!!” All Might bellowed.

“Do you think you could kill me again, All Might?”

Bakugo was blown back by the explosion as a vortex of dust swirled around the clearing. Grit invaded his throat and stung his eyes. The wind took its sweet time clearing it away.

“Nice of you to join the party, All Might. Is five kilometers too great a distance for you nowadays? Just how much weaker did you get from your injury?”

“You’re one to talk!” All Might stood and wiped a bead of crimson from his lips. “What’s with that freaky industrial mask?”

Bakugo was pinned to the spot as he watched the two behemoths square off. His eyes inevitably slid to Joker, whose coat tails swayed lazily in the breeze. His body was laid over broken concrete and rebar. The gentle wind blew Joker’s bangs from his face. Joker’s eyes were open, but they were cloudy and unfocused, his lips parted to allow some sort of black muck to drip down his chin.

All Might followed Bakugo’s eyes, and Bakugo’s heart jumped to his throat as All Might’s smile sharpened like a blade.

“All For One!” All Might bellowed. “How dare you lay your hands on these children!? I’ll take Young Bakugo and Joker back! And this time, I’ll give you a nice cell in Tartarus.”

“Why would I allow you to take them?” All For One put a hand over his heart. “Besides, do you honestly think you have the power to fight me? I can already sense how much you’ve weakened since our last battle. You’re practically a walking corpse. What a marvelous twist of fate that you and Joker will die on the same day!”

“You fiend! It wasn’t enough that you’ve experimented on him all his life!?” All Might pushed down the lancing pain with a flood of adrenaline. “And now you just decided to throw him away after getting him back!?”

“Where in the world did you get that theory? He’s not one of mine.”

“Don’t lie to me!”

All For One laughed. “You truly have no idea just how special that boy is, do you? His real origins are... truly out of this world.”

“Enough!” All Might waved a hand. “I’ll give you one last chance. Hand him over and release my student!”

“No, I don’t think I will.”

Black sparks snaked around the villain’s body. He extended his arm as All Might pounced, his sleeve bulging until it nearly ripped. The sharp change in pressure popped Bakugo’s ears as a concentrated air blast sent All Might careening through several skyscrapers. A trail of dust rose into the sky, several city blocks in length.

“Air Cannon plus Springlike Limbs, Kinetic Boosters times four...” All For One flexed his hand. “Hmmm, Strength Enhancer times three. What a fun combination.” All For One looked down at Joker’s body. “I wonder what other buffs you would add? Oh, I am sure you would equally debuff your opponents. Those quirks always come in handy.”

Bakugo stood on shaky legs, “All Might!!”

“Calm down. He wouldn’t die from something like that. Hopefully.” All For One said, before he turned to Shigaraki. “Take this as a chance to run, Tomura. Take these children with you.”

“Buuuut Kurogiri is still out!! What is he, sleeping beauty!?” Twice waved his arms. “Eugh, I wouldn’t kiss him!”

“Let me take care of that.”

All For One’s fingers shot out lightning fast tendrils, which impaled Kurogiri. Kurogiri’s body twitched like a doll being twisted by a merciless child. It made Bakugo feel sick. A swirling purple cloud opened, and All For One retracted the tendrils.

“There. Now get out of here!”

“We... we won’t let you go anywhere...”

The villains whipped towards Joker. One hand grasped around a piece of rebar to hold himself up, the other clawed at his own chest.

“I’m glad you’ve joined the land of the living, Joker.” All For One said. “But I sense that you don’t have the energy to fight back. The majority of your items have dried up, too. What are you going to do now?”

Bakugo was rooted to the spot as Joker’s body trembled with exhaustion, and yet his eyes bore a crazed gleam that bordered on animalistic. A ghostly wind swirled around Joker as his lips formed into a manic smirk.

~A few minutes ago...

“REN!!”

Joker gasped as he opened his eyes. The clear night sky stretched overhead, only crossed by the light of a news helicopter circling over them. A cold wind brushed his face. When did he get outside? His body ached and his mind was clouded with fog. A myriad of familiar voices were around him... shouting, fighting . The ground shook beneath him when two behemoths clashed, but he was too exhausted to care. His eyes fluttered closed-

"Don't rest just yet, my Trickster. The Nomu have gone and we are upon the surface. If we want to escape this fate, then you have to get up." Arsene's soft feathers brushed over his mind. "It's time."

"Time...?"

"Can you not hear them, Joker? The cries of the masses flow through us." Arsene's voice mixed with a deeper timbre that Joker didn't recognize, one such voice with the power to rip apart the heavens. "We must accomplish that which we failed to do at the pinnacle of Yaldaboath's final battle."

"Arsene, why are you-" Joker broke out into chills as thrashing chains sprouted around the mindscape. "What'll happen to you?"

"I am thou, thou art I. We have a bond that can withstand the forces of hell itself! Though this form will be no more, I will be with you. Always."

Joker's breath left in a shudder.

He peeled himself from the broken concrete, his heart dropping at the raw destruction all around him. His boots crunched over rubble. Black spots threatened to snuff out his vision as his muscles screamed with pain, but he forced himself forward, legs weighed down like iron. He witnessed All For One impale Kurogiri, phantom pains burning within his own hands and shoulders.

"There. Now get out of here!"

Joker grasped a bent piece of rebar for support. “We... we won’t let you go anywhere...”

“So glad you’ve rejoined the land of the living, Joker.” All For One said as he stared at Joker with that grotesque mask. “But I sense that you don’t have the energy to fight back. The majority of your items have dried up, too. What are you going to do now?”

An ice cold rush welled inside Joker’s heart and electrified his veins. A swirling wind weaved through his hair, and he bore that same manic smirk as when Arsene was first brought into the Metaverse.

“What I should’ve done from the very start.”

The ground around Joker burst with writhing black chains. Clanking metal and chilly winds washed through the dusty clearing as Arsene arose behind Joker, his wings lovingly brushing against his other self. Their shadows stretched out towards the villains as Joker grasped the closest chain, their ethereal energy resonating deep within his crippled soul. He drowned Yaldabaoth's laughter with a desperate cry. He reared his arm back, chains in tow, and threw them forward.

Snap .

The chains disintegrated within Joker’s fingers. Power erupted through Arsene as he released a demonic scream. Blue flames, brighter than ever before, swallowed both Arsene and Joker until the former’s body couldn’t contain it any longer. With a bright flash of a dying star, the Persona was no more. The wind died, and all was quiet.

The villains waited, but nothing happened.

“Uh...” Toga poked her fingers together. “What was that?”

“A fancy light show and nothing more.” Shigaraki chuckled. “Is that really all you have left? What a lame final attack for a secret boss.

What do you think, Sensei?"

"That was certainly a spectacle!" All For One laughed heartily.
"However, what you did seems to have accomplished nothing .
Now... wait." All For One frowned as the air danced with foreign energy. "What is this?"

The heavens shuddered. A sea of stars streaked the night sky with tears of silver. All eyes in the city turned upwards to marvel at this miracle of nature before dark clouds smothered them like a blanket. The storm clouds opened in a spinning maelstrom, rays of cold light showering the city in flickering curtains. Thunder roared in their ears.

Then, the Demon Lord descended upon Kamino.

I can hear you all screaming from here. It goes nicely with a calming cup of tea, and... oh, is that the Major Character Death tag I see?

See you all next week ;)

Throw Away Your Mask

Chapter 60: Throw Away Your Mask

Joker closed his eyes and concentrated.

If he listened closely, he could hear the voices of people cheering him on.

Wow, I can't believe how long this story is already! 60 chapters and 400k words??

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

“Wh-what-” Kirishima gasped when the massive shadow drowned them. “What is that thing?”

Thunder rolled through Kamino as the divine being descended on six ebony wings, such ginormous wings which swallowed the entire city in writhing shadows. Black and silver attire glimmered under the curtains of prismatic light spilling from the clouds, highlighting the blood red sash hanging diagonally across its chest. Four magnificent horns curved from its helmet, two in the front, two in the back. A halo of pitch black wings spun slowly over its head like a floating crown.

An infernal gleam made its ruby eyes glow as hot as scorching coals. It spread its arms wide as the world took in its full glory.

“It...” Todoroki’s breath trembled. “I-it has to be from Joker.”

“He almost looks like a general.” Midoriya whispered in awe.

“A-A general?” Yaoyorozu shivered as shadow and pale light danced around them. “F-from Heaven ?”

“I-I don’t know...” Midoriya trembled. “I-it doesn’t look like an angel. And this light... maybe its the Shining One? Lucifer, o-or maybe Sata-”

“There’s no time to guess who it is.” They looked to Iida. Lightning flashed and thunder roared, and yet Iida had the courage to stand tall within the dark angel’s shadow. “Let’s rescue Bakugo while they’re distracted.”

“W-we can’t go out there now!” Kirishima whisper-yelled.

“I have a plan.” Midoriya’s eyes almost glimmered with resolve. “Kirishima, Todoroki, Iida... everything will depend on our timing and your quirks. We just have to wait for the perfect opportunity-”

A growl, an ethereal and musical timbre that no mortal ears should ever hear, echoed through the city and sparked fear within the hearts of mankind. The Shining One’s eyes locked onto All For One, the culmination of hatred and grief swum within its gaze. The wings flared, casting a bone chilling wind down on the clearing, before it raised its fist. Screams rang out as the Shining One punched down with the force of a meteor.

Dozens of quirks bubbled under All For One’s skin as he raised a hand and met the punch head on. The earth buckled and the sky cracked under the force of the collision. Stinging dust and debris became airborne when the wild winds whipped the clearing in a dirty maelstrom.

Joker shielded his eyes. He stood beside the boots of Satanael, a tiny speck compared to his true, unbound other self. A spike of fear coursed through him when another earth shattering crack and a rumble shook the very foundations of the city. A certain student was nowhere to be seen.

“Bakugo!” Joker called through the raging dust storm.

Joker squinted. A silhouetted form moved within the wall of dirt, and he rushed towards them, colors popping from his fast footsteps. He slid to a stop when blood red eyes pinned him with hatred. Shigaraki’s pale hair weaved with the dusty wind, his expression carved with hostility.

“You. ” Shigaraki spat. “This is all your fault! Die!!”

Shigaraki struck like a viper. Joker ducked and backpedaled from the man’s frantic swipes, for one touch could lead to a painful demise. They danced for a few steps before a voice rang out.

“Don’t touch him!!”

An explosion hurled Shigaraki through the storm, lost to the darkness swirling around them. Joker whirled around to a panting Bakugo, his face plastered with sweat.

“Are you alright, Bakugo?” Joker asked.

Bakugo whipped toward him. No amount of suave finesse prepared Joker for Bakugo’s fist. Joker’s head snapped back at the blooming pain, putting a blood red hand over his cheek with a hearty chuckle.

“You have one mean right hook, I’ll give you that.”

“Don’t you dare compliment me!” Bakugo snapped as he stomped in Joker face and snatched his collar. “You-”

“What is it?” Joker smirked as his hand dropped from his cheek. “Do I have something on my face?”

Bakugo’s grip slackened. His face drained of outright rage and he pinned Joker with accusing eyes.

“No, you don’t .”

Bakugo released the vigilante's collar as both of Joker's hands went to his face, where cool leather gloves prodded at nothing but the bare skin around his eyes. He stared up at his true other self as his fingers slid down his face.

"Oh ."

"I knew it." Bakugo growled as he grabbed Joker's arm. "I knew you were hiding shit! This whole time you pretended to be a weak, quirkless barista? Why!?"

"I was never even supposed to be here! Why would I tell you anything?"

Bakugo's eyes widened. "What the hell is that supposed to mean!?"

"It means I had my reasons." Joker tore his arm away and turned his back on Bakugo. "Besides, it's not like I owe you anything. You don't get to demand answers from me just because you think you're entitled to them."

A heavy silence lingered as the dust finally settled, but Joker could still feel Bakugo's eyes stabbing into his back like red hot pokers.

"Astonishing. Quite astonishing."

The hair on the back of their necks stood on end as All For One hovered between them and the retreating villains diving into the portal. The man stared up at Satanael. Awe, astonishment, and a touch of resentment oozed out of All For One's wicked black mask.

"Sensei!" Shigaraki, hovering at the edge of Kurogiri's portal, stared on with eyes as wide as dinner plates. "That cheater's power! It's-"

"There's no time to dawdle." All For One's held out his arm in front of Shigaraki. "You must flee. Step into that portal, Shigaraki!"

"But-"

“Remember-” All For One carefully chose one of his weaker quirks.
“Everything that I have done is for you .”

“Sensei-”

With the flick of a finger, All For One blew a gust of wind at Shigaraki.
“Go!”

“Sensei, you can’t do this! Don’t leave me behind!” Shigaraki reached out as he flew through the air. “Sensei!! ”

Shigaraki’s desperate plea went silent when Kurogiri’s portal swallowed him. All For One turned back towards Bakugo and Joker standing at the Shining One’s feet, the powers exuding from the villain chilled the boys to the bone.

The Shining One’s wings curled around them in an ebony curtain.

“Don’t think you can hide behind those wings forever, Joker.” All For One said as he gathered his quirks.

“Bakugo,” Joker tucked his hands in his pockets as Satanael lowered his hand to the ground. “At the first opportunity you see, escape .”

“What!?”

“Satanael and I will distract him for as long as-” A sharp twinge in Joker chest sent fire into his throat. He coughed into his hand, chuckling dryly at the black puddle staining his palm and dripping through his fingers. Bakugo bristled. “I don’t have much time to spare.”

A powerful blast buckled Satanael’s wings. A sign of impatience from the man who reaped souls.

“Trickster...”

Bakugo flinched as the massive entity’s voice sung through his bones.

"I know." Joker pulled on his gloves and wiped another black bead from his lips. "Let's do this."

"Wait-"

"No." Joker grinned at Bakugo as he hopped on Satanael's palm and put a hand on the massive Persona's thumb. "Remember what I said."

"What about you!?" Bakugo roared. "If you go out there and people see your face-"

"I'm flattered that you care so much, but worry about yourself first." Satanael slowly rose to his feet, his wings opening to allow streams of cold light through. Kaleidoscopic hues painted Joker's tailcoat as the wind wove through his hair. "Escape when you see a chance. Save yourself with your own power!"

Satanael rose to his full height with Joker in his palm. A news helicopter soared as close as it dared to the Shining One. The cameras zoomed in on the person within its grasp.

"Hey, that's-" Demizu Mika clutched her microphone. "It's Joker! But... wait... his mask is gone!?"

Joker, maskless, peered down at All For One with silver eyes as cold as the light shining down from the heavens.

"Now !"

An explosion ripped a wall apart on the other side of the clearing and a colossal glacier jutted into the sky like the tip of a spear. The light from the heavens gave it an ethereal glow, splotching specs of rainbow colored light around the city. Three bodies flew over it at blinding speeds, powered by revving engines.

Joker gaped as Kirishima, Iida, and Midoriya soared together through the sky.

All For One's body sparked as he reached out towards them.

"I don't think so." Joker said as Satanael pointed to the ground near All For One.

An ebony serpent erupted from a bubbling black pool. It rose into the sky and clamped its jaws around the tendrils shooting from All For One's fingers. The 1-A students flew over the tendrils, unharmed.

Kirishima reached his hand out towards Bakugo. "Come on!!"

A thunderous boom pounded in their chests as Bakugo launched himself like a rocket, his body flying through the air until their hands grasped together.

"Are you stupid or something!?" Bakugo called over the wind whipping their hair.

Kirishima grinned at him. But their trajectory brought them close to Satanael. Time slowed like dripping sap as Kirishima looked into Joker's silver eyes. His heart dropped and he couldn't bear to look away, for the truth was finally revealed before him.

Joker stared right back... smiling.

"Aniki!?"

Satanael allowed them to slip between his wings. They all gaped at Joker before the pitch black wings closed like a curtain, the desperate calls from the 1-A students all but lost.

"How irritating." All For One growled as he reduced the serpent to a puddle of ink. "This power of yours is far more troubling that I could ever predict."

"You're the one that started this play." Joker called down as he splayed his arms. "Don't you know that the villain never wins? The crowd will always cheer for the devilishly handsome protagonist."

All For One chuckled. "This act is only beginning," He said as a hundred quirks danced under his skin, deforming the man's body with bulging spikes and wires. "Besides, I wrote this little play with the intention of it being a tragedy!"

Satanael curled his wings around the Trickster as a blast of super-powered wind sent them reeling back. The tip of Satanael's boots raked through fallen skyscrapers, clouds of dust spewed into the sky as he slowly slid to a stop.

"Damnit." Joker muttered under his breath, but he froze when new energy bubbled within his fractured heart. "Satanael, what is this?"

"Can you not feel them, Trickster?" Satanael smiled as he stared to the news helicopter. "Our power has not yet peaked. Look around us."

Joker scanned the rubble. People crawled out from the smoke and ash. Civilians, heroes, those who were just going about their lives emerged from the destruction, bloody and bruised, but alive. Many looked upon Satanael's majesty with awe and wonder... and more importantly, hope .

"They call for your victory." Satanael said as All For One prepared another strike. "Harness the true power of this World and deliver them from this evil!"

Joker closed his eyes and concentrated.

If he listened closely, he could hear the voices of people cheering him on.

"I can't believe I told you that I'd kick you out if you caused any trouble." Kaito muttered. "Now look at you. Japan is cheering for you, so you better win this and come back so that I can kick your ass myself. It's the least you can do for scaring the shit out of everyone, right?"

"You can do it, Akira!" Hitoshi pounded his fist on the desk. "If anyone can win, it's you! You and everyone else taught me so much, but I won't forgive you if you don't come back to teach me more! Our family won't be the same without you!"

"You got this, kid."

"We believe in you, Akira." Risumi said. "You saved us from Silver Falcon! You gave Ayumu and I the Strength to continue doing what we love. You better win and come back to us!"

"Heh, come on Joker." Taneo smirked as he stared down at his phone screen. "I know that villain can't get the better of you. Kick his ass and win the day! Make sure to call me so we can share the all of epic details on my blog!"

"Daddy, that's the vigilante that saved me! He's going to win, right?"

"Of course, Nanako. This kid won't lose to a villain like that."

"W-wait, Tokaji! That's... that's Ren!"

"I know! He said he was quirkless, Kagome! What the hell is going on!?"

"I knew there was more to this boy than meets the eye."

"Really? Then why didn't you tell us, old man!?"

"Tokaji, calm down! Ren must've had his reasons... and besides, he's the one who saved us!"

"Yeah, well... he better win this! We haven't been able to repay him yet!"

"You hear that, Joker!?" Ichinose cackled. "I've never heard so much noise in the workshop before! To think that one of those cheeky brats that came to my junkyard was actually Joker! Smoke this loser and pay us a visit, yeah!? Whistler wants to see you again and Mei has so many babies to show you!"

"Please, deary. Don't let this evil get the better of you!" Haru-san prayed in front of her television. "We have to share another cup of tea. The Blue Lotus needs its charming barista."

"To think this boy had even more tricks up his sleeve." Nezu chirped. "Truly magnificent!"

"This isn't the time, Nezu!" Aizawa griped.

"All Might hasn't come back yet." Vlad King growled. "Are you sure Joker can take care of this himself?"

"He summoned a typhoon and leveled an entire mountain before." Aizawa, despite himself, smirked. "And now this. Do you really think the kid is completely helpless?"

"Indeed! I have a feeling that All Might is okay. All For One wouldn't just kill him like that, but as for Joker..." Nezu's eyes sharpened as he peered into the television, a fiery well bursting in his heart. "We have to cheer for him. It's the only thing we can do from here!"

"What's going on!?" Mina screeched as her phone blew up with the 1-A chat and rapid fire news articles. "What... what the hell!? Akira, what are you doing there!? You were Joker this whole freaking time!? Everyone in our class is flipping out! KICK HIS ASS SO I CAN PUNCH YOU MYSELF, YOU LIAR!"

"Where's All Might!? Shouldn't he be in on this fight, too!?"

"Joker doesn't need All Might!" Another person shouted over the swelling crowd flooding the Shibuya Crossing. "He can take that villain by himself!"

"Damn right! He doesn't need any heroes to save him!"

"Go, Joker!"

"Kick his ass!!"

"You got this, Joker!"

Midoriya's heart hammered away in his ears. People cheering for Joker to be victorious against All For One just... fell flat.

"Th-that..." Kirishima clutched his shirt with white knuckles. "This has to be a lie, right?"

"I..." Iida's shoulders trembled as he stared at the ground. "I am having a hard time believing this."

"I knew he was hiding something."

"Bakugo!" Kirishima exclaimed, eyes flooding with tears.

"N-no, he's right. If we look at everything that's happened since we met Akira, then..."

Iida frowned at Midoriya. "What?"

"Some things match up perfectly." Midoriya bit his lip and blinked the burn of tears from his eyes. "We met him after the USJ. And something's been bothering me since Hosu. How did Joker find us so fast? I sent that signal to everyone in my contact list. I added Akira before we left for internships..."

Iida bristled. "Many of us did experience a sense of deja vu. Now we finally know why."

Bakugo glared up at the screen. "That bastard has been using us from the start."

"No!" Kirishima frantically shook his head. "Our friendship has to mean something to him, right!? He's not the sort of person to use us for his own means!!"

"But how do we know that for certain?" Iida watched Joker and the Shining One stand off against All For One. "How much of it was the real Akira, and how much was a ploy to hide his secret?"

"He shared his past with us! He told us personal things when he was at his most vulnerable!" Kirishima's lips wobbled. "Deep down, he's still Akira. D-deep down he's still our Aniki! I know it!!"

"Kirishima's right."

"Todoroki! Yaoyorozu!" Iida breathed a sigh of relief as the pair approached. "I'm glad you found us!"

"It wasn't easy in this crowd." Yaoyorozu said, "But I'm glad we are all in one piece."

"But why do you think Kirishima is right, Todoroki?" Midoriya asked. "You... you knew, didn't you?"

"Yes, I figured it out before we left for the Summer Camp." Todoroki's eyes flicked up to the screen as everyone but Bakugo stiffened.

"Joker protected us at the USJ, even if he didn't know us. USJ, Hosu, the quirkless people, the Summer Camp, all he's ever done is save and protect people." Todoroki put a hand over his chest. "I can't deny this feeling that every interaction with us was genuine on some level. He's the type that holds his friends close."

"Yeah!!" Kirishima pumped his fist. "I agree with Todoroki!"

"But that still doesn't excuse him. We've been friends with a wanted vigilante for months, right under our noses." Iida growled. "At the very least, I think we should ask him for his side of the story. We deserve that much after everything that's happened."

"Iida..." Midoriya whispered.

"Everyone, look!" Yaoyorozu pointed at the screen.

The whole of Japan held it's breath as gilded lights appeared around Joker.

Golden orbs floated around Joker.

He extended his hand, and the culmination of the World's voices amassed into his palm. His body flashed as the light melded into him. Satanael smiled as his weapon appeared in his grasp. A magnificent gun taken form of an executioners sword taller than the most spectacular skyscraper in the country. It sparkled as if it were crafted from starlight.

Satanael's bond, a glowing river of hope, tied the rest if his other selves together at the center of the mindscape. Joker tapped into the inner most core of himself, smirking. He waved his arm in an arc, the myriad of his Personas' voices calling out in retribution.

"Come-"

"Enough of this!" All For One said as he prepared another super powered blast.

A mighty snap splintered the sky as a burst of energy shot towards the Shining One.

"-Everyone! "

A mass of blue flame erupted in front of Joker and Satanael, but the airy missile hit dead on. Tremors shook the city and a cloud of smoke swirled around the giant angel, blocking them from view. Fiery ruby eyes sparked within the cloud. A wall of flowing golden scales emerged as the wind blew the dust away, the attack absorbed by one of the orbs the dragon held in its grasp.

For the first time, All For One broke out in goosebumps as the dragon opened its maw and released a harrowing cry that struck his soul. The holy battle cry summoned others. Blazing blue stars burst to life, forming a circle over the crater.

"I am thou, thou art I."

Their united inflection wove together with one mind, one heart, one united purpose.

Joker.

Satanael.

Kohryu.

Pixie.

Ishtar.

Titania.

Byakko.

Cerberus.

Black Frost.

Shiva.

Cu Chulainn.

Vasuki.

Orpheus Picaro.

Alice.

Yatagarasu.

And one other, gracefully hovering on six finned wings, which sparkled as if they harvested the glimmering curtains of sunlight beneath crystal clear seawater. Aquatic blues bled into soft greens on his arms and wings. His skin bore the same shade of blue, with hints of purple fading into legs. The sunset colored sash tied around his waist fluttered with the breeze.

“Now!” Joker cried.

Sraosha unrolled his hallowed scroll, the navy blue tassels thrashing, as he pointed a clawed finger at All For One.

Three orbs of light converged on All For One’s body, staggering him as his strength ebbed away. Ishtar’s Heat Riser flashed a multitude of colors across the clearing.

Joker sliced his arm towards All For One. Kohryu followed Joker’s movements in perfect synchronicity. The dragon dove from the heavens, golden scales glinting like diamonds.

All For One’s arm deformed as he gathered the quirks under his skin, his body lancing with black lightning. The two collided. Kohryu’s tongue prickled as he clamped the villain in his jaws and thrashed to and fro. Debris flew into the sky when Kohryu dragged his muzzle through the broken buildings, before wrenching his head upwards, tossing All For One.

“Cu Chulainn!!” Kohryu called.

Cu Chulainn howled for blood as he sprinted up Kohryu’s spine, his valiant cape flaring. Kohryu vaulted Cu Chulainn when he reached the tip of his nose, the warrior raising his spear over his head.

“Is this all you have?” All For One mocked as he and Cu Chulainn traded lightning quick blows, sparks flying as All For One’s arms sprouted with steely spires. “I expected more from gods and legends turned real! At least allow me to have some fun!”

Cu Chulainn leapt back and threw his spear. All For One simply cocked his head to avoid it.

“You missed.”

Cu Chulainn laughed. “Did we really ?”

Shiva, hovering behind them, bestowed Gae Bolg with a Thunder Reign. With two arms he hurled the spear at All For One, crackling with golden lightning, which impaled All For One’s shoulder and sent him to the ground. A small dust cloud clung to him as he wrenched the wretched weapon from his shoulder. His suit bore tears and gashes, and one of the pipes in his grotesque mask burst, releasing hisses of steam. Not a drop of blood was in sight.

“Don’t let up!” Byakko pounded over the broken earth, claws bared.

“Yeah!” Cerberus howled as they ran side by side. “Revenge for Seth!!”

The beasts jumped in unison, their fangs and claws yearning for the villain’s flesh. All For One batted Cerberus away with a blast of air. The Guard Dog of Hell yelped as the attack sent him crashing into a ruined apartment building.

“You’ll pay for that!!”

Byakko's fangs clasped around All For One's shoulder as his claws raked the man's torso.

"Really, you should put more effort into this." All For One said. With a grunt, he lifted his arm and slammed Byakko onto his back, his other hand raised, morphing into a spear of twisted metal that gleamed an odd green color. "But it will be fun killing you, just like Seth."

Byakko's ears flattened on his head as he hissed.

The snap and crackle of ice sprouted around them, freezing All For One in place.

"Hee ho!" Black Frost skated past, "Release Byakko!"

All For One growled as an enormous fist snapped his head back, his mask cracking. A heavenly tune played nearby, and All For One jumped back as a red hot laser danced around him and spewed walls of flame, the glacier reduced to steam in a matter of seconds.

"Are you alright, Byakko?" Orpheus Picaro asked as cold mist ghosted around them. "You should not be so careless."

"You're one to talk!" Byakko spat as he righted himself.

Meanwhile, a shadow with sickly purple scales crept through the mist. Vasuki reared up towards All For One, his six arms waving in a hypnotizing dance.

"No mortal can bear my poison!" Vasuki said as his breath became a cloud of virulent vapor.

"Bah, forget your stupid poison!" Pixie, sitting on Alice's shoulder, cackled. "C'mon little sis! Let's show them how you really play with your enemies."

Alice curtsied as All For One burst from the poison cloud. "Die ."

Blinding white overtook the light spilling from the heavens and tremors shook the earth, dust scattering from the broken buildings all around them. Bubbles of destruction popped, revealing the smooth craters underneath.

All For One panted as he floated over the craters.

"My, my." Titania fluttered only a few meters away from the villain. "Alice, Pixie, haven't I told you not to play with your enemies? Let's see how you deal with this ."

Titania chuckled as Concentrate consumed her body. She languidly raised her arm and snapped her fingers. A churning blue orb appeared between them, with ribbons of energy flowing around it. White hot pain burned All For One when it burst.

"Ah..." All For One slouched forward as blisters bubbled over his skin. "Radiation burns. So you even have atomic power within your grasp? Interesting."

"Something isn't right..." Kohryu circled over them, his musical roars heard by all. "Why is he not fighting to his full extent?"

"Do you think he's holding himself back?" Shiva said.

"Why is he toying with us!?" Byakko snarled.

"Then we just have to kill him before he uses his true power!" Alice said with an unsettling grin. "Big brother, let me use my teddies again!"

"No!" Joker cried. "We do not kill! We'll find another way!"

"But Trickster, this Symbol Of Evil must not-!" Sraosha growled.

"Attacking one by one does no good. We must strike all at once!" Satanael said as he raised his weapon. "Then, when the time is right, the Trickster should rip off that terrible mask and I'll deal the final blow!"

“Got it!!” Several voices replied in unison.

Yatagarasu’s call became the signal.

Bursts of magic popped and boomed across the devastation. Ice, fire, lightning, wind, psychedelic, nuclear, light, shadow, and almighty. A rainbow of fantastic colors exploded like the breathtaking finale of fireworks show, the dark shape within bobbed and weaved through the magic, but he could barely move before another blast forced him to change direction.

The cracks in their soul deepened as they pushed their magic to the limit. Joker pushed the pain down as he leapt from Satanael’s palm and shot out his grapple as Kohryu flew past. The dragon snatched the thrashing wire and Joker’s heart leapt into his throat as he swung across the width of the broken heart of the city.

Kohryu dropped him at just the right point.

The spotlight of the news helicopter fell on Joker as he plummeted towards All For One.

Joker’s boots slammed onto the man’s shoulders. The Personas’ held their breath as the villain’s body protruded with spikes. Mutual pain lanced between them when one spike sliced Joker’s cheek, but he reached down and curled his fingers around the base of the grotesque mask and pulled . Plastic and glass creaked. spurts of steam erupted from the tubes.

“Do you really thing this will work, boy?” All For One laughed as the cracks in his mask spread.

“What’s wrong?” Joker wickedly grinned as he felt the mask starting to give out. “Are you afraid to show your face? I’ll reveal your true form!”

CRACK.

Joker wrenched away bits of machinery and chunks of glass as All For One's mask shattered. His face was revealed to the light, showcasing a lump of ugly scar tissue in place of an actual human face. The only untouched parts were his bottom lip and chin, he didn't even have eyes, and yet Joker felt the piercing hatred drilling through the empty spaces where they would be.

Joker launched himself away as black sparks prickled across the man's body.

Yatagarasu dove to Joker's side, a blast of wind cushioning Joker's fall. Joker rolled into his landing, dust kicking up around his tailcoats as he slid to a stop. He looked up at All For One still hovering in the epicenter of the destruction.

Joker grasped the Tyrant Pistol and aimed it at All For One, who tilted his head.

"What do you intend to do with that?" He called. "Aren't you out of ammo?"

Joker smirked. "Pillage him, Satanael!!"

He pulled the trigger.

Click .

No bullet came from Joker's weapon.

BANG .

The villain whirled around as Satanael's gunshot, heard by millions, reverberated through Kamino. A silver bullet sliced through the air faster than a speeding train. All For One threw his arms up, the bullet catching on a massive orb of dark energy crackling. No light shown through the orb, it swallowed everything as if it were a concentrated piece of space, a black hole which threatened to wipe out the entire city. Buffeting winds and arching lightning clashed between the bullet and All For One's final defence.

Which world's power would dominate the other?

Joker held his breath, his heart pounding, as the spinning bullet cracked.

But All For One faltered too, the orb of negative energy shuddering against the almighty power the masses of this World bestowed to Joker. Joker covered his eyes as a sudden light seared his retinas, and the sound of shattered glass nearly blew out his eardrums. All was quiet as he blinked rapidly, the bullet, and All For One, were nowhere to be seen.

Thump .

Joker jumped and looked over his shoulder to All For One's steaming body splayed out over the concrete. Joker tensed. A few seconds pass with thundering heartbeats. The man didn't move.

"Did... did we do it?" Joker whispered.

They waited several seconds more, but the man lay still.

Satanael's satisfaction leaked into every Persona as they absorbed their victory.

"Trickster... we are out of time." Satanael's wings drooped as he fully lowered himself to the ground.

Joker's jaw dropped when his true other self took a knee and bowed to him, the other Personas copying the motion. Kohryu, floating peacefully like a ribbon, closed his eyes and bowed his head. The cameras drank in the action as, one by one, they all disappeared into cold ash.

Satanael was the last, his ashes sprinkling across Kamino. With his departure came the clearing of the clouds and of the heavenly light.

Shimmering stars reappeared in the darkened sky.

The exhaustion took its toll as Joker collapsed onto his knees, crackling fire seared through his body as he coughed up a gob of pitch black.

“... Joker?”

Joker wiped his mouth and looked up.

All Might, or rather a familiar skeletal man swimming in a blood drenched costume, staggered towards him. All Might's once taut muscles shrunk into withered shadows of their former glory. The man's sunken eyes widened, his golden hair falling flat against his face.

“You... you're that barista.”

“You .” Joker's voice became raspy. “You're that customer that was arguing with his friend. I never thought the number one hero had already graced me with his presence.”

“I'm sorry to deceive you, my boy.” Toshinori stared up at the news helicopter, his shoulders sinking. “I've deceived the entire world.”

“... Because of that wound?” Joker asked softly. “You forced yourself into this state because you didn't want to disappoint the public, right?”

“Yes.” Toshinori turned his eyes back to Joker, grimacing. He clutched that cursed scar on his side. “This was inflicted by the very villain you just defeated.”

Joker stared at All For One's still body, before looking back at the walking skeleton. His SP pool was nothing but a mere trickle, a gasping brook on the verge of drying out. Joker dryly chuckled as he retrieved his tiny thermos. Tiny Might gave him an odd glance as he chugged the rest of the coffee, hardly enough for a small mouthful. He capped the thermos and set it aside.

“What if you didn’t have to worry about it anymore?”

Small Might inhaled sharply. “... What?”

Joker reached out and touched the hero’s arm. Cool magic flowed from a silent Ishtar as Salvation washed the hero’s body in ribbons of light. Small Might’s eyes flew wide open as he bowled over and spewed crimson from his lips.

Joker flinched back as the hero collapsed, blood pooling around him.

“What did you do to him, brat!?”

A flash of yellow dove for Joker. The hero’s kick sent pain through Joker’s body as he was bat away, his back crashing against an abandoned pillar.

“This was a misunderstanding!” Joker’s voice cracked as dust peppered him. “That was supposed to heal him!”

“Toshinori...” Gran Torino looked over his shoulder. “Are you alright? What did he do! ?”

“I..I...” Toshinori hacked his last spot of crimson. He wiped his mouth and took a deep breath, disbelief and bewilderment swirling in his eyes. “There’s... there’s no more pain...”

Gran Torino paled. “What!?”

“Isn’t this bittersweet?”

Every hair on their bodies stood on end. Their eyes fell back towards All For One, his broken body and torn clothes hanging limply as he levitated.

Toshinori forced himself to his feet. “How are you even conscious!?”

“You.... no...” Joker whispered. “My power wasn’t enough?”

“Joker, you should know the value of a good act. That bullet shattered before it even touched me. But now I sense that neither of you have the energy to fight back. One For All is desperately clinging to you, Toshinori, however futile it is. That flame is sputtering.” All For One reached into his tattered vest pocket. “I have to personally thank Joker for this little trinket.”

Click. Click. CLICK!

Despair painted Joker’s face as he rapidly fired his empty gun.

Toshinori’s blood turned to ice as the villain’s wounds healed in beautiful ribbons, the same ones used to heal him of his own malady. Every wound the Personas inflicted healed over with unblemished skin.

“Too bad it hasn’t restored me to my previous strength...” All For One, his face still scarred, looked down at his hands. “But this will have to do. After all, this will be child’s play now that both of your powers are dwindling.”

Joker forced himself to his feet, but his heart lurched and fiery pain sprouted in his chest. He fell back to one knee as black ichor dripped from his mouth.

“Joker!?” Toshinori called.

All For One clapped. “I must applaud your efforts, Joker. You have no more tricks up your sleeve, and you’ve given me the greatest gift of all. I’ll get to tear All Might apart while his master’s closest friend watches. You will too, but I’ll kill you last.” All For One did a showman’s bow. “It’s the least I can do for what you’ve done for me, my boy.”

“You villain!” Toshinori scowled. “How dare you keep toying with us!?”

All For One tilted his head, smirking with amusement. "I can feel that hatred you harbor, All Might. But you know what? I hate you too. That's why I want you to die the ugliest and most painful death possible! I will steal away everything that you've lived to protect so far."

Joker laughed.

"M-my boy?" Toshinori swallowed as Joker's costume slowly disintegrated, beginning at the blood red gloves, before flowing over the sleeves. "Are you alright?"

"It's funny..." Joker looked up at All For One, another cold chuckle escaped him as he clawed at his eyes. "First Yaldabaoth, now All For One. I couldn't defeat either of them. Why am I such a failure?"

Toshinori swallowed. "Joker?"

Gran Torino exchanged hasty glances with Toshinori. Joker chuckled again as his hands fell to his sides. Toshinori blanched. There was so much black. Falling from Joker's eyes and out of his mouth like blood, only it looked like a scene straight from a horror movie. The paleness of Joker's face made the ichor as black as night.

A wave of dizziness assaulted Joker as his strength left in droves, with not even the voices of his Personas to comfort him.

"My boy..." Toshinori crawled over to Joker and placed a hand on his shoulder. All For One watched on with a grin, as if enjoying his favorite drama. "You've been fighting for so long. It's okay to rest now. Let us handle everything else, alright?"

"N-no... Have to... I can't let Yaldabaoth win again!"

"Yaldabaoth?"

"Toshinori!" Gran Torino shouted as he turned towards All For One. "If you can't fight, then escape with Joker while you have the chance.”

“What!? But I can still -”

“This has been an entertaining comedy, but you’re not going anywhere.” All For One chuckled. “I have one more secret to divulge before you die, and I want to savor the moment.”

Joker gagged as gray goo swallowed his body. Toshinori and Gran Torino reached out, but their hands only closed on that cursed goop. Joker was dumped face first in front of the villain. All For One’s fingers shot out black and red tendrils that pierced Joker through the hands and shoulders.

Revulsion and rage swarmed Toshinori’s heart when the boy was pinned to the ground like an insect to a board. Joker’s weak cries clashed with All For One’s hearty chuckle.

“You know I only came out here because Tomura was in trouble. I wasn’t going to fight you originally, but plans always change.”

“What’s your point?” Toshinori growled. “What’s this secret you want to tell so badly!?”

“My protege.” All For One tilted his head as he tug the tendrils deeper into Joker’s body. Grinding and crunching noises assaulted their ears, and Joker bit his lip to keep from screaming out. All For One almost looked bored. “Did you ever think to check in on your master’s relatives, All Might? Young Shimura Tenko was left all alone in that rank alleyway. To think, your master’s grandson would make the perfect successor.”

“N-no... it’s... it’s a lie...”

“It’s the truth. You know it, don’t you?” All For One grinned. “Where’s your smile now, All Might!?”

“This whole time...” Toshinori clutched his head and screamed in agony.

“Toshinori...” Gran Torino’s voice trembled.

“Luna Fall!! ”

Miruko, her face drenched in crimson, fell from the sky. Her foot swiped through empty air as All For One shot away, the tendrils ripping from Joker’s flesh. She landed with thunderous boom, the ground underneath cracking. She cursed as a massive chasm opened up underneath her.

“Miruko!!”

Red feathers darted through the air. They snatched Miruko and Joker’s clothes and whisked them to safety as a great divide split the clearing into two halves.

“Prominence Burn!!!”

A stream of golden white flames consumed the villain’s body as he reappeared. Heat flooded Kamino as the stream died. Endeavor crashed down in front of Joker and Miruko, his body smoking.

“E-Endeavor!?” Toshinori sputtered.

The hero looked over his shoulder, eyes flicking between them.

“Leave this to us!” A voice called from above.

“Hey, I had him first, Bird Brain!!” Miruko screamed as she shook a fist at Hawks.

“Miruko, take care of our kid!” Hawks yelled.

“Huh!? Our kid-” She looked down at her feet, where Joker lay. Crimson and black mixed together like paint. She crouched down, but he shuddered under her touch. “Kid! Shit .”

Hawks dove as the heat waves from Endeavor's attacks disfigured All For One's body, but he remained untouched. Vibrant red feathers rained down on All For One, the impacts kicking up clouds of dust.

"All Might..." Endeavor scowled, but he turned his back on them as All For One's laughter broke through the clouds. "If you can't fight any longer, then get yourself and that boy to safety! Miruko, get any other civilians and injured heroes out of here!"

Endeavor leapt into the fray. Hawks and Endeavor flowed together as one unit, switching and dodging blows from All For One. Edgeshot seamlessly streamed into the battle, and it turned into a royale as they went toe to toe with the Symbol Of Evil.

"Someone... anyone..."

"Kid... Joker, stay down!" Miruko yelled as Joker forced himself onto his hands and knees.

"My boy..." Toshinori put a gentle hand to the boy's back as his costume continued to disintegrate. "It's okay to rest now."

"No!" Joker clutched onto Miruko and Toshinori's wrists. "I-I can't..."

"Joker." Miruko's face softened as she put both hands upon Joker's face. "Go to sleep and let the pros handle everything else!"

"But I-I can't let anyone else disappear!"

"Nobody else will disappear. Nobody will have to bear with All For One's malice any more! Come on, just one last time..." All Might stood to his full height, his skeletal frame filling out with steam and muscle. His hair sagged over his face, but his blue eyes burned as bright as a bonfire. "I AM HERE!!"

All For One whipped around as All Might prepared his final attack as the Number One hero in Japan.

"UNITED STATES OF SMAAAAASH!"

The behemoths clashed.

Hawks yelped as he and the others were blown back by the concussive force. Miruko threw herself over Joker to protect him from the spontaneous tornado generated by All Might.

All For One laughed as he held All Might's fists in his hands, neither budging in the struggle.

"No..." Joker plucked at the fractured fragments of his soul. "Just one Persona!"

His desperate plea called forth the most mysterious in his stock. Miruko's jaw dropped as Sraosha floated in front of him, his wings unfettered by the powerful gales sweeping over them. A strange golden glow encased him, stray sparks of Humanity's Hope that he savored just for this moment.

"At last." Sraosha unrolled his sacred scroll. "I gave this man the benefit of the doubt and followed the Trickster's sacred dogma. But now it is clear. I cannot allow this Symbol Of Evil to take another breath! It is my sacred duty to strike him down."

"No!" Panic shot through Joker. "Sraosha, that's not what I-"

Sraosha's wings flared as he cast Hamaon.

A flurry of golden prayer slips spun rapidly through the air around All For One and All Might, aided by the last dying breaths of the twister. They stopped midair when Sraosha reached towards All For One. Joker felt nothing but cold hatred from Sraosha as the Persona clamped his hand into a tight fist.

The first prayer slip stuck to All For One's back, his suit smoking at its touch.

All Might's eyes went wide as the villain thrashed away from his grasp, screaming in agony. The golden whirlwind centered on the villain, more smoke and the searing of flesh, and the aroma of something beyond burnt flesh, pervaded their senses as more papers attached themselves to All For One's body.

All For One froze mid-air when the final prayer slip mummified him.

Sraosha zoomed past a stupefied All Might and grasped All For One's head in his hand.

"Now, feel the pain of a thousand souls being ripped from you!" Sraosha said.

The villain shuddered as Sraosha pulled out swirling torrents of color from All For One's body with his other hand, releasing the Sea Of Souls trapped within. The other heroes were locked in place as Sraosha sent the colors skyward, faint aurora danced through the heavens for only a moment before it went dark.

All For One dangled limply from Sraosha's grip.

"What the hell did he do?" Endeavor, despite his flames, felt a shiver course through his soul. "What was that!?"

"He's...." Hawks pupils turned to pinpricks as he stared at All For One. "He's.... dead..."

Sraosha let go. They watched as All For One's lifeless body plummeted into the same chasm in which he used to keep Joker captive. The silence of the city was deafening. Everyone's startled expressions landed on Joker.

"Joker... you..." All Might's throat clogged.

"Sraosha..." Joker looked at his Persona, tears mixing with black ichor. "Why ? We don't kill humans!"

"It had to be done. Satanael's bullet did not pierce him, and the captive souls in which the Symbol Of Evil harbored have been set free.” Sraosha’s body began to fade. “We cannot have another situation like Yaldabaoth. Forgive me, Trickster.”

The Persona vanished. Joker took a shaky breath before he collapsed.

All Might rushed to Joker and Miruko’s side, but before he could do or say anything-

Joker screamed .

It was the sort of heart wrenching cry that would haunt the nightmares of those who survived this tragedy, forever scribed into the annals of history as the news camera broadcast All Might and Joker’s sorrows across Japan.

Toshinori shrank down, tearing up as Joker went silent.

“My boy-”

The rest of Joker’s costume disappeared, replaced with casual clothing. He slumped forward onto the stained dirt.

“Joker?” Miruko turned Joker over, the boy’s head lolling to the side. “Joker!! Hey, kid!” Miruko put an ear to Joker’s chest. “He’s breathing, but his heart is... not doing so good.”

Toshinori’s mind tried to wrap around what just happened. Those prayer slips, all of that light....

A small army of footsteps stormed the scene as police, EMT’s and the media sharks swarmed around the area.

“Toshinori,” Gran Torino appeared at his side as emergency workers and police hovered a few feet away. “You have to let him go.”

“But, he just-!”

Gran’s eyes softened. “They’ll take care of him.”

“I’ll stay with him.” Miruko stated.

“... Alright.”

Toshinori reluctantly let go. He followed the paramedics to a separate area when his ears picked up the tell tale click of handcuffs. Miruko screamed . He whipped around to see police dragging the boy away from the EMTs by his arms, his wrists secured by quirk suppressant. Unbridled fury boiled within him.

“What do you think you’re doing!?” He bellowed.

“Explain, now!!” Miruko’s eyes flashed with rage as she stomped into the officer’s personal space.

The officer jumped. “O-orders are to take this villain to Tartarus, sir-e-er, ma’am...”

Sharp whistling noises penetrated the air. Red feathers impaled the ground around Joker, forcing the officers to jump back. Hawks caught Joker before he hit the ground. He cradled the boy’s head in the crook of his neck and wrapped him in his vibrant wings. A shadow fell over Hawks’ face, his eyes glinting with rage.

“You won’t be doing a damn thing to him.” He growled.

The officers exchanged glances.

“But orders-”

Loud footsteps pounded on the ground as Endeavor walked in between Hawks, Joker, and the officers. He planted himself in the center, crossing his arms as the flames around his body intensified. He said nothing, but his piercing blue eyes pinned them to the spot.

Miruko stood next to him, her arms crossed.

“He’ll be going to the hospital.” Toshinori stated. “I will not allow him to be thrown in Tartarus!”

“You are fools.” Gran Torino tapped his cane on the ground and glared at the sweating officers. “If I were you, I would buck up and listen to the top three heroes in Japan.”

“B-but he just killed someone.” One officer shook his head. “Fine, I’ll be glad to let the higher ups know about this!”

Hawks scoffed as the officers relented. A stretcher was brought over and Hawks laid the poor boy on it. Hawks bit his lip. Sweat trickled down Joker’s pale face and that dark fluid unsettled Hawks down to his bones. Was it blood? Or something... much worse? Joker’s fingers twitched and his expression pinched.

“I’ll go ahead and get rid of these for you.” Hawks whispered.

The cuffs were undone with a quick flick of a feather. Hawks sneered at the cuffs as he tossed them aside.

“I’ll ride to the hospital with him.” Miruko said.

“Are you sure?” Endeavor grumbled. “You’re injured too, you know.”

Miruko exchanged a long glance with Hawks. “Yes. I’ll be fine.”

“I’ll stay behind and help with rescue.” Hawks scanned over the myriad of cameras shoved in their direction. He could feel Kunikazu’s rage on the other side of the cameras. “But somebody better go with the kid.”

“Just leave it to me!” Miruko snapped.

Hawks snatched her wrist, his voice turned down to a simmer. “Make sure you stay with him no matter what. I have a feeling that the Hero Commission is going to try taking him.”

Miruko firmly nodded.

“Go.” Endeavor muttered.

They parted ways as the sun rose over the destroyed city. Warm light painted the broken buildings and smoldering ruins, but emboldened the spirits of those who survived this disaster.

The police station, devoid of most officers, spent the early morning plunged in grim silence. None of the 1-A students spoke, or even looked at one another, too lost in their own thoughts.

“Pillage him, Satanael!!”

BANG!

“I AM HERE!”

The end of an era lay at their feet. The heroes were victorious this time, but at what cost?

Todoroki scoffed, drawing the others out of their morose silence.

“What’s wrong, Todoroki?” Yaoyorozu asked as she pulled on her bangs.

“The news is out.” Todoroki scrolled through his phone. “Despite the media not giving out his name, its pretty much plastered everywhere else.”

He held up the phone and they all blanched at the forum. Akira’s profile was front and center, with such titles like ‘Joker: Identity Exposed!!’ and ‘Famous Vigilante Is Really A Quirkless Barista!?’ . Other forums were hyper-focused on the number one hero’s true form, or from the vibrant aurora Sraosha ripped from All For One.

“I’ve been scrolling through the news too...” Kirishima sat on the floor and grasped his head. “A lot of them are calling Joker a hypocrite or a murderer. The hospital where he and All Might are at are getting swarmed with reporters.”

“What!?” Midoriya yelled. “But he... he...”

“He killed that villain.” Iida stated.

“But that’s-” Kirishima’s eyes watered. “They weren’t there! They didn’t feel what we felt! All For One... he was a monster .”

“So that means Joker had the right to kill him?” Yaoyorozu asked.

“That’s... that’s not...” Kirishima shrank into himself, his lips wobbling.

“I’m sorry.” Yaoyorozu pinched the bridge of her nose. “I didn’t mean to sound so harsh.”

“It’s okay.” Kirishima attempted a weak smile. “We’re all exhausted.”

Midoriya’s ears burned as he looked down at his hands. All For One vs. One For All. All Might reiterated that it was One For All’s destiny to defeat that man, but that destiny was stolen away, the burden placed on another person that had nothing to do with this legacy. At the same time... it was a relief.

Midoriya’s stomach roiled with disgust. He would never have to face that monster. But Joker killed the Symbol Of Evil before any other heroes were murdered, possibly saved an entire city from being leveled. Thousands of people would return home to their families. The city would never be the same, but things could be rebuilt.

Iida’s face crumpled. “It keeps playing over and over in my mind, what that man’s aura showed us. We thought we were going to die. Personally, I don’t think that killing is the right way. However, in this situation...” Iida, his fingers quivering, formed into fists. “I don’t think there was any other choice.”

His words hung sourly in the air.

“Why do you losers look like kicked puppies?”

“Bakugo!” Kirishima hopped to his feet as Bakugo walked down the hall. “How was it?”

Bakugo rolled his eyes. “They just asked a bunch of stupid questions. It was more annoying than anything. Just answer my question!”

“We were talking about Joker.” Todoroki said.

Bakugo frowned. “They’re tearing him apart, aren’t they?”

They stared at Bakugo with wide eyes. Was that... concern in his voice? A vein throbbed in Bakugo’s forehead.

“What!?” He snapped. “Why are you all looking at me like that!?”

“There are a lot of negative things going around the news and forums,” Yaoyorozu said as she looked down at her phone, “But the opposite is also true. Many are still in support of Joker. A few people with, shall we say gray morals, agree that this villain shouldn’t have been left alive. Fewer still are... thanking Joker for ‘finishing the job’.”

Bakugo clicked his tongue. He shoved his hands in his pockets and stormed past them.

“Bakugo!” Iida said as he rapidly chopped his arm, “Where are you going!?”

“Where do you think!?” Bakugo stopped in his tracks and pinned them all with a glare. “I’m going to that hospital to give that asshole a piece of my mind! He better make it through this, or else-”

“Or else what?”

A chill overcame them as they looked past Bakugo. Aizawa stood there, clean shaven, his hair tucked in a messy bun. The suit and tie he wore, while pristine during the press conference, was crinkled and dusty.

“Aizawa-sensei!” Yaoyorozu gaped. “What are you doing here?”

Aizawa’s eyes flashed red, but he didn’t have the energy to keep it up. “To check on you brats, and make sure that you don’t do anything else to put yourselves in danger. You all knew that your little act would have grave consequences.”

“We’ll apologize later!” Kirishima stood by Bakugo as he stared at his teacher, eyes watering. “Just please tell us that Aniki will be okay!”

Aizawa opened his mouth, but then closed it. His eyes fell to the ground. Fear plucked at the hearts of the 1-A students as the police station drowned in the silence.

“I won’t lie and say he’s fine.” Aizawa muttered. “The last I heard, he was in critical condition.”

“No...” Yaoyorozu put her hand over her mouth as the others grimaced.

“But the doctors will do everything they can.” Aizawa looked up, his eyes hardening. “We know that Joker is a fighter.”

“Did you know Joker’s true identity?” Todoroki asked.

Aizawa blinked. “... Yes.”

“Then-!”

Kirishima stopped when Aizawa held up his hand. “Tsukauchi and I knew for a long time who he was, but we’ll discuss this later. Tsukauchi pulled some strings to have officers drive you all home.” His eyes flashed once more. “Where you will get some rest and stay put until further notice. Expulsion isn’t the only thing on the line for all of you right now, excluding Bakugo. Do I make myself clear?”

They exchanged glances before Iida released a long sigh.

“Crystal, Sensei.”

“Good. Now scram. The officers are tired enough from this catastrophe, so don’t keep them waiting.”

Aizawa watched as they shuffled past, exhaustion and worry etched into their expressions. He felt bad sending them off like this. He ran a hand down his face when he was sure he was alone. What he wouldn’t give for some of Kurusu’s coffee.

“God damn it.” He muttered.

His phone vibrated a few times. He read Tsukauchi’s messages, his face rapidly losing color.

“Shit! ”

None of his students were there to see his frantic sprint out of the police station.

[Tsukauchi]

Aizawa, get to the hospital ASAP.

Joker’s condition is much worse than we thought, and...

Kunikazu is on his way here.

Hehehe....

See you guys next time on.... November 20th

Whims Of Fate

Chapter 61: Whims Of Fate

'So we roll the dice, see where they may fall

Come on why don't we spin the wheel, see whom it may call

To give into temptation

To win it

Or maybe lose it all, yeah~

Who knows where the Whims Of Fate may lead us?'

I will put a trigger warning for this chapter, because Akira declines pretty rapidly and it's not pretty.

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

FANART!

sirblack4 on Deviantart!

Aria on Twitter!

"Hello?" Akira called out.

A void devoured Akira's mindscape, smothering his vision in a thick veil of black. Akira looked down at his feet. His mirrored self, only visible by glowing yellow eyes, stared back at him, reflected a dozen times over from the jagged fractals splintering his inner world.

Akira stepped forward. Instead of the beautiful pops of color that appeared when he was Joker, the floor creaked and sprouted ominous cracks. Each fissure struck his soul, a crystal glass on the verge of shattering, but he kept moving forward. A form emerged from the darkness. He squinted, his breath shuddering when he recognized a familiar face.

“... Alice? Alice!”

The dark mirror crunched under his pounding footsteps. He threw his arms around her, desperate for any sort of familiar contact. But his body shivered as if he touched ice cold stone. He pulled back, gasping as he fell backwards.

Alice... no, there were others peeking through the darkness.

Ishtar, Titania, Black Frost. Orpheus Picaro reached out towards him, his face painted with pure terror.

All frozen like statues. Their colors grayed out as if they were carved from stone. Clay dolls that would never be fired, nor given paint, nor given any other sort of life past their initial creation. His eyes slowly raised to a giant figure crouched over all of them.

Satanael's wings shielded him, everyone, from the shards of broken sky plummeting all around the mindscape. Every crack and fracture rippled through him, cutting deep like gashes. His soul bled profusely with an unending torrent of black.

Muffled voices echoed through the mindscape, but such garbled noises weren't welcome in this little pocket of space. He clamped his hands over his ears. Why were they so loud? Why can't that frantic beeping noise just stop? Cold prickles danced over his skin, but at the same time he felt unbearably hot. His heart beat erratically as if he just chugged a gallon of Sojiro's darkest coffee.

He just wished that it would all go away, let him bask in his own hellscape in peace. A heaviness shrouded him like a weighted blanket. He just... wanted to close his eyes and sleep, plunge into the void waiting underneath the cracked surface of his mindscape.

Can't they tell that he just wanted to sleep ? The void was calling to him, he just had to let it take him, and all of his senses would cease to exist. A light flashed in the corner of his eye.

A drop of navy blue light descended from above. A card. A new bond born within the same breath as Satanael. It forbade him from following his urge to plunge into the peaceful darkness.

He extended his hand. The card lazily swiveled over his palm. A new energy nestled deep within his fractured soul like a freshly hatched bird.

This was... the World.

The outside voices grew in volume. Screams disturbed what should have been his peaceful slumber. A knot inside his chest tightened as the newborn energy nudged him towards the light.

Fight.

"Fine, just this once." He whispered as he raised the World into the inky sky.

Akira allowed the World to pull him into the living plane.

"He's had two seizures since his arrival and his brain activity is highly abnormal. I've scheduled some blood tests and an MRI in a couple of hours, pending his status, as well as sending samples of that black stuff to the lab for testing. We'll be pushing fluids in the meantime. He's not out of the woods yet."

"... Thank you, Doctor." Nezu said evenly.

Nezu stared through the ICU window. His heart twisted at the boy swamped in tubes and needles. The heart monitor let off slow rhythmic beeps, and the oxygen mask fogged over with raspy breaths. The boy was so pale that it outclassed the snowy brilliance of his own fur, a sheen of sweat dampened his skin and feverish chills wracked the boy's body.

He looked over his shoulder to Miruko, who leaned against the wall. Her arms were crossed and her leg incessantly bouncing. No broken bones or bloody wounds marred her body, not even the tiniest of scrapes could be found.

"Hey! You can't go in there!!"

They jumped at the voices booming in the hallway.

"Stop!" Tsukauchi's voice echoed. "Under what jurisdiction is this even legal!? You have no right !"

"What the hell -" Miruko growled.

Several bodies dove into the ICU room. Nezu stormed inside, his rage building as he watched Kunikazu and police officers flock around Kurusu. Tsukauchi made an attempt to block them, but he was overpowered and pushed to the side.

"What do you think you're doing!?" Nezu shouted.

"We're doing what you should've done at the scene." Kunikazu turned to Nezu, his eyes smoldering. "I'm taking this criminal to Tartarus."

"You will do no such thing!"

The doctor, a small woman with glowing golden hair tied in a bun, marched up to Kunikazu. The man was two full heads taller than her, but despite her short stature, fury lay within every fiber of her being. A goddess of unimaginable wrath.

“Stand down, doctor.” Kunikazu said turned to the officers. “Do it.”

“No! Lay a hand on him and I swear to all of you that you will lose your jobs or worse .” She leveled her sharp gaze on the officers, who shirked back. “This child is not stable! Moving him right now could kill him.”

“If anyone is losing their job over this, it would be you .” Kunikazu spat. “Don’t you understand the chaos the public is in because of him!?”

“The way I understand it,” The doctor crossed her arms. “It was that villain’s fault for causing such a ruckus, not Joker’s.”

“Joker executed somebody on live television!” Kunikazu’s nostrils flared. “Those underground cameras were still live when the villain’s body fell into that chasm! Joker has proven too dangerous to be kept in the public. As President of the Hero Commission, I am ordering them to take that criminal to Tartarus!”

Nezu grinned as he watched the doctor emanate such a strong unadulterated wrath that it made every hair on their bodies stand on end. There was a reason Nezu kept in close contact with the best of Recovery Girl’s proteges.

“I don’t care. Who. You. Are.” She punctuated every word with a jab to Kunikazu’s chest. “This is my hospital, and I will not tolerate your attitude any longer. Either get out, or I’ll have you thrown out. Don’t test me on this.”

“You cannot keep him safe forever.” Kunikazu looked past the doctor to Nezu, his eyes glowing an infernal gold. “It’s only a matter of time. Mark my words, this murderer will be locked in the depths of Tartarus and there’s nothing you can do to stop it.”

A new pressure reaped the precious air from their lungs and filled their veins with ice. Machine alarms blared and the heart monitor went on the fritz.

“S-sir!”

They whipped around as the police officers backpedaled away from the bed.

Kurusu was awake, and his foggy, terrified eyes were locked on Kunikazu.

Aizawa's thunderous expression frightened off any curious nurses as he stormed towards the ICU.

“I’m telling you I’m fine!” A familiar voice echoed down the hall. “I’ll do whatever tests you want later, but right now somebody needs me!”

“Sir!” A nurse buzzed around Toshinori as he walked through the hall with the same fire as Aizawa. “Your body just went through a major traumatic change! We have to make sure that... that Joker’s healing didn’t mess with anything-”

“I assure you, I’m fine. I feel better than I have in years!” Toshinori’s eyes met Aizawa’s, relief shooting through him. “Aizawa! I take it you’re here to-”

“Yes .” Aizawa snapped. “I know what room he’s in, but we have to hurry.”

“But-”

Aizawa looked at the flustered nurse. “I’ll take care of this idiot and have Recovery Girl wack him for his stupidity later.”

“Hey!”

The nurse huffed, but she relented. The odd pair rushed through the hallways. Aizawa carefully listened to Toshinori’s breathing in case he had to tell him to wait or slow down. There was no wheezing, or any trace of blood on his lips. His fresh hospital clothes were clean. Toshinori didn't show any sort of strain.

"I'm fine, Aizawa."

"Just making sure." Aizawa looked forward. "We need to be at our very best if we're to help Akira."

"I know." Toshinori clutched his left side, his expression grim. "My scar... my injury is completely healed." Aizawa widened his eyes as Toshinori scowled. "I owe Joker more than I could ever give back. I should have been the one to put that villain down, not an innocent teenager. Now he has to bear the repercussions-"

Aizawa shivered when a wintry bite chilled the air and stopped them dead in their tracks. Electricity jolted up their spines as a raw, hair raising scream ripped through the hospital. Terror plunged into their souls as that scream was followed by a bloodthirsty howl and loud crashes.

"Aizawa!!" Toshinori called as Aizawa surged forward.

Terrified police officers poured out of one room, all nurses and doctors dove underneath the main nurse station for the ICU. Aizawa's blood boiled as Kunikazu slowly stepped backwards out of the room, face sweaty and pale as a sheet.

Aizawa shoulder checked Kunikazu as he jumped into the fray.

The bed was overturned and tables smashed to bits, equipment and broken glass peppered the floor. Miruko stood valiantly in front of Nezu, Tsukauchi, and a short doctor, but the main form that drew Aizawa's eyes was-

Cerberus, whose eyes glowed a bright citrine, his snowy white fur darkened into a dreary gray. Sharp cracks mottled his skin. Red energy blazed around Cerberus and black ooze bubbled under his feet. The air shook under another mighty howl, glass shards and broken plastic vibrated by the force of it.

“Aizawa!” Tsukauchi pointed to the person behind Cerberus.

Akira.

Crumpled against the wall to make himself as small as possible. His hair covered most of his face, but thick trickles of black poured from his eyes and mouth as the boy gripped his head with bone white knuckles.

“Hey ugly!!” Miruko shouted.

Cerberus whipped towards her with a pained yowl.

Aizawa didn't think.

He moved .

Aizawa skid under Cerberus as he swiped at Miruko, his claws cleaving a few strands of her hair when she bounced around the room. The beast screamed with rage when Aizawa wrapped his arms around Akira, but Miruko planted herself in between them. He held the boy tight as Cerberus' whipping tail sent equipment across the room.

“Akira, it's okay!” Aizawa pulled back and softly lifted Akira's head until they stared eye to eye. Aizawa pushed away his terror at the nightmarish goop dripping down the kid's porcelain face or the bandages around his shoulders seeping with crimson. “You're safe ! I promise that I'll do everything in my power to protect you. I won't let them lay a finger on you!!”

Cerberus froze mid strike.

“Sojiro...?” Akira blinked, a haze clouding his silvery eyes. Crystalline tears trailed down his cheeks and cleared away some of the ichor. “I-I...”

Aizawa's eyes softened as Akira collapsed into Aizawa's chest, his forehead resting on Aizawa's collarbone. Akira's arms wrapped around Aizawa and clawed into the back of his shirt. Aizawa held the trembling child in his arms as the kid finally broke down.

"I-I'm scared, Sojiro." Akira whispered. "I... I want to go home. I just want to see everyone... Don't let them take me, I-I can't go into the interrogation room again... please..."

"It's okay." Aizawa curled protectively around Akira. "Everything's going to be okay. I promise ."

Cerberus vanished. A dreadful silence washed over the destroyed ICU as everything returned to normal. The doctor's steps disturbed the glinting glass shards and her shadow fell over them.

"We should move him to another room." She stated. "He needs to be-"

"... Akira? Kid?" Ice returned to Aizawa's veins as Akira went limp. "Hey, stay with me!"

He wasn't breathing. Aizawa put two fingers to the boy's neck, but there was no pulse .

"Lay him out, quick!" The doctor ordered. "He's going under cardiac-"

Akira's body jolted as if he was struck with a bolt of lightning. Horrible wheezing scraped into Aizawa's ears. Their eyes met. Akira's fingers grasped onto the front of Aizawa's suit.

"Please, just make it stop-"

Aizawa's relief suffered a grisly death as Akira's eyes rolled into the back of his head. Black dripped from everywhere . Akira's hand dropped as he convulsed.

"He's having another seizure!" She shouted as she kneeled down. "Turn him on his side, hurry!!"

Aizawa did as she instructed as other nurses rushed inside. Aizawa and the others were pushed out as nurses traversed the wreckage and wheeled fresh equipment to the room. The door closed in their faces, the last thing Aizawa saw was Akira writhing on the floor in agony.

A beat of silence stewed in rage.

“You .” Aizawa whirled around to Kunikazu, who leaned against the nurse’s station. “What the hell did you do to him!?”

“Aizawa-” Tsukauchi tried to step between them, but Miruko latched onto the detective’s arm.

“That kid would have been fine if Kunikazu didn’t storm in there!” Miruko’s eyes bored into Kunikazu. “Now... now he’s-”

“I did what you all refused to do at the scene.” Kunikazu snorted as he straightened his tie. “Protocol states that any villain with outstanding charges is immediately surrendered to the Commission to be processed at Tartarus. It is your group breaking the law by taking him here.”

“‘Protocol’ had nothing to do with what just happened in there.” They stared at Nezu, whose beady eyes became as sharp as a knife. “What you did was beyond comprehension, Kunikazu. That was not ‘protocol’, it was a child having a temper tantrum because he won’t get what he wants.” Nezu’s words came out slow and soft, like a predator stalking their prey. “Kurusu was already unstable, but if he sustains permanent damage because of the stunt you just pulled-” Nezu stared up at Kunikazu, but he didn’t feel like the small one here. “Then I will personally see to it that you lose everything you’ve ever worked for.”

Kunikazu’s eyes flickered. “Is that a threat?”

“No.”

Their eyes turned down the hall, where All Might stood. Steam wafted from his muscles and his clothes were pulled tight. He bore his signature smile, yet it was the sort of smile an executioner might bare towards the most heinous of villains. His shadowed eyes gleamed bright as he held up a fist.

“It’s a promise, Kunikazu!” All Might boomed.

Kunikazu blinked slowly. “And how long are you able to keep your form now, Yagi? By my count, it’s only been ten seconds-”

All Might deflated. He coughed as streams of vapor coursed around him, but it was more of a natural reaction that had been ingrained into him through years of pain. There wasn’t a drop of blood in sight.

“Enough.” A deep voice interrupted.

“Chief Tsuragamae!” Tsukauchi said. “What are you doing here?”

The dog headed Chief of Police stepped next to Yagi.

“I was already on my way here.” Tsuragamae said as he scanned the group, his eyes landing on Kunikazu. “What is Kurusu’s status?”

Aizawa scowled. “He relapsed and started having another seizure.”

Tsuragamae’s expression soured. “I was afraid that something like this would happen. So I made a few calls.” Tsuragamae glared at Kunikazu. “There will be grave repercussions for you if Joker’s health declines.”

“What authority do you have over me?” Kunikazu snapped.

“Perhaps none, at this moment.” Tsuragamae growled. “However, because of the circumstances, I managed to get the hearing for Nezu’s program pushed up. A judge will be here tomorrow morning to decide who get custody of Joker.”

Aizawa’s jaw went slack. “He’s coming here ?”

“Seeing how this case progressed, and the increasing severity of it, the court has agreed to hold the hearing in a private conference room in this very hospital.” Tsuragamae looked everyone in the eye. “The hearing will be eight o’clock tomorrow morning. Get some rest, gather your testimonies. Until then, Joker shall remain in this hospital under the watchful eye of doctors. No exceptions.”

The ICU door opened and all eyes turned to the golden haired doctor.

“How is he, Zoey?” Nezu asked softly.

“He stopped seizing.” She sighed and shook her head. “But it doesn’t look good. His vitals are all over the place.”

“Can you do the scans before tomorrow morning?” Nezu asked. “We should have the full scope of the damage before the hearing tomorrow.”

“They will have to wait until we’re sure he’s stabilized enough...” She said, “But if everything clears up, then yes. We can do them first thing tomorrow.”

“Well, no matter.” Kunikazu rubbed his hands together, a tiny smirk pricking his lips. “Tomorrow will decide that criminal’s fate, with or without the scans.”

The man turned and stalked down the hallway.

“I... I don’t like how quick he changed his tune.” Tsukauchi muttered.

“I want Kurusu to be protected. Guards posted outside his room and eyes on the boy at all times.” Tsuragamae said as he watched Kunikazu disappear around the corner. “Kunikazu is not allowed to see the boy.”

“Agreed.” Aizawa growled.

“We should call in more heroes from your particular group, Miruko.” Nezu said. “I’m sure they’ll be happy to be of aid.”

“Hell yeah!” Miruko said as she cracked her knuckles. “They’ll jump at the opportunity to protect Joker from that scumbag.”

“Any extra hands will help.” The doctor pinched the bridge of her nose, “Both for Kurusu, and for the media storm right outside our doorstep. I don’t trust any of those vultures not to do something stupid.”

“I’ll make the call.” Tsuragamae stated. “We should also keep an eye on the vents and the windows.”

“The vents?” The doctor asked, brows furrowed.

“In case we get any unexpected visitors.” Nezu chuckled. “I believe Hawks would be the perfect person to keep an eye on them. Just an added precaution.”

A pair of nurses rolled a fresh bed into Kurusu’s room. They emerged a moment later. Kurusu was unconscious and wrapped up with blankets, a delicate breathing mask strapped to his face and his arms wired with IV’s.

“I’m going with him.” Miruko stated as she went to Kurusu’s side. “I’ll beat Kunikazu back if he tries anything else!”

Toshinori rubbed the back of his neck. “I also wish to stay with the boy, just in case.”

“That’s fine.” The doctor said as a tiny smirk bloomed on her face. “But I’m still telling Recovery Girl where you are. She still needs to perform a full examination on you.”

Toshinori paled, but he frantically nodded as he and Miruko followed the nurses to Kurusu’s new room.

“You don’t think Recovery Girl could heal Kurusu?” Tsukauchi asked.

“That would be unwise.” Nezu glared at the floor. “We don’t know if Kunikazu worsened the boy’s condition with that act, and it would be dangerous to drain his energy when he’s already so exhausted.”

“I don’t get why he didn’t heal himself when he summoned Cerberus.”

“He wasn’t in his right mind, Tsukauchi.” Aizawa shook his head. “Cerberus was trying to protect him from... from being taken. He begged me not to let them take him to an interrogation room .”

“We won’t let anything else happen.” Nezu’s tail flicked from side to side. “In any case, let’s use these precious hours wisely. This boy is counting on us, now more than ever.”

Aizawa remained rooted to the spot as the others split ways. All except for Nezu, who stared at him knowingly. Aizawa looked down at himself, his suit stained with gleaming globs of black. Was that press conference to distract the villains only a few hours ago? It felt like an age. He tore out his bun and allowed his long hair to drape over his face.

“Aizawa?” Nezu put a paw to the man’s leg. “What is it?”

“Akira had no pulse. How in the world is he still...” The image of him clutching Akira’s lifeless body churned his stomach. “I don’t understand. Is that what he went through when I... my quirk-”

“Think no more about that, Aizawa. The boy’s resilience is astounding.” Nezu fidgeted with the end of his sleeve. “We have to have faith that he will make it through this.”

Sourness prickled across Aizawa’s expression.

“Aizawa, this is an order. Go home, get a shower. Eat something . Come back refreshed.” Nezu peered into him. “And after, we’ll fight Kunikazu tooth and nail. You need to be at your full strength. Am I understood?”

“... Yes.”

“Good. You leave the rest to me.” Nezu turned on his heel.
“Everything shall be decided tomorrow.”

“-In other news, Joker’s civilian identity and All Might’s true form have caused quite a stir.” Demizu Mika gestured to the sea of reporters and cameras surrounding the hospital. “Many are demanding that the heroes make a statement, and are wondering on Joker’s status following his collapse, and All For One’s death, on live television. So far, the hospital doors have remained closed. No statement about Joker or All Might’s health have been released to the public. We’ll have more on this shocking story, as it breaks. Demizu Mika, signing off!”

Inko should be furious, but she only found herself conflicted.

The crying child she held in her arms all those weeks ago was a genuine, good boy. Her gut instinct told her that he was telling the truth about his bad home life, but to think that all this time he was a wanted vigilante, let alone how he had just killed somebody...

A villain.

An evil man that targeted her baby, and it was Joker that protected Izuku during their escape.

Inko picked up the remote and muted the television as it replayed the Kamino Incident.

“Izuku...” Tears burned her eyes and she shook her head. “Why were you at Kamino? Just why?”

The front door opened. Inko stood from the couch as her son stepped into the living room, shoulders slumped. Izuku looked at her with a watery, broken expression. The bags under his eyes were so dark. All of the sour words and will to discipline her son just... melted away as she opened her arms.

Izuku crashed into her.

"It's okay, Izuku..." She said as she ran her hand through his hair. "Everything will be alright."

"Why didn't he just tell us the truth?"

Inko's heart twisted as her eyes fell on the television, where Kurusu stood upon the palm of that ginormous angel... demon? Devil ? She wasn't entirely sure.

"I don't know, baby. M-maybe he was scared, or lost... or maybe he just didn't know who to trust." She pulled back and locked her hands on his shoulders. "But whatever it is, you don't have to forgive him right away if you don't want to."

"But... what if something happens to him before I... What if he..." The trademark Midoriya waterworks flowed from his eyes. "I j-just can't..."

Inko drew him back into her arms, and they cried together in the safety of their apartment.

The Todoroki manor became steeped in a dreadful air. Not a wink of sleep came between them, and while Fuyumi made a full sprawling breakfast after Shoto and Momo shambled into the house, nobody had the appetite. Instead, the four of them huddled around the living room, cups of steaming chamomile tea sat on the table.

Fuyumi frowned at the television. "They're still going on about it?"

"Of course they are, Fuyumi." Shoto whispered. "What else are they going to talk about on national news?"

“I’m just glad that you two came back safe.” Fuyumi put a hand to Shoto’s shoulder. “You had us worried sick!”

“... Yeah.”

“I KNEW IT!!!”

“Natsuo, please.” Fuyumi glared at her brother. “What is it now?”

“I figured out where I’ve seen Kurusu before!!” Natsuo said, grinning.

“Really?” Shoto glanced behind him. “Where?”

“At the mall! I- Oh my god.” Natsuo paced behind the couch. “I can’t believe I bought Joker his own merch, with Endeavor’s credit card! Do you think he knew!?”

“Given how intelligent Kurusu is, I would say he did.” Momo rubbed her arm, her eyes downcast. “I can’t believe he deceived us for so long. I never thought such a powerful vigilante would moonlight as a quirkless barista, let alone how... attached our class would get to him.”

“Sorry.” Natsuo stopped in his tracks. “I didn’t mean to-”

“No, don’t worry about it.” Momo attempted a weak smile. “Shoto, has Iida texted you back yet?”

“Yes.” Shoto scrolled through his phone. “He said his brother is at the hospital with some other heroes. We know that Endeavor is there, too. Whatever is happening, it can’t be good.”

“... I see.” Momo sighed as she snatched her phone. “Mina is absolutely heartbroken. I don’t think our class is responding well to this at all. Kurusu’s situation, paired with All Might’s true form, might be too much for them to handle.”

Shoto scowled.

“Hey, come on, you guys!” Natsuo threw on a grin. “Cheer up! This is Joker we’re talking about. He’ll... he’ll be fine! You can work past this when he gets better, I know it.”

Shoto’s eyes flicked up to the television screen. “... Let’s hope so.”

“No, this can’t be right...”

“Maybe the machine is malfunctioning dear,” Recovery Girl frowned as she look at the scans. “I suggest we do more, just to be sure.”

Zoey leaned back on the chair as she stared through the window, where the boy lay inside a massive machine. Kurusu hasn’t regained consciousness since the incident. It was more likely that he fell into a coma because of Kunikazu’s recklessness.

“I suggest we check the machine and redo the scan.” She said as she scrolled through her computer. “It’s just... this has to be an error.”

“Dear,” Recovery Girl patted her arm. “There’s always the chance that these results are genuine. This boy’s powers have confounded many people. He’s such a unique individual.”

“‘Unique’ is putting it lightly. His whole make-up shouldn’t even be possible!” She huffed. “He has no quirk factor? There haven’t been brains like this since before the era of quirks!”

“I know.” Recovery Girl furrowed her brow as she looked through the window. “Nezu loves nothing more than to exploit loopholes at the Commission’s expense. He is going to have a field day.”

“Recovery Girl,” Zoey pursed her lips. “Nezu can exploit all the loopholes he wants, but if the hemorrhaging of his brain is this severe... then it won’t matter. How are we going to tell them?”

“We cannot hide it.” The older woman sighed and sagged into her chair “This poor child.”

“R-right. One more scan, and then I’ll go straight to the hearing.”

They went silent as a weight settled in their hearts. The others were working so hard to get custody of this kid, but...

They might already be too late.

Gang Orca and Ryukyu prowled down the hospital hallway with a profound sense of purpose. Any hospital staff took a single look and ran the other way for fear of being hunted by this pair of furious apex predators.

“Gang Orca, Ryukyu.”

They stopped in their tracks as somebody came through another intersecting hallway.

“Jeanist!?” Some of Ryukyu’s rage drained away with shock. “You’re awake!”

Gang Orca looked his fellow hero up and down. “You’re back in your hero costume already? How are you feeling?”

“I... am fine.” Best Jeanist put a hand on his stomach, his eyes turning thoughtful. “Tsuragamae brought me up to speed when I woke up.”

“Are you sure you’re feeling up for this?” Ryukyu asked as she crossed her arms. “We’re going up against Kunikazu.”

“Yes .” Best Jeanist’s hands formed into fists. “If it wasn’t for Joker’s healing... I might as well be dead. I’m going to fight for him, no matter what.”

Gang Orca exchanged a long glance with Ryukyu.

“Okay.” Gang Orca said. “Then feel free to come in with us.”

“We’re already running late.” Ryukyu marched down the hallway.
“Let’s not waste any more time.”

They reached the conference room and Ryukyu threw open the door. The disparity was staggering. The top heroes in Japan were all crowded on one side, along with Nezu, Aizawa, Tsukauchi, Iida Tensei, and Chief Tsuragamae.

Hawks sank into his chair and stared at the table, as if he wished to be devoured by the void.

Endeavor, far too large to be sitting in such a small chair, was beside Hawks. If this situation wasn’t so grave, then Ryukyu might say that Endeavor’s expression bordered on constipated.

A skeletal All Might sat in between Nezu and Aizawa.

Kunikazu sat alone on the other side, his lips curled as he stared directly at Hawks.

“Welcome,” A man stood at the head of the table, “Please take a seat, and then we can get started.”

Ryukyu’s resolve hardened as she sat down beside Miruko, who grinned as she swiveled in the chair. Gang Orca and Best Jeanist took the last remaining seats on their side of the table, the latter’s fiery eyes locked on Kunikazu.

“Good morning, everyone. I’m Judge Sadamu.” The man with black eyes straightened his dark suit. “We’re here to decide the placement of a young vigilante currently in this hospital. I’ll listen to both sides before taking the time to make my decision. This is an utterly unique situation that requires the utmost professionalism. Outbursts won’t be tolerated. Does everyone understand?”

A round of nods went around the room.

“Good.” The judge sat down and gestured to Kunikazu. “President Kunikazu, we’ll start with you.”

“Thank you.” Kunikazu stood to his full height. “Joker could easily be classified as an S-rank villain, and is far too dangerous to be kept with the general public. His powers are beyond our control. He attacked heroes right in this very hospital.”

“Only because you threatened to clap him in irons and throw him in Tartarus!!” Miruko yelled.

“Miruko, please contain yourself.” The judge said serenely.
“Otherwise you shall be removed. Understood?”

Miruko ground her teeth and nodded.

Kunikazu cleared his throat. “How much longer will it be before the public turns against heroes, and authority itself, because of him? Most importantly, he showed that he is willing to kill to fulfill his own agenda. Judge Sadamu-” Kunikazu slid a folder across the table. “Here are the results for All For One’s autopsy when his body was brought in earlier this morning. The man is unrecognizable. Joker’s demon reduced this man’s body into a mummified husk. No blood or viable tissue sample could be taken due to how fast decomposition took place.”

Hawks wrinkled his nose as the judge glanced through the file, frowning deeply.

“I ask this -” Kunikazu prowled back and forth across his side of the room. “What else can he do? The area around the Wild Wild Pussy Cat’s lodge is still experiencing mass landslides. What’s next? Tornadoes? Another typhoon? A tsunami that would wipe out entire coastlines? Would he slaughter more people like he did with All For One? For all of these reasons, I believe the custody of the criminal should fall to me.” Kunikazu stopped and stared at the judge. “His rightful place is Tartarus, where this uncontrollable mastermind can no longer be a danger to the people of this country.”

Kunikazu sat down and folded his hands on the table.

“Thank you, Kunikazu.” Judge Sadamu glanced to the other side of the table. “Which of you would like to go first?”

“I have something to say.” Toshinori rose to his feet. “I thought I killed All For One years ago. His death should not be placed on a young man fighting for his right to live. It should be placed on me, for failing to do my duty as the Number One Hero.”

“Joker brutally executed the villain on live television! Civilians are absolutely terrified of him now.” Kunikazu stated. “You cannot take the blame when the evidence is so concrete!”

“Enough.” Judge Sadamu held up a hand. “I will take that into consideration, if the other side could continue?”

“It’s true that Joker summoned a typhoon and caused insurmountable damage, but I counter Kunikazu’s statement with a single question.” Nezu’s ears pricked forward. “Why did Joker do those things? Was it not because the Hero Commission called a manhunt against a terrified boy? If it weren’t for that raid, then the typhoon would never have happened. As for the landslides, Joker did that to put an end to an army of Nomu and protect the students.” Nezu gestured to the others on his side. “These valiant heroes and those in the police force will attest to his character.”

“I detested Joker and took part in the raid.” Ryukyu squared her shoulders. “However, his own actions and words opened my eyes to what he really is, a boy that would do anything to protect those he cares about.”

“His sense of justice might seem skewed in the eyes of the law,” Gang Orca leaned forward, “But his heart is in the right place.”

“I agree.” Iida Tensei placed his hands on his knees. “Without Joker, I would never be able to walk again. All of Stain’s victims returned to their lives because of his selfless act of kindness.”

“I will stand by Joker.” Best Jeanist said. “Without him, I most likely would have died or been severely crippled due to the damage All For One inflicted on me. It’s also true that one of Joker’s companions healed and escorted dozens of citizens out of the danger zone.”

“Hell yeah!” Miruko cackled. “He would never hurt an innocent civilian on purpose!”

“Is it true that Joker was responsible for taking down multiple trafficking rings?” The judge asked.

“Yes.” Tsuragamae slid two bulging folders towards the judge. “I will provide the reports of each villain taken into custody and the victims who were rescued. Without Joker, those people would still be trapped and those rings would not have been taken down so quickly. The second folder holds every person he’s healed at Musutafu General Hospital, as well as heroes previously injured by Stain.”

Thick silence pervaded the room as Judge Sadamu flipped through the pages. The crinkle of paper hounded their ears until he shut the folders and placed them aside.

“Very well. I’ll accept these reports, and these heroes’ testimony, as evidence of Joker’s character.” Judge Sadamu said.

“I have a counter statement.”

“Go ahead, Kunikazu.” Judge Sadamu said with a cordial nod.

“I have read some interesting reports on Detective Tsukauchi and Eraserhead.” Kunikazu narrowed his eyes at the pair. “I heard that you two figured out Joker’s civilian identity long before anybody else. It’s your duty as authority figures to report such things. Why did you allow Joker to keep doing his illegal work?”

“It’s quite simple, Kunikazu.” Detective Tsukauchi smiled. “We gave Joker space and confronted him on neutral ground, without the threat of being arrested or causing potential harm to his well being.”

“Look what happened when we treated him with respect and eventually gained his trust. The evidence is in this room.” Aizawa glared daggers at Kunikazu. “He’s willing to work with heroes who give him a chance. This child does not deserve to be locked away in a maximum security prison.”

“So, it’s alright to bend the law when it suits you?” Kunikazu said, “And the fact of the matter is that you all bent the law to work with Joker. What’s to stop you from going even further? In fact, I think you already crossed the line, Nezu.”

“What do you mean, Kunikazu?” The judge asked.

“What was Joker doing at the Summer Camp?” Kunikazu jabbed his finger at Nezu. “Evidence suggests that they lodged in the very same place where the students and other faculty did. Police found their belongings on the second floor.”

The judge stared at Nezu. “Do you have an explanation for this?”

“Simple.” Nezu stated plainly. “I invited Joker and his team.”

“You invited them?” Kunikazu spat. “To a privately sanctioned trip from a top hero school ? Why in the world would you do such a thing?”

Nezu and Aizawa exchanged long glances before the mouse spoke up. “Because we knew the League Of Villains would attack the school, sooner or later.”

“You knew that you were going to be attacked?” The judge said, frowning.

“Yes.” Nezu said. “I wanted to keep their attack centralized in an unpopulated area. The League wanted to get to my students, it didn’t matter the location. If we chose to abandon plans for the Summer Camp, then they would have found another way to strike. What would be next? Hostages? The death of my students' family members?"

"Are you serious?" Kunikazu's eyes burned. "Look at what happened with Kamino! You dare say that this course of action was better?"

"An event like Kamino might have still occurred, with or without the Summer Camp." Toshinori stated. "I've known All For One for decades, he would have gotten what he wanted regardless if Nezu approved the Summer Camp or not. That villain was a walking calamity."

"But that's just speculation." Kunikazu waved his hand. "The hard facts are still in front of us. All of you turned your backs to the law and did what you wanted, regardless of the legal consequences."

"I have to agree with Kunikazu." Judge Sadamu sighed deeply, regret flashing in his eyes. "Nezu, I hope you can explain why you think your program should be approved in light of all of this."

"If he falls under U.A.'s custody," Nezu faced the judge head on, ignoring Kunikazu's words. "Then imagine what we will accomplish in the future. This young man is simply lost. With proper guidance, he would be an outstanding hero."

Judge Sadamu rapped his fingers on the table. "Endeavor, Hawks." The duo straightened in their chairs. "You've been quiet. What are your statements on this situation?"

"This child..." Endeavor held out his arm, where his scar from the golden dragon lay hidden beneath his sleeve. "He opened my eyes to what really matters in life and to the gaping discrepancies present in hero society. I believe that Joker should stand alongside the next generation of heroes so that they can make this society a better place for everyone."

Their eyes widened at Endeavor's words.

“Uh...” Hawks scratched the back of his head and avoided Kunikazu’s piercing gaze. “He’s a good kid who’s been through a lot of shit. He deserves a second chance.”

Kunikazu bristled. Hawks shrank further in his seat, sweat beading on his forehead.

“I see.” The judge stood from his chair. “I have heard everyone’s testimonies. We’ll take a short recess. I’ll announce my decision when we reconvene-”

A knock on the door interrupted them.

“I’m sorry to intrude.” The doctor walked inside, holding a folder to her chest.

“We were about to call a recess.” Judge Sadamu frowned. “Is this important?”

“... Yes, it is.” She stepped up to the table. “I have updates about Joker’s health that all parties need to hear.”

Judge Sadamu sat back down, and nodded at her.

“I’ve always hated this part of my job.” She put the files in the center of the table and opened it. “But I’m afraid that this hearing is ultimately pointless.”

“... What are you talking about?” Aizawa growled, his brows furrowed as he watched her place several brain scans on the table. “It’s anything but pointless!”

The doctor paused, her finger tracing over the final scan. “Joker is dying.”

The atmosphere would’ve been welcome in a funeral home. Nobody dared move, or speak, or even breathe too hard, for it could disrupt the fragile peace between both sides. A pin could drop, a bomb could’ve went off, and none of it would have mattered. Despair rattled the heroes' hearts as they took in the doctor's words. Kunikazu, on the other hand, looked as satisfied as a sunbathing feline.

"... I don't understand." Tsukauchi murmured.

"You.... you're not lying." Hawks spoke over his pounding heart and the lump stuck in his throat.

Kunikazu studied the scans. The heroes zeroed in on his expression as it shifted through several phases.

"Interesting." Kunikazu's smirk widened as he turned towards Aizawa. "What was it you said before? That putting Joker in Tartarus was a fate worse than death? Well, it looks like you got your wish."

Aizawa's eyes flashed red and his hair stood on end, but he was held back by Tsukauchi.

"L-let me explain." The doctor said as she pointed to the first scan. "At first, we thought this was a fluke, or that the machine was malfunctioning because according to these scans, Joker doesn't have a quirk factor."

"What ?" Tsukauchi's jaw dropped.

"But my quirk always worked on him, as well as suppressant cuffs!" Aizawa stated. "If this is your version of a sick joke-"

"It's not a joke ." The doctor snapped. She sighed when Aizawa and the others jumped at her tone.

"H-he..." Tsukauchi scrubbed his eyes. "My quirk always registered as truth when Kurusu said he was quirkless. Now it makes sense ."

"But how is this even possible?" Toshinori scratched the back of his neck. "Such strong powers... and no quirk factor? What could this mean?"

“Perhaps that’s why All For One was so interested in him.” Nezu criss-crossed his paws. “That man always loved studying such mysteries, and if Kurusu was in his grasp for so long-”

“A-about that-” They looked to Toshinori as he grimaced. “I don’t think All For One ever had him as a test subject.”

Nezu frowned. “What do you mean?”

“I confronted him about it at Kamino. He said he’s never had the boy as a test subject.”

“But he could’ve been lying to confuse you.” Tsukauchi said.

“No.” Toshinori put a hand over his chest. “He was telling the truth. All For One laughed at me. He said that we truly had no idea how special Joker was, and that his origins were... out of this world.”

“... Fascinating.” Nezu slowly turned to the scans, an unreadable glint sparked within his beady eyes. “Truly fascinating.”

“B-but a missing quirk factor doesn’t explain why he’s dying!!” Miruko threw her chair back and pounded her fist on the table. “Explain! Now!!”

“I’m not going to sugar coat it.” The doctor pointed to multiple discolored splotches on the scans. “Many areas of Kurusu’s brain are hemorrhaging. Given the extent of the damage... it’s not likely that he’ll ever wake up.”

“Recovery Girl can’t heal him?” Tsukauchi asked as the blood drained from his face.

“No. In his current state, her quirk would kill him.”

“This is bullshit.” Aizawa dragged a hand through his hair.

“I’m sorry.” The doctor bowed her head. “The most we can do is make him comfortable.”

“How long does he have?” Nezu asked.

“Nezu!” Aizawa glared at the rat, his eyes watering.

“We have to face the truth, Aizawa.” Nezu blinked rapidly as his own eyes watered. “How long does he have?”

“I...” She deflated as her hands knotted into fists. “It depends. It could be a matter of hours, it could be a day or two. We’ll make this as painless as possible for Joker.”

Aizawa shook his head rapidly as his shoulders shook. He ducked his face into his capture weapon and stormed out of the room.

“Aizawa!” Tsukauchi called.

“Let him go.” Toshinori said as a haunted look appeared in his eyes. “He needs time to process this. We all do.”

“Well then,” Kunikazu straightened his tie and raised his chin. “I suppose I’ll allow you the time to say goodbye, but I propose that we use his body for study after he passes. Such powers without a quirk factor? Think of what it could mean for science.”

SNAP!

The arms of Gang Orca’s chair broke under his grip. Plastic splinters flew around the room, but nobody bothered to comment on it.

“You-” Ryukyu’s eyes flashed with reptilian hostility. “You’re enjoying his suffering, aren’t you!?”

“Please, I have better things to do rather than watch a criminal deteriorate.” Kunikazu looked directly into Hawks’ eyes. “Joker will serve as an excellent example. Now, I have other appointments to keep. Excuse me.”

The man left the room, the door shutting softly behind him.

“Damnit... DAMNIT!!” Miruko pounded the table so hard that it split in half.

“We must calm ourselves.” Nezu stated, his voice cold and calculating.

“How can we be calm after all of this!?” Miruko shouted.

Instead of answering, Nezu looked at the doctor. “How recent is the damage to Kurusu’s brain?”

“Activating his quirk-” The doctor shook her head. “Or, well... forcefully summoning Cerberus in that state is what caused his last seizure. The time frame of the hemorrhaging matches with the incident with Kunikazu.”

“I see.” Nezu hopped down from his chair and walked out of the room.

“God dammit.” Tsukauchi ran a hand down his face. “La Brava and Gentle Criminal are still in custody. We have to tell them.”

“If you can, bring them here.” The doctor said as she gently gathered the scans together. “Everyone deserves to say goodbye to the ones they love.”

“That’s... I don’t know if I could get clearance for that.” Tsukauchi said.

“Judge Sadamu.” Chief Tsuragamae said, his voice grave. “Would you at least grant permission for Joker’s allies to say goodbye?”

“... Yes.” Judge Sadamu sank into his chair. “I could approve a transfer for these circumstances.”

“Of course.” Tsukauchi suddenly looked as if he gained ten years. “It’ll take a few hours to get the paperwork finalized, then I’ll bring them here.”

“I....” Hawks took a shaky breath, his face pallid. “Excuse me.”

Hawks bolted from his chair and out of the room.

“Hawks!!”

Miruko, Ryukyu, Best Jeanist, Tensei, and Gang Orca chased after him to the nearest bathroom.

Men’s bathroom be damned, Miruko kicked open the door and they all streamed inside.

“Hawks...” Ryukyu murmured as they listen to him lose his breakfast in the nearest stall.

Hawks spat into the toilet as acid coated his tongue. He flushed it before he dragged himself back out, collapsing against the wall and curling into himself. He couldn’t look into the others’ face as they all exchanged uneasy glances.

The air was sucked out of the room. Nobody could breathe. Their hearts beat as if there were daggers lodged in them.

“Th-this has to be a nightmare, right?” Tensei sagged to the floor. “It can’t be.”

Miruko whipped around with an angry shout.

Crunch .

“Miruko, I don’t think punching through the wall will help.” Ryukyu said as exhaustion washed over her.

“What else are we supposed to do!?” Miruko yelled as she threw her hands up in the air, dust falling from her knuckles. “It wasn’t supposed to be like this! It wasn’t... that kid was going to be fine !!”

“I wish...” Best Jeanist clutched his stomach, his brow knotted. “I could give back what Joker gave me. He doesn’t deserve this.”

“It’s Kunikazu’s fault.” Hawks growled as he forced himself to his feet. “That asshole caused all of this. I’m going to make him pay .”

“Hawks!” Gang Orca snatched Hawk’s arm. “Don’t do anything that you’ll regret. We cannot act on our anger right now!”

Hawks stiffened. Gang Orca’s hand trembled over Hawks’ arm. But whether it was from rage or grief... or both, Hawks didn’t know.

“I’m just going to say a few explicit words.” Hawks pulled his arm back. “I promise I won’t lay a finger on him.”

Hawks, his wings drooping so low that his feathers brushed the floor, left the bathroom.

“I need some air.” Miruko stated as she scrubbed her eyes and held back a snuffle, the door slamming behind her.

“I think we all need some air.” Gang Orca looked in between the others. “Come on, let’s not linger here any longer.”

“... You’re right.” Ryukyu said as she helped Tensei up.

Miruko pounded down a separate hallway.

Jeanist headed off to who knows where, remnants of deep seated guilt weighing on his heart.

Tensei’s world became a hazy blur as the rest went to the rooftop. The pleasant breeze brushed their faces, the late afternoon sun shone brightly upon the ruins of Kamino in the distance. The clear blue sky had no right to be so damn happy .

Ryukyu and Gang Orca paced together around the edge of the rooftop, whispering among themselves. They stopped halfway across the building. The duo looked down at the growing sea of journalists and Joker fans congregating outside the building. Endeavor’s sidekicks and a squad of police officers kept them at bay.

Another realization sent roiling dread through Tensei's body. His baby brother had admired Kurusu and shared tales of what the 'quirkless barista' did before this whole mess. Joker's own smile flashed in Tensei's mind. A bubble locked in his throat as he imagined what his little brother must be feeling right about now.

Tensei looked to the sky as a lone cloud blotted out the sun, the cool shade splashing the rooftop with a blanket of shadow.

He just wanted to go home and hug his little brother.

"Nana..."

Toshinori, slumped over on a hospital bench, clenched his shaking hands together. He glanced at Joker's room across the hallway. A few heroes from Joker's group were inside, whispering between one another. Hawks was gone. Best Jeanist had his own room down the hall. They switched rooms every once in a while, their expressions more grim than ever before.

The air coming from Joker's room was morose, as if they were attending the boy's wake. But judging from how his heartbeat weakened over time-

It made him feel sick to his stomach.

His... stomach. Toshinori ran a hand over his side. Smooth skin brushed his fingertips instead of an ugly mass of scar tissue. He took a breath. Free and clean of coppery undertones or lancing pains that would cause his whole body to seize up. He had forgotten how painless it was for other people to just breathe .

"Toshinori..."

"Gran Torino." Toshinori stood from the bench as two figures approached. "Sasaki..."

Nighteye adjusted his glasses, his expression neutral. “How are you feeling?”

“I... I feel better than I have in years. Like... like before All For One gave me that injury.”

Gran Torino tutted as he hopped on the bench. “Did Recovery Girl clear you?”

“Y-yes. My stomach and lung have been... regrown.” Toshinori swallowed. “She’ll put me on a meal and exercise plan to help me gain a healthy weight. I... I’m still having doubts that this is real.”

“Like a dream.” Nighteye’s brow pinched together. “How about your quirk?”

“I can retain my other form for a few seconds, nothing more.” Toshinori shook his head. “I’ll officially have to retire.”

Nighteye’s expression soured.

“What’s up with you?” Gran Torino asked.

“Nothing... or it should be nothing.” Nighteye glanced through the window to Joker’s room. “This is not what I witnessed. The events I saw are practically nonexistent.”

“Wh-what do you mean?” Toshinori asked, his face paling.

“Meaning that I have a theory about Joker.” Nighteye shook his head. “He was the reason behind the Sapporo raid, where my quirk acted highly unusual. If my theory is correct, then Joker himself is the reason my quirk went haywire. Toshinori, when I used my quirk all those years ago and predicted your death...” A hollowness came into the man’s eyes. “I saw... none of this. Joker was never supposed to be here.”

Toshinori and Gran Torino exchanged glances.

“What, are you saying the kid is a paradox or something?” Gran Torino muttered.

“I don’t know.” Nighteye said.

“All For One said something strange about Joker, and Nezu has been acting differently since I told him the man’s words.”

“What did that bastard say?” Gran Torino asked with narrowed eyes.

“That Joker’s origins were ‘out of this world’.” Toshinori scowled when their expressions became skewed. “I know. It makes no sense to me.” His eyes turned towards the teenager laying comatose in the hospital bed. “But if he’s not one of All For One’s experiments... then who is he? Where did he come from? All of Nezu’s theories were wrong, and we’re right back at square one.”

“The only one to know the truth is Joker himself.” Nighteye’s expression softened. “I’m sorry to say that we might never get those answers.”

Toshinori grimaced. He frantically shook his head to clear these thoughts, but the reminder of his failure was right in front of him.

“What about Nana’s family?” He latched onto the other subject worming through his mind. “Did you find anything....?”

The two men deflated.

“Yes... we found them.” Gran Torino curled his lip. “Nana’s son, and most of his family, were all murdered years ago.”

The world tilted as the ground under Toshinori’s feet were torn out from under him. He sank back into the bench as the dizziness overwhelmed him.

“And Young Tenko...?”

“Listed as missing.” Nighteye pinched the bridge of his nose. “But if All For One was telling the truth about his protege, then we all know where he ended up. All For One must’ve scooped him up and twisted him into a monster.”

“Don’t say that!”

“Toshinori, calm down!” Gran Torino snapped. “You have to face it. What will you do when we face Shigaraki again? All For One sculpted him to hate heroes. Shigaraki will see his mentor murdered on live television, and now that Joker is...” Gran Torino sank into himself, his wrinkles filling with shadow. “How do you think he’ll react when he learns that the boy who killed his mentor will die anyway? Shigaraki won’t be able to take his revenge. Do you know what he might do with all of those unstable emotions? The next time he appears, he has to go down. This is what we have to do.”

“To honor Nana.” Toshinori whispered.

Gran Torino firmly nodded. “Exactly.”

A shadow lurked behind them. “Considering the circumstances, I don’t think you’d be able to fight Shigaraki.”

“Aizawa...” Toshinori stood as the haggard man walked down the hallway. “Where have you been? It’s already dark outside.”

“I needed some time to clear my head.” Aizawa’s eyes fell to Joker’s room. “... How is he?”

Toshinori shook his head.

Aizawa’s lips pursed. “I see.”

“How are you handling this?” Nighteye asked softly. “You’re one of the heroes who’s known him the longest.”

“How do you think?” Aizawa growled as his hands knotted into fists. “We’re finally able to get him this far, and he just... he’s.... damnit .

This wasn't how things were supposed to be!"

"Stewing in guilt's not going to help anything." Gran Torino said. "Do you really think the boy would want you to beat yourself up over this?"

"... No." Aizawa said as he buried his face in his capture weapon. "You know, I remember the first time we met, clear as day."

"At the USJ?" Toshinori asked.

"Yeah. The brat healed me and then had the gall to-"

Toshinori frowned as Aizawa went stiff. "Aizawa?"

"Healing ." Aizawa jolted as if he had been electrocuted. "Where are Detective Tsukauchi and Nezu!?"

"Uh..." Toshinori opened and closed his mouth several times as Aizawa's eyes bored into his. "They left to finalize some paperwork with Tsuragamae and the judge, a-and then they would go pick up La Brava and Gentle Criminal and take them here? Why are you asking?"

"Mona."

"Mona?" Nighteye tilted his head to the side. "You mean Joker's cat?"

"Yes!" Aizawa snatched his phone from his pocket and speed dialed Nezu. "Mona has the same power as Joker. His companion, Mercurius, took a bullet for me during the Summer Camp and then healed himself right after."

Toshinori's eyes lit up. "Mona could heal Joker?"

"Yes. It's possible that Gentle Criminal and La Brava could bring Mona here and-" Aizawa tore the phone away and redialed. "Damnit, why isn't Nezu picking up!?"

“Come to think of it, they’ve been gone for hours. It’s already getting late.” Nighteye frowned. “I don’t know what’s taking them so long.”

“I’ll try calling Tsukauchi.” Toshinori said as he grabbed his phone and dialed his best friend. After a few moments listening to the dial tone, a rock sank into his gut. “He’s not picking up either.”

“Odd.” Nighteye got out his phone, dialed, and held it to his ear. “Chief Tsuragamae isn’t answering.”

“Shit .” Gran Torino spat. “This can’t be good.”

“Let’s calm down and confer with the other heroes.” Nighteye turned towards Joker’s room. “The more people we have, the faster we can get answers. Joker doesn’t have much time.”

They streamed into Joker’s room.

Gang Orca sat on Kurusu’s left side, giant hand gently ruffling the kid’s hair.

Ryukyu was on the other side, both hands gently clutching Joker’s, careful not to disturb the IV.

Miruko leaned against the end of Joker’s bed. Her red eyes locked onto them like homing beacons.

“Is something wrong?” Ryukyu asked softly.

“Yeah, with expressions like that-” Miruko cracked her knuckles. “Who do I have to punch?”

Aizawa shook his head. “Nobody, yet.”

“Yet?” Gang Orca said.

“There might be a way to save Joker.” Aizawa shook off the way they jumped in their skins. “But we need Gentle Criminal and La Brava first. Tsukauchi and Nezu were supposed to bring them here, but they aren't back yet and they haven't been responding to any of our calls. It's possible that something went wrong."

Ryukyu's grip on Kurusu's hand tightened. "Take a step back. How will those two be able to save Joker?"

"Mona has healing powers." Aizawa's expressions hardened. "His other teammates might know where to find him. If we can bring Mona here-

"We can save Joker!?"

"Miruko!" Ryukyu hissed. "We're in a hospital!"

"I'm not sorry!"

"There's a chance we could save Joker." Nighteye said. "We don't know if Mona's powers are going to be enough."

"Its our best shot." Gang Orca rose from his chair.

"You have yet to realize something." Gran Torino grumbled. "If Joker does end up being healed, then there's still a chance that he could be shipped straight off to Tartarus. The justice system won't look kindly upon you all breaking the rules for him. Kunikazu is going to do whatever it takes to bring him in. Ask yourselves, is this really what you want?"

"We cannot sit here and do nothing!" Toshinori said.

A familiar voice turned their blood to ice.

Akira found the darkness of his splintered mindscape peaceful.

Once again, he stood in the center of the creaking crevice, which spider-webbed as far as the eye could see. The plunging drop into the void was but a step away. The noises from the outside world were garbled, but if he focused, familiar voices became clearer.

Heroes he thought he could trust. Were they in league with the man with glowing yellow eyes? The same man who wanted to throw him in the darkest cell in Japan?

Sojiro promised that he wouldn't let the yellow eyed man hurt him. Who was telling the truth? Whose side were the heroes on!?

He took a breath as he tried to make sense of the noise.

"-we need to find Gentle Criminal and La Brava.... Tsukauchi and Nezu were supposed to- It's possible that something is wrong."

Something is wrong? What happened to his friends....?

"His other teammates might know where to find him. If we can bring Mona here-"

Mona...?

"-be shipped straight off to Tartarus."

No.

No!

Did they want to throw them in that prison too? His teammates would come and rescue him no matter what, but this hospital was infested by heroes. Is that their plan? Dangle him like a lure to entrap his teammates?

He would rather die than be used as bait.

A realization froze Akira.

He would rather...

Die.

Akira listened to the void's siren calls. The Personas, reduced to tranquil statues as black ooze dripped down their faces, could not stop the inevitable. Orpheus Picaro's Endure and Cerberus' Enduring Soul had been used. His body teetered on the brink between life and death, but death wasn't permanent in this world.

Mona...

Akira swallowed. This place overrun by powerful people, but there would be no reason to watch a dead body. The morgue would most likely be underground, much easier for Mona to sneak in and revive him when everyone's guard was down.

An ominous rumble, like the sound of a massive iceberg breaking, disturbed the mindscape. Coldness washed through Akira as the last of his strength left him, and he sank down to the fractured floor. A shaky chuckle bubbled from his throat. This was it. His body knew it was his time.

"I..." He grasped his hair as his whole body quivered. "I don't want to die..."

The infinite blackness crept closer. His insides burned as if his body was filled with boiling tar. Is this how Okumura felt when he suffered a Mental Breakdown? His soul torn asunder, his body failing. He collapsed onto his back as the rumbles grew louder. The death of a universe was at hand. Akira reached up towards Satanael's stony expression marred with dripping black.

"I'm so scared, Mona...."

The ground splintered under him, and with a beat of silence-

The mirror shattered. His body dropped into the undulating void, the wind roaring in his ears as his Personas fell out of his grasp.

"Trickster, no!!!"

Lavenza, her body surrounded by glowing butterflies, dove towards him, her outstretched hand desperately trying to reach him. He willed himself to reach for her, but his appendages were nothing more than dead weight. A coldness rushed through his veins like snow melt, his final breath squeezed through his lips as the void claimed his soul.

“Trickster... Ren!! Please, don’t go!!”

Lavenza’s desperate pleas faded into nothing.

“I’m so scared, Mona...”

Kurusu’s scratchy voice trilled through the room.

“Joker!?” Ryukyu whirled around. “Kid, are you-”

The machines surrounding Joker screamed. They jumped back in horror as black pools spilled from Joker’s pure white eyes and dripped down his cheeks. Nurses swarmed the room and gently pushed them out into the hall. Recovery Girl and her protege appeared within seconds to join in the frantic movements.

Aizawa’s ears rung. All other sound was drowned out and he couldn’t breathe, his vision tunneling onto Akira’s pale face.

Mere minutes stretched into an eternity as the nurses slowed down, their expressions grim, until they came to a stop. Recovery Girl’s crestfallen demeanor told them what they already knew. The screech of the flat lining heart monitor became forever etched into their memory.

Aizawa waited for a jolt to bring Akira back again, but it never came.

Recovery Girl turned off the heart monitor and looked at the clock.

“Time of death: 11:20 pm.”

HOLD UP! I see those tomatoes you're about to throw. This twist was planned from the very beginning. I've been foreshadowing this ever since Hosu, after all. I've shown what happens to people when they die and are brought back, and Akira was never immune to that even with Endure/Enduring Soul. Believe me when I say that this is a vital thing for Akiren to go through, and currently nobody but the betas understand why it is so important. So put those tomatoes down and maybe we could all make some delicious sauce from them, yeah?

Anyway, for the next chapter we will finally be catching up with Morgana and see what trouble he and the others get into. And... he may or may not be forced to reveal the final secret that he and Akiren have kept from the rest of the group regarding Samarecarm...

Next update days and possible chapter names since I'm taking a break. Please note that some dates and/or chapter names could change!

Break In To Break Out - Dec 25th

Dark Sun - January 1st

Mementos - January 15th

New Beginning - January 29th

And no, Mementos is probably not what you're thinking. I'm totally abusing the fact that Royal has multiple Mementos soundtracks.

Break In To Break Out

Chapter 62: Break In To Break Out

“I’ll make sure everyone returns safe.” Mercurius said smoothly.
“That’s a promise.”

“You better.” Kaito crossed his arms and glared. “Someone has to be able to keep their promises around here.”

Happy holidays everyone <3

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

FANART!

Miss Noir on Twitter! 1 2 3 4

Soreness and fatigue plagued Morgana’s body as consciousness rolled in like a lazy fog. His dry throat whined as he flexed his stiff paws and tail, his eyes scrunching. A soft noise whispered into his ears, a gasp.

“Hey, he’s finally waking up! Kaito, get in here!”

Morgana peeled his eyes open as blurry figures approached him. He blinked as his vision cleared, until he could focus on a familiar shade of lightning blue eyes. Kaito spoke before Morgana uttered anything.

“We’re at the Raven’s nest.” Kaito’s hand gently massaged Morgana’s head and ran down the length of his back. “Take it easy, Morgana. You’ve been through a lot.”

“What...?” Morgana’s throat was scratchy. “What... what happened? How did I get here?”

“I brought you here! Stubbs and I were running through the forest, when Mercurius swooped down and pushed you into my arms! Then he went poof!” Shuichi poked his fingers together as he sank into the opposite couch. “I thought you were dead, little buddy! You’ve been asleep for days!”

Days!?

“What the hell happened to you, Morgana?” Kaito asked.

Morgana’s memories flooded back, full of smoke and ash and the scent of charred wood burning his sensitive nose.

“Joker and I separated, I-I went with Eraserhead while Joker dealt with the flames. Afterwards, I went to look for him. Joker was close by, and then... Todoroki went insane and lit himself on fire. The next thing I know, I hear Mercurius screaming, then intense pain, a-and then... nothing.” Morgana inhaled sharply. “Mercurius!”

Faint green flames brought forth the Persona. His brilliant blue clothes were splotted with ash and multicolored ichor, his left wing nothing more than a burnt stump. The barest edges of new, sapphire feathers poked through the marred flesh. Morgana’s heart lurched. Tears stung his eyes and a heavy lump formed in his throat.

“... Magician.” Kaito stepped back when Mercurius knelt in front of Morgana. “I apologize. I... I have failed you. If only I could-”

“H-hey! None of that!” Morgana put his nose against his Persona’s forehead. “You did what you had to do and got me out safe and sound! R-right?”

A knot of uncertainty flowed between them, but Mercurius nodded.

“Mercurius,” Morgana sat up, peering into his other self’s eyes.
“What happened after I blacked out?”

“The Trickster found us in a near-death state after Todoroki’s white flames scorched us.” Mercurius shook his head as Shuichi and Kaito exchanged horrified glances. “Ishtar healed us the best she could. Joker ordered me to get you to safety and that was the last I saw of him. I ran into Spinner not long after.”

“What happened to him? Where are the others?” Morgana’s heart raced when Kaito and Shuichi sank further into themselves. “Wh-what’s with those faces? Where is everyone!?”

Shuichi swallowed. “Uh, Lady Stubbs is keeping an eye out for police outside?”

“Okay?”

“Let’s just tell him.” Kaito said.

“But-!”

Kaito ignored Shuichi’s protest, his eyes glinting with steel. “Gentle Criminal and La Brava have been arrested.”

“WHAT !?” Morgana hopped on all fours, but his shrieking outburst sprouted tingling pain in his throat.

Mercurius ran a soothing hand down his partner’s back as he fell into a coughing fit.

“I’ll get you some water.” Kaito said as he rushed to the kitchenette.

“It’s okay though!” Shuichi waved his hands. “Hitoshi located them, so we know where they’re being held! We were just waiting for you to wake up first.”

“Good.” Morgana breathed a crackled sigh of relief. “How did you escape? If Gentle and La Brava were arrested, then...”

“Hah!” Shuichi beamed. “I waited for the perfect opportunity! Sneaking past them was child’s play with that Stealthanol!”

Kaito looked over his shoulder and deadpanned. “I think you mean how you were terrified and desperately clung on the bottom of a speeding ambulance over 50 miles through mountain terrain?”

“Wha-hey!! It took over two days to get back because everything was shut down! I got Stubbs and Morgana back here, shouldn’t that count for something!?”

“... You’re right.” Kaito sighed as he turned on the faucet. “Sorry.”

“You still haven’t explained what happened with Joker?”

Shuichi bit his lip. “Uh... you see....”

“What’s wrong? Where’s Joker?”

“W-well... that’s....”

An icy dagger plunged into his heart as Shuichi shook his head.

“Where is Joker!?”

“He’s in one of the most guarded hero hospitals in the country.” Kaito said plainly.

“Wh... what?” Morgana whispered. “A hospital?”

Shuichi avoided Morgana’s eyes as Kaito came back and set a water dish on the table.

“Drink first, then we’ll show you.”

Morgana looked at Mercurius, who nodded. With a hoarse sigh, Morgana hopped onto the table, and all was quiet until he lapped up the last drop. Morgana quickly washed his face with a paw. He curled his tail around himself and stared at the other two.

“There. Now tell me what happened to Joker.”

“It’s easier to just show you.” Kaito retrieved his phone and opened it to a news site. “But... it’s not easy to watch.”

Morgana went rigid as he watched the horrible recap of some live stream, and onto the nightmare that became cemented in history. The Kamino Incident.

“That’s....Oh my god.” Morgana whispered. “That’s a Persona!”

“Persona...?” Shuichi said as the not-cat’s eyes were glued to the screen.

“Did Joker break his chains? Did Arsene evolve?... All of his Personas at once!?” Mercurius shuddered at the mutual sorrow flooding his body as Morgana heard Joker’s agonized scream and eventual collapse. “That’s... th-that black stuff, it can’t be.... no.... NO!!”

Morgana bolted from the table.

“Hey!” Shuichi jumped from the couch. “Where are you going!?”

“You said Hitoshi had information, so I’m going to the Blue Lotus!” Morgana looked over his shoulder, a determination swelling in his eyes. “We have to get to Joker before it’s too late!”

Kaito facepalmed. “Morgana, you just woke up! Give yourself time to-”

“No!” Morgana screamed. “You don’t understand! If... if that black stuff is there... then Joker might not have much time! I need to get to him!!”

“H-hey, take it easy! I’ll go with you, yeah?” Shuichi whispered. “I want to rescue Joker too!”

“Don’t do anything I wouldn’t do.” Kaito muttered as exhaustion weighed heavy on his shoulders. “That’s what I would say, but you’re all impossible to keep track of anymore.”

Shuichi snorted as he and Morgana left the lounge.

“I’ll make sure everyone returns safe.” Mercurius said smoothly.
“That’s a promise.”

“You better.” Kaito crossed his arms and glared. “Someone has to be able to keep their promises around here.”

Mercurius nodded before he faded to ash.

Tap.

Tap tap.

TAP.

Hitoshi swiveled in his chair and went to his window. With a grunt, he threw it open.

“You shouldn’t be here!” Hitoshi whisper yelled as two figures rolled in, one less graceful than the other. “It’s dangerous !”

“S-sorry!” Shuichi said as he lowered his jacket hood. “But you weren’t answering my texts and we were worried.”

“You look beat.” Morgana jumped on Hitoshi’s bed, “When was the last time you slept?”

“I...” Hitoshi lifted his black fox mask and rubbed his eyes. “I haven’t slept since the Summer Camp happened.”

“Dude, it’s been days! ”

“Shhh!!” Hitoshi lunged forward and clamped his hand on Shuichi’s mouth, his fox mask balanced on his forehead. “You have to be quiet. How the hell did you guys even come here without being spotted? In case you haven’t noticed, our little cafe has become a ‘point of interest’ since Akira’s identity went public.”

Shuichi waved his arms. Hitoshi rolled his eyes as he pulled his hand away.

“Oh, that’s easy. Stubbs is distracting them!”

Hitoshi looked out the window. Lady Stubbs sat on the other side of the street with her massive, ghoulish eyes wide open, unblinking. She either stared at an invisible entity or found some secret to the universe that no mortal should ever witness. Whatever it was, a pair of police officers and the hero Death Arms surrounded her, their backs turned to the cafe.

“Ugh, what is it staring at?” AN officer stated.

“I don’t know.” Death Arms said, “But this is one ugly cat!”

Hitoshi muttered several curses as he shut his window.

“We came here because we need your help.” Morgana bowed his head, his ears flat. “It’s important.”

“Don’t worry about it.” Hitoshi walked back to his chair and sunk into it with a heavy sigh. “I understand.”

Morgana’s eyes softened as he studied the purple bags under Hitoshi’s eyes. “Are you okay?”

“Define ‘okay’.” Hitoshi muttered dryly. “In case you haven’t noticed, this turned into a complete shit show for everyone since Akira’s identity came out.”

Shuichi ran a hand through his vibrant hair. “Did your parents have to close the cafe because of it?”

“Temporarily.” Hitoshi growled. “Investigators came to interrogate my parents, but you should have seen them. They were all high and mighty when they barged in, but came out of my parents’ office looking like kicked puppies. They had nothing against Silver Falcon’s scare tactics. They threatened to take our phones and computers too, but Detective Tsukauchi prevented them from taking anything.”

“How do you know that?” Morgana asked.

Hitoshi gestured to his desk, where his personal computer and home built laptop screens danced with code.

“This is....” Shuichi cocked his head to the side. “Uh, I have no clue.”

“I’m in the police network. Tsukauchi never stepped foot inside the cafe, but it was because of him that the other detectives aren’t going so hard. But more importantly-” He tapped on a few keys. Camera footage appeared on screen. “I know where they’re holding Gentle Criminal and La Brava.”

Morgana’s eyes turned bright. “How are they holding up?”

“La Brava is doing the best she can.” Hitoshi frowned as they watched her pace back and forth in the holding cell. “But I’m worried about Gentle Criminal.”

“Why?” Morgana gasped. “... No, they didn’t beat him up or anything, did they!?”

“No?” Hitoshi glanced at Morgana, his expression falling. “Actually, it’s his quirk. He was out for about a day, but when he woke up he accidentally turned his entire cell into rubber. They cuffed him with a quirk suppressant and moved him to a different holding cell. They closed those cells because it hasn’t worn off yet.”

Shuichi’s mouth dropped open. “Did his quirk evolve? It wasn’t that powerful before!”

“Dunno, maybe. But we have Tsukauchi to thank again . Without him, they would be in Tartarus. But enough about that.” Hitoshi glanced between Morgana and Shuichi. “What the hell happened at the Summer Camp?”

“We don’t have the full story.” Morgana said.

“We were split apart when the villains attacked.” Shuichi’s shoulders sank, “Akira must’ve done something .”

“Sacrifice himself like a complete moron?” Hitoshi growled. “People are going crazy over how he destroyed a mountain and an entire swathe of forest. Not to mention... that horrible live stream and then the Kamino disaster. Everyone got a taste of his true power.”

“That’s why we need to get to him before it’s too late.” Morgana stared into Hitoshi’s eyes. “What have you figured out?”

“W-well, it wasn’t hard to find him, per se.” Sweat broke out on the back of Hitoshi’s neck under Morgana’s sharp eyes. “The crowd outside Kamino’s hospital is growing by the hour, so we know where he is.”

“Buuuut?” Shuichi said, his arms crossing.

“It’s one of the top hero hospitals for a reason. Their security system is on a whole other level. It’s not like the local police network. La Brava might be able to crack it, but me...” Guilt flashed in Hitoshi’s eyes. “No luck.”

“So it’s settled.” Shuichi said as he cracked his knuckles. “We’re going to rescue La Brava and Gentle Criminal first, and then we’ll find our way into the hospital to rescue Joker!”

A creak came from the other side of the apartment, soft footsteps.

“How many times do I have to tell you to be quiet!?” Hitoshi whisper-yelled at Shuichi. “Do you want my parents to find you in here?”

We're walking on thin ice as it is!"

"Sorry!"

Morgana pushed down the flutter of nostalgia as Hitoshi went to the door and put his ear on it. After a short silence, he nodded.

"The next question is, how do we get to Gentle Criminal and La Brava." Morgana stared at Shuichi. "It'll be just the two of us."

"And Lady Stubbs!"

"Of course, but I don't think she could distract an entire station like she's doing right now." Morgana sighed. "We'll have to figure out something else."

As if by divine intervention, a ping came from Hitoshi's laptop. He raced back to his computer.

"What is it?" Morgana asked.

"It's an order of transfer...." Hitoshi sat down and frantically typed. "I figured out where they're transferring Gentle and La Brava! It's... the hero hospital in Kamino? Why would they take them there?"

"Who cares? This could be our chance!" Morgana flicked his tail. "If they make it to the hospital then our entire operation will fail. Who knows what they'll do there!"

"You don't trust the heroes." Hitoshi deadpanned.

"Gee, you think? Look at everything they did! They arrested our friends, and who knows what they're doing to Joker right now! I'm going to do everything it takes to get him out of their clutches." Morgana's fur bristled and Hitoshi's room became a few degrees cooler. "I won't lose anybody again. I can't."

Shuichi shivered and took a step away from Morgana.

Hitoshi cleared his throat and ignored the gaping pit in his stomach. "The transfer is tonight. Give me some time and I'll have their route. After that, it'll be up to you."

"... Thank you, Hitoshi." Morgana whispered. "This means everything to me."

"Don't mention it. If this situation wasn't so screwed up, then I would say that it's kinda fun." Hitoshi tapped the fox mask on his forehead "You know, wearing this was actually pretty cool."

Morgana snorted. "You'd make a great phantom thief."

"... Thanks." Hitoshi turned his chair to hide his reddened face. "I... was trying to think up a code name, but it might be stupid."

"Really?" Morgana's eyes lit up. "What?"

"I-I kinda don't want to say, but I'm calling one piece of equipment the Persona Chords. It can change my voice and-" Hitoshi blushed as Morgana beamed at him. "What? It'll be a good reminder after you and Joker leave!"

"Hold up!!" Shuichi whirled to Morgana. "What do you mean you're leaving!?"

"Well..." Morgana flinched. "Our ultimate goal is locked behind U.A. gates. We have to get to the USJ if we ever want to get home."

"Wait," Shuichi scratched his head. "So.... so you're saying that we might have to split up ?"

"... Yes." Morgana's eyes drooped. "Joker and I are only here temporarily, we'll have to part ways eventually."

"Is it related to your past?" Shuichi frowned. "Gentle Criminal said that it would be a bit unbelievable, but that whatever you told me would be the truth."

Hitoshi cleared his throat. "You'll have to share that story later, Morgana. You don't really have time for chit-chat."

"He's right." Morgana gave Shuichi an apologetic glance. "I'll explain everything when I can, after Joker is safe and sound. I promise."

"O-okay!" Shuichi gave him a thumbs up. "If you say so, then I'll trust you!"

"One last thing before you go." Hitoshi said. "The Raven's Nest."

"What about it?" Morgana asked.

"It might not be safe." Hitoshi sighed. "I got them to drop it when Akira pulled his stunt in Sapporo, but I don't know if that's possible this time around. If there's any chance they could find it, then it's not safe for any of you."

"Thanks for the heads up." Morgana nodded. "We'll figure something out."

"Psst, we should go." Shuichi said as he glanced out the window. "I don't think they'll be interested in Lady Stubs much longer."

Morgana hopped on Shuichi's shoulder as the lizard man pulled up his hood and opened the window.

"Good luck." Hitoshi whispered as they dropped into the streets below.

Manami circled her holding cell. Plain, bright white walls stained with various questionable splotches sent shivers of disgust through her, not to mention how it felt like the walls began to close in on her after who knows how many hours went by as slow as a snail trapped in sap. A small, rickety bed was set up across from a toilet, but she didn't dare use it because the camera watched her every move.

More hours ticked by in maddening silence.

Her only pastime were the horrible memories replaying in her head.

Every time she closed her eyes, she experiences Gentle being ripped out of her arms, bleeding and unconscious. The burn of smoke that made her eyes water. The terrifying reality that she might not see any of her family again, whether they were arrested or suffered worse fates by the villains roaming the forest.

Simply not knowing constricted her heart more than anything else.

She received no updates. This little piece of hell became cut off from the rest of the world. Nobody came for her, no matter how hard she banged on the door. Meals were delivered through a slit in the door, but she hadn't eaten anything since that dreadful night.

A knock on the door heralded her first visitor. Though she didn't know whether to count it as a curse or a blessing.

"Detective Tsukauchi." Manami narrowed her eyes.

"I'm sorry for the intrusion." The man had the nerve to say as he scanned the dreary cell. "Are you ready to go?"

"Where am I going?" She bit her lip. "What's going on?"

Tsukauchi grimaced. "Long story short, you and Gentle Criminal are being taken to a hospital in Kamino. We don't have much time, and I apologize for this in advance-" Her stomach fell as he produced a pair of quirk suppressants from his trench coat. "But you have to wear these."

"Why!?" Manami seethed as she threw up her arms. "It felt like an eternity being locked up in here, and nobody as told me anything! What the hell is going on!? Why are you coming now !?"

"I understand you're frustrated." Tsukauchi said, unphased by her outburst. "But these are for your safety. Everyone is nervous over the Kamino disaster. If the officers mistreated you in any way, then let me know.”

Kamino disaster?

She scoffed. “Where is everyone else? I won’t step a foot out of this room until you tell me!”

“And I thought I was one to ask questions.” Tsukauchi’s smile, although tense, irritated her to no end. “Gentle Criminal has been treated for his Quirk Exhaustion. We’ll be meeting up with him in a few minutes. Mona and Spinner are still missing in action.”

Her lips quivered. “A-and Joker?”

Her heart lurched as the detective stared down at his hands. “He’s.... well...”

“If you hurt him I swear to all that is holy-!”

“We haven’t done anything to him.” Tsukauchi held up his hands, but he sighed as he reached for his phone. “You wouldn’t know.”

“Know what ?”

Tsukauchi unlocked his phone and showed it to her. Her stomach plummeted as she gaped at a picture of Joker within the palm of a giant black angel floating within the epicenter of a destroyed city. His mask disappeared. His silvery eyes peered right into the camera. A chill crept up her spine.

“What!? When did this happen!?”

“Look,” Tsukauchi sighed as she shook his head. “We’re short on time. Nezu and I will explain on the way there. Right now, Joker needs his teammates.”

She curled her lip, and held out her wrists. “Fine .”

“Thank you.” Tsukauchi was surprisingly gentle as he put on the cuffs, with enough room so that her skin wouldn’t chafe. “Come on, Nezu and Tsuragamae should’ve retrieved Gentle Criminal by now.”

She walked by his side as they finally left that mania inducing cell behind. The police officers scattered when they saw her, one practically dove into an office and slammed the door shut. Hidden eyes peeked around corners and watched them like hawks. She glanced up at Tsukauchi with a raised brow, but he only shook his head.

Were they afraid because she was part of Joker’s team?

Joker, who was held in the palm of a god, or an angel? Did he keep that power under wraps, or was it something new, born from the horrors of the Summer Camp?

Her thoughts were cast aside once they stepped into the barren lobby.

“Gentle!!”

Gentle Criminal turned to her, his face lighting up. “La Brava!”

He knelt down and they embraced, rather awkward with the cuffs limiting their movements, but it was worth it just to be able to take in his scent again, to listen to his voice. Tear blurred her vision as the other adults exchanged glances behind their backs.

Nezu cleared his throat. “Apologies for splitting up this touching reunion, but our time is rather short.”

Tsuragamae checked his watch. “It’s just past nine thirty. We’ll make it before eleven if we leave now.”

The parted, but were practically glued at the hip as Tsuragamae swept them down another hallway. Tsukauchi and Nezu followed behind, silent.

“Have they treated you well, my dear?” Gentle Criminal asked. “You look rather thin.”

“I could say the same about you.” She rapidly blinked tears out of her eyes. “I’ve been worried sick since.... since....”

“I know.” Gentle Criminal’s smile never reached his eyes. “You don’t have to say.”

Tsuragamae opened the door to the garage. Police officers waited in other vehicles, while the back door of a van remained open, its engine running. Gentle Criminal exchanged a nervous glance with his partner.

“There’s no need to worry.” Nezu hummed as he gestured to the van. “I promise that no harm will come-”

“Don’t bother.” Manami snapped as she hopped into the van first. She turned on her heel and jangled the cuffs at him. “You already broke your promise with us. We don’t need another liar spewing sweetened words.”

Nezu kept a blank face as Gentle Criminal stepped in after her, though a slight twitch in the tip of his tail revealed how he was caught off guard. Thankfully, nobody saw it. Aside from Tsukauchi, but he had enough tact to keep his mouth shut.

Tsuragamae let out a deep sigh as he hopped in the driver’s seat.

Nezu jumped into the van. He took the opposite bench to Gentle Criminal and La Brava. Tsukauchi was the last to enter the vehicle, shutting the back doors and planting himself beside Nezu.

Tsuragamae waited for them to be seated, before the vehicle lurched with motion.

Silence permeated the van. It didn’t help that La Brava stared at them as if they were disgusting insects unworthy of being squished beneath her boot. Gentle Criminal just looked exhausted.

They spent the first one-third of the trip in ear ringing silence, both parties unable to breach the bubble. Nezu braved it first.

“Don’t worry, detective.” Nezu said as all happiness drained out of him. “I’ll start.”

“Are you sure?”

“Yes.” Nezu clasped his paws together. “After all, I bear most of the blame.”

Tsukauchi sank into the bench. The air grew thick with tension the longer Nezu went on about what had happened over the days while Joker was trapped down in that hell, nor could he stomach their expressions as Nezu reached the beginning of Kamino. He thought they would be in for a long ride, when Tsuragamae suddenly cursed and wrenched the wheel. Explosions and crashes echoed outside as the van lurched onto its side.

The others screamed as the van tumbled over.

Sharp pain exploded in the back of Tsukauchi’s head before everything went dark.

~A Few Minutes Earlier~

“Careful!!” Monabus screeched as Spinner yanked the wheel.

The tires squealed as half of the van lifted from the pavement in a sharp turn. Lady Stubbs dug her claws into the seating, her fur poofed out like a cloud.

“Where the heck did you learn to drive!?”

“Who said I ever learned!? I don’t have a license!” Spinner cackled as all four tires landed with a harsh thump . “I got my skills from playing video games!”

“I am never letting you drive me again! When this is all over, I’m only letting Joker or Gentle Criminal drive me!”

Spinner sputtered. “You wouldn’t!”

“Watch where you’re going -!”

Monabus breached onto the sidewalk and clipped an innocent mailbox. Chunks of metal and mail spewed out into the street.

“Ack! I can’t see!” Spinner cried as letters clung to the windshield. “Hey Mona, where are the windshield wipers?”

“It’s the little switch on- AGH! NOT THERE!”

“Merp!!” Lady Stubbs spat as she batted towards the multi-function switch by the wheel, her other claws firmly planted in the lush seating.

“How is it that Lady Stubbs knows where it is and you don’t!?” Monabus cried.

“S-sorry!” Spinner tumbled back onto the road once the windshield was clear. He swerved as he felt around for his phone, which pinged with a new message. “Look at this! Hitoshi sent the route with the perfect ambush location!”

“Eyes on the road!!”

“Okay, okay!!” Spinner pocketed his phone and scoffed. “We’re almost there!”

“G-great... urp...”

“Uhhh, you’re not gonna get sick, are you!?”

“Keep driving like this and I’ll target you when I do!”

“How many times to I have to say sorry!?”

“Merp.”

“I know! Besides,” Spinner glanced in the rear view mirror. “This place is practically deserted. The coast is totally clear!”

“Yeah, but let’s not be reckless!” Monabus grumbled. “Especially since this is a rescue operation!”

“Yeah, we- Ooh, the caravan should be right up ahead! But-” Explosions and screaming sirens pierced the night air. “Something is happening!”

“Wait, we need a plan! We can’t just-”

Monabus screamed as Spinner put the pedal to the metal. They reached the devastation. A pair of police vehicles had crashed into the streetlights, abandoned. Another crashed into a fire hydrant which spewed water into the street. A black van, larger than the Monabus, was turned on its side, the back doors wide open and its occupants missing.

Spinner screeched as multiple blue orbs dropped from the sky in front of them. The harsh cracking noises brought forth giant spikes in the road. Spinner cursed as he yanked on the steering wheel. The pungent smell of burnt rubber rolled by as Spinner lurched Monabus into a stop.

“What the heck is going on!?” Monabus yelled.

“I don’t know!” Spinner threw open the door and got out.

“I’m afraid you’re too late!” A voice called from the rooftops.

Spinner gasped when he saw the figure. Donned in a dark orange overcoat with a popped collar, a feathered top hat, and a new mask that was a near perfect copy of Arsene's facial markings. The moon was at his back and watched on like a silent companion, casting him in a veil of silver.

"It's you!" Spinner jabbed a finger at Mr. Compress, before looking at the overturned van. "What did you do to them!?"

"I'm simply keeping them safe from heroes like you." Mr. Compress tipped his hat, "Apologies, but I must cut this meeting short and bid you adieu!"

"W-wait!" Spinner shouted. "We're not-"

Mr. Compress threw a handful of polished blue orbs. They burst into clouds of smoke. Spinner coughed as the smoke made his eyes water and burned his nostrils. A familiar screech pierced the cloud and a blast of wind cleared it away.

"M-merp!?" Lady Stubbs jumped onto Spinner's shoulder as Mona reverted into a cat.

"Raaaaugh!" Mona, his voice shaking with rage, launched himself all the way to the rooftops with a whipping cyclone. "Get back here!!"

"H-hey, wait for us!!"

"Merp!"

Spinner skittered up the nearest building. Mona's dark shape flew across the rooftops with blinding speed. Mr. Compress stayed ahead by throwing more orbs, smoke and debris were batted away by angry winds.

"Mercurius!!"

A pillar of green flame erupted in front of Mr. Compress, who skid to a stop, his body highlighted in a shower of wicked emerald. A blast from Mercurius' wings mixed wind and fire, the swirling elements dancing together as they shot towards Compress.

Mr. Compress pirouetted to the side. He patted down his feathered hat, which caught a spark.

“How rude!” Mr. Compress yelled as ribbons of smoke wafted from his top hat. “I just got the bloodstains out of this costume, and now this!? You’ll be hearing from my dry cleaner!”

“Surrender!” Mercurius pointed his staff at the kidnapper. “Give us back our comrades!!”

“Your comrades?” Mr. Compress asked with a tilt of his head.

“You bet.” Mona, his fur standing on end, hopped on the other side of the rooftop. “Give it up, otherwise we won’t go easy on you!”

“You’re... oh my.” Mr. Compress shook his head. “I believe we have a misunderstanding here, Mona.”

Spinner and Lady Stubbs finally jumped onto their rooftop, panting.

“You guys are too fast!!” Spinner wheezed as he put his hands on his knees. “Way too fast!”

Mona stared down Mr. Compress, ignoring Spinner. “You know who I am.”

“Of course I do! Anyone would know if they paid attention.” Mr. Compress waved a finger at him. “I regret that we didn’t get a proper introduction at the Yaoyorozu manor. My sincerest apologies for this mix up.”

“A mix up!?” Spinner snapped. “My eyes are still burning from that smoke!”

“I thought you were backup for the heroes.” Mr. Compress shrugged. “You can’t blame a thief for having aces up his sleeve.”

Mona scoffed. “Just give us back Gentle Criminal and La Brava, and maybe we’ll forgive you.”

“Very well.” Mr. Compress threw two orbs at Mona’s feet, and with a snap, La Brava and Gentle Criminal emerged.

“Wh-what the heck!?” La Brava frantically looked around. “Where are we?”

“La Brava! Gentle!” Spinner grinned and waved his arms. “You’re okay!!”

They whipped around to Spinner and Mona, their expressions brightening.

“You’re safe!” Mona sputtered as La Brava picked him up and kissed him on the forehead, then proceeded to snuggle him tightly. “I was so worried!!”

“Yes,” Gentle Criminal smoothed down his clothes and smiled. “I’m happy that we’ve been reunited! Well... almost all of us.”

“Here,” Spinner produced a lock pick from his pocket, “Let me get you out of those cuffs.”

“... Thank you.” Gentle Criminal said as Spinner tore through the locks, before doing the same to La Brava.

La Brava sighed contently as she kicked the cuffs aside, but Gentle Criminal held one cuff onto his wrist, the other dangling from the silvery links.

“What’s wrong, Gentle?” La Brava asked softly.

“It’s my quirk.” Gentle Criminal grimaced. “I’m not sure how much control I have over it now, so if I take these off...”

“Then the whole building might turn to rubber?”

They turned to Mr. Compress, who flinched under their gazes.

“... Yes.”

“We can keep one on.” Mona said from La Brava’s arms. “Hold out the other one as tight as you can.”

Gentle Criminal complied, and a sharp blade of wind snapped the chains in half.

“Thank you.” Gentle Criminal adjusted the single cuff onto his wrist. “I believe it would be safer this way, for now.”

“You !” La Brava pointed at Mr. Compress. “Explain yourself!”

“I...” Mr. Compress ran a finger under his singed hat. “I was hoping to break you out and reunite you with your teammates. This was all a huge misunderstanding, I promise!”

“But how did you know about the caravan?” Mona asked.

“I have my own reliable information network, thank you very much. How else did I know about Gentle Criminal’s quirk?” Mr. Compress put a hand on his chest, as if he were wounded by Mona’s words. “I was hoping to ease my debt with Joker by freeing you two. I never thought I would encounter Mona along the way!”

Gentle Criminal and La Brava exchanged a long glance, the tension draining from them.

Mona sighed, and nodded to Mercurius, who vanished without a trace. The wind carried the remaining cold embers down onto the street below.

“What debt do you have to Joker?” Mona wiggled out of La Brava’s arms and stepped closer to Mr. Compress. “Don’t think I haven’t noticed how that mask of yours looks exactly like Arsene. What game are you playing here?”

Mr. Compress didn’t move for several seconds, as if he were contemplating something. One of his red gloved hands fidgeted with the polo tie around his neck. After another minute, his shoulders fell with a long sigh. He took off his top hat and gently set it by his feet, before his fingers trailed down his mask.

"Wait, you don't have to-" Mona cut himself off when Mr. Compress held up a hand.

"I do." Mr. Compress said. "It's the very least I can do to gain your trust."

Mr. Compress slipped off the mask, the balaclava underneath only revealing his mouth and slate brown eyes. The mask was lovingly stored within his breast pocket, and he pulled off the balaclava. They gaped as Mr. Compress shook his head and ran a hand through a head of curly brown hair. He had short, black eyebrows and a pointed nose, his eyes slanted inwards like a cat. Sharp wit twinkled in those eyes.

"My real name is Sako Atsuhiro." His voice drained of all playfulness. "Joker saved my life back at the Summer Camp-"

"You were there !?" Spinner shouted.

"... Yes. My intention was never to harm Joker, but to save him." Mr. Compress stared at the ground, his gloves creaking as he gripped his shoulder. "I was trying to convince Joker to trust me, when... when Toga Himiko appeared behind me and stabbed me." His hand dropped and he reached into his coat. He pulled out an old book, the curled pages and cover steeped with flaky brown stains. "If Joker didn't leave that healing item for me, then I would have bled out in that cursed forest. My former comrades left me for dead."

"Th-that's horrible!" La Brava paled.

"It was worse for Joker." Atsuhiro grimaced as he tucked the book away. "Toga drank from a vial of blood and turned into a woman named Shinsou Risumi. They knew everything about the Blue Lotus, and used that information against Joker."

“Wh-what!?” Mona shrieked. “But... Hitoshi didn’t seem distressed about his parents...”

“Toga got the blood when she disguised herself as a patron under All For One’s orders.” Atsuhiro said. “There was nothing I could do to stop it, unless I wanted to out myself early. It seems they had me figured out the whole time.”

Mona’s eyes sharpened. “How did Joker get kidnapped?”

“Kidnapped ?” Atsuhiro chuckled dryly, “Joker went willingly . Otherwise, they threatened to kill Bakugo, the Shinsous’, as well as the rest of the students and heroes at the lodge. I doubt you’d all be spared either. He assured everyone’s safety in exchange for his own.”

“I... I can’t believe this...” Gentle Criminal murmured.

“I can.” La Brava’s expression soured. “It’s just like Joker.”

“That... that idiot .” Mona trembled with rage. “Of course he put everyone else before himself!”

“But now we just have to rescue him, yeah?” Spinner put his hand on his hips as he looked between his comrades. “We’re all together again, so let’s go rescue our Leader!”

“Merp!” Lady Stubbs mewled proudly.

“About that.” La Brava shook her head. “Nezu and Tsukauchi were about to tell us something about Joker’s condition when we were...” Her eyes flicked to Atsuhiro. “Interrupted.”

“I’ll apologize as much as you want later.” Atsuhiro said as he pulled his balaclava back on. His hat and Arsene mask followed. “Right now, we need a plan. That hospital is going to be near impossible to break into, but it should be a bit easier if I can sneak you in with my quirk.”

“Wait, wait!” Spinner said. “You wanna join in!?”

“Of course I do! After all-” Mr. Compress reached into his breast pocket for another orb, which broke to reveal-

A familiar silvery gun with angelic wings.

“I also want to return this to Joker.” Mr. Compress twirled it around his finger. “It’s the least I can do after everything he went through because I was too cowardly to enact my plan sooner. This... Kamino, Joker’s situation, everything... is my fault.”

Spinner clicked his tongue. “Don’t be like that, man. The League’s leader was absolutely terrifying!”

“And you did try to rescue us, technically.” Gentle Criminal said.

“Wait a minute!” La Brava glanced back, “If we’re here, then what happened to Tsukauchi and the others?”

“They’re still in the van.” Mr. Compress chuckled. “I was going to release them after we got a good distance away.”

“I guess this is the best outcome, all things considered.” Mona flicked his tail. “But enough dallying around. This place will be crawling with heroes before the hour is up.”

“But... my laptop, my phone, I brought it all to the Summer Camp and they confiscated everything!” La Brava said. “It’s too risky to hack from the computer at the Ra- at our hideout. We need to take more precaution if I want to hack into the hospital’s security.”

“Then we need to borrow a certain laptop.” Mona said. “But it’ll be risky going back with this many people.”

Mr. Compress pulled on his gloves. “Child’s play with my quirk! We won’t have to split up that way.”

The rest of the team exchanged long glances.

“His quirk... could be vital if we are to get in that hospital.” Gentle Criminal said. “We need every advantage since my quirk is out of commission.”

“And uh...” Spinner rubbed the back of his head. “We don’t really have many items that Joker gave us. A few smoke bombs, sure, but I used the last Stealthanol just to get out of that forest.”

“I guess you’re right. We don’t have many options and we could use the extra firepower.” Mona glared at Mr. Compress as harsh gale rustled the latter’s coat and nearly blew his top hat away. “But I’m watching you. If you give me any reason to think that you might back stab us, then I swear I won’t hold back.”

“You don’t have to go that far!” Mr. Compress put a hand over his heart. “I understand. As one gentleman thief to another, and with an outstanding debt towards Joker, I pledge my services to you.”

“Show off.” Spinner muttered under his breath.

“Good.” Mona looked to the star speckled sky as sirens echoed in the distance. “Let’s go.”

“-auchi! Tsukauchi!”

Tsukauchi gasped as his eyes flew open. He coughed as soft paws helped him sit up, his throat scratchy and bone dry. The air was thick with a smokey scent and the sound of rushing water splashing on pavement.

“Nezu?” Tsukauchi muttered as he rubbed the back of his head, where splitting pain throbbed. “What the hell happened?”

“It seems that we were attacked.”

“By who?”

“I don’t know. Come, let’s exit the vehicle and get a feel for the situation.”

Vehicle? Tsukauchi blinked as he looked around. He sat down on the the wall of the van, if it were turned up right. He stood on shaky legs and followed Nezu as he hopped over the doors.

“Tsukauchi, Nezu!” Tsuragamae approached from the front of the van, rubbing his head. “I’m glad you are safe.”

Tsukauchi glanced up and down the dark street, half of which were blocked off by towering spikes. Other officers, equally dazed, were peppered around them.

“Likewise.” Tsukauchi said.

“Gentle Criminal and La Brava are missing.” Nezu ran his paws down his face. “Whoever staged this must have kidnapped them. Do you gentlemen remember anything?”

“Not much.” Tsuragamae turned towards the spikes blocking the road. “I tried to swerve when something fell down from the sky, but then I must’ve blacked out after.”

“I got knocked out when the vehicle swerved. In any case, we have to report this.” Tsukauchi swore under his breath as he reached into his pocket. “It’s already past midnight... what?”

“What’s wrong?” Nezu asked.

“Check your phones.” Tsukauchi said as his furrowed his brow. “I have over two dozen missed calls from Toshinori and Aizawa. I’m going to call-” His phone lit up with a call and he answered.
“Aizawa-”

“Tsukauchi! I’ve been trying to call you for over an hour!”

“I’m sorry.” Tsukauchi pinched the bridge of his nose as sirens echoed in the distance, Nezu and Tsuragamae exchanged glances.

“We were attacked, and Gentle Criminal and La Brava are missing.”

“... What?”

“We’ll find them. Joker needs-”

“No...” Aizawa’s voice became strained. “We were too late.”

“Too late?” Tsukauchi’s heart raced. “What do you mean too late ?”

“Joker... he.... the kid’s gone, Tsukauchi.”

Tsukauchi’s phone dropped from his slackened grip and shattered at his feet.

“Detective!” Nezu cried. “What’s wrong!?”

Hollowness carved into Tsukauchi’s heart as he collapsed against the roof of the overturned van. Tsuragamae steadied him with a hand on his shoulder, but the touch felt numb.

“We were too late...”

Tsukauchi’s own voice sounded disheveled and far away. Nezu and Tsuragamae’s expressions crumbled. The three of them stood within the destroyed street, silence ringing within their souls as police vehicles and ambulances descended upon the scene.

But what would a hundred police or EMT workers do now?

After all, they were too late.

Tap tap.

“Are you freaking serious.” Hitoshi growled as he opened his window for the second time that night. He turned his back to the figure jumping inside. “I told you that coming here is dangerous! Do you guys not listen?”

“Apologies for the intrusion.”

Ice plunged into Hitoshi’s veins as he whipped around to the unfamiliar voice. “Who the hell are you?”

The mask stranger tossed a handful of marbles on the ground and snapped his fingers. Hitoshi’s room became cramped with familiar faces. Morgana shook himself as he hopped onto the desk. La Brava and Gentle Criminal backed away to give Hitoshi room. Spinner was turned upside down, his back painfully arched over Hitoshi’s bed.

“Owww....” The lizard man whined.

Lady Stubbs tilted her head at an unnatural angle as she pawed Spinner’s face. “Merp?”

“Why?” Hitoshi felt his soul leaving his body as Spinner righted himself. “Honestly, should I really be surprised at this point? All of you have a death wish.”

“Sorry.” Morgana’s ears drooped. “But we needed your computer to hack into the hospital.”

“So you decided to shove everyone in my tiny room? Joker might be an idiot, but he was the brains of the operation.” Hitoshi deadpanned. He stared at Gentle Criminal and La Brava, his expression softening. “I’m glad you’re okay.”

“Thanks.” La Brava smiled at him. “What about you? You look dead on your feet!”

“I’ll sleep after a certain moron gets rescued.” Hitoshi narrowed his eyes at the stranger. “By the way, who the hell is this?”

Mr. Compress perked up as all eyes turned to him. He stood tall and put a hand over his heart, the other flourishing towards Hitoshi.

“I’m glad you asked, young man!” He stated. “My name is Mr. Compress! I am the newest member of-”

The door flung open. Golden light spilled into the room. Everyone stared at a deadpanned Risumi in the door frame, her shadow magnified against Hitoshi's wall. Hitoshi turned bone white. His skin prickled with goosebumps as her eyes fell on him.

They expected a cry or a shout, something to alert the heroes and police that Mr. Compress so succinctly snuck by to get in here. No, Risumi regarded them with mild disappointment, as if she had merely caught her son's hand in the cookie jar minutes before dinner.

"Uh," Hitoshi took off the fox mask and hid it behind his back. "I can explain-"

"No need. Have everyone come to the table for curry." She scanned over the rest of the vigilantes as they stood like deer in the headlights. "You all look famished."

With that, she gracefully slinked down the hall.

Mr. Compress was glad nobody could see him sweating bullets. Toga's impression had nothing on the real Shinsou Risumi. She was somehow far more terrifying in person than any mimicry Toga could've whipped up.

"... Merp?"

"You said it." Morgana whispered.

"Welp, this was fun while it lasted." Hitoshi tossed the mask on his desk. "I'm going to die."

"I-I'm sure you'll be fine?" La Brava asked.

"It's one-thirty in the morning and she just found a bunch of wanted vigilantes in my room. How is this fine!?"

"Should we sneak out while we can?" Gentle Criminal said as he inched towards the window.

“This is Risumi we’re talking about. She could’ve called in the police or heroes, but she didn’t. We should give her a chance.” Morgana said, though he looked unsure as he climbed on Hitoshi’s shoulder. “I’m sure she’ll understand if we explain?”

“Oh sure she’ll understand, and then we’ll all die.” Hitoshi huffed as marched out of his room. “It was nice knowing everyone.”

The group of vigilantes awkwardly shuffled into the living room.

“Sit.” Ayumu, regarding them with mild interest from the kitchen counter, gestured towards the kitchen table. “The food will be done in a minute.”

Hitoshi’s eyes fell to his clenched fists as he sat down. The others sat around him, the chairs screeching across the floor when everyone took their places. Stubbs was glued to Spinner’s shoulder, Morgana ducked under Hitoshi’s chair.

The apartment became thick with disquiet, the only noises were the soft clatter of dishes and tink of cutlery. This atmosphere would be more welcome to death’s row inmates. Their final meal tantalizing as his parents set enormous helpings of curry in front of them.

Strange, how he didn’t smell any of this five minutes ago.

“Would anyone like coffee?” Risumi asked pleasantly.

“I would love some coffee!”

Hitoshi glared daggers at Mr. Compress.

“Alright, but you have to take off your hat and mask if you want to eat.” Risumi crossed her arms. “Your gloves too. It’s bad table manners.”

“O-oh. Apologies.”

“You too, Gentle Criminal.”

Gentle sat ramrod straight in his chair. "O-of course, ma'am!"

Hitoshi buried his face in his hands as they complied.

"We have some cat food, too." Ayumu said as he leaned against the counter. "Morgana, can you eat human food, or would you prefer cat food?"

Morgana poked his head out. "M-meow?"

Risumi smiled. "We know you can talk, sweetheart."

The vigilantes continued to lose color.

Morgana bristled. "N-no, I-I'm not hungry..."

"If you say so." Risumi looked across the table. "Well? Don't let that curry go to waste!"

Nobody spoke as they dined in suffocating silence. Hitoshi kept his eyes down as the minutes dragged on, and he craved for the floor to open up beneath him and swallow him whole. After fifteen minutes of clanking spoons, the dishes were clean of curry.

Hitoshi just wanted this agony to be over .

"I have to say," Mr. Compress leaned back in his chair with a smirk. "This was delicious! You are fine cooks. It's no wonder this cafe skyrocketed in popularity."

"... Thank you." Risumi looked over to the empty pot on the stove. "It's Kurusu's recipe."

"Speaking of Kurusu," Ayumu frowned as he and Hitoshi's eyes met. "We've known that he was Joker ever since that big raid in the warehouse district."

"What!?" Hitoshi shot up from his chair. "Why didn't you say anything!?"

“We wanted him to feel safe.” Risumi shook her head, “He needed a place where he could relax and not have to worry about anybody ratting him out to the authorities.”

“So that’s why you kept quiet?” Morgana asked as he looked in between them.

“Well, that and he saved our asses from Silver Falcon. Not to mention he single handedly put our small cafe on the map.” Ayumu said. Risumi glared at him, and he shrugged with a shameless smirk. “What? All of it is true.”

“He didn’t say it outright,” La Brava stared down at her plate, frowning, “But you could tell that he loved working here.”

“Indeed.” Gentle Criminal smiled. “He truly cared about all of you and the patrons here. You hold a special place in his heart.”

“I’m glad.” Risumi breathed a sigh of relief. “So, what’s your plan to break him out?”

“Mom!”

“What’s wrong, Hitoshi?” Risumi bore a smirk of her own.

“I... I just thought...” Hitoshi waved his arms towards the others. “You’re not mad?”

“Oh, we’re absolutely furious.” Hitoshi withered under Risumi’s motherly glare.

“We’ll talk about how long you’re grounded later.” Ayumu deadpanned. “For now, you’re all safe to come up with a plan.”

“But for how long?” La Brava asked. “There are police and heroes right outside.”

“True.” Risumi huffed. “But they’re not due for another check in until 8 o’clock this morning. That gives you a few hours.”

Spinner whistled. "She's not wrong."

"... Thank you."

Risumi blinked. "What for, Morgana?"

"For... for taking care of Akira a-and..." Morgana frantically shook his head. "For risking your necks. You could easily go to prison for this, and yet you're still acting on what you believe in. It's... really admirable."

"Of course." Risumi knelt next to Morgana and gently scratched behind his ear. "He's family, you know. That includes all of you."

Morgana sputtered before he could let out an accidental purr. Risumi laughed as she pulled back and stood straight.

"So tell me," Ayumu glanced at his wife, before smiling back at Morgana. "Is it true you can turn into a bus?"

"Ayumu!" Risumi cried.

"We have to settle our bet once and for all!"

Hitoshi facepalmed. "Please tell me this whole thing is just a bad nightmare."

"Afraid not, Hitoshi." Morgana said, "And yes, I can turn into a bus."

Ayumu grinned. "It turns out you're doing dishes for a month, Risumi."

"Fine." She said, rolling her eyes. "Just wipe that smile off your face."

Mr. Compress cleared his throat. "We are coming up with a plan to rescue Joker, right?"

"R-right." La Brava turned to Hitoshi. "Can I borrow your laptop?"

“Sure, one second.” Hitoshi ducked out of the kitchen and returned a moment later, laptop tucked under his arm.

“I was wondering who taught you that stuff, Hitoshi.” Risumi said when Hitoshi handed it over to La Brava.

“It’s a good thing, too.” La Brava opened the laptop and began typing away. “Without Hitoshi...”

“Our goose would be cooked!” Spinner shouted.

“... Pretty much.” Gentle Criminal said.

Hitoshi’s face burned, and it took everything in him to avoid his parents’ curious stares.

“How long will it take you to get into the system?” Morgana asked as he hopped into Hitoshi’s vacant chair.

“A few hours.” She said as Gentle Criminal and Risumi looked over her shoulder. “It won’t be easy, but I should be able to do it!”

“I see.” Risumi said. “In that case, why don’t the rest of you try to get some sleep? You’re all exhausted. We have a comfortable couch. I’m sure Hitoshi’s room has enough space for one or two futons.”

“I don’t think I could sleep if I tried.” Mr Compress said. “I’ll survive on coffee.”

“... Same here.” Spinner muttered.

“Merp!”

“Coffee won’t help your exhaustion.” Morgana said. “We don’t need anybody crashing before we rescue our leader.”

“My quirk will come in handy.” Risumi said as she rubbed her hands together.

“But what about dishes?” Gentle Criminal glanced between their dirty plates. “That’s a lot to do.”

“I’ll handle them.” Ayumu stated. “Don’t worry about it.”

“Besides, getting some rest isn’t a bad idea.” Morgana said. “We’re running on fumes at this point, a-and we’ll need our strength. We can’t mess this up!”

“Morgana’s right.” La Brava said. “I’ll wake anybody up if I find something!”

The others hesitantly nodded.

A few hours of shut eye wouldn’t hurt, right?

“NO!!!”

Morgana shot up from the armchair, hackles raised.

Shuichi fell off the couch in a tangled pile of limbs and blankets. The others rushed into the living room, dreary eyed.

“What’s wrong!?” Tobita asked. “Who screamed?”

“It’s five in the morning!” Shuichi said as he tossed blankets back onto the couch. “I was just having a good dream, too!”

Manami ran into the living room. Tears ran down her face as her shaking hands tried and failed to grip the television remote.

“La Brava?” Morgana whispered. “What’s wrong?”

“H-hospital....t-the n-news...” Manami’s voice cracked. “A-Akira...”

She managed to turn on the TV. Everyone stiffened at the words rolling across the screen.

'BREAKING NEWS: Update On All Might and Joker's Status After Epic Kamino Battle!'

The scene shifted to Demizu Mika standing in front of the Kamino hospital, the angry crowd behind her shouting at the mass of heroes surrounding it.

"Th-this just in..." Demizu Mika swallowed and blinked rapidly. She took a breath to steady herself, before staring into the camera with a knotted brow. "We just received an anonymous report that the vigilante Joker, now known as Kurusu Akira, succumbed to his injuries last night at 11:20 p.m. All Might, on the other hand-"

"-ight, on the other hand, seems to have made a full recovery from the events at Kamino-"

"Shiggy won't be happy." Toga whispered.

She pulled her hood tighter and hugged herself. Other distraught whispers broke out on the nearby street, others simply stood there, mouths agape, as they stared up at the giant screen. Toga glanced to her partner, who stood as rigid as a statue beside her. She wrinkled her nose as the dreary rain brought forth the putrid smell of the mouth of the alley they clung to.

"What do you think, Dabi?"

"What do I care?" Dabi scoffed as he turned his back towards the street. "Shigaraki lost his shit since his precious 'Sensei' died. You go ahead without me."

"Where are you going?"

"I'm just going to wander around. I'm not in the mood to sit around in our shitty hideout and listen to Shigaraki rant."

Toga watched him meld into the shadows. He had been acting different since the Summer Camp, more subdued, thoughtful, even. She thought she heard he and Twice whispering late into the night once. She collapsed against the wall and sank down to the icy cold concrete, all warmth seeping from her body. Toga wiped her nose with her sleeve as the gentle rain pattered around her, oblivious to the despair thrumming through the rest of Japan.

“No....” Bakugo’s phone creaked in his grip. “That’s a lie!! THIS IS BULLSHIT!”

“Who the hell would hire someone so useless?” Bakugo had said before a massive shadow swallowed their table.

“You’re lucky.” Kurusu smirked as he set out their plates. “This is the last of today’s curry. Enjoy.”

He walked away like a shadow, and Bakugo would never admit it was the best curry he’s ever had-

“You should take a look an number nine, you didn’t do it right.” The flash of amused eyes jabbed him, “Thirteen too.”

“I DID NOT-!!”

They were wrong-

Joker’s silver eyes stared into his, as sharp as razor wire and holding enough pain to end an entire world-

“I was never supposed to be here!!”

Bakugo screamed and threw his phone against the wall, heaving as it exploded into bits of plastic and metal. He couldn’t get any air. He clawed at his own throat as he burst out of his room. He just needed to get out !

“Katsuki!?” His mother called as he ran out the front door. “Where the hell do you think you’re going this early!? Katsuki!!”

He never heard her, only focusing on the burning in his lungs as the world fell around his shoulders. Bakugo collapsed once his feet tread sand and the salty aroma battered his nose.

Inko knocked on her son’s door. “... Izuku?”

She opened the door. Her son swiveled around in his chair, his computer screen painting him in dreary light. The streaming tears dripped down his chin as he pointed a shaky finger at the screen, his other hand grasping a fake Joker mask with white knuckles.

“Why? This can’t be happening...” He said, his voice quivering.
“Right... mom?”

A memory resurfaced in Inko’s mind, of her little boy pointing at the screen and asking if he could ever be a hero. Her legs moved and she found herself throwing her arms around Izuku.

“I’m sorry, baby.” She said over the tears sprouting in her own eyes.
“I’m so so sorry!”

She felt like a failure when Izuku sobbed into her chest, just like that time all of those years ago.

“... Did you hear the news?”

“Yeah! What were those doctors doing!?”

“They say someone from the inside leaked it.”

“Really? Who leaked the info?”

"No idea, but it's too late for them to do anything about it. The truth is out."

"So... Joker's really...?"

"Well, it's not like they are trying to cover it up, and Joker hasn't made an appearance or anything. All of it points to the obvious."

"Damn... and he was so young, too."

"They should've been able to save him! What the hell!?"

"After everything this kid did for us... he's.... I can't believe this..."

Kota kicked his legs back and forth from the hospital chair.

Pixie Bob and Ragdoll's hospital rooms looked more or less the same. Similar white washed walls, the burning smell of antiseptic, the rhythmic beeps of various machines cluttered around their beds. The assortment of 'get well soon!' cards was the only difference with the happy colors and balloons.

He's been back and forth between their rooms so many times that he couldn't really tell the difference anymore, sparing the person who slept comatose in the bed. Today, with the golden sunshine streaming in from the windows, he sat next to Ragdoll.

He ducked his head so that the rim of his hat hid her from view.

It's not that he didn't care about Pixie Bob and Ragdoll. He... did. Begrudgingly. That ice in his heart melted with warm relief when everybody came back safe.

Barring one exception.

Kota tried to sneak out several times to where they kept Joker in a completely different wing of the hospital. He never got far. Always blocked by a pair of heroes guarding a certain doors and passageways, and when the heroes switched off then it would always be a locked door or a keypad. The last time he had been dragged back by a sharp eyed nurse, Mandalay's frantic bows and apologies still rang in his ear.

"Damn adults..." He muttered, but the words soured his tongue.

He just wanted to thank Joker and Deku. Hell, he still had the letter crammed in his pack that he wrote for Deku, but he wouldn't feel right by thanking one and then not being able to thank the other. He grasped the hem of his shirt and twisted it around in his fists, wondering if he should attempt to sneak towards Joker again.

A golden haired doctor had come in a few minutes ago and called out Mandalay with an expression he couldn't read. They were still outside blabbering. He sat back in his chair with a huff. Sneaking out would have to wait, for now.

He jumped when the door opened and Mandalay came inside, her eyes red rimmed from crying. She glanced at Ragdoll before her eyes landed on him. She walked towards him and knelt down to eye level, gently placing a hand on his knee.

A trickle of cold dread tangled in his stomach as she looked at him. He knew that look, seen it before.

Momma...

Papa...

His eyes flicked to Ragdoll, sleeping peacefully. Ragdoll was fine! So was Pixie Bob the last time he was forced into her room. So that means-

The door burst open again, and Tiger stood there, panting.

“Tiger...” Mandalay stood, missing how Kota’s insides squirmed with rage and grief that made hot tears spill from his eyes. “Did you hear?”

“I... did.” Tiger closed his eyes and released a long sigh. “But there’s other news. Pixie Bob is awake. I think it would be best that we go see her right away.”

“Kota.” Mandalay placed her hands on his shoulders. “I want you to... no. Do you want to go see Pixie Bob? I know she would be happy to see you. Or would you rather be alone right now? We can find you a spare room if you don’t want to talk.”

His lips wobbled as he dove forward and latched onto her. She stiffened, before he melted in her grasp with stifled sobs. She scooped him up and locked eyes with Tiger.

“I’ll wait until he calms down.” She whispered. “Go on ahead without us.”

Tiger solemnly nodded as he left the room behind. He tread the familiar path to Pixie Bob’s room nearby, the uneasy swells of dread and relief crashing like waves inside of him. He reached Pixie Bob’s room and knocked before he walked inside.

“-should be impossible!”

A doctor and a few other nurses stammered around Pixie Bob, her long blonde hair spilling down her shoulders.

“What’s wrong?” Tiger asked, frantic.

“Tiger!” Pixie Bob looked up at him, tears spilling down her cheeks. “My quirk...”

“I know.” He bowed his head. “That man took it, didn’t he?”

“I thought he did, but look.” She held up a tiny earthen serpent slithering around her palm. The small lump of gouged earth came from a potted plant by the window.

“Are you certain your quirk was taken?” The doctor asked.

“He had to have stolen it.” Tiger’s hands balled into fists. “I was there when he said so!”

“Yes...” Pixie Bob’s brow furrowed as she ran a finger down the snake’s rocky spine. “He used Ragdoll as an example first. I saw it as he stole her quirk away, laughing while she screamed. Then he turned on me. That last thing I remember is him putting his hand on my head, then immense pain as I felt my quirk being ripped out, then... I woke up here. I thought I had a weird dream about my soul returning to my body? I don’t recall.” She sniffled as the tiny serpent coiled around itself, seemingly content with the splotch of sunlight on her palm. “This isn’t a dream... right?”

“Thankfully, you’re not dreaming. We’ll have to run a few more tests to make sure everything is alright. It wouldn’t be the first time we recorded a quirk anomaly in this hospital.” The doctor said, “But it’s obvious that your quirk works . I’ll give you two a moment.”

With a nod, the doctor and nurses filed out of the room.

“How is this possible?” Tiger asked.

“A miracle?” Pixie Bob chuckled as the serpent slithered down her arm and bedside, back into the potted plant it called home. “What happened since the Summer Camp? Why do you... look so sad?”

Tiger planted himself at her bedside and shared the unfortunate news about Joker.

“No way... there’s just no way.” Kaito stared at the screen, the announcement burned forever into his memory. “It’s a lie. It has to be a lie... right, Akira?”

The man never felt the river of tears pouring from his eyes until his phone rang several minutes later.

"I bet the heroes were in on it. Let some kid vigilante die so that they can swoop in and take over."

"It's all the Hero Commission's fault! They wanted to hurt Joker from the start!"

"Do you think they're going to hold a funeral or something?"

"I don't know. I just... why did this have to happen?"

"But.... but he can't die! Joker's supposed to be invincible!!"

"C-calm down! There has to be an explanation, right!?"

"Then why won't they give us details!? What exactly killed Joker? We deserve answers!!"

"He got what he deserved. I don't care what anybody says, he straight up executed that villain on live television."

The remote dropped from Manami's hand and onto the floor, the backing popping off. A battery came loose and rolled over to the entertainment stand, but nobody seemed to care.

"No way." Hitoshi collapsed into the couch and gripped his hair.
"There's.... there's no way!"

Manami fell to her knees and curled up on the floor, her sobs echoing throughout the apartment. Tobita rushed to her side, though it was hard to see through the tears flooding his eyes.

“This... this is just a nightmare, right?” Shuichi whispered.

“I don’t think so...” Mr Compress muttered.

Risumi collapsed into Ayumu, both of their expressions becoming pained and haunted.

“Everyone,” Morgana hopped onto the coffee table. “Get yourselves together! This is no time to be crying!”

“How can you say that!?” Hitoshi yelled, his eyes pinning Morgana to the spot. “After everything... Akira... He’s....”

“I know! But I... I can... Arg!” Morgana’s heart hammered as everyone stared. Guilt visibly gnawed away at him. “I... I can revive him!!”

A beat of muddled silence passed.

“You-” Manami’s voice caught in her throat. “You what ?”

He bounced between his paws and spoke as quick as lightning. “W-we didn’t know if it would work, b-but Joker first tested that power on Native, who died when he fought Stain! A-and then that little girl i-in the fire... he told me that he had to revive her because he was too late to save her...”

The group looked at him as if he just sprouted another head.

“You can...” Atsuhiro scrunched his brow. “Bring back the dead ?”

Morgana stilled. “... Yes.”

“Why didn’t you say anything before?” Tobita whispered.

“Because we didn’t want you guys to know.” Morgana shivered at a handful of wounded stares. “What do you think would happen if that knowledge got out!? Joker is already overwhelmingly powerful, but reviving the dead is a whole new level of trouble! But now, th-that... that he's..."

"Now that he has passed away, this knowledge is a game changer." Mr. Compress said solemnly.

"Th-that's right." Morgana shook his head. "Joker was able to revive the other two when they just died, but if there's a certain time limit-"

"Then we better move!" Shuichi yelled as fire came into his teary eyes. "We can't waste time here!"

Manami wiped her eyes. "B-but we just saw the news! That hospital is going to be packed with heroes and reporters!"

"My talents will come in handy." Mr. Compress put a hand over his heart. "I grew up on stories of Arsene Lupin, the man that could become anyone. With the heroes so preoccupied on keeping an angry mob back, and with a decent disguise and credentials, I believe I could walk right into the hospital. They know your faces, but not mine."

"Are you sure you can handle it?" Shuichi asked.

"Of course!" Mr. Compress splayed his arms to to side. "It will be an act worthy of savoring!"

Morgana rolled his eyes. "Fine, as long as you can get us inside. If... if Akira passed away at 11:20 last night, then he might be... might be...."

"In the morgue?" Gentle Criminal murmured.

"Y-yes."

"I made it into the system, so I can take care of the cameras and a fake identity for Compress." Manami pulled herself to her feet and wiped away the tears. Her shoulders trembled, but she stood tall.

“The morgue would be on the basement level. There’s a back entrance that leads right to it.”

“Then that settles it.” Morgana stated.

“Right!” Shuichi grinned, but his smile staggered. “Uh... somebody should let Kaito know. He’s probably having a heart attack right about now.”

“Kaito is in on this, too?” Risumi asked.

“Y-Yeah...” Morgana said. “He owns the internet cafe where we’ve been living.”

Ayumu and Risumi paled. They stared with equal shock at Hitoshi, who grimaced and sank further into the couch.

“You can call this... Kaito on the way.” Mr. Compress said. “This curtain call simply cannot be delayed any further!”

“Use the backdoor into the alley.” Risumi said. “It’s less conspicuous than jumping out of our windows.”

“Ah, rather boring, but understandable.” Mr. Compress said as he deflated.

“Manami, take my laptop.” Hitoshi said.

Her eyes widened. “Are you sure?”

“Yeah, its all yours.” Hitoshi’s lips quirked in an exhausted smile.

“You need it more than I do and besides... you taught me how to build them. I’ll just get parts for another one.”

She rushed to him and wrapped her arms around his neck. Hitoshi stiffened but he melted into her arms as he hugged back. She pulled away and ruffled his hair. They gathered what little possessions they had, thanked the Shinsous' for their hospitality, and vacated down the stairs.

Mr. Compress paused at the apartment door, being the last one to follow the pack.

"I feel like I owe you an apology, Miss Risumi." Mr. Compress said as he turned on his heel. He took off his hat and placed it over his heart.

"Me?"

"Yes. I admit that I had knowledge of the villainous plans that whisked Joker away, and... and that I didn't stop them from harming you or Joker. And for that-" Hitoshi and Ayumu gaped as Mr. Compress got on his knees and laid his forehead on the floor. "I sincerely apologize!"

Risumi looked down at her hand. The bandage was gone, and all that remained on her palm was a thin, pale scar.

"So, that patron that dropped the plate, that wasn't an accident?"

"... No." Mr. Compress wouldn't dare look at her. "It was intentional, and a pivotal move to apprehend Joker."

Risumi sighed through her nose as she walked over to Mr. Compress. She put a hand on his shoulder as he sat up, but kept his head bowed. Even with his mask on, he didn't dare look her in the eye.

"I'll accept your apology when that boy is safe and sound." She said sternly. "Got it?"

"Understood, Miss Risumi."

"Compress!" Shuichi called from downstairs. "Are you coming or what!? We need you for this plan, dude!"

Risumi let her hand drop and he stood up.

Mr. Compress bowed to them once more before he rushed downstairs to join the team.

The atmosphere of a morgue was unique. Common small talk and inklings of joyful emotions died within the chilled air, for what was it, other than an insult, to those who had just passed away? Their time in the light ran short, to be shut away in cold storage until they were put to rest.

Five stood around one such locker, which had been opened and its contents pulled out on a steel slab. The ghostly white sheet had been pulled down to the boy's shoulders. It looked as if Kurusu slept peacefully, but the raw truth settled heavy in their hearts.

"I can hold off on the autopsy for a limited time." Doctor Zoey whispered. "But after that, someone will be forced to claim him. There are several options, but we'll need to talk through them before any funerary rights are given."

"I see." Nezu said. He stood upon a small step stool, his ears drooped, his tail void of its usual languid movements to fall flat onto the floor. "Kunikazu just wants to rub this in our faces. We already know what killed him, so an autopsy is completely pointless. I intend to claim this boy, that man be damned."

"I can't...." Tsukauchi blinked several times, but the teary flood became relentless. "I'm sorry."

Tsukauchi turned around and walked out of the morgue.

Aizawa shoved his hands in his pockets. The harsh lighting of the morgue cast a shadow over him, his unkempt hair falling around his face in messy strands, but he really didn't have it in him to care. Aizawa's puffy red eyes could be mistaken for his usual lack of sleep, if not for the occasional snuffle.

"Do you wish to say anything, Aizawa?" Nezu asked softly.

Aizawa reached out and gently ruffled Kurusu's hair. The kid's curls were still soft and fluffy, and the picture of Kurusu getting annoyed at the contact, his eyes flashing with a certain playful glare-

“As long as the three of us stick together, then there’s not a problem in the world we can’t resolve!!”

Aizawa pulled his hand back as if it burned, Kurusu’s body blurred with another whom he lost long ago. He buried his face in his capture weapon and stalked out of the morgue without a word. The door closed before Aizawa could hear anymore chitchat between the others. He walked down the hall in a daze, unaware of the nurse pushing a laundry cart until it was too late. The collision made Aizawa stumble into the wall. The pain felt numbed.

“Oh, my apologies! These things are so hard to control sometimes. Loose wheels, you know?”

Aizawa looked to a man with slanted brown eyes and curly hair of the same color. His eyes fell to the ground. Curly hair was too hard to look at right now.

“It’s fine.” Aizawa muttered as he pushed himself from the wall. “I wasn’t watching where I was going.”

He felt the nurse stare into his back before he turned the corner.

Aizawa craved caffeine now more than ever, but he didn’t know if he could ever stomach cheap coffee again. He needed something just a little bit stronger.

He sent a quick text to Tsukauchi, who agreed to meet up later tonight.

Atsuhiro pressed his back to the wall as Nezu, Tsuragamae, and a golden haired doctor left the morgue behind. He breathed a sigh of relief as their quiet voices faded away. Nobody could stop him when he ditched the cart and slipped into the morgue, the bleak atmosphere infecting the place like a plague.

And he thought these dreary scrubs he had to wear were depressing.

“I thought they would never leave.” He muttered as he scanned the wall of cold storage lockers. “Now, which one holds the treasure?”

He slipped on gloves and opened them one by one. Atsuhiro dreaded the inevitable as most of them were empty. Until one particular locker revealed a body draped in a white sheet. Atsuhiro swallowed thickly as he pulled the slab out, the screeching metal sounded too much like the wailing of the dead. With a steady breath, he pulled the sheet back. He yelped and jumped away.

This wasn't Joker.

It was All For One .

Only recognizable by that sorry chunk of flesh he once called a face, as eyeless and disfigured as it was. His skin was like ancient, dried leather wrapped around a skeleton. He pictured a petrified raisin. Atsuhiro stood frozen, as if the wretched demon would suddenly come back from the dead and slaughter him. He'd rather not be the first victim to a cheesy zombie movie, thank you very much.

“I don't think any amount of moisturizer or make-up will make you look pretty for a funeral, old boy.” Atsuhiro muttered as he pulled the drape back up, his hands trembling. “Definitely a closed casket.”

He wiped the cold sweat from his brow and, double checking that All For One's icy tomb was locked, moved on. He finally pulled out one on the opposite side of the room. The screeching metal grated in his ears and sent a shiver down his spine. He pulled back the shroud. Atsuhiro gasped sharply as the boy's pale face was revealed. With a shaky hand, he reached into his pocket for a particular orb and broke it open.

Morgana blinked rapidly at the harsh lights. His eyes fell to Kurusu. His fur puffed up as if he had been electrocuted. For a cat, an oddly human-like sob escaped his lips. Atsuhiro practically heard the poor thing's heart breaking into pieces. Morgana sniffled, and turned towards Atsuhiro with watery eyes.

"Wh-where are the others?"

"They're still in my pocket. Do you really want them to see him this way?" Atsuhiro asked, his own expression heavy. "We should speed up this particular act, for we don't know when other actors could barge in... or if rigor mortis will affect a revival attempt."

"R-right."

Morgana climbed up the man's shoulder. Mercurius appeared on the other side of the steely cot, a sweetened flurry from his wings sent the aroma of fresh pines into the morgue.

"Please let this work." Morgana prayed to whatever gods would lend their ear. "Please ."

Atsuhiro watched as Mercurius lay the tip of his winged staff upon Kurusu's chest. The mystical god took a deep breath before he uttered a single word, a prayer plucking at the very strings of reality.

"Samarecarm."

I have been relentless with these cliffhangers, huh?

Zero regrets.

Dark Sun

Chapter 63: Dark Sun

Dark Sun

Wherever you shine

Eyes turn

Away

Dark Sun

What choices have I

But live another day

Live another day

Live one more day

FANART!

Kirisuma on Twitter

Nil on Twitter 1 2

Koyu on Twitter

Darkness.

Endless cold.

The bleak nothingness consumed his soul.

But Ren didn't cower. Peace blanketed him, the same type of tranquility a thief would find on the night of a new moon. Still, this place was like reuniting with an old friend. This stillness harbored the same feeling with every Persona he put to the guillotine or noose, the harmonious end of a life before it was birthed into new power.

As for his Personas....

A heavy void nestled in place of their familiar voices and presence, but he wasn't worried. The serenity of this place wouldn't let him. His eyes felt so heavy. He was about to drift off to his final sleep, like a ripple fading in a too still lake.

A familiar chuckle shocked him awake.

"Somehow, you still manage to surprise me."

The endless void shifted. A bubble of prismatic light warped all around him, molding itself into a place he was intimate with. Leblanc. Ren found himself standing behind the counter, coffee stains from his first attempts at making a brew were ingrained into the wood. Ren ran his finger over the knife marks and many other scratches. The light tap tap of rain pattered on the windows. Eerie light bathed the whole cafe, like a rainbow of colors glinting through a diamond.

The person sat with his elbow planted on the counter while he cupped his face with a black gloved hand. His brown hair spilled just past his neck. His tan peacoat and tie remained in pristine condition. Another sort of light emanated from him, an internal pyre that gave off warm glow.

Ren found his breath stolen from him. "... Akechi?"

"What's wrong?" Amusement flashed in Akechi's eyes. "You look like you've seen a ghost."

“What-” Ren took a step back, his eyes wide. “What is this place? I thought I was...”

“Perhaps a sort of limbo for lost souls like us. I’ve been trapped here since, well... you know. Besides that, isn’t it customary to serve your patrons before any sort of chitchat?” Akechi looked around Leblanc. “I don’t see Boss or any of your other friends, but I suppose that’s a good thing. Yaldabaoth wouldn’t kill them that easily.”

Ren’s mouth went dry. His legs moved automatically towards the wall of coffee beans. There was no mistake. This had to be Leblanc. The smell of coffee and curry had been ingrained into the cafe as if it had been steeped in the brew. The fridge, the stove, the ingredients. Everything was in the exact place it had been the last time he saw it.

Ren glanced at Akechi, who had that smirk on his face.

“Well?”

Ren turned back to brewing. When it was finished he grabbed a cup under the counter, the familiar coolness gracing his skin, and poured a cup of liquid gold. He set it in front of Akechi, who tenderly picked it up. Ren held his breath as Akechi took a sip.

“Interesting. What brew would this be?”

“Mexican Altura. I didn’t forget.” Ren tucked his hands away in his apron pockets. He swore he wasn’t wearing an apron just a second ago. “You don’t actually like sugary things, so I chose one that wouldn’t be as sweet.”

“Quite. As usual, it’s delicious.”

Akechi set the drink down with a soft clink . An uncertain stillness crept between them as the two rivals stared at one another.

“Akechi-”

“Don’t.” Akechi looked down and allowed a curtain of his hair to cover his face. “I already know what you want to say. Isn’t it ironic?”

Ren stayed silent as Akechi looked up, his eyes stabbing like the end of a knife.

“You cheated death back home.” Akechi searched Ren’s face as if it were a missing piece to a puzzle. “And now you’ve done it again, but this time you actually died . Multiple times. The rules of that new world are different though, correct? You can cheat death any number of times granted that you’re lucky enough to get a revival item or a Samarecarm. Are you shrugging your own death off like it’s nothing? Is this all a game to you?”

“No.” Ren couldn’t lie when Akechi stared him right in the eye. He knotted his hands into fists and took a shaky breath. “This isn’t a game.”

“Then why are you treating it like one?”

“What the hell are you talking about?” The accusation stung Ren. “I’m not the one playing with other people’s lives. That’s Yaldabaoth’s job.”

“Are you so certain of that?” Akechi chuckled coldly. The mask of a Detective Prince cracked, revealing a hint of something feral. “By what right did you have to drastically change the history of a world you never belonged in?”

Ren scowled. “I can’t just sit by and let people suffer.”

“Look where that got you.” Akechi snapped. Ren flinched, but Akechi’s glare remained firm. “You could have found a way home. Reunited with your friends. Saved our world. But no, you decided to run around and play hero. You’ve forgotten that you’re a foreign entity dropped into that world by a malevolent false god.”

"I didn't forget !" Ren shook his head. "What's your point? You're saying that I should've ignored people who need help?"

"Perhaps. Perhaps not. But whether they lived or died, to either be saved or continue their suffering, that is something you never should have messed with." Akechi glanced down to the lukewarm cup, tracing the rim with a frown. "Don't you think that was part of Yaldabaoth's plan? To drop you in a place where your powers go unchecked, to distract and exhaust you until something like this happens? You've eliminated the top powers of that world and you're the weakest you've ever been. What's to stop him from taking over multiple worlds, now that all of these elements are out of commission?"

Ren opened his mouth, then closed it. He ducked his head, his hair shielding him from Akechi's scathing glare.

"Tell me the truth. What made you lose sight of your goal?" Akechi leaned forward and pointed at Ren's heart. "The root of all of your actions began there, when you chose to be a Phantom Thief in a world of heroes."

"Originally..." Ren put a hand over his heart. "It was to get our name out so the others could find us if they made it there."

"But that's never happened. Your friends remain trapped in other worlds, no closer to getting home than you are right now." Akechi tilted his head. "Where did it all go wrong?"

"I..." Ren's hand balled into a fist, the apron's fabric scrunched in his grasp. "I was... no, I'm still terrified. I have nightmares of that interrogation room. Then you... and Yaldabaoth... and everything else that's happened since then.... I'm so scared, Akechi." Tears stung Ren's eyes, but Akechi's expression remained stoic. "The uncertainty. The pain. My failure . I was reminded of everything whenever Morgana looked at me. It grew the longer we were in that world, and I ended up using my powers to run away from it all. I just... I'm so tired. I want to go home. I want to see everyone again."

Akechi remained silent as Ren sniffled and wiped his eyes. He had no glasses to hide behind. Ren shook his head as he pulled himself together, the sharpness in his chest easing as he wiped away the final tear.

“But those people we saved... I will never regret it.”

“I see. It’s not a bad thing to admit your fears. A true fool would continue burying them and pretend that they never existed. Thank you for your honesty. It was rather refreshing. However,” Akechi’s smirk was like jagged ice. “It doesn’t matter how many you save in that world of heroes, it will never make up for the millions of people suffering under Yaldabaoth’s rule back home, whether they are conscious of it or not. Don’t you dare forget their suffering.”

Those words struck Ren like the crack of a whip.

“You still have quite a journey ahead of you, but you’ll do just fine as long as you don’t run away from your origins again.”

Akechi’s gaze flicked to something behind Ren. With a sigh, he stood and pulled at his gloves. He looked down at the empty coffee cup, and then beamed brightly at Ren.

“Thank you for the coffee. It seems our time has run short.”

Ren flinched. “What?”

A sapphire butterfly soared over Ren’s shoulder and landed on the rim of Akechi’s mug. It slowly turned towards him, its wings fluttering. It took off and landed on Ren’s chest. A sudden heat flooded Ren, as if his heart became home to a gentle flame, which grew until it slowly spread over his entire body.

Several things flitted through his mind.

"Ah, you're back-"

Ryuji grinning after an intense workout-

Ann's perfume-

The sound of Yusuke's brush over a canvas-

Pages turning in a textbook and Makoto's firm voice-

The clacking of Futaba's keyboard-

Haru's fresh garden-

Morgana's vow of companionship before facing the truth of Mementos-

The resigned gleam in Akechi's eyes. A BANG of a gunshot resounded in their ears, and they locked gazes before steel jaws snapped shut and separated them.

Leblanc faded as the heat burned as bright as the sun.

"Wait!" Ren shouted as Akechi's silhouette became blurred. He reached out, but the other boy stepped away and turned his back. "Akechi!"

Faint silhouettes appeared on either side of Akechi, rippling through the haze of sapphire embers. A duality of black and white, of righteousness and malicious deviance.

Robin Hood and Loki.

The pair of Personas regarded him with unified tilts of their head, a cocktail of different emotions burning within their eyes.

"Oh, and Ren?"

Ren's vision blurred as Akechi looked over his shoulder. Something feral sharpened Akechi's smile and lit his eyes with bloodlust. The facade of the handsome ace detective crumbled into an apex predator.

“Don’t hesitate next time.” Akechi said, “Kick Yaldabaoth’s ass for me, will you?”

The promise was on Ren’s tongue, but the heat had devoured his entire being. Leblanc fell into the void like cascading sand. Akechi and his Personas vanished. The butterfly melded into his body, and with it the thrum of a heartbeat.

Amamiya Ren lived once more.

“Akira!?” Morgana cried when Akira jolted violently, his chest shuddering with raspy noises. “Hey, open your eyes! Akira!”

Atsuhiro kept his jaw from dropping, his hand resting over his pounding heart. He put two fingers on the boy’s neck. Joker had a pulse. Weak, but still there. He swallowed back the storm of emotions brewing in his chest, before he put the back of his hand on the boy’s forehead.

“He’s burning up, but... he’s alive.... I can’t believe it...”

“Mercurius!” Morgana shouted.

Mercurius waved his staff. Instead of the soothing green and blue ribbons from Mediarahan, navy and violet light swirled together in a vortex. Akira gave off a soft glow, but it did nothing.

“Was that... Salvation?” Morgana asked.

“Yes.” Mercurius ran a hand down his singed staff. “We have been through much, and it is a new spell I recently acquired to replace Mediarahan.”

“But... if it’s Salvation, then why isn’t it doing anything?”

Akira broke out in a cold sweat, his eyes moving rapidly beneath his clenched eyelids as if he were having a nightmare.

“Akira!” Morgana huddled against Akira’s chest. “Please wake up!”

“I don’t want to sound brash, but we should vacate the premises and tend to him later.” Atsuhiro turned and rummaged through various drawers. “There must be clothes in one of these cabinets somewhere-”

The door swung open. They froze as Recovery Girl waddled inside, the door shutting behind her. She leaned on her cane as she scanned the room.

Mercurius growled, deep and bone rattling. A razor sharp wind split the room in half as the fleet footed god’s burned wings splayed. His shadow loomed over Recovery Girl, who only regarded him with mild interest as she shook her head.

“You would really threaten violence on an old woman?” She tutted. “I thought you would have some manners, being phantom thieves and all.”

“I normally respect my elders, Recovery Girl.” Atsuhiro smirked as he reached into his pocket for a handful of blue orbs. “But we’re in a bit of rush and not open to friendly banter. I hope you understand.”

Her eyes landed on Akira, a mix of relief and sorrow glinting in her eyes. “Ah, so Mona has revival abilities too? It seems I was correct.”

“Wh-what!?” The winds died as Morgana’s ears pricked forward. “How did you-”

“I suspected it after the Musutafu fires.” She said, “Nobody, especially a little girl, would survive flames that hot. You can stop glaring at me, dearies. I came alone. I haven’t told Nezu about my theories, either. I never told a single soul.”

Mercurius and Morgana exchanged a long glance. With a bow, Mercurius and his wind faded from reality, but that power lay just under Morgana’s skin.

Atsuhiro scowled, but stayed silent. The marbles in his tight grasp ground together.

“Can I...?” Recovery Girl stepped closer. “A real doctor should examine him. The poor boy doesn’t look so good.”

“... Okay.” Morgana stepped onto the side of the slab. “But I’ll be watching you closely. If you think you can-”

“None of that, please.” She said as she unwound her stethoscope and approached Akira. She pulled the white drape down Akira’s bare chest and listened to his heart, her brow knotted. “I only wish to help.”

Morgana’s tail twitched as she performed a few more basic tests. “Well?”

“It doesn’t look good.” She shook her head. “Not only does he have a high grade fever, but his heartbeat is erratic and his pupils-”

“Get to the point.” Atsuhiro said coldly.

“For his safety, he needs to be hospitalized again.”

“No.” Morgana growled.

“No?” Recovery Girl’s eyebrows shot up. “Deary, right now he needs professional help-”

“Professional help? Professional help!? ” A storm brewed in Morgana’s eyes. The air in the morgue gently stirred. “Look where we are! Look at what your professional help got him! How could I ever trust you people again after everything that’s happened!? No, we’re taking him out of here and then-”

“And then what?” She asked softly. No malice or anger stained her voice. Just... exhaustion. “His death was revealed to the rest of the world. What do you think will happen when his ‘body’ goes missing? People may hunt for him again. The best place for him right now would be U.A., where he could be kept safe while he recovers. In secret, preferably.”

“Nezu couldn’t keep him safe from All For One, and he allowed our friends to get arrested. Joker had to rescue himself from that villain!” Morgana seethed. “We’re not going anywhere near that place.”

Recovery Girl studied him, the last of her tension draining from her body. “Let me share a story-”

“We don’t have time for stories.” Atsuhiro said as he glanced at the clock on the wall. “If Mona says we’re leaving, then we’re leaving.”

“If that is really your choice, then I don’t have the power to stop you. However, I believe you need to hear me out.”

“Perhaps it would be wise to hear another opinion, Magician.”
Mercurius whispered. “If nothing but to gain another perspective. We do not need heated recklessness ruining an opportunity.”

“Fine.” Morgana said, “But make it quick.”

Recovery Girl nodded. “Many years ago, there was a young girl named Chiyo. One day, there was a car accident while she was out playing. A rogue driver has hit her best friend and drove off. Her friend was on the street, bleeding out, and there would be no time for the paramedics to arrive before it would be too late.”

“A tragedy, to be sure.” Atsuhiro said dryly.

“It would have been, if Chiyo didn’t awaken her quirk. You see, she can heal people with a single kiss, given that the victim has enough energy for it. Chiyo healed her friend, and he survived long enough to be taken to the hospital. The people in her small town called her an angel, a blessing. From then on, they came to her for any number of injuries.”

“What happened?” Morgana asked.

“The men in suits came. People from the Hero Commission heard about her miracle powers, and stole her away from everything she loved.” Recovery Girl seemed to age ten years as her voice became somber. “Over the years, they vigorously trained her until she broke. Chiyo witnessed many horrible things. Burnt bodies, desiccated corpses, people dying from the most diabolical effects of man-made weapons, all experiments in the name of ‘improving her quirk’. The goal was to force her quirk to evolve far enough to where she could even revive the dead. It never did.”

“That’s horrible.” Morgana shivered as his tail wrapped around his legs. “What happened to her?”

“Nezu.” A small smile restored life into her expression. “He heard what was going on with the Hero Commission, he pulled strings and called in every favor he had to get the girl into his custody. Eventually, on the threat of exposing the horrible experiments to the public, the Hero Commission gave him custody.”

Morgana blinked rapidly. “How long ago was this?”

“Nearly forty-five years, deary.”

“Forty-five years!? Just how old is Nezu?”

“Only Nezu knows that.” She said. “But the point is that Nezu will do anything to protect this young boy from harm. That mouse doesn’t know the meaning of ‘giving up’, so one defeat won’t stop him.”

Atsuhiro scoffed and rolled his eyes.

“If you told that story to convince me,” Morgana said, standing, “Then my answer is still no. We made it this far without your help. I’m going to protect him this time, and nothing is going to stop me. I’m sorry, but I can’t trust you right now.”

“... I see.” Recovery Girl pointed to a drawer across the room. “The boy’s belongings are in there.”

Atsuhiro rushed over to it and pulled out Akira's clothes.

"You're really going to let us go?" Morgana asked.

"I know what people will do to get powers like yours and Joker's." She turned her back on him. "I just hope you know what you're doing, dearies. If it gets to be too much, or the boy's condition continues to worsen, then you know where to find us."

Recovery Girl stayed as they dressed the ill boy to the best of their abilities. Atsuhiro looked at the not-cat, who firmly nodded.

"This won't hurt one bit, I promise." Atsuhiro gently touched the boy's curls. With a small flash, he was stored away in a tiny orb, which Atsuhiro tucked into his pocket. "Shall we, Mona?"

"Yeah." Morgana said as he hopped onto the man's shoulder. "Let's get out of here while we can."

They left without sparing her a glance.

Recovery Girl looked at the empty cot, frowning. She drew out her phone and dialed Nezu.

"Chiyo?" Her heart twinged by how exhausted her father figure sounded. "Is something the matter?"

"Where are you? There's something I have to share." She stared at the door, which swung lightly. "It's better if I tell you about it in person."

Ding .

Hawks stepped out of the elevator and marched down the hallway. Office workers in the Hero Commission HQ glanced at him and bolted in the other direction. It was as if a dark cloud hovered over his head, his stormy expression promising a painful death if anyone dared look him in the eye. He crossed through the building with a purpose, and nobody had the balls to stop him.

Except one.

“Hawks?” Ryoto looked up from a file in his hands. “What are you doing here? You weren’t called-”

Hawks passed him without even looking.

“H-hey, Hawks!” Ryoto rushed to Hawks’ side, nearly out of breath since Hawks didn’t bother slowing down. “Hawks, what’s wrong? As far as I know you weren’t summoned, so what are you doing? Hawks! Talk to me!”

“Don’t bother stopping me.” Hawks snapped. “It’s already too late.”

“Stopping you....?”

They reached the hallway with Kunikazu’s office. Ryoto paled. The file dropped onto the floor as Ryoto swerved around Hawks and put both hands on his shoulders. To say that Hawks looked murderous was an understatement. His feathers were stiff and twitchy. His eyes, bloodshot and puffy, held a primal glint that welcomed incoming doom.

“Hawks....” Ryoto whispered. “What did you do ?”

“You already know.” Hawks looked at the watch on his wrist. “Check the news in five minutes and you’ll see my update on Joker’s death.”

“What? It was... that was you ?” Hawks shrugged the man off and continued on his way. Ryoto snatched his wrist. “You can’t go in there! Kunikazu will use his quirk when he finds out!”

A bark of laughter stopped Ryoto cold.

“Do you think I really give a damn about Kunikazu anymore?” Hawks wrenched his wrist back. “I’m only dropping in to tell him goodbye.”

“What... Hawks!!”

Ryoto tried to chase after him, but a wall of massive red feathers blocked the hallway on either side of Kunikazu’s door. Hawks kicked open the door and let himself in.

Kunikazu looked up from his desk with a sneer. “Hawks, what do you think you’re doing? You’re scheduled for a patrol right now.”

“Oh, am I really? I didn’t bother checking my schedule today.” Hawks tilted his head. “I only stopped in so that I could see the look on your face when your whole world comes tumbling down.”

“What are you talking about?”

Hawks looked at his watch as it beeped. “Well, would you look at that. If I were you, I’d tune in to channel five news. I heard that there would be a particularly striking video that might peak your interest.”

Kunikazu glared at him, but complied.

Hawks wickedly grinned when the man tuned into the news channel on his computer. Satisfaction curled up Hawks’ spine when Kunikazu’s eyes went as wide as dinner plates, his face going so pallid that his veins became visible.

“What... what is this!?” Kunikazu’s eyes burned gold as sweat beaded on his forehead.

“Did you know that those ICU rooms have cameras?” Hawks chuckled as he shook his head. “I get you wanted to show how ‘unstable’ a terrified teenager was to a court of law, but you really should’ve thought it through. That was one of the worst places to throw one of your tantrums. Some people may have turned their backs on Joker, but there are many more that still love him. How do you think they’ll react when they learn you used your quirk on a helpless kid?”

Hawks got out his phone and watched as Kunikazu sicced the police officers on a bed-ridden child. Kunikazu's golden eyes blazed like lanterns just before Cerberus summoned himself, his wild roars shaking the camera. The world witnessed the room's destruction, Eraserhead wrapping Joker in his arms, and the seizures that made the kid go comatose and lead to his eventual death.

"The truth is out." Hawks stated as he pocketed his phone. "Joker is dead and the grieving public wants somebody to blame. With this, everyone will know your hand in the kid's death. This is all your fault."

"You... you!!" Kunikazu's blazing golden eyes fell on Hawks.

Hawks stiffened when a familiar inferno cooked his insides. He snickered through the pain, a feral grin plastered on his face as his organs boiled. But this searing agony had nothing on the new hole punched through his heart.

"Do you have any idea what you just did!?" Kunikazu roared.

"Yep!" Hawks chirped. "But you know what? I don't care! I'm sick of your fear tactics, I'm sick of being the Hero Commission's little puppet, and most of all, I'm sick of you ! Because of you, I just lost one of the most important people in my life! For once, I tasted real freedom . You'd never understand what Joker meant to me, what he meant to the people of Japan!"

"I had to retain order!" Kunikazu banged his fist on the desk. "And now the country will fall into chaos because of what you just did! I'll see you punished-"

"No, you won't. You don't hold any power over me anymore!" Hawks reached into his pocket and slammed a red and black card on the desk. "Too bad it's not an official one from Joker, but I'm leaving it here for you anyway. I cooked it up, special. Just for you! Think of it as my final present to you. Goodbye, Kunikazu." Hawks stood tall as the infernal glow in Kunikazu's eyes faded. "I hope we never see each other again."

Hawks marched out without another word, leaving the man in dreadful silence.

Kunikazu stared at the card.

To the Pridedeful Sinner, Kunikazu Hiroto,

Your days of abusing the weak, manipulating your way to the top echelons of society, and lording over the general populace are over. The hand you have dealt has been revealed to the public. That tower you built around yourself will soon lie in crumbling ruins.

~ Never Yours, Raptor ☆

Kunikazu screamed as he tore the card to bits. Red and black confetti rained over his desk and onto the floor, and he collapsed down into his chair, panting. He jumped when his phone rang. He straightened the stray bangs sticking to his forehead. Cold shivers crawled over his skin as he answered.

"Prime Minister. Let me explain."

"No, Kunikazu. No more of these games!"

"Sir-"

"Do you have any idea what position you're in!? People are crying out to get justice for Joker, and you-"

"Sir, please. I can make everything right. Just give me another chance. I'll take care of-"

"No, you won't." The Prime Minister sighed, short and irritated. "I gave you another chance when you botched that raid in Musutafu, the bounty, the instability that went rampant over my country! You made the heroes, and the Commission itself, look like a bunch of headless chickens! And for what? All of this because a teenage boy played you like a damned fiddle! A boy who is dead, and the public lays the blame on you. You're finished."

"Wh.... what ?"

"I'll give you an hour to get your affairs in order."

"Wait-"

"Don't think you can run, either. I've sent a certain group of heroes to the HC headquarters to apprehend you. Don't make a bigger fool of yourself by resisting."

"Wait!!" His chair flew back as he rushed to his feet. "I'm not finished here!!"

The line went dead. He pulled it away from his ear and gaped at the screen. His attempts to redial went unanswered, and the sinking feeling in his stomach sprouted like thorny vines. Kunikazu fell to his knees as his phone dropped from his grasp. The ringing in his ears drowned out all sound and rational thought, like howling wolves gathering for a kill.

Time held no meaning in this spiraling daze. The pounding on the door didn't register until it burst open, and his furious executioners swooped inside.

Gang Orca.

Ryukyu.

Miruko.

Chief Tsuragamae and a small handful of police officers.

“Come on.” Gang Orca growled as he wrenched Kunikazu to his feet, the grip on Kunikazu’s arm enough to make his bones creak. “It’s over.”

Tsuragamae read his rights, but the static muddling Kunikazu’s brain turned it into muted garble. He was dragged from his own office by Gang Orca. Miruko took his other side with an equally bone breaking grip. The faces of the HQ workers blurred together with masks of shock, except for a single person.

Ryoto’s eyes followed them as they made their way down the hall, but the shocked man’s mask cracked as Kunikazu and the heroes passed him.

Ryoto smirked .

A small grin that would forever be seared in Kunikazu’s mind as he was torn from everything he’s ever worked for.

Shoto tossed another pellet into the water.

The pond swelled as the koi fish dashed madly to devour the tasty snack. But another swooped in while they plowed over one another, one of sable black scales with ivory markings around its eyes, followed by lustrous flowing fins as flamboyant as a certain vigilante’s own coattails. Joker the koi fish swiped the treat in elegant, fluid movements, leaving the rest of the gaping mouths empty.

Shoto snorted as he tossed the next one in, much to the same result. Once the waters calmed, his scaly audience turned to him with hungry eyes. Shoto wiped his hands on his pant legs.

“Sorry, I’m all out.”

The fish all but ignored him then, swimming serenely through their crystal clear pond. Water lilies and blooming lotus flowers provided shade from the scorching summer sun. Joker the koi fish continued staring at him. Hovering just below the surface, its frontal fins waving back and forth like a curtain. If Shoto didn't know better, he would think that a mischievous intelligence glimmered in its eyes. It continued to stare at him, as if prompting something.

"What does it all mean, Joker?" Shoto asked as he leaned forward, the black fish gliding a few inches closer to him. "I can't seem to figure you out."

He was the only one that knew how Joker brought back Native from the cold hands of death. Did he bring back others too, or was Native the only exception? Was it possible for Joker to revive himself? Could Mona have the same abilities, and if so, could he control one or more of those mythological beings?

Shoto looked at his phone, which balanced on his knee, and unlocked it to the website he'd been pouring through. Information on Arcanas.

"He called me an Empress-"

"My Tower! And..." Seth's eyes bored into Shoto like searing rays of sunlight, "The Hanged Man?"

Empress. Tower. Hanged Man.

Empress: This Arcana represents elegance, nurturing, creation, and beauty. This card calls you to connect with the beauty and happiness in your life.

Tower : Can represent pride, change, falsehood, and ruin. Beware this card, for it can be associated with sudden and unforeseen changes, both good and bad.

Hanged Man : Represents self sacrifice, surrender, or being caught between two extremes. This card in the upright position means that one should take advice and reflect over one's actions.

The Arcana described them to frightening levels of accuracy. But what did it all mean ? Shoto roughly tapped the side of his phone as the thoughts rolled through his head.

Seth stated my Tower, so did that mean that Seth had power over that particular Arcana? Did Joker's mythological companions bear different Arcanas? What did it have to do with Joker and the relationships he forged since his appearance at the USJ?

Shoto's thoughts were drawn aside by a sudden twinge in his chest.

"Then there's this..." He muttered as he rubbed the invisible wound over his heart. "Last night I felt as if... I couldn't breathe." Shoto's stared at Joker the koi fish, who stared back from his watery plane. "Iida said that it was grief, but we all felt a similar pain last night, several hours before his death was announced. Everything must be connected, but how ?"

Joker the koi fish floated there without a care in the world. Silent. Serene.

Shoto huffed. "Of course. Keep your secrets then, just like the real Joker."

The koi fish bolted through the water. It dove into the shade of water lilies, its dark scales a perfect camouflage against shadowed rock. The ripples stilled, and the watery mirror reflected a familiar figure. Shoto looked over his shoulder.

"Mother."

"Shoto." Rei sat beside him with one elegant movement. Love and pride sparkled within her eyes as she stared at him, and he wondered if she could be an Empress too. “Should I be concerned that you are talking to fish?”

“No. I’m fine.” Shoto ducked his head, his dual colored bangs masking the redness in his face. “I just... needed some place to think out loud. Where is everyone else?”

“In my room. I had the nurses bring tea.” Rei frowned as she stared into the pool. “They are... understandably upset. How are you feeling about this, Shoto?”

“I don’t know. Everything is becoming one big blur. I’m glad that Kunikazu is getting what he deserves, but....”

“But?”

“I just have this feeling.” Shoto’s hand stilled over his heart. “I don’t know how to describe it. I felt like my chest was going to burst all through the night, but then this morning... it faded a little, but its still there.”

“You’re experiencing grief.”

“That’s what my class rep said. But I know that there’s something more going on, I just can’t connect the dots. It doesn’t feel like its over. Joker isn’t done telling his story.”

Her hand fell on his shoulder. “If your gut instinct tells you that there’s more to this, then it might be wise to follow it.”

“... Yeah.”

“Momo and Fuyumi were starting to get worried.” Rei smiled. “How about we rejoin everyone for tea? We can have an early dinner and just chat, if you want to.”

“Yeah, sure.”

They stood and wiped the grass and dirt from their pants. Shoto looked at Joker the koi fish, who watched on through the darkness. A sudden hope cast away the sharp, suffocating pain in his soul.

Joker had to be alive.

He just knew it.

Aizawa and Tsukauchi wrinkled their noses against the overpowering aroma of alcohol, and ignored the drunken murmurs as they chose the loneliest table in the back. The lighting in this place was stained by the curling wisps of cigarette smoke, the sound of clacking echoed from the other side of the bar from the pool table.

“Sorry, it was the closest place.”

“Don’t worry about it.” Aizawa said as he melted into the booth. “At this point, I don’t give a damn whether its a shithole like this or a fancy-”

A waitress cleared her throat when she approached their table. Tsukauchi grimaced as he placed an order for the both of them, nothing too strong so that they wouldn’t be sloshed the next morning. She walked away with an indignant curl to her lip.

“Here, I can pay.” Aizawa droned as he tossed a familiar wad of 5,000 yen on the table.

“Hey, isn’t that for-”

“Yep.”

“Shouldn’t you keep it?”

“What for?” Aizawa glared at it. “I don’t need it anymore.”

Tsukauchi frowned. “It’s something we wanted to give him. I think we should keep it as a reminder.”

“I don’t care.” Aizawa scoffed and turned his eyes away. “Do whatever you want with it.”

Tsukauchi tucked the 5,000 yen in his coat pocket before he got out his wallet. Aizawa didn’t say anything as the waitress set cold bottles on the table, her eyes roamed over Tsukauchi, who paid out of his own pocket, leaving the 5,000 yen untouched. She swiped the bills and stalked away, and they were left to their own devices.

Tsukauchi’s heart lurched as Aizawa opened one and took a massive swig. “Aizawa-”

The man slammed the beverage back on the table, the liquid inside bobbing back and forth. “Did you know I was the last one to see Joker at the Summer Camp? It was his plan to split up. If I had just... just...” His knuckles turned white as he gripped the bottle. “If I had just stopped him, or went with him-”

“Aizawa, no .” Tsukauchi leaned forward. “Don’t you dare blame yourself for what happened.”

“How else am I supposed to see it?” Aizawa glared back. “I was the last one who saw Joker and Mona at the camp. Joker is dead, we don’t have Mona, or Gentle Criminal and La Brava. The Hero Commission is crumbling. That utter bastard Kunikazu got what’s coming to him, but all of this happened because I let Joker go.”

“Aizawa.” Tsukauchi’s eyes hardened. “We had no way of knowing what the League’s plans were. All For One would’ve tried grabbing Joker no matter what we did. You know that.”

“And look where that got him. At least that villain can’t harm anybody else.” Aizawa muttered as he took another sip.

Tsukauchi hummed. “I heard that they were pushing to cremate the villain’s remains. All Might is making sure that it happens soon.”

Their conversation died on soured tongues. They stewed in their dread as they nursed their drinks. Aizawa tapped his fingers against the glass bottle. Aizawa's phone buzzed incessantly. He silenced it with a scowl and shoved it back in his pocket.

"Who is that?"

"Midnight and Mic keep trying to reach me, but I'm not in the mood." He grumbled. "Are you going to take that promotion?"

"What?" Tsukauchi's eyes snapped up to Aizawa. "What's with the sudden change in topic?"

"I don't want to just sit here in silence. I can't take it."

Tsukauchi looked across the bar. "But it's so loud in here--"

"Tsuragamae offered, right?"

"He did, but..." Tsukauchi pinched the bridge of his nose. "I don't know. We've been short staffed since the Silver Falcon incident, but... me ? As a police commissioner? That has to be a joke."

"You're more qualified than you think."

Tsukauchi narrowed his eyes. "Is the alcohol getting to you already? I didn't know you were a lightweight."

"Shut it." Aizawa griped. "Come back to me after you survive one of Midnight's cocktails. That would knock anybody out for the rest of the night. Besides, who was it that decided to keep Joker's identity a secret? If it were anybody else, then they would've barged into his safe space and cause another typhoon or something. You kept your head, and we got to know the kid on a more personal level. That has to count for something."

Tsukauchi rolled the bottle between his palms, the glass gliding on the table. "I'll think about it, but no promises."

Aizawa nodded, and was about to take another sip before somebody stormed into the bar. The den of debauchery went silent for a moment, studying the cat headed man, before the ambience returned to normal.

“Is that Sansa?” Tsukauchi said.

Sansa zeroed in on them and rushed to their table. “Here you are! I’ve been trying to call you!”

“We put our phones on silent.” Aizawa said. “Why?”

“It’s Nezu and the chief-”

“What do they want?” Aizawa’s eyes flashed red “The kid just died and they can’t even give us a day to grieve?”

“That’s just it...” Sansa looked over his shoulder, then leaned in and whispered. “Nezu, Tsuragamae, and Recovery Girl are calling a select few people back to the hospital for an emergency meeting. The kid... he...” Sansa’s voice was barely audible over the bar’s other patrons. “His body went missing.”

Tsukauchi’s hand flew to the pocket where he stored the 5,000 yen. Their eyes widened in disbelief. Tsukauchi and Aizawa exchanged long glances, glimmers of hope burning the despair, before they practically sprinted out of the bar.

Sansa cursed under his breath as he struggled to keep up.

“Is everyone here?” Nezu asked as he tucked his hands behind his back.

“We’re missing Best Jeanist and Iida Tensei,” Tsuragamae said. “But this should suffice.”

“Couldn’t we talk about this upstairs?” Miruko snapped. “These places make me twitchy.”

“I agree.” Hawks fanned himself with a gloved hand. “It’s so stuffy.”

“You’ll just have to deal with it.” Ryukyu crossed her arms and glowered.

Gang Orca stared right at the empty chamber that once held Joker’s body. His heart wasn’t the only one that pounded out of anticipation.

Yagi, Aizawa, and Tsukauchi surrounded it, frowning.

“How the hell did this happen?” Aizawa asked as he stared at Nezu, before his eyes turned towards the person next to him. “And why is he here?”

“I’m here,” Ryoto said, his eyes glossed over Hawks, before he scanned the rest of the room. “Because Nezu trusts me. That can’t be said for the rest of the Commission, at the moment.”

“Indeed.” Nezu stated. “Right now, the Hero Commission plans to make an example of Kunikazu.”

“His previous actions against Joker were suddenly brought to light by an anonymous source. Even with a missing body, they can’t cover up his misdeeds. There are too many questions over Kunikazu’s actions to let it slide this time.” Ryoto said, Hawks didn’t even flinch. Instead, the feathered hero kept a blank expression as Ryoto continued. “They’ll do everything in their power to make him pay.”

“What, shoving him under the bus to make themselves look good?” Miruko snorted. “Though I’ll never forget his face as we dragged him off! Best arrest I ever made.”

“Quite.” Nezu nodded. “But we can discuss this topic later. Recovery Girl, everyone is antsy, and we can all guess why. Can you explain what happened?”

Recovery Girl tapped her cane, “Yes, but I trust all of you to keep this silent for the time being, until we can figure out how to deliver this to the public.”

“Deliver... what?” Hawks asked. “Did somebody move his body?”

Ryukyu snarled. “I swear if anybody did anything to dishonor that kid-”

“The boy is alive.” Recovery Girl said.

Their hearts collectively squeezed. Nobody could breathe as the atmosphere plunged into an odd blend of disbelief and dissipating vapors of grief.

“Wh-what... what did you just say?” Ryukyu whispered.

“But he can’t be...” Aizawa looked down at his hand, “Joker was, he was.... we saw him-”

“I overheard you say that Mona may have the same powers as Joker, isn’t that correct, Aizawa?” Recovery Girl asked.

Aizawa blinked. “You actually heard that? Well, yeah, it’s just a theory but-”

“Joker can revive the dead, and it just so happens that Mona can, as well.” Everyone, spare Nezu, gaped like fish out of water, “Let me explain....”

She retold her encounter with the strange nurse and Mona in explicit detail, then told them her theory on the young girl trapped in one of the Musutafu fires.

“Given Recovery Girl’s experience, we can say that Joker, while he may be ill, is certainly alive .” Nezu clasped his paws together to his their shakiness. “Joker is supposed to be dead, and yet he has pulled the wool over our eyes and escaped once again. It’s almost a pity that there’s no glitter this time.”

“Nezu!” Aizawa snapped.

“Why didn’t you stop them?” Ryukyu turned an accusing eye on Recovery Girl. “If Joker is... is sick after being revived... then we have to be there for him!”

“Please don’t be angry, deary.” Recovery Girl squared her shoulders. “I’m not a combat hero. Everyone else was off doing their own duties, and I didn’t know for certain that Mona could revive Joker.”

“You could’ve at least let us know!!” Miruko shouted. “Now he’s out in the streets again and we don’t know where he is because you decided to keep your trap shut!”

“Which she had every right to do.” Ryoto spoke up as he stepped in between them. “If the Hero Commission knew that either of them could revive the dead, then Joker’s situation would only get worse. She did right in keeping it a secret until now.”

“You want to say that again, asshole!?”

“Miruko!” Hawks snatched Miruko’s arm before she could punch Ryoto.

“Enough. We cannot fight among ourselves.” Nezu commanded attention, and Miruko scowled at him. “Let’s use this chance to pull off something spectacular!”

“What’s your plan?” Gang Orca said, his blood red eyes sharpening. “The news of his survival will cause tidal waves after his death was leaked. Our society is more unstable than it has ever been, and if Joker doesn’t make his reappearance... then people will be upset for more reasons than one.”

“Talk about emotional whiplash.” Ryukyu muttered as she leaned against the wall.

“As for finding Joker, we shall do.....” Nezu held his words over them. Aizawa’s eyes twitched before Nezu threw up his arms and grinned brightly. “Absolutely nothing!!”

“Whaaat!?” Their collective screams might’ve woken the dead.

“What do you mean, nothing!?” Ryukyu asked.

“Nezu... doing nothing in this situation is a bad idea.” Toshinori spoke for the first time, putting his hand over his unmarred side. “After everything this boy did... you want to do nothing to locate him?”

“You know how Joker is. He will not appear if we force him.” Nezu circled the room, the tip of his tail wagging. “He won’t come to us unless he has a reason to.”

“Does he have one?” Tsukauchi asked.

“The USJ.”

“The USJ?” Tsuragamae muttered.

“Indeed. When I approached the boy about the Summer Camp, he vowed his services in exchange for a visit to the USJ. I don’t think it’s coincidental that the USJ happened to be his very first appearance... and perhaps, his way home.”

“His way home...?” Toshinori’s eyes went as wide as dinner plates. “Wait a moment, you’re not suggesting that what All For One said was true?”

“It’s only a theory.” Nezu grinned. “And an exciting one at that! Think of the possibilities if this one happens to be true!”

“Are you going to share with the rest of us?” Aizawa droned.

“Currently, I have no proof. I don’t wish to get your hopes up after my previous theories were wrong!” Nezu chuckled as the rest collectively rolled their eyes, Toshinori began sweating profusely. "But know that Joker will come to us in due time. The USJ is too valuable of a location to him."

"Fine, keep your damn secrets." Miruko muttered.

"But the next question is, what do we do about..." Tsukauchi stared down at the empty chamber. "This ?"

"Why, Tsukauchi, what an excellent question!" Nezu chirped. "What a marvelous conundrum we have been thrown in! We're balancing on a double edged sword. We must do this right if we are to maintain said balance."

"Okay..." Tsukauchi said, his eyes squinting. "But how are we going to do that?"

"We both noticed a certain individual who had been present at either the scenes of Joker's stunts, or any press conference relating to him?"

"You're not talking about Demizu Mika?" Ryukyu asked.

"Although she will be pivotal to my plan, she is not the one I'm thinking about. Not quite." Nezu shook his head. "This man was present at Musutafu General, the Yaoyorozu press conference, and the one before Kamino Crisis. He was at our gates after the USJ incident, though I believe he had no connection to Joker at that point."

Tsukauchi startled. "I know who you're talking about. He stared me down at Musutafu General!"

"Please, just give us a name." Hawks massaged his temples. "I'm too tired to keep playing cat and mouse."

"T-san."

“You think he’s T-san!?” Tsukauchi shouted, his face paling. “But, wait... that could make sense...”

“He’s one of Joker’s allies, and he could help ramp up the public’s support when we announce how and why Joker had to escape. We have a face...” Nezu looked at Tsuragamae and steepled his paws together. “Now we just need T-san’s real name.”

“If we can get a clear picture, then we could run it through facial recognition software.” Tsukauchi said.

“You’re not going to arrest him, are you?” Hawks said as he ran a hand through his unkempt hair. “We’re already in one huge mess. Wouldn’t arresting more of Joker’s allies be taking a step backwards?”

“No, no, not arrest.” Nezu said, grinning. “Strike a deal. If we can offer an olive branch to T-san, then we could recover the trust that Kunikazu carelessly destroyed, both between Joker and with the public.”

“But we can’t just...” Miruko scratched the back of her head. “It would be bad if we just announced that Mona and Joker can revive dead people.”

“It can easily be spun into Joker faking his death after what Kunikazu put him through.” Aizawa muttered. “Announcing the truth would put him in even more danger.”

“I guess that makes sense...” Miruko said. “As long as people buy it.”

“What about the rest of us?” Gang Orca asked. His eyes never left the steel cot, his clenched fists shaking. “I need to do... something to help with this.”

“You shall! My plan is this,” Nezu faced the heroes head on. “We shall request an interview with Demizu Mika on live television. Yes, I will humbly ask for your presence. After all, you worked closely with Joker. Toshinori, your words hold the most weight in regards to All For One's death."

Resolve thrummed through Toshinori. "I understand."

"And T-san?" Ryukyu asked.

"Another who has worked with Joker. His blog is inspired by the young vigilante. He's not a hero, but one who can act as a bridge between we heroes, Joker, and the public eye."

"If we announce that we worked with Joker in taking down those rings," Hawks said with fire in his eyes. "Then we might lose our hero licenses, our ranks, everything. Despite this, I'm going to go through with it. How about everyone else?"

"Hell yeah!" Miruko shouted.

"You don't even have to ask." Ryukyu said, smiling.

Gang Orca firmly nodded.

"Even so," Ryoto smirked. "The Hero Commission wouldn't dare touch you without Kunikazu. Most of them are spineless. You'll be perfectly fine."

"Indeed!" Nezu chuckled. "Besides, the public won't allow it. The Hero Commission will be forced to bow to them if they want to keep some semblance of sanity."

"I see what you're getting at." Miruko's grin turned feral. "I like it!"

"And we can show Joker that he has people on his side." Ryukyu shifted her weight. "Do you think he'll really come back to us?"

"Only time will tell, Ryukyu." Nezu said. "But we must try regardless."

"What about Jeanist and Iida?" Hawks asked. "Can nobody get in contact with them?"

“Jeanist hasn’t answered his phone.” Ryukyu sighed, “And Iida took a leave of absence to spend time with his family.”

“They will hear of this, one way or another.” Nezu chirped. “But with or without them, we best get to work. The faster we do this, the better we can ease the public’s fears.”

“I’ll contact Demizu Mika and set up the interview.” Ryukyu said as she got out her phone.

“Good!” Nezu turned towards Tsukauchi. “Shall we go, commissioner? Or is it still too early to call you that?”

Tsukauchi faced the door, ignoring Nezu. “Let’s just go .”

Nezu chuckled as he followed, leaving the morgue and the flabbergasted heroes behind.

“AAAAAGH!”

The table’s contents flew into the air from a single swipe. Papers, pens, notebooks, all of Taneo’s rough draft’s tumbled together in a chaotic heap on the floor. He stood there, his shadow draped over lines of messy handwriting.

Taneo collapsed on the floor and pulled at his hair.

Joker, hovering at the edge of the musty alley, turned his back on Taneo. “It might be nice to be remembered once we’re gone.”

“You... you knew, didn’t you? You knew you were going to die .” Tears dripped down and splotted on some of his papers, the ink smearing on a page with Joker’s name. “That’s..... that’s not fair, Joker.”

He cursed rapidly under his breath and wiped it away, but only made Joker’s name turn into an unintelligible smudge at the top of his first page. He was drawn out of his thoughts by a loud knock on his door. Any strength drained out of him, he didn't want to move.

His phone, unrelenting with new messages from his co-workers, went ignored all night. He glanced blearily at the clock. 7:30 am. He scoffed as the pounding on the door grew more frantic, the noise beating against his body like a drum.

"Fine.... fine!!" His footsteps crinkled the paper as he dragged himself to his feet. "I'm coming. Just hold your horses for Christ's sake."

He swung open the door with a scowl. His annoyance curled into a tiny ball and died on the spot as he took in the figures before him. Principal Nezu stood primly at his doorstep. At Nezu's side was a familiar detective, his eyes riddled with dark circles and face stained with a light five o'clock shadow, in his hand he clutched a small briefcase. A gust of wind could knock the poor sap over.

Sweat prickled on Taneo's neck as he threw on a false smile. "Sorry fellas, I'm not in the mood for visitors."

Nezu's foot caught the door as he tried closing it.

"Actually, we'd be very interested in having a chat with you, T-san." Nezu stated as the door gently swung back open. "Our chat shouldn't be all too long!"

Taneo froze, his heart hammering in his chest.

"Damn," He chuckled dryly. "You know my boss said not to get too careless, and yet here we are. Am I under arrest?"

"No, Tokuda-san." The exhausted detective smiled at him. "You're not under arrest, but we should have this conversation in private. It's important. If you would...?"

“Yeah, sure.” Taneo whisked them inside, casting a cursory glance at the open door. The detective raised a brow at him. He closed the door with a shrug. “Sorry, my place is a bit of a mess at the moment.” He hastily piled together the papers on the floor as they sat at the dusty table. “Er, I don’t have any tea, but I have some instant coffee or juice, if you wanted any?”

The detective shook his head.

“No, but thanks for the offer.” Nezu wiped the dust off the table in front of him and placed his paws on it, still smiling. “Please, sit.”

“I’ll stand.” Taneo smirked with the hoard of papers hugged to his chest. “Spit it out already, and don’t boss me around in my own home.”

“Apologies, I meant no offence! We’ll get right to the point.” Nezu’s eyes poked Taneo’s skin with a thousand icy needles. “T-san, I would like to employ your services for the good of society.”

Taneo blinked rapidly. “Say again? You want me to what ?”

“I would like to employ your services. We have set up an interview with Demizu Mika and the pros that worked alongside Joker. We would like you to be a part of it. We would talk about Joker and the good he’s done, and then afterwards-”

“Wait, wait, wait! What the hell are you-” Taneo stopped, his mouth gaping. Then, a grin stretched from ear to ear. “Oh, I get it . You want me to be the bridge between the heroes and the public that just lost their star vigilante. Do you really think I would turn my back on Joker’s memory, and for what, so you can try and repair the damage before society implodes? With Joker dead and All Might retiring, that’s exactly what’s going to happen, isn’t it?”

“On the contrary, Joker is very much alive.”

Taneo’s heart flew into his throat. “... What?”

"He is alive." Tsukauchi reiterated.

Taneo's arms dropped. Paper drowned his floor and spread all the way under the table.

"How ?" Taneo pushed out.

"Mona." Nezu leaned forward. "We have seen first hand what Joker's miraculous healing powers have done, but we completely neglected to consider that Mona could have the exact same abilities, or to what true depths their powers can reach."

"Recovery Girl was the witness." Tsukauchi said, but the air of disbelief put Taneo off kilter. "I have a lie detector quirk, so although the cameras were hacked, we know she was telling the truth. His comrades escaped with him afterwards."

"You... you're not...." Taneo's eyes flicked in between them. "You're not trying to trick me, are you?"

"No." Nezu cocked his head to the side. "You care about the boy a lot, don't you?"

"... Yeah, I do." Taneo placed his hands against the table as a wave of dizziness washed over him. "Enough to where I'm not going to back stab the kid to get what you want."

"You misunderstand." Nezu stated. "We wish to extend our aid to Joker, wherever he may be, and at the same time, calm people's fears."

Taneo narrowed his eyes, unsatisfied. "Why the hell do you think Joker would trust any of you again? Everyone knows what Kunikazu did to him."

"Indeed, and that man will pay dearly." Nezu's tail flicked eagerly. "But I have learned, through Joker, that he is interested in U.A. itself. I wish to make it known that he can come to the school whenever he wishes, granted that I get my program approved, and that no harm will befall him. But... before I say any more, I have to know that you agree to come with us.”

“... Okay.” Taneo moved a piled of paper with the side of his foot, then collapsed in the closest chair. “But there’s one little problem here. What will the public think? I broke the law by working with Joker, and I’m not protected by a fancy hero license.”

“Tsukauchi.”

“Right.” Tsukauchi opened his briefcase and put a folder in the middle of the table. “With Nezu’s backing, you could easily get amnesty for working alongside a vigilante. The process is more a boring formality than terrifying. It’s not like you murdered anybody.”

“Aside from that, if you were employed under me, then you and your co-workers would get first dibs on any stories or interviews that arise from my school.”

Taneo’s eyes brightened. “And if Joker decides to reveal himself to you?”

“Then of course, I’d let you know! Besides...” Nezu grinned as he leaned forward, whispering. “I have a feeling that what’s happening at U.A. would be the story of the century!”

“What’s happening at U.A. that would have Joker so interested? How are you so certain that he’ll come back?” Nezu simply grinned. The two stared at one another, but Nezu would not relent. “Alright. Fine. If this is for Joker’s well-being then.... I guess I can do it.”

“Excellent!!” Nezu threw his paws up. “The others have set up a time with Demizu Mika tomorrow morning, but there’s much preparation to do before then. We should have enough time to have your situation squared away before the big event! Shall we go?”

Taneo looked down at himself. “Uh, I better clean up first.”

“By all means!”

Tsukauchi shrunk in his seat as Taneo raced off to the bathroom.

More sleepless nights lingered on the horizon, but as long as Joker was alive and well and knew he had a place to go, then it would all be worth it.

“All Might!!” Sand cascaded from Izuku’s frantic footsteps.

Toshinori turned with a smile. White bandages wrapped the boy’s arms, a reminder of what his successor pulled off during the Summer Camp and Kamino. An event that he never witnessed in person.

“Texas....”

Izuku raced towards Toshinori, the famed Midoriya waterworks turned as high as the tide.

“SMAAASH!!”

Guilt thrashed his heart as the punch threw Izuku to his backside. Izuku blinked several times, unscathed by the powerless punch.

“You really don’t keep your word, do you?” Toshinori said, the starry waves rolling with his words. Izuku’s eyes widened as his hand went to his cheek, but Toshinori pushed on. “Everything was almost in vain, you know. Jeez, you take after me a little too much, don’t you think?”

Izuku shrunk in on himself and stared into the sand.

“Young Midoriya, I...”

“I... I know.” Izuku’s eyes watered. “You’re retiring, right?”

“Yes.” Toshinori held out his arms. “The last embers of One For All went out faster than I anticipated, and I cannot fight as the number one hero anymore. I... it was a miracle we made it through Kamino.”

“All Might...”

“However...” Toshinori stared down at Izuku with a scowl, shadows fell over his gaunt eyes. “You threw yourself into danger again! It doesn’t matter how many times I tell you, you keep breaking your body! That’s why, this time...” Izuku ducked his head as Toshinori’s hands raised. Fearing another strike, he clenched his eyes closed and braced. “This time... when you came out unscathed for the first time to rescue somebody...”

Toshinori knelt down and wrapped the boy in his arms. Izuku stiffened.

“I was so happy.” Toshinori said as traitorous tears came into his own eyes. He pulled back and stared into Izuku’s quivering gaze. “From here on out, let’s work together, okay? I’m going to work on raising you to be the best hero that you can be.”

Izuku wrapped his arms around Toshinori, who smiled as he held the sniffling boy. They stayed like that for a tiny eternity, their breaths weaving along side the waves as they cried. Just holding each other, evidence of them truly being alive, stoked a warm, comfortable flame in their hearts. Eventually, they pulled apart. Izuku wiped his tear stained face and gathered his thoughts.

“You look like you want to ask something.” Toshinori said softly.

“Y-you’re injuries... Joker...” Izuku cut himself off as a lump formed in his throat. He took a moment to breathe before speaking again.

“What did he do to you at Kamino?”

Toshinori leaned back, and the two of them sat across from each other on the cool sand. He carefully lifted his shirt. Izuku gaped at the unblemished side.

“You know what this means.” Toshinori let his shirt fall as he turned to the sparkling waves. “That boy gave back everything I lost because of All For One. I never expected One For All’s duty would be fulfilled by somebody else. But now, you can learn and grow without having that weight over your head. Has he... did that boy ever say anything strange to you about having multiple souls?”

Izuku’s eyes widened. “N-no. Why?”

“‘I must do what the remnants of seven souls failed to do!’ is what Sraosha said before All For One...” Toshinori shook his head as he stared up at the moon. “I wonder how long Joker knew about our quirk, if he could sense all of the remnants of One For All.”

“He never said anything... A-Akira...” Hot tears flooded Izuku’s eyes once more, streaming down onto the sand. He clutched onto his shirt with white knuckles. “I... he was like a big brother to me, and he... h-he... I’ll never get to see him again... To get the truth from him...”

“It’s alright, Young Midoriya.” Toshinori sobered. “He’s alive.”

“... What?” Izuku’s world tilted as he registered Toshinori’s words. “He’s... Akira’s alive ?”

“Yes. It turns out that he still has aces up his sleeve.” Toshinori reached for his phone and opened to a certain news station. “I cannot explain the full story right now, but watch this news channel tomorrow morning. All will be revealed then.”

Izuku, his eyes wide and jaw hanging open, nodded.

Toshinori smiled and pulled the boy into his arms. He held Izuku as the boy’s sobs echoed among the stars.

“Are you sure we have everything packed?” Kaito asked. “We won’t be able to return.”

“Yeah, Atsuhiro’s quirk works wonders for a quick move.”

“Thank you, Mona.”

“But... are we really sure we can trust your buddy’s word?”

“Hey!” Atsuhiro put a hand over his heart. “I’ll have you know that my friend has the perfect place we need to hunker down and ride this out! It’s.... not the most respectable establishment, but it’s hidden away perfectly. Even the best of actors need a rest, and beggars can’t be choosers.”

“I have to admit... my apartment would be far too small for this many people. For now, I’ll put my trust in him.”

“Thank you, Gentle! At least somebody is smart enough to-”

“Guys!” Manami cried. “The news! I think they’re talking about Joker!”

Morgana grumbled. “We can worry about that after we get Joker hidden away.”

“O-Okay...” Manami tucked away her phone and looked between Atsuhiro and Kaito. “How was he... the last time you checked on him?”

“He’s...” Kaito sighed and pinched the bridge of his nose. “Not good. His fever spiked again, and it looked like he was having a nightmare.”

“Mercurius and I keep healing him, but it hasn’t worked.”

“Yes... perhaps he is suffering from a malady of the mind and soul, not the body. He was in that morgue for several hours.” Atsuhiro shook his head. “In any case, the sooner we move, the sooner we can take care of him without unwanted meddlers. Capiche?”

“He’s right.” Morgana stated. “If everything is packed and ready to go, then we must leave. Hitoshi’s warning is too dire to ignore. Kaito... are you sure you want to come with us? It might be dangerous for you.”

“Right now, my place is with Akira.” Kaito muttered.

“Merp!”

“Lady Stubbs agrees, and so do I!”

Kaito turned to Manami. “Do you still have the flash drive with U.A.’s info on it?”

“Y-yeah? Why?”

“It has a virus that could wipe out a network, right?”

“Right. The flash drive itself is only compatible with mine and Akira’s computers in our cubicles, but I’ve taken care of.... wait, why are you even asking?”

“I want to use it on the main computer at the front desk. It’s safer to wipe everything, just in case.”

“But...” Gentle Criminal whispered. “You staked everything into this place, it means a lot to you. Are you certain you want to erase it all?”

“I started over once, I can do it again.” Kaito shrugged. “You guys are more important.”

La Brava dug into her pack until she found it, and handed it over to Kaito. He looked at it was an indescribable expression, before he went to his computer. With a sigh, he jabbed it into the main tower.

“Kaito...” Morgana watched as Kaito’s computer blue screened, and then went dark.

“It’s done.” Kaito muttered. “Shall we go?”

“Alright, then.” Morgana glanced around the Raven’s Nest for the last time. “Let’s go to our new hideout!”

Mementos

Chapter 64: Mementos

Memento: An object or item that serves to remind one of a person or past event.

Totally taking advantage of the fact that Royal has several Mementos soundtracks :)

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

A sorrowful tune squirmed around Ren's soul. Warped in muffled static, shattered and distorted as if it played on a broken record.

"-venza, you ha-him go."

"No! He-"

"He's figh- you're doing-arm than good."

"But-"

"-sten to Margar-"

"My dear, you must let him go." Igor's was the only voice that rang clear. "We'll see him again when the time is right, but we may be hurting his soul by forcing it. We must let him heal."

"I... okay."

"-stop cr- 're not a baby-"

“Elizabeth!”

“Oh, do-uch a-arty-poooper, Theo!”

Ren’s listless soul fell back into the tumultuous Sea, tossing and turning in undulating waves. He sank into the black depths, until a pair of arms pulled him from the current.

“It’s alright, kid.” Ayumu whispered. “I have you. You’re safe with me, so just rest up, okay?”

Ren knew no more.

“Katsuki!” Mitsuki pounded on the door. “Katsuki, I know you’re in there! Stop being a sap and open this right now!”

“Shut it, old hag!” The door flew open and revealed her boy.

Saggy hair, bloodshot eyes. Burn marks littered his floor. The thick aroma of caramel wafted from her son and his room, and she was thankful that he didn’t stink of normal sweat, for he hadn’t showered or eaten since the news broke on Joker’s death.

“Katsuki...” Mitsuki placed her hands on her hips, her tone softer. “Did you sleep last night?”

“No. Now leave me alone.”

“Brat, come downstairs. Now.”

He scowled. “Why should I?”

“They’re doing a special about Joker on the news. Inko sent me a text insisting we should watch it. I think you need to.” Mitsuki’s heart sank when he flinched. “Come on, your father made breakfast and you will eat while we watch! Got it!? I’ll drag you down myself if I have to!”

“Fine!” He stomped out of his room and down the stairs. “Well!? You comin’ or not you old hag!?”

“Don’t call me a hag, you brat!” She screamed as she raced after him.

“Has father left the gym since...?”

“Nope.” Natsuo sagged on the couch and glared at the television. “It’s been awfully quiet in there, too. I wonder why he’s moping. Joker is dead and he’s the number one hero for crying out loud! He got what he wanted, so why isn’t he as happy as a clam!?”

“Natsuo.” Fuyumi glared at him. “Please.”

Natsuo wrinkled his nose and jumped up from the couch. “I’m gonna make food. Anybody else hungry?”

“No, but thank you.” Momo said as she looked up from her book.

“Wait, Natsuo.” Shoto glanced up from his phone and nabbed the remote. “Iida said they’re going to talk about Joker on the news.”

“Wait, really?” Natsuo grasped his red and black shirt. “Why would they...?”

Shoto turned on the tv, and they were greeted by a familiar smile.

“Welcome!” Demizu Mika sat in the middle of a round table. Half of the top ten heroes, a skeletal All Might, Principal Nezu, and a man who’s identity was hidden behind an opaque screen, sat around her. “As you can see, our studio is packed full of familiar faces, except for T-san, who requested that we keep his real identity a secret. Well, let’s get started! How are you all feeling, given today’s circumstances?”

"It's been... quite a whirlwind, to be honest." Ryukyu started off, placing her hands on the table.

"That's an understatement." T-san's warbled voice said.

"I'm sure you're all upset about the way things turned out in Kamino?" Demizu Mika's voice sobered. "Everyone, be it in the streets or on social media, is expressing their grief over what happened to Joker."

"Indeed." Nezu, despite the mood of the room, bore a small smile, "And while the responsible parties are being dealt with, I believe that this is only a new beginning for Joker."

"Wh... what?" Demizu Mika stuttered. "Oh, are you talking about the memorial that the mayor of Kamino wants to set up? A statue depicting Joker and All Might in their final battle could be a new start for some."

"Ah, yes. A memorial." Nezu's tail flicked. "A statue sounds quite nice, but a memorial would only be effective if those it depicted were truly dead."

"Yeah," She glanced at the skeletal man, "All Might made it out and announced his retirement, but-"

"Joker is alive." Hawks blurted.

The other heroes gave Hawks the side-eye, but they didn't argue. Miruko, who sat beside Hawks, cackled as she clapped him on the back.

Momo's book dropped to the floor. Nobody heard the soft thud, nor did Momo attempt to pick it up. It's as if their collective hearts just stopped, eyes unable to turn away from the television. Shoto felt ice creep through his veins.

"I'm sorry?" Demizu Mika blinked rapidly. "I think I misunderstood you. Did you say that Joker is... alive?"

"Damn right he is!" Miruko grinned at the camera. "Alive and kicking!!"

"Yes," Gang Orca leaned forward, his creaking chair as loud as a bomb. "The Hero Commission President threatened Joker's safety, we all know that. What other way would there be to escape one of the top guarded hospitals in the country?"

Demizu Mika froze like a deer in the headlights.

"He faked his death." T-san stated. "He used the ultimate ace in his sleeve to escape a possible prison sentence in Tartarus."

"But... b-but..." Demizu cleared her throat and straightened her hair. "Surely, one of the top hero hospitals would have the best experts of their field. How could Joker fake his death!?"

"That is a question we have no answer to." Nezu said. "But Recovery Girl confirmed that Joker was breathing and had a heart beat before he was whisked away by his teammates."

"She did!? But why didn't she stop them!?"

"She's not a combat hero," Ryukyu stated. An odd glimmer appeared in her eyes as she rubbed the back of her neck. "The rest of us were off dealing with the situation over former Hero Commission President Kunikazu Hiroto. Others returned to their stations after his death. We let our guard down."

"I-I see...."

"Joker's miraculous powers extend beyond what we can imagine." Nezu said, grinning. "Look at Kamino. Look at Musutafu General or any number of his other exploits. For someone like Joker, faking his death is child's play."

Shoto's heart pounded. He witnessed Joker revive Native from the dead. If... If Joker is actually alive then... he must have revived himself, or maybe it was Mona that did it. There was no other explanation. But why would these heroes and U.A.'s principal jump into the news so fast? Why not break the news another way? Were they trying to cover something up? Unless...

Shoto's vision tunneled on Nezu's subtle smirk, the chill in his spine turned glacial. "They know."

"Shoto?" Fuyumi's wide eyes met his. "What are you talking about?"

"Nothing... it's nothing..." He ducked his head. "Don't worry about it."

Momo and Fuyumi exchanged glances, but their attention turned back to the interview.

"Manami says they got out safely." Hitoshi said from the armchair. "Obviously, from what they're saying on the news."

Risumi breathed a sigh of relief as she sank into the couch. "Do you know where they are? They could stay here."

"Not likely." Ayumu clasped his hands together, the images and disembodied voices he'd heard from Akira's shattered psyche still fresh in his mind. "Police and heroes are crawling all over our front door. It's not safe for them here."

"... Yeah." Risumi's expression fell, and Ayumu grasped her hand. "I guess you're right."

Hitoshi set his encrypted phone on the table and tuned back into the interview.

"Is there a calling card at the hospital?" Demizu asked next, "Usually he leaves one and then there's a big spectacle around it's message."

"No." Gang Orca shook his head, "But there was a trace of one in Kunikazu's office."

"It was torn to shreds though," Hawks chirped. His wings twitched and there was a sharpness in his eyes covered by his visor. "So we couldn't make out the message. We have no idea who left it there, either."

The camera panned over Miruko, who gave Hawks an odd stare. She remained silent.

"Is it possible that the Hero Commission could have been Joker's target all along?" Demizu asked. "He's taken down heroes and villains alike."

"We don't know that for certain!" Nezu said with a wave of his paw. "But we know that Joker would never target innocent people. All of the people he's taken down have done nefarious deeds, and the recent investigations into Kunikazu's actions prove that even the highest in society has skeletons in their closet."

"I... I see..." Demizu stared at the camera for a moment, before her eyes turned towards the heroes. "So, the next question is: If he is alive, then where is he now? Do you think he'll go back to his quirkless life as a barista? A dashing vigilante on the streets?"

The Shinsous' frowned at that.

"It's unlikely." Nezu stated. "With his identity compromised, he might seek safety elsewhere until things cool down."

"Speaking of which..." Demizu eagerly leaned forward. "Many people are flabbergasted at how Joker could masquerade as a quirkless person. Some are saying they feel betrayed, others say that it was a genius ruse to cover his tracks. What are your opinions on it?"

"It was... quite clever." Gang Orca said.

"The perfect disguise!" Miruko howled with laughter. "Not many would suspect a quirkless person being an all powerful vigilante!"

"But Joker only wore a domino mask to keep his identity a secret!" Demizu said. "Looking back, its almost astonishing that more people didn't recognize him, given how the Blue Lotus exploded in popularity."

"It's not really that surprising. Things like this happen a lot more than you think." Hawks tilted his head. "Popular heroes in civilian attire don't get recognized on the streets. There are several cases where famous people lose their own lookalike contest. If people didn't want to see a quirkless person as this powerful vigilante, they would never make the connection in the first place. Joker must've known that."

"I suppose that makes sense..."

"His quirkless status did eventually come in handy for another reason."

"Oh? And what reason is that, Ryukyu?"

The dragon hero looked between her comrades, who nodded.

"It was several weeks ago now, but I'm sure everyone remembers how multiple smuggling rings were taken down simultaneously?"

"Ah, yes! Now that you mention it..." Demizu's head swiveled to look around the table. "Aren't you the heroes responsible? Aside from a few other heroes in Sapporo, it was mostly this group that took them down, right? What's the connection to Joker?"

"Joker gathered all of the intel for those raids." Gang Orca nodded when Demizu's mouth dropped open, "He risked everything, and in the end, decided to use himself as bait to rescue even more people, those who were quirkless and had been missing for months. He searched for them when no one else did."

"How did your first meeting go? I bet it was a shock to get a call from the vigilante himself! Especially for you, Ryukyu!"

"Joker didn't reach out to us first," Gang Orca said. "He convinced the former Ingenium to contact us."

"Ingenium!? Joker healed him after he was injured by Stain, right? Where is he?"

"After Joker faked his death, he decided to spend time with his family . Best Jeanist also took a personal leave from hero work. " Nezu stated. "Understandable, given how stressful it's been for everyone involved."

Demizu Mika nodded.

"Anyway, back to our first meeting with Joker!! It was tense at first, none of us knew how to react!!" Miruko cackled and punched Gang Orca's arm. "This one had the gall to approach Joker and ask to ruffle his hair! I was so jealous! Aaand Ryukyu tried mothering him!"

"Miruko!!" Ryukyu blushed.

"What!? It's true!"

"He..." Hawks' wings drooped and he clasped his hands together. "Joker had this air about him. He was like... a friend that you could trust everything to. But for me, he... he was kinda like a little brother."

Hawks sunk into his fluffy coat when there was a collective 'awww'.

"T-san, you haven't really talked much. Your live interview with Joker went viral, and your blog received the same treatment. You met Joker on friendly terms long before these heroes, correct?"

"Yes."

“What are your thoughts? Why didn’t Joker take credit for those smuggling rings like he did with his other feats?”

“I asked him that myself. His main goal is to help people, and he felt that taking credit for that would lessen the impact of what those people went through. He chose to remain anonymous. Secondly, Joker is a smart kid.” T-san chuckled. “He predicted the fall of All Might months before it literally happened.”

The skeletal All Might gravely nodded.

“Yes... he did, didn’t he? What was it he said, exactly?”

“Heh, I’ll never forget it.” T-san’s smile oozed from behind the privacy screen. “You should have seen the look on his face. He was irritated when he talked about our society being supported by only a single pillar, but then....”

“Then... what?”

Kirishima wiped his eyes and threw the damp tissue into the stuffed trash can. It bounced off the top of the pile and onto the floor, but he didn’t have the energy to move from his chair. He hadn’t left his room since he got home, and his parents decided to give him some space after the world basically fell from underneath their feet.

But... but at least Joker was alive .

Akira was alive!!

The hole blown through his heart healed a tiny bit, but it was like putting a band-aid on a bullet wound. If he could just... just see Akira again, no matter how long it took, then maybe Kirishima could learn to forgive Akira for everything.

But wasn’t that another kick to the face?

The whole world heard Akira's screams in Kamino, and then again when the video with Kunikazu came out. He heard those horrible noises in his dreams. Is that how people treated Akira his whole life? If so, then his backstory... his... everything, made so much sense.

It was so unmanly to demand anything from him! They didn't know each other for very long, and demanding answers just left a sour feeling wriggling in his gut. The dawning realization came like a slap to the face. Still, it didn't help the ache in his heart.

Right now, the only thing he craved more than anything was to see Akira smile again. Safe . Alive and happy.

"Aniki..." Tears blurred his vision as he stared at his computer screen.

"-as irritated when he talked about our society being supported by only a single pillar, but then...."

"Then... what?"

"He smiled when he talked about the kids in 1-A and 1-B, how there should be multiple pillars in society. I think it's easy to say that those kids proved themselves worthy. If Joker believed in the U.A. students, the students from other hero schools, and these heroes sitting beside me, then I think it's safe to say that the future is in good hands. We'll be in a rough patch as society shifts, but I believe Joker was right to place his faith in them."

Nezu beamed.

"U.A. has been a heated topic as of late." Demizu Mika turned her attention towards Nezu. "What are the school's plans from here on out? There are several concerns about some of your students, mainly Bakugo Katsuki and Yaoyorozu Momo. Bakugo was captured by villains to get him to turn, and Yaoyorozu's parents will be on trial for fraud."

"Anybody who doubts them can put their fears to rest. Bakugo held true to his ideals while he was in captivity. Yaoyorozu is not 1-A's Vice Representative for nothing. Yes, they went through hardships, but that will make them better in the future. They shall make fine heroes!" Demizu opened her mouth to speak, but Nezu cut her off, "As for the school's plans, I want to turn it into a boarding school."

"A boarding school? So you're going to build dorms?"

"Indeed! We wish to keep the students safe during society's current transition. Of course, we will need to get parents' permission, but the dorms will be state of the art!"

"Where would Joker fit into all of this? There are many rumors swirling about your program, Nezu."

"My Vigilante Program has not been approved yet. Right now, one of our goals is to get legal custody of Joker. Once I have that, then there would be no need to send him to a place like Tartarus." Nezu looked directly into the camera. "Now, I don't want anybody thinking that Joker will be dragged to U.A. in chains. In fact, I wish to welcome Joker, and any of his allies, with open arms when the time is right. Whenever he wishes to find his home, he can come to U.A.!"

"We'll be there to support him, no matter what." Ryukyu said.

"Hell yeah!" Miruko cackled. "The kid promised me a sparring match, and I won't forgive him if he thinks he can chicken out!"

"You know how to get in contact with us, Birdie." Hawks said with a tiny smirk.

"I'm sure Jeanist and Ingenium would agree with all of us." Gang Orca grumbled. "Whatever you need, wherever you are, the others and I are only a call away. We'll be there for you."

"Damn, it's hard to come up with something cool after all of that." T-san said.

"How touching! But there is one glaring little detail on everyone's minds." Demizu looked around the table. "The villain responsible for the Kamino Crisis died from one of Joker's attacks. Public opinion on Joker is currently split because of that."

"It's not Joker's fault." Skeletal All Might said. "I have something to say in regards to what happened in Kamino."

"All Might..." Demizu looked at him with new interest. "We would be happy to hear your opinion about it! Why do you think it's not his fault?"

"Why do you think it's not his fault?"

Tokoyami grit his teeth together. Dark Shadow draped himself over Tokoyami's head, his arms dangling limply over Tokoyami's chest. They lounged in front of the computer, sweet darkness clinging to every corner of their room save for the light from his screen.

"It could be ruled as self defence after all of the torture All For One inflicted on that poor boy. Despite this, Joker... did not want to kill him. He begged Sraosha not to do it."

"What, really?"

"Those with sentient quirks would understand more than most." Nezu stated. "Joker's companions are gods and beings of myth with their own wills and morals. I don't doubt that such individuals are not easily controlled. Besides, I think it was in Sraosha's nature to do what he did."

"He had no troubles dealing with your antics back at the cafe, Dark Shadow. Almost as if he had plenty of practice." A stone fell into Tokoyami's stomach as his eyes widened. "No other soul truly knows what it's like. We'll have to get that point across to our wayward classmates."

Dark Shadow warbled.

"What do you mean?" Demizu asked. "Who is Sraosha? It's not a name I'm familiar with."

"An angel in the Zoroastrian faith. One who protects the material realm, who also bears the title of 'Scourge Of Evil', and for good reason. In that faith, Sraosha is one of three judges who decides the fate of human souls in the afterlife." Nezu said, "It was quite fascinating to read up on this individual!"

"Human... souls?" Demizu paled. "Is that what Sraosha pulled out of the villain? There are rumors going around that some people are suddenly regaining their quirk after previously being quirkless. Could these 'souls' actually be quirks!?"

"Those are under investigation." Ryukyu said. "Currently, we have no idea if these events are correlated."

"I..."

"What's wrong, All Might?" Demizu frowned.

"Joker should not take the blame. Sraosha may have dealt the final blow to All For One, but it is truly my fault." All Might stared directly into the camera, a shadow befalling his blazing cerulean eyes. A challenge to the swarm of naysayers. "I thought I killed All For One years ago. He was the villain who gave me an injury that hampered my power. An injury that Joker healed during the Kamino Crisis. I take full responsibility for All For One's death. It should not be placed on a young man's shoulders simply because I failed to act accordingly."

"That's... a heavy responsibility to take on." Demizu tilted her head. "But if Joker healed you, then why retire? Why place the burden of being Number 1 onto Endeavor?"

“My powers have been spent, and I cannot fight like I used to.” All Might’s gaze sharpened, and Tokoyami and Dark Shadow felt chills go up their spine as he pointed into the camera. “I’m leaving society in the hands of the next generation of aspiring heroes. You’re next. Be the pillars of society that I failed to be!”

The entire world froze on All Might’s words. Embers of hope and determination sparked within the nation’s hearts, flourishing together into bright flames. The momentary silence sat heavy in the news station until Demizu snapped out of it. She stared right into the camera.

“Er... and with that, it seems like we are out of time.” Demizu Mika sat straight. “I’m sure this comes as a shock to all of us, but I hope Joker is okay, wherever he is. This is Demizu Mika, signing off!”

Tokoyami released a breath he didn’t realize he was holding.

“Fumi...”

“What is it?”

“I miss Akira. When do you think we’ll be able to see him again? I want him to make us more apple desserts!”

“I... don’t know. Gods, demons, devils, human souls... I pegged him all wrong.” Tokoyami leaned back as his phone vibrated nonstop on his desk. Some of his classmates had... mixed opinions on the interview. A few, like Kirishima, Midoriya, and surprisingly, Bakugo, stuck up for Joker. “It will take time for the others to come to terms with it. My only hope is that it doesn’t cause a rift in our class.”

“Yeah...” Dark Shadow peered into his partner, his head tilting while upside-down. “Do you think we could ask Hawks-sensei about him!?”

Tokoyami snorted. “Maybe. We learned much from Hawks on our internship. It wouldn’t hurt to inquire about it.”

Dark Shadow prummed happily as Tokoyami reached for his phone.

“YOU!!!”

Taneo yelped as he dodged a stapler, which crashed into the wall and exploded with sharp metal bits.

“Mitsuo, let me explain!!”

Yuma and Minato had their backs to either wall to avoid the fallout.

“NO!!!” Mitsuo swiped a hefty binder next and flung it with the strength of an angry goddess. “First, you neglect my warning to be careful. Second! You ghost us after Joker died and worried us so much that Minato actually got sick-”

“Hey...”

“And NOW we don’t even see you until that freaking interview!? An interview which you didn’t even let us know about before hand!? You didn’t tell us that the kid was ALIVE!?”

“M-Mitsuo, calm down!” Taneo waved his hands as she swiped her mug as ammunition, which was half filled with scalding hot coffee. His voiced raised by several octaves. “I admit that I wasn’t as careful as I should’ve been! I’m sorry! But the most important thing is he’s alive and we get first dibs on any exclusives from U.A.!! Isn’t that enough to-”

He ducked, the ceramic brushing the top of his hair. Shattered remains flew across the room as the coffee oozed down the wall and puddled on the floor, drowning the murdered stapler and binder.

“Idiot.” Mitsuo sighed sharply as she planted herself back into her chair, leveling him with a pointed glare. “I’ll only forgive you if you let us know when Joker comes back. I won’t accept anything less. Am I understood?”

Taneo peeked over the edge of a desk, “Y-yes, ma’am.”

“Good.” Her smirk returned with devilish delight. “Now, we have work to do. Other stations are already capitalizing on Joker faking his death and All Might’s retirement, but there’s been a severe lack in media discussing the Hero Commission’s glaring failures. As Joker’s comrades in the media, we must pick up the slack. We won’t fall behind!!”

“Yes, ma’am!!” All three men called out in unison.

“How the hell is he alive?” Shigaraki muttered as he paced back and forth. “Damn secret boss is like a cockroach. I’ll just have to kill him myself for what he did...”

“Aki-chan must’ve pulled the wool over their eyes real good this time!” Toga giggled.

“What did you call him?” Toga flinched as Shigaraki invaded her personal space, his fingers twitching. “Don’t give the enemy cute nicknames!”

“Hey, lay off of her.” Dabi snapped. He stood from the peeling drywall and pulled Toga behind him. “I get it, your precious sensei got killed, but that doesn’t mean you get to treat the rest of us like garbage.”

Shigaraki’s eyes glinted with rage as he grabbed Dabi’s shirt. “Don’t you dare say anything about Sensei!”

“Why not?” Dabi grinned when the dusty flakes fell from his shirt to reveal charred skin. “Are you going to kill me like Compress? Look around you, asshole! We’re fugitives hiding in a dilapidated building. The League, once again, is nothing more than the butt of a joke! You’ll be in for real trouble if you don’t pull your head out of your ass and get your shit together!”

Shigaraki scratched at his neck. “How dare you.”

“H-hey, knock it off! Fight, FIGHT!!” Twice separated them, his arms waving. “Where’s Kurogiri when you need him!?”

“Right, because Shigaraki can’t do anything without his precious babysitter.” Dabi scoffed as he turned around and marched away. “Some leader you turned out to be.”

Shigaraki snarled.

“Dabi!” Toga called. “Where are you going?”

“Out. I need some air.” Dabi threw open the front door. “It’s too dusty in here for my liking.”

Dust rained down from the ceiling when the door slammed. Toga and Twice stared at Shigaraki as he glared at the front door, an unknowable sea of emotion filtering through his eyes. He looked in between them.

“What?” Shigaraki snapped.

“Nothing.” Toga smirked as she skipped away towards her room. “I’m tired, gonna take a nap!”

“Whatever.”

“Sleep tight, don’t let the bed bugs bite!” Twice called.

She reached her quarters, nothing more than a shabby room with a bare futon. The carpets smelled like urine and the cracked windows let in streams of sunlight and overgrown vines. She sank on her futon with a long sigh, hugging her knees to her chest.

Whatever the League was, it didn’t feel like a good place anymore.

“You were working with Joker this whole time!?”

“Tenya, please.” Mother chastised. “Let him explain.”

“It’s okay.” Tensei said as he rubbed his eyes. “Tenya, Mother, you know how much our family owes him. How could I say no when Joker, and other people, needed my help?” Tensei reached over the dining room table and patted his brother’s hand. “I never expected Joker to be the same person you and your class looked up to. That’s a crazy coincidence.”

“I...” Tenya shook his head. He took off his glasses and wiped his eyes with the ends of his sleeve. “Why did he lie to us? Just... why?”

Tensei exchanged a long glance with his mother. “I think there’s more to his story than any one of us know.”

Tenya’s brows pinched together. “What do you mean?”

“Look at his powers, look at what happened at Hosu and Kamino. Look at what Kunikazu did to him . He appeared at the USJ as if he popped up out of thin air. He... the others and I watched him decline in the ICU and he...” Tensei ran a hand through his hair as his little brother paled. “There just has to be more . I don’t want to make excuses for Joker, but I think he was just lost... and maybe he found it hard to trust the right people. Please don’t judge him until we get his full story, okay? He didn’t want to hurt you intentionally.”

Tenya stared at the table. They spent a full minute in silence as he worked it over in that brain of his, until his shoulders relaxed and he released a long sigh.

“Alright...” Tenya glanced over to the living room, where Demizu Mika’s interview was being replayed on another news channel. “If.... if Joker returns and goes to U.A. like Nezu wants, then... as Class Representative, I will do my best. It’s the least I can do to repay our debt.”

Tensei smiled. “Thank you. I’m sure Joker would appreciate it.”

Their mother looked in between them as another silence rolled through the room.

“How about we go out, just the three of us?” Mother stood and ruffled both of their hair. “We need to clear our heads after everything that’s happened. Does a day at the park sound good? We could pack lunches and have a family picnic!”

Tenya nodded. He got up from his chair and went to his room to change.

Tensei hid his face in his hands. His mother’s soft touch graced his shoulder.

“I know.” Mother’s smile softened. “This will take time.”

“Yeah, Tenya looked up to Kurusu.” Tensei said as his expression crumpled.

“What’s wrong?”

“I was in the same room where the doctor told us he would die, she confirmed that the damage was fatal. I saw the hemorrhaging brain scans myself! Miruko called me sobbing after Recovery Girl called his time of death.” Tensei’s haunted eyes landed on the television. “So how the hell is he alive ? I should’ve stayed at the hospital with everyone...”

“Don’t say that, dear. You said it yourself. Joker is mysterious in many ways.”

“You have no idea...” Tensei muttered.

Such incredible powers and no quirk factor ? How does that even make sense? Life and death, gods and demons, natural and supernatural. Joker held mastery over all of these extremes.

Mother pursed her lips. “You were part of this hero team, correct? It wouldn’t hurt to ask them.” She pulled him into her arms. “Besides,

I'm glad you came home. Tenya really needed you here."

"... You're right." Tensei stood as his mother released him. He walked into the living room and shut off the television. "I just hope he won't be gone for too long."

Unbeknownst to them, Tenya hovered at the edge of the hallway, horrified to his core.

He heard everything.

"So Joker is actually alive?"

"I hope so. Have you seen that video with Kunikazu? The seizure that Joker had.... it didn't look fake to me. What if..."

"What? What!? Don't leave me in suspense!"

"N-nothing. It's nothing. Forget I said anything. It would be impossible anyway."

"I heard that Joker merch is selling out everywhere. Can you believe that?"

"It's not surprising. I mean... you saw what he did at Kamino! Those powers of his go beyond quirks."

"He's more powerful than All Might, but that doesn't make him a god.... right?"

"I don't know. Rumors say that he didn't 'fake' his death at all. No wonder he hasn't come out of hiding. The heroes in that interview were sure quick to announce it. Something doesn't feel right, almost like they're hiding something."

"You're.... not implying that he actually died and came back to life, right? Er... right??"

“Grandpa, what are you doing?”

“Showing my support. Joker saved our bakery from Silver Falcon, it’s the least I can do.”

“It looks nice. Oh, I have an idea! I can take a photo and post it, maybe other people will do the same?”

“You kids and your social media. Sure, maybe Joker will show himself if he sees how many people want to see him safe and sound.”

“Okay!”

A knock reverberated on Nezu’s door.

“Come in!”

Cementoss stepped inside with a small bundle of folders under his arm.

“Have you come across any problems?”

“No, I just wanted to double check something.” Cementoss plopped in one of the chairs in front of Nezu’s desk, ignoring Admiral Feesh propped up in the other one. He set one of the folders on Nezu’s desk, blueprints for the teacher’s dorms. “No faculty member claimed any of those extra rooms on the first floor. What are they for?”

“Ah,” Nezu peeked at them with a smile. “Those rooms are not for the teachers. After all, it would be unwise to house Joker or his companions with any of the student body!”

“You say that like you already gained approval for your program.”

“I have sent an appeal to the court.” Said Nezu, nodding. “It’s only a matter of time. With Kunikazu out of the way, and with the roaring success of our interview, they will have to agree to it.”

Cementoss frowned. “I see.”

“What’s wrong, Cementoss?”

“It’s been a week since your interview and Joker hasn’t shown up yet. People are unsure about the school as a whole. What if parents don’t want their children to attend?”

Nezu leaned back in his chair and crossed his legs. “The permission slips were sent out, and homeroom teachers will meet with the families personally within the next week. I have every confidence that a majority of the student body will still be enrolled by the time the new semester starts.”

“And Joker?”

“He will come forward in time. He has no other choice.”

“But you won’t share Joker’s reason why he would turn himself in to U.A. It has to do with the USJ, doesn’t it? You upped security around it and put it under lockdown.”

“I was wrong about him being All For One’s test subject. I admit to that fault.” Nezu stared out the window. A little mask charm hung on it, a sudden craze that has taken social media by storm. “But I’m afraid I have to keep it under wrap until I get solid proof. After all, this new theory is completely out of this world! I hope you understand?”

Cementoss sighed. “I do.” He grabbed the folder and stood. “Thanks for clearing that up. The dorms should be finished within the next day or so.”

“Excellent! I’m looking forward to seeing them completed!”

Cementoss nodded, and he trailed out the door.

Nezu sighed as his office was doused in peaceful silence. He filed the oodles and oodles of building paperwork. So much to do, and little time to do it!

Change would come in due time. Ryoto, as young as he was to the Hero Commission, was far more clever than Kunikazu gave him credit for. With a gentle nudge here and there, he convinced the rest of the Commission to do a full inquiry over Kunikazu's time as President. With more evidence of Kunikazu's wrongdoing's coming to light, and with how much they wanted to save their own skin, it appears that the former President would not leave his tiny little cell any time soon.

Not if Nezu had a say about it!

Still, he would have to be careful. Confidence and sharp wit like Ryoto's would devolve into brutal arrogance without the right hand to keep him steady and level headed. Ah well, he did like taking on challenges, and new students were a rarity these days.

Nezu became lost in these thoughts for another hour before a second knock came at the door, far more delicate this time.

"Ah, another visitor!" Nezu chirped. "Come in!"

The door opened, and in walked Yaoyorozu Momo. She placed her hands over her stomach and bowed politely.

"My dear, please take a seat!" Nezu said as he gestured to one of the chairs. "I've been expecting your visit. This is about your current guardianship?"

"Yes..." She sat primly in the chair, her eyes falling to the plush. "Oh, who is this?"

"Admiral Feesh!" Nezu chuckled. "A handsome prize, no?"

“I see.” She offered a small, polite smile. “And you would be correct, Principal Nezu. With my parents being where they are, a-and with temporary custody with the Todoroki family... I was wondering if there would be any complications in getting permission to settle in the dorms.”

“Ah, yes.” Nezu nodded. “Your situation is unique. Does Endeavor know that you came here?”

“He does.” Yaoyorozu’s eyes turned down. “He has been... rather busy since All Might’s retirement.”

“Understandable.” Nezu leaned forward. “There shouldn’t be any problems, but I suspect you didn’t come here for me to answer a simple question. What do you want to do, Miss Yaoyorozu?”

“Me?” She tucked some hair behind her ear, before her hands fell into her lap. “I would like to stand on my own two feet. I appreciate Endeavor and his family for everything they’ve done for me, but I cannot burden them forever. I was looking into going out on my own, if that is possible.”

“I see.” Nezu tilted his head. “Why not become a ward of U.A. itself?”

She blinked. “A ward of U.A.?”

“Becoming a ward of U.A. would place you directly under my care. We will have to get permission from the court, and from Endeavor himself, but I don’t see any problem if you choose to go this route. If you became my ward, then I will provide you with everything you need until you graduate, or even past that, should you need it.” He sat back as she seemed to think it over. “There are a few others who have chosen to become U.A.’s wards, so you would not be alone in this regard.”

“I...” She took a deep breath and looked into his eyes, her own sparkling with new determination. “Yes. I feel as if this is the path I have to take.”

“Very well!” Nezu beamed as he reached into his drawer. “If you have any concerns or questions, then please call the number on this card. It’s my personal cell number. I only give this card to potential wards of U.A. I’m sure you understand what that means?”

“Yes, sir.” She smiled as she took the card with both hands. “I’ll make sure to take care of it.”

“Excellent. You can leave everything to me, my dear.”

“Thank you for your hospitality.” She bowed again, and after a few more pleasantries, she left his office with a smile.

Satisfaction curled around Nezu’s heart.

“I dearly love seeing children flourish.” He said as he glanced at the mask charm in the window. “I wonder how you will continue to grow, my boy. Are you really from another world?” Nezu whispered as he looked to Admiral Feesh. “I suppose we will know the truth, in due time.”

Manami kept the tears at bay as she dabbed Akira’s forehead with a damp cloth. His ragged breathing tugged at her heartstrings. Her nose wrinkled as she looked around the dusty attic. The unused crates had been stacked against the walls to give them all room enough to sleep. This place didn’t have the warm softness of the Shinsous’ apartment, nor the static peace of the Raven’s Nest. The acrid aroma of cigarettes and alcohol seeped into the wood, and more often than not rambunctious, drunken cheers boomed through the floor at night.

But it was safe.

Hidden.

It wasn’t an area where people could ask questions without scorn, or worse yet, a knife to the throat. Her ears pricked at the creaky stairs.

There was a thump followed by muttered curses.

Atsuhiro, with Morgana on his shoulder, rubbed his head as he emerged from the stairwell.

“I keep telling you to be careful with that beam.” Morgana snarked.

“Hush! Magne should put up a warning sign or something!”

Morgana rolled his eyes as he hopped off the man’s shoulder and pranced over to them. Morgana put his nose on Akira’s cheek, and the boy’s clenched jaw relaxed, as did the knots in his brow.

“How is he?” Morgana asked softly.

“His fever went down, but nothing else has changed.” She said as she wrung the cloth in her hands. “Why hasn’t he woken up yet?”

“I... I don’t know.” Morgana huddled into the crook of Akira’s neck. “Using our powers for an extended time is exhausting, n-not to mention how he summoned all of them at once or let Arsene evolve. A-and... his mental shutdown... This is a lot worse than what happened during the Musutafu Raid.”

“Dying has to be incredibly taxing on the body alone, if not the mind and soul as well.” Atsuhiro shrugged as he plopped down on the other side of Akira’s futon, “Do you know how many people came back from the dead? I’ve personally only seen one, and he’s laying in front of me.”

“I already told you about Native and that little girl.” Morgana said.

“True, but they weren’t unconscious for days on end.” Manami whispered. “The girl recovered after a day or so in the hospital, and Native was disoriented, but he made a full recovery.”

“... Yeah.” Morgana’s ears drooped as Akira took a deep, ragged breath. “I’m getting antsy. With all of the media attention, are you sure your friend can keep this a secret, Atsuhiro? I feel bad for intruding on them while our Leader is sick.”

“Who, Magne?” Atsuhiro chuckled as he waved his hand in dismissal. “Don’t worry about it. She owes me big time.”

“Why?” Manami asked. “It must be a pretty deep debt for her to go along with this.”

“Well, that’s...” He sighed sharply and ran a hand through his curly hair. “She and I go way back. She wanted to join the League Of Villains, but I warned her against it after my first initial meeting with All For One set off all sorts of red flags. We set up this little nest egg in case things went south and we needed a place to lay low.” He scoffed as they pinned him with wide eyes. “Please don’t look at me like that. Aren’t we all criminals in one form or another? That makes us all comrades in arms!”

Morgana and Manami exchanged glances, the latter shrugging.

“In any case,” Manami continued dabbing Akira’s forehead. “It’s not like we can keep moving him. Our best option is to stay in one place so he can rest.”

“Yeah.” Atsuhiro smirked as cheers roared from downstairs.

“Besides, I think Magne loves having help around the bar. Shuichi makes mean cocktails, and even Tobita’s cooking has been a hit. As long as nobody snoops around, then we shouldn’t get recognized.”

“Where is Kaito, anyway?” Manami asked. “He was up here earlier.”

“I didn’t see him when we came up.” Morgana stated.

“He was helping Tobita in the kitchen the last time I-”

“NO!!”

Atsuhiro blinked rapidly as the two of them raced downstairs. He grabbed the wash cloth Manami dropped. Atsuhiro looked over to a bucket of water in the corner and, with an exaggerated sigh, got up and wrung it out with clean water. He planted himself at the boy's side and gently lay the washcloth on his forehead.

"I can see why you mean so much to them, Joker, and vice versa." Atsuhiro whispered as he clasped his hands together. "You're like a little family. A bit dysfunctional perhaps, but closely knit at its core. Although... Morgana was quick to dismiss that interview, and the others haven't said much either. I wonder what you'll have to say about it."

"-I already told you I wasn't anywhere near the stove!" Kaito's voice echoed into the attic.

He chuckled. There was a lingering flame in Atsuhiro's heart that maybe, even if for a little bit, he could be part of this, too.

"I see you wearing that pin! Are you seriously supporting Joker after what he did!?"

"Duh. Do you not realize how many lives Joker saved!?" A mingling crowd stopped to stare at a young girl shouting in the streets, her pink dread locks popping against the dreary day. Joker merch decked out most of her attire. "All For One could've easily killed off most of our top 10 heroes and would've gone on his merry way! Joker did what All Might failed to do! The former number 1 is taking responsibility for his failure! I ask this, why are you turning your back on Joker when he needs our support the most!?"

The man backed down as other people cheered her on.

She wildly grinned at the first camera pointed in her direction, her arms flying up into the air.

"Who's with me!?" She shouted. "HEEE HOO!!"

Various forms of 'hee ho!' echoed throughout the street.

It didn't take long for the video to go viral.

[Cyn.der]

I don't think Joker is human.

[KuroNeko]

not this again

[Liz]

I mean, Cyn does have a point?

If anybody does any good research on the gods Joker controls....

You'd know what I mean.

[Cyn.der]

Exactly!!

You all heard him. The big guy he summoned at Kamino was SATANAEL, the angel who rebelled against Yaldabaoth and bestowed free will and chaos upon humanity!! Not to mention Sraosha, who Nezu talked about on the interview.

AND NOW JOKER APPARENTLY 'FAKED' HIS DEATH??

I don't buy it. I think he really died and something brought him back to life.

[Liz]

Huh.... why does the name Yaldabaoth make me shiver??

[Sharky2194]

What a broken quirk, its almost not fair

[JokerRulez]

*How do we know that Joker actually died? It has to be faked, right?
That's what they said!!*

[Cyn.der]

A ton of people have seen that video with Kunikazu and Joker's seizures.

It's not the sort of thing you can just fake.

[Liz]

...

[JokerRulez]

I mean, I guess that's true?

I really don't know what to believe...

[Liz]

How much willpower does one person need to be able to control gods and mythological beings? Anybody on here have a sentient quirk to back it up??

[Cyn.der]

RIGHT!?

I wonder if he's not some sort of messiah or something

[Sharky2194]

Okay, now that's reaaaaally stretching it

Just because he controls some cool looking monsters doesn't mean he's some savior

That's bs

[JokerRulez]

Is it, though?

[Cyn.der]

No listen! Like Yatagarasu represents the will of heaven, a divine messenger of Amaterasu herself!!

SETH - EGYPTIAN GOD (Which we actually didn't see in Kamino, what happened to him???)

SRAOSHA - ZOROASTRIAN JUDGE OF HUMAN SOULS AND SCOURGE OF EVIL BEINGS

SATANAEL!!!!

Not to mention all of the other gods/demons that showed up in Kamino.

I think that's a clear sign.

[Liz]

You know, instead of a messiah he could just as easily be a chaotic devil. A Prince Of Hell.

Perfect for the master of Satanael =)

[Cyn.der]

I'm sure the HC sees him that way :D

It's funny how hard they are trying to cover their asses after Kunikazu fell from grace.

[Sharky2194]

Okay. You guys are either high or drunk.

There's no way any of that is possible, he's just a vigilante with a really powerful quirk.

That's it.

[Cyn.der]

Sigh* Then how about this?*

Joker could have easily killed thousands in Musutafu and leveled the entire city with that golden dragon.

But he didn't. THERE WASN'T A SINGLE FATALITY! Sure, there are a lot people who have been hospitalized (some heroes and police with bigger injuries, but they deserved it) with some building damage and flooding.

SAME THING FOR KAMNIO!! All For One caused all of that damage, not Joker!

It could have been so much worse.

[Fernin]

Kamnio

[Sharky2194]

Kamnio

[Liz]

Kamnio??

[Cyn.der]

KAMINO*

GUYS I'M TRYING TO MAKE A POINT!!

[Sharky2194]

Which is what again?

[Cyn.der]

MY POINT IS

That Joker really didn't want to hurt anyone, nor did he want to kill that villain. They pushed him into a corner in both situations, and that's the end result.

Take for example the villain Muscular. He has a far weaker quirk than Joker's, but he went on a rampage, killed a hero duo and over a dozen people, completely destroyed a historic part of that town. Do I need to go on?

[Sharky2194]

I still don't see your point.

All of that doesn't make him a 'savior'.

[KuroNeko]

Im with sharky

I still think Joker is pretty cool, even after everything that's happened

But thats too out there for me :/

[Liz]

Some people just can't be convinced ._.

[JokerRulez]

I am totally in on this!

I even hung one of the mask charms in my window!!

WE SUPPORT YOU JOKER!! <3

[Sharky2194]

Whatever floats your boat I guess, just keep me out of it.

[Cyn.der]

Siiiigh

@CoffeeAddict2.0 Where have you been, dude!? We need our admin's opinion to settle this!!

“Oh, sure!” Mitsuki said as she whapped her son on the head and smiled brightly at the men sitting across from her. “I’m counting on you!”

“Don’t hit me, you hag!!”

“Shut up!” Mitsuki shouted, “It’s your fault for being so weak, and now you’re causing trouble for everyone!”

Masaru, a much milder force of nature compared to his wife and son, bowed his head towards Yagi and Aizawa. “I’m sorry. They’re always like this.”

“Shut up, old man!!”

“You’re the one who should shut up, Katsuki!!”

Aizawa’s eyes fell towards his student as their argument continued.

Bakugo shirked under his mother’s touch, and he would recognize the weight bearing down on the boy’s shoulders. Bakugo growled like a feral dog as his mother sighed and turned back towards them.

Yagi cleared his throat. “Are you... really okay with this?”

“Hmm? Oh, the dorms!” Mitsuki beamed. “Of course! We’d actually be grateful. Katsuki is rather reckless and good at everything, and he was blessed with a good quirk, so he had people fawning over him and got praised for shallow things.”

Bakugo had a bead of sweat on his forehead as he glared at his mother. His mouth became twisted into a scowl of suppressed rage... and perhaps, hurt .

Aizawa held his tongue.

Mitsuki frowned and turned her eyes downwards. "I'm honestly happy that U.A. decided to do this. No matter what, your school always stuck up for my kid, even when he got a lot of hate or doubt from the media." She looked at her son, her expression softening as she gently ruffled his hair. "And he's back safe and sound. U.A. might face some harsh criticism for all the shit that's gone down, but I trust you guys and leave him to you."

Mitsuki and Masaru bowed deeply. Their son hesitated a moment, but he bowed, too.

Yagi and Aizawa exchanged a long glance, before Aizawa spoke. "Thank you. We'll be sure to take good care of him. He has the potential to be a great hero."

They went outside after a clipped goodbye.

"Shall I buy you a drink after all of this, Aizawa?" Yagi asked.

"Maybe, but I-"

"Aizawa-Sensei!!"

They looked over their shoulders as Bakugo raced through his yard. Bakugo kept his eyes to the ground. He hasn't so much as looked at him or Yagi this entire time.

"I want to talk to you." Bakugo scuffed his shoe on the pavement. "... Alone."

Yagi nodded. Without a word, Yagi went through the gate and into the car the school provided for them. Bakugo waited for the slam of a car door, his blood red eyes meeting Aizawa's for the first time that evening.

"What is it, Bakugo?" Aizawa frowned at the extended silence.
"Bakugo?"

"Give me a minute, damnit! I'm not good with this emotional shit." Bakugo scrubbed at his eyes as sudden tears pricked at them. "I don't know if it's my fault, or yours, or even U.A.'s, for all of the shit that happened..." He tore his hands away from his face and gripped his shirt. "But when Akira shows his face again, you'll help him out, right?"

"That's the plan." Confusion swirled in Aizawa's mind. "Are you concerned about him?"

"Damn right I'm concerned!" Bakugo stared down at his palm, a ghost of a memory replaying in his eyes. "In case nobody noticed back in Kamino, when Akira summoned every one of his monsters, one was missing. Seth."

Aizawa's eyes widened. "Seth...?"

"All of the extras in class are so broken up about what happened in Kamino. But I saw Joker first hand before he... he coughed up a lot of black... and even so he forced himself to fight against all the odds." Bakugo shook his head. "So when that asshole decides to come out of hiding, we'll be with him, right!? He'll try to shoulder it all by himself if we don't."

"... I made a lot of mistakes when it comes to Joker, but yeah." Aizawa's eyes hardened as he faced Bakugo head on. "We'll make sure he won't be alone."

"Good."

Bakugo turned on his heel and stomped back into his house, the door slamming behind him.

"Katsuki, don't slam the door!!"

Aizawa shook his head. Out of all his students, he figured Bakugo would be the last one to be concerned over Akira. He turned around and ventured into the car. With a nod to the driver, they were off to their final stops for the day.

Yagi didn't inquire about the talk he had with Bakugo, so he spoke first.

"I'm surprised we're getting so many parents to agree to the dorms. Maybe that interview worked wonders after all." Aizawa said.

"Perhaps." Yagi sank back into the seat and closed his eyes.
"Though both crime rates and vigilante incidents have skyrocketed across the country."

"That's not your fault though." Aizawa droned. He sighed when Yagi didn't answer. "Are you sure you can handle Midoriya by yourself?"

"Yes, I wish to talk to them personally." Yagi opened his eyes and stared at him. "How about you? You wanted to split up from here anyway. Where are you headed?"

"The Blue Lotus." Aizawa glanced into the rear view mirror and fixed his bun, and wiped some nonexistent dirt from his suit. "I want to take Shinsou as my personal student, and with everything that's happened with Joker..." Aizawa frowned. "I think it would be best for me to do it."

"I've been wondering," Yagi blinked at the rectangular black box sitting in between them. "What this was for?"

Aizawa grabbed the box and set it in his lap. "It's something for the Shinsou family. Nezu and Tsuragamae got it out of evidence."

Yagi frowned as the car pulled right in front of the Blue Lotus.

Aizawa, tucking the box under his arm, got out and closed the door. The car drove off. Aizawa straightened his tie for the third time as he looked at the packed store front. Not with people, but gifts. Bouquets of vibrant flowers, Joker merch, candles, and heartwarming messages were all arranged around the tables outside.

Police vehicles were parked on either ends of the street. Akane waved from one of them. Aizawa nodded at him before he went to the door.

He eyed the Joker mask hanging front and center in one of the windows. They knew he was coming, so he ventured inside despite the 'closed' sign hanging on the door.

Three pairs of eyes pinned him to the spot as the happy chime rang over his head.

"Please, sit." Risumi said from behind the counter. "We have some coffee ready for you."

"... Thank you."

He chose a booth close to the counter and put the box aside. The stilted silence ground into Aizawa's bones as the aroma of coffee wafted through the barren cafe. This place always had a pleasant, relaxing atmosphere. A cafe where you could put your feet up and forget your worries for a bit, but this...

It felt as if a vital flame had been extinguished, leaving others lost and gasping for breath. The charms on the walls seemed deadened in the aftermath. The whole of the cafe had a grayer tone to it, sapped of emotion.

A cup of coffee planted in front of him drew him from his thoughts. He looked up as Hitoshi sat in the opposite booth, his mother right beside him. Ayumu leaned against the booth, next to his wife. To say they looked exhausted would be an understatement.

Haggard, sleep deprived. Worn. The Shinsou family weren't large by any meaning of the word, but their near emaciated composure sparked concern. He cleared his throat when he realized he had been staring at them in a prolonged silence.

"Thank you for meeting with me today." Aizawa said, "You know what it's about."

"Yes," Risumi looked at Hitoshi. "It's about the U.A. dorms, and how you want to train my son to be a hero."

"That's correct-"

"However, I have my doubts about your school."

Hitoshi's eyes widened. "Mom?"

"Something happened with Akira on his last day of work, right before your Summer Camp." Risumi narrowed her eyes. "Somebody came into the cafe while I was distracted with a mismanaged shipment. Akira wouldn't tell me what happened. I have a feeling that U.A. was somehow involved."

"It was Nezu." Hitoshi stated. His parents stared at him with wide eyes, and he shrugged. "Akira told me about it afterwards."

"Nezu..." Aizawa sighed deeply, "He invited Akira to the Summer Camp."

"He what!?" Ayumu scowled. "Why the hell would he do that? Why do it in our cafe, right under our noses?"

"The USJ..." Hitoshi sulked as their eyes landed on him. "Akira did it after Nezu promised he would get to investigate the USJ."

"That's right." Aizawa sat ramrod straight. "Nezu and All Might figured something out after the Kamino Crisis, but they won't tell anybody what it is. Do you know why Kurusu wanted to go to the USJ?"

“Yeah, I do.” Hitoshi pursed his lips. “But don’t think you can get it out of me. It’s not my secret to share.”

“That’s... fair.” Aizawa deflated.

“Mom, if you have doubts about U.A., please don’t.” Determination glinted in Hitoshi’s eyes as he looked in between his parents. “Akira would’ve found a way there somehow, it wouldn’t matter if Nezu invited him or not. You know it’s true.”

“... I know.” Risumi sagged into the booth.

“I have a question.” Aizawa said as he stared at Hitoshi. “You and Kurusu shared a lot, and I can see you took my exercise routine seriously just by looking at you.”

Hitoshi narrowed his eyes. “What about it?”

“Did he give you any additional training?”

“What is this, an interrogation?” Risumi snapped. “If you think you can walk in here and-”

“Yeah, he did.”

“Hitoshi!” Risumi cried.

“What?” Hitoshi deadpanned. “People are going to suspect us colluding with Joker no matter what we do. Yeah, he trained me and was a damn good teacher. I learned how to make lock picks, smoke bombs, and other things. He taught me hand to hand skills, how to properly wield a gun without hurting myself, and he was going to teach me how to fight with a dagger. I hacked into the villain’s network and gave you Joker’s, and the missing Wild Wild Pussy Cats’, location during the Kamino Crisis. You’re welcome by the way.” Hitoshi stared Aizawa dead in the eye with the sort of confidence that would only be passed down by someone like Joker. “What are you going to do about it?”

His parents' jaws dropped.

Aizawa sat there, stupefied. A strangled laugh bubbled in his throat as a wide grin stretched across his face.

"Kid, you're going to be a fantastic hero. Nezu is going to love you."

"I-I'm sorry, what?" Risumi stuttered. "You're not going to arrest us?"

"Arrest you? Never. Nezu would never allow it." Aizawa sobered.

"Hitoshi has a point, though. There is another reason why you should allow him to live in the dorms."

"What's that supposed to mean?" Ayumu said.

"I saw what's outside your door." Aizawa looked over his shoulder.

"Gifts from people who support Joker, and in turn, support you. But that might not always be the case."

Hitoshi jolted. "You think we'd be targeted by villains?"

"It's a possibility." Aizawa said as he turned towards them, his eyes falling on the lukewarm cup of coffee. "If it's clear that you're under U.A.'s protection, then it might ward off those who want to hurt you because of your relations with Joker. I'm sure some of the staff will make frequent visits to make sure that you're okay. We can tighten the security detail if need be. These are just precautions. We can never be too careful."

"... He has a point." Ayumu said.

"I never thought it would come to this." Risumi clasped her hands together on the table, her brow knotted. "After Silver Falcon... With everything Joker did for us..."

Aizawa's stomach churned.

Ayumu grasped Risumi's shoulder. "We can visit our son in the dorms, right?"

“Of course.” Aizawa nodded. “We aren’t going to bar parents from seeing their children.”

“And if Akira goes to the school like I think he will,” Hitoshi smiled at his parents. “Then you can see him again, too. I want to be there to support him when he returns.”

Risumi sucked in a breath. She wrapped her arms around Hitoshi and pulled him close. Hitoshi snorted as he hugged her back.

Aizawa scratched at his stubble when Risumi let go and pulled herself together, her son and husband rubbing her back soothingly.

“I know that things will be difficult from here on out, but I hope this memento will hold you off.” Aizawa grabbed the rectangular box and set it front of Hitoshi. “You haven’t turned in your costume designs yet, but Nezu and I already approved this as one of your potential weapons in the field... if you wanted it. You’d need training for it, but that shouldn’t be too much of a problem. Or you could keep it here. Whatever you want to do, it’s yours now.”

Hitoshi gulped as he popped off the top of the box. The lid fell from his grasp as he and his parents gasped. Inside, laying on a bed of red velvet, was Joker’s dagger. The ebony hilt glimmered and the pure white blade seemed to glow with an otherworldly light.

Goosebumps broke out on Hitoshi’s arms as he took it out of the box, the hilt bleeding ice into his palm. The blade itself sang as he held it up into the light.

“We found it in Kamino.” Aizawa whispered as they all stared at it in reverence. “Nezu pulled some serious strings to get it into your hands, Hitoshi. I think it’s his way of apologizing for everything that happened to your family. I know Joker would want you to have it, rather than it wasting away in an evidence locker somewhere.”

“This is...” Hitoshi blinked rapidly to stave off tears. He squared his shoulder and sat tall, his resolute violet eyes reflecting in Joker’s dagger. "I'll use it well. I promise."

He wasn't saying it to Aizawa or his parents, rather like it was a prayer to Joker himself.

"I know you will." Aizawa said. He looked at his watch, frowning. "It's starting to get late, and you all look tired. We can finish up the paperwork and I can get out of your hair."

"... Okay." Risumi smiled at her son. "Where do we sign?"

After another twenty minutes of paperwork, he left them in peace.

"Eraser."

He stopped with his foot hanging out the door and turned to Risumi.

"... Feel free to come by whenever you like." She said as she stared at his untouched mug of coffee. "We... Akira wrote down all of his recipes for us. Next time I'll serve you his favorite curry and coffee combo on the house."

"Thank you." He bowed. "I'll be sure to do that."

He walked out.

The night sky stretched out overhead.

"When did it get this late already?" He muttered as he got out his phone and dialed Yagi. "Hey, it's me. How did it go with Midoriya?"

"Midoriya's mother is truly a terrifying woman..."

Aizawa blinked. "Do I want to know?"

"M-maybe not, but at least she agreed to let the boy stay in U.A."

"... Okay." He shook his head and walked down the street, nodding to Akane, who still sat in a police cruiser. "I finished up at the Blue Lotus. Are you up for that drink? Midnight and Mic are coming along, too.”

“Sure, one or two drinks should be alright. Just don’t tell Recovery Girl? She’s been very adamant about my new diet.”

Aizawa chuckled. “Sure. I’ll send you the meeting location.”

He hung up and did just that. Aizawa put his phone away and just walked through Musutafu’s darkened streets, his thoughts wandering to Joker.

Little did he know, in a town an hour away by train from Musutafu, Amamiya Ren opened his eyes.

Hitoshi made me really proud in this chapter.

I would really like to thank you guys for sticking with me this far. 64 chapters and 450k words into this ABSOLUTE MONSTER of a story, and it still gets to me every time that people are still excited for the next chapter. <3 There are no words to describe how much everyone's support invigorates me to continue on through the hardest of days. Ironical for a writer, huh? xD

Here's the update schedule for the next 3 chapters:

New Beginning - February 5th

Counterfeit Phantom - February 19th

Sweatshop - March 5th

We won't really be spending too much time with the whole dorms and provisional license exam arc, for I would like to get to the work studies (what would be the start of season 4 in the anime) and focus on deeper character interactions as the class and Akiren and co try to recoup from the Kamino tragedy. I'm seriously excited for what's in store!

Lastly, while the next 3 chapters are planned and scheduled, I've been experiencing some seriously heavy brain fog that's been making it hard to write or even go about any normal day. So if the chapters after that take another week to write and ensure quality, then it will be as such. I want to give out the best story possible, and quality is hard to keep up when a word document turns into an amalgamated garble because your brain is tired and can't concentrate. Who knows? Maybe by February/March it will be gone, and we can keep the schedule as normal.

Anywho, apologies for the extremely long end note. I hope you all have a wonderful day! <3

New Beginning

Chapter 65: New Beginning

(See the end of the chapter for notes.)

FANART!

Aria on Twitter!

Ren opened his eyes to a wooden ceiling. For a single moment, he was thrown back in Leblanc. One second locked in bliss, an alternate reality where he and his friends weren't thrown into separate worlds by Yaldabaoth.

Oh, how he wished it were true.

Then reality crashed into him in an agonizing wave.

His skull buzzed and his ears rang with a deep, resonating tune. Ren squeezed his eyes shut against the pounding in his head, and the wrenching pain clawing at his heart. The softness of the blankets did nothing for the pins and needles dancing across his skin, the feeling akin to sandpaper as he pushed off the covers.

Shivering, he pulled himself into a sitting position, nearly jumping out of his skin as a cool washcloth dropped from his forehead and onto his hands. He set it aside as the ringing in his ears intensified. Sitting up was easier than standing, his legs wobbling when he took his first step, his hand stabilizing against some worn crates as the world wavered around him. He took a moment to breathe through clenched teeth before he took in his surroundings.

The attic back home dwarfed this one. The crates pushed against the wall left only enough room for a small handful of people to roll out their futon. Signs of life dotted the attic. From the mishmash of supplies arranged in neat piles, to random snacks and tightly rolled futons. Bags and familiar gadgets were stuffed into the far corner. Evidence that people lived here, and not for a short length of time.

He hobbled towards the staircase. Noises echoed from down the stairs; loud voices, music, the sharp clacks of a game of pool. Familiar scents mingled with the dry air, sharp and acrid. A smokey tinge that reminded him of Lala-chan's bar.

The rest of the noise covered the groan of wood as he settled his weight on the first step. Ren dragged his body down a few more stairs, stopping to catch his breath as black spots stained his vision. But his luck didn't last. His knees gave out at the second to last step, his stomach flew up to his throat as the floor reached up and caught his graceless fall.

His vision blacked out as he banged his head against the ground.

"Oh, honey!" An unfamiliar voice cried out as footsteps rushed to Ren's side. A calloused hand touched his back, sending fire through his blood. "You shouldn't have come down the stairs in your condition! What were you thinking?"

Ren pushed them away and scuttled back into the stairs. He caught a flash of red hair as the person held up their hands. His blurry vision couldn't differentiate if it was a man or a woman, but what did that matter when he was in alien surroundings?

He reached for a familiar power; a beat of Yatagarasu's wind, the crackling chill of Byakko's ice, the caustic poison on Vasuki's breath. Nothing happened. His soul rang hollow. A dismal, lonely tune that only summoned crippling despair.

"It's okay, I'm not hostile!" The person said when he began hyperventilating. "I'll get the others."

They zipped away and returned with familiar faces. Ren's eyes watered as he zeroed in on black and white fur.

"Mo... na..."

"Akira!!" Morgana launched himself from Kaito's shoulder and crashed into Ren's chest. "I thought... I thought you would never..."

That name, Akira, sounded wrong to Ren's ears, but the cotton blanketing his mind didn't let him think clearly. He pushed all thoughts aside as he curled around Morgana, the burning tears falling freely from both as they clung to one another. Morgana's fur tickled his face.

"Y-you... you idiot..." Morgana, despite his sobbing, pushed every ounce of love for his partner in his voice. "I was so worried! After what happened... you..."

"I-I'm sorry." Ren's dry throat burned and made his voice raspy. "I-I didn't mean to-"

"It's okay! We're okay. I'm just glad you're finally awake!"

"Hey..."

They looked up as Kaito approached, the others backed up to give them space. Kaito knelt in front of them, his eyes searching Ren's face. He planted a warm hand on Ren's shoulder, the silvery band on Kaito's wrist twinkled in the low light.

"Let's get you back upstairs, okay?" Kaito looked over his shoulder. "Tobita, can you make some broth? He needs something that won't upset his stomach."

"Of course!" Tobita smiled, relief evident in his face. Ren's desolate heart fluttered with warmth when his kind eyes locked onto Ren's. "Leave it to me."

Morgana uncurled from Ren's chest and hopped to his shoulder. Kaito put Ren's arm over his shoulder and helped him stand, with Kaito frowning at how... easy it was.

"Do you need any assistance up the stairs?" A man with slanted brown eyes asked.

Ren's eyes widened. He knew that voice.

"Mr. Compress?"

"Indeed!" Mr. Compress grinned. "I know our reunion isn't a dramatic moonlight rendezvous, but I'm glad we could meet again."

Kaito snorted at Ren's blatant confusion. "Leave us alone for a few minutes, okay? Give him time to adjust."

"Right. Magne," Mr. Compress glanced over to the muscular, red haired woman, "Do you think you can...?"

"Yep, I'll close the bar." Magne waved her hand. "You're lucky it's a weekday. My patrons would get pissed at me if I closed on a weekend."

Kaito sighed as they journeyed upstairs.

"It was your turn to watch him, Shuichi!" Manami snapped.

"I'm sorry! I didn't know he would wake up on my bathroom break!" Thwack . "OW! What was that for!?"

"Merp."

"You're not helping!"

"Some things never change." Morgana said when they reached the top of the steps.

"You could say that again." Kaito looked directly into Ren's eyes.

Ren stared at the floor as Kaito lowered him back on the futon, Morgana hopping onto Ren's lap after they adjusted the comforter. Guilt clawed at Ren's painfully empty stomach. He couldn't stand Morgana's keen stare, so he ran a hand down the not-cat's silken fur to distract himself.

Kaito fidgeted with his band as silence weighed them down, until the man sighed and took off his glasses to rub his eyes. He put them back on and locked Ren with an unreadable expression.

"Do you remember what I said when you two first wandered into my internet cafe, completely lost and terrified?" Kaito asked.

"How you'd kick us out if we caused any trouble?" Ren said, his fingers stilled over Morgana's fur.

"Yep." Kaito chuckled dryly as he glanced around the attic. "Now look at me. I turned into a complete hypocrite."

Ren stiffened. "What happened to the Raven's Nest?"

"For now, it's closed." Kaito stated.

"What?" Ren's eyes widened.

"Hitoshi warned us that it might not be safe after... you know." Morgana suppressed a purr as Ren resumed petting him. "So we found a new hideout thanks to Compress! Hopefully it's just... temporary."

"I'm sorry, Kaito." Ren's lips soured and he couldn't bare looking at either of them. "I never thought it would be taken that far. If only I-"

"Hey, none of that." Ren froze as Kaito ruffled his curls, soft and almost playful. An honest smile curled Kaito's lips. "Honestly? I have no regrets. The Raven's Nest can always be reopened somewhere else. I've started over many times in my life, doing it again is no trouble for me. I'm just... glad that you two came along when you did. My life..." Kaito sighed as he retracted his hand. Ren and Morgana stared at him as he traced his silvery band. "I wasn't really living until you two darkened my doorstep. Locking yourself away, too afraid to go outside and interact with people, it's no way to live. That's a sorry existence where you just haven't died."

Ren and Morgana held their breath. Kaito didn't feel their stares, his eyes too focused on the suppressant on his wrist. But Ren knew, despite the endless void coiling inside him, Kaito was his Hermit of this world. Ren no longer felt the sacred bond that tied him to others, the soothing threads that empowered him were gone, leaving him weak and destitute.

Kaito snapped out of it, his eyes flicking up to Ren. "I'm glad you're awake, Akira. We were worried."

That name again. Akira . It wronged him as if it was a deformed puzzle piece being jammed into a space where it didn't belong . He just couldn't put his finger on why.

"Akira...?" Morgana looked up at him in concern. "Are you still tired?"

"I-it's nothing." Ren shook his head. "How long have I been out?"

"Three weeks, give or take." Kaito said.

Ren's throat tightened. "Three... three weeks ?"

"Ah, is this a bad time?"

Tobita stood at the top of the stairs, holding a tray. The tantalizing smell of chicken broth made Ren's mouth water, but he didn't even hear the man walk up the steps.

"Of course not." Kaito waved Tobita closer.

Tobita gracefully sat next to Kaito. He set the tray to his side and gently pushed the mug into Ren's hands. Heat seeped into his clammy hands. He took a sip, sighing in relief as the broth soothed his throat and the chills bled out by the warmth spreading through his body.

"It... hasn't been easy." Kaito frowned when Ren finished the broth. Tobita took the empty mug and set it aside. "What do you remember?"

"I..." Ren hissed and clutched his head as horrible images battered his mind. "I-it's kinda fuzzy, but I remember... K-Kamino... I-I... All For One is... he's dead." Ren shuddered. Morgana huddled into his partner's side. "I... I killed him, didn't I? How could I... People know that I killed someone, right?"

Tobita and Kaito exchanged glances. Morgana's fur bristled.

"... Yes." Kaito stated. "That incident was broadcast live."

"I-I didn't want Sraosha to do it." Tears burned Ren's eyes. "I begged him not to. You have to believe me!"

"Everyone knows that." Morgana whispered. "Nezu, All Might, and our group in the top ten stuck up for you in a live interview. All Might took responsibility for everything that went down because of that villain."

"B-but... I killed somebody!" Ren's heart wrenched at the vast emptiness inside him. Was it his price to pay for killing somebody? His punishment? "A-and I died... So many times I can't even... and now my Personas are-" A shrill ringing hounded his ears. His vision blackened and he collapsed forward.

"H-hey, Akira!" Kaito shouted as Ren felt arms wrap around him. "You're still sick and you need to rest. Go back to sleep, okay? We'll be with you, no matter what."

Ren nodded into Kaito's chest, and the man lay him out on the futon, the warm comforter caressing his chin. He felt himself being pulled under, but he muttered something before the darkness embraced him once more.

“I feel so empty, Morgana.” Ren whispered as his eyelids drooped closed.

A heaviness strangled them as they watched him fall asleep, his chest rising and falling.

Kaito cursed under his breath as he rubbed his temples.

Tobita crumpled into himself.

Morgana put his forehead against his partner’s as his heart visibly shattered into bits.

Manami popped her head out from the stairwell, the others followed her lead. “We... we heard everything.”

“We’re all going to have to work together if we want him to pull through this.” Kaito said. “This is... a lot worse than I imagined. It’s going to be a long road for all of us.”

“How could I fail him when he needed me most?” Morgana curled into the crook of his partner’s neck, tears leaking down his fur. “I won’t make that mistake again. I can’t .”

“We’ll still take turns watching over him during the day. You need your rest too, Morgana.” Manami whispered, before she glared at Shuichi. “And no more bathroom breaks.”

“I get it!” Shuichi cried. “I learned my lesson!”

Lady Stubbs glared at him. “Merp...”

Atsuhiro shook his head. “It’s been a long enough night. Why don’t we all hit the hay? Everyone will need their energy if we’re to take care of him properly.”

“That...” Kaito’s shoulders dropped and he sighed. “That sounds like a good idea.”

That night, they lay out all of their futons in a tight circle around their Leader, hoping that their closeness would soothe him in any way possible.

Aizawa hoped that his students were eager to move in to the dorms. Too excited to ask certain questions. That hope shriveled as twenty pairs of eyes stared at him expectantly, their curiosity not spurred by the dorm building looming over them. Some lowered their gazes as his eyes swept over them, doubt or hesitation marred others. Quirked lips, pinched brows. Bakugo became twitchy whenever one of his classmates stared at him for more than a few seconds.

Aizawa took a deep breath, and let it out as a sigh.

“I know what you’re all thinking.” Aizawa said as he decided to hit the nail on the head. “The Summer Camp was difficult for everybody involved. Mutual trust was broken on either side, but I hope we can work together to rectify that.”

“Sensei!” Kirishima stood front and center, his hands into tight fists. “Is it true that you knew Joker was there? Vlad King said that... sometimes, as heroes, we’ll have to accept assignments that you don’t always agree with.”

“Yes, we knew that Joker was there.” His gaze softened as whispers broke out.

“How could you let a criminal be at our camp!?” Ojiro shouted, his raw anger made the others flinch.

“Ojiro!” Iida chopped his arm. “Let’s at least listen to Aizawa-sensei before we make demands!”

Ojiro bit his lip, but pinned Aizawa to the spot with a less heated glare.

“Joker’s situation is...”

Chaotic.

Pure, unadulterated hell .

They waited as Aizawa pinched the bridge of his nose. He warded off images of the kid swamped in the hospital bed, clutching him as he went still in Aizawa’s arms, of the body laying on a cold slab in the morgue. He breathed through the pang in his heart. Aizawa checked around, but his class was the first to gather in front of their new dorm. They were alone.

“Delicate . Nezu invited Joker and his team to the Summer Camp as a show of trust.”

“But why ?” Ojiro ground out, his tail flicking back and forth. “Isn’t he just a criminal?”

Aizawa’s eyes hardened. “He may have bent the rules, but do you think he deserved to be treated the way Kunikazu did in that ICU room?”

A sea of pallid faces stared back at him. Uraraka and some of the other girls put their hands over their mouths as the memory haunted them. Ojiro shivered as he lost all color.

“What I’m saying is this; Society is not black and white.” Aizawa pinned Ojiro with an intense glare. “It has many shades of gray. One shade allows Joker to be at the Camp, and another represents a class that thought staging an illegal rescue was a good idea.” Aizawa’s eyes skimmed over his class as their eyes fell to the ground. “Like it or not, that’s the truth of the society we live in. Those who think it’s just one or the other, heroes versus villains, good versus evil, will become extremely short sighted. Such a narrow point of view will only hurt you in the future.”

Like it hurt Aizawa now, after his perspective broadened and it was too late to do anything about it.

Asui raised a hand. “What about Joker, kero? What shade would he be?”

“That’s... complicated. We have reason to believe that he was heavily abused by the system. Both Midnight and Hound Dog have agreed that he had symptoms of severe PTSD. Joker is powerful, but people forget that he is still a child who has been harmed by people who were supposed to protect him. It may not be the first time he’s dealt with somebody of Kunikazu’s caliber.”

Midoriya, Iida, and Todoroki exchanged significant glances.

“Sensei!” Iida’s eyes sharpened as he chopped his arm. “Is there any news about Nezu’s Vigilante Program or Joker’s whereabouts!?”

“Why do you ask?”

“Because-” He turned to the rest of his classmates, shoulders squared and head held high. “If it gets approved and Joker comes here, then as Class 1-A’s Representative I wish to welcome and support him however I can!!”

“Iida...” Todoroki said, wide eyed.

“But-” Ojiro started, but another stepped to the front of the group.

“I agree.” Tokoyami took the curious stares in stride. “Out of everyone here, I am the only one with a sentient quirk similar to Joker’s. I understand him on a deeper level, and will choose to support him despite what happened to All For One at Kamino. One cannot truly know the suffering of others until you have experienced it for yourself.”

Aizawa bit back the classified information that Joker technically had no quirk .

“Oui!!” Aoyama beamed, his sparkles somehow brighter than ever before. “I shall support him as a fellow shining star!”

“Y-Yeah!!” Ashido pumped her fist. “Aki-chan deserves the best!!”

Ojiro remained silent then, grinding his teeth together.

Bakugo sneered at Ojiro, but shoved his hands in his pocket instead of snapping at him.

“We don’t know where Joker and his team are right now. As for the Vigilante Program...” They turned their attention to Aizawa, “The time frame is uncertain. The last I heard, the court has accepted the appeal Nezu sent in. I’ll let you know as soon as I find out anything else.” Aizawa sighed as Iida nodded sharply. “Anyway, we wasted enough time standing out here. I’ll give you a quick tour of the first floor, then you’ll have the rest of today, tomorrow, and Sunday to get settled in. Classes resume on Monday.”

They followed him down a beautiful cobblestone path and into the wide wooden double doors.

The interior sprawled out into a large commons area, with floor to ceiling windows letting in plentiful sunlight and a view of the gardens just outside their door. Plush couches and tables were arranged for study areas, with another centered around a large television. High ceilings and cream colored walls gave the illusion of a much bigger space.

“I-it’s like a mansion!!” Uraraka cried.

“Each student dorm building holds one class,” Aizawa said as his students ogled their new living space. “Girls on the right, boys on the left. You all get your own room. The rooms are on the second floor and above, with each floor having four rooms per floor. The main living area has laundry, a shared bathing area separated by gender, a state of the art kitchen and dining area, while the rooms themselves have AC, refrigerators, a private bathroom, closets, and a balcony.”

Aizawa sighed in relief as he finished his memorized tirade.

“I’ll be back tomorrow to tell you more. That’s all. Dismissed.”

“Yes, Aizawa-sensei!!”

They scrambled around him as they raced up the stairs, or like Kaminari and Ashido, excitedly mashed the elevator call button.

“Sensei.”

Aizawa raised a brow at Todoroki, who peered into him strangely.
“What is it?”

“About Joker, did he...” Todoroki opened and close his mouth several times, but he couldn’t get his words out. “Nevermind.”

Todoroki’s eyes fell to the ground and he walked away.

Aizawa caught Bakugo staring oddly at Todoroki before he too, ventured up the stairs to check out his room. He sighed as his craving for a decent cup of caffeine pantomimed into the forefront of his mind as often as a certain vigilante, but he pushed it away. Right now, he had one more student to check on before he could move into the teacher’s dorms.

Hopefully Marshmallow was patient enough not to claw up his new furniture.

Hitoshi busied himself by arranging his room.

His classmates had acted... strange. They hadn’t paid him much mind before, but since the whole Kamino debacle and Akira’s identity getting out, they had given him ample breathing room. Their awed stares twisted into his back when they thought he wasn't looking.

He shook his head and focused on his room. Some of the charms from the Blue Lotus hung on his wall, alongside a picture of his parents. Various bits and bobs and tools littered his desk, with pieces of a new laptop set out for later. With a sigh, he plopped down on his new bed, staring at the vibrant red and black tapestry hung above the headboard.

His phone vibrated on the nightstand. His parents had been checking in almost every hour. For now, he ignored them and reached into the closest box by his bed. He froze. Just inside this box was his black fox mask and a replica of Joker's mask. He took them both out and held them up towards the balcony door, the afternoon sunlight bleeding through both pairs of eyes.

"Damn it..." He muttered as a lump formed in his throat.

He hung his best friend's mask on the balcony door. Hitoshi stared down at the fox mask in his hands, the golden moon stamped on the forehead twinkling. His first(and probably last) act of real vigilantism happened after he donned it. To Joker, Hitoshi was The Moon.

Maybe he could add a small moon or a fox motif to his hero costume.

Hitoshi put the mask on his desk and turned back to the box, where a figurine of Arsene lay inside. The inky black wings reflected beautiful colors, jewels of blue and purple hidden within an ebony sheen. Vibrant as oil mixed in water. Hitoshi studied Arsene's claws and intricate mask, recalling the time when Arsene appeared in the alley behind the Blue Lotus and pinned Hitoshi against the wall.

How things have changed since then.

He just put the figurine at a place of pride on his desk when somebody knocked on the door. The hairs on the back of his neck raised.

“Er... come in?”

Aizawa opened the door. His eyes lingered on Joker’s mask and the Arsene figurine, before they landed on Hitoshi. “Sorry for the intrusion.”

“Don’t worry about it.” Hitoshi said as he deflated. “It’s not like I was doing much.”

“I wanted to see how you were settling in.” Aizawa said as he leaned against the wall. “Is anyone giving you any trouble for... recent events?”

“Not really.” Hitoshi deadpanned. “If anything, it’s like they’re almost afraid to talk to me, but in a different way than before. I don’t mind it that much.”

“Let me know if that changes. We don’t want you to feel ostracized-”

“It’s fine.” Hitoshi turned to the black fox mask and fiddled with the straps. “I’ve been ostracized for my quirk almost my entire life. I’m used to it.” He sighed when Aizawa gave him a stern look. “What else are you here for? I know it has to be for another reason.”

“You’re as smart as a whip. Enjoy this weekend, Shinsou, because it’ll be the last one where you get to relax.” Aizawa’s terrifying grin sent shivers down Hitoshi’s back. “Your hero training will be with me every morning at five-thirty starting Monday. We’ll see how much you’ve earned from Joker’s training and go on from there.”

“Y-yes, sensei.” Hitoshi’s eyes fell to Aizawa’s scarf. “Could I... would it be possible to train with that, too?”

“It took me over six years to master it by myself, but I think you could do it if I trained you.” Aizawa put a hand to his capture weapon, then smirked at Hitoshi before his eyes trailed over the disassembled laptop and other metal bits. "I looked over the forms for your costume and hero name."

"And?"

"I think the name Wild Card fits." Aizawa snorted as he turned towards the door. "See you tomorrow morning. Don't be late."

Hitoshi lay his head on his desk after Aizawa left. He was already exhausted, but he knew that everything would be worth it.

After all, he wanted to impress Akira the next time they saw each other.

Shoto worked mechanically as he put his room together, his thoughts wandering as he changed this bland room into one like a traditional Japanese inn. Tatami floors, a shoji door to the balcony, traditional Japanese shelving and a desk that was low to the floor. A pot with vibrant green bamboo shoots added that final touch.

Satisfied, he sank into the cushioned zaisu in front of his desk, his eyes trailing to his phone.

He ignored the few lines of awkward dialogue from his father, past the lengthy conversation he's been having with Momo throughout the day, and read a new message from Iida.

[Ingenium2.0]

Are you busy?

I've been.... thinking about something and I need to discuss it with somebody.

Midoriya hasn't answered, so he's probably busy with his room.

[Shoto]

Sure, my door is open.

It took less than a minute for Iida to be at his doorstep, widened eyes studying the room.

“Impressive. I didn’t think this level of work could be done in one day!”

Shoto shrugged as he waved Iida inside and shut the door. “Do you need help with your room?”

“No, it’s not that...”

Shoto tilted his head. “You can tell me if something is bothering you.”

The mask of the astute Class Representative cracked, guilt and horror bleeding through his eyes.

“I...” Iida pushed up his glasses. His fingers trembled. “I overheard something I don’t think I should have. About Joker when he was in the hospital.”

“What?”

“My brother saw Joker’s brain scans, and that the doctor assured him the hemorrhaging was fatal. He was confused on how Joker is somehow... alive .” Iida looked into Shoto’s eyes, fear blatant within them. “I don’t know what to think of it. If... If Joker really did die, then how is he alive? His powers continue to boggle me. I can’t even imagine how Joker feels right now...”

“I...” Shoto pursed his lips. His knuckles turned bone white as his nails dug into his palms. “I know.”

“Know... what?”

“You have to promise not to tell anyone.” lida’s expression hardened, but he nodded. Shoto took a deep breath and cast off the weight he held since Hosu. “It’s something I figured out after Joker joined the fight in Hosu. Native was dead . I don’t think even he knows that he died.”

“He was-” lida’s eyes went impossibly wide. “But, that can’t be-”

“I was the one who got closest to Native. He wasn’t breathing, and most of the damage he sustained was internal bleeding. I don’t think he was dead for very long-”

“Are you saying that Joker revived him!?”

“lida .”

“But that’s... that’s...” lida ducked his head, his voice in a whisper. “That light, the butterfly, the flowers we smelled... that was... it brought him back ?”

“Yeah, it did. Think about it, lida. That spell with the butterfly was different to any other healing spell we’ve seen. It would make sense that a revival ability would look different to a normal healing one.”

“Th-that makes sense. I... see why you didn’t tell anyone.” lida released a shaky sigh. “So, those brain scans, the hemorrhaging-”

“If they were fatal, then there’s no doubt in my mind that Joker really died.” Their stomachs churned. The truth hung before them on fine spider’s silk, but one snap of the thread would lead to impending doom if word got out. “Joker was alone with All For One for over an hour before the stream went live. His power went beyond what his body could handle, and he was in critical condition while he was in the hospital. It’s not the question of if he died, lida, it’s...” Shoto scowled. “I think it’s a question of how many times he died. Why else would he bleed black?”

Iida went pale so fast Shoto thought he was going to get sick. It's a good thing he already unpacked most of the stuff for his bathroom. Iida swayed before he sank down onto the floor, his hair hanging over his expression.

"So, our teachers were right to say that he has severe PTSD. Who knows what else he was put through even before Kamino. The USJ and the hero raid might be scratching the surface."

"Yeah." Shoto sat at Iida's side. "I don't think our classmates understand how much he has suffered."

"... Should we tell Midoriya about it?"

"I hate to say this, but the less people that know, the better. Nezu, Aizawa-sensei, and those heroes in Demizu Mika's interview probably all know. There's no way they would pull that off so fast if they didn't figure it out. They wanted to make sure Joker's true power was covered up before people got suspicious. For now, I think we should keep it to ourselves."

"R-right."

Unbeknownst to them, a shadow listened in from the hallway, hand half way raised to knock. He shoved his hands in his pockets and stormed off. His heart hammered a hundred miles a second.

"Bakugo!!" Ashido rushed up the stairs along with Kirishima and Kaminari. "We were about to ask everyone if we wanted to compare rooms!!"

"Dude..." Kirishima frowned as he saw Bakugo's watery eyes. "Are you okay?"

"I'm fine !" He snapped as he shouldered his way past. "And no, stay the hell out of my room!"

“C’moooooon!” Ashido said as she clung on his arm. “Pretty please!? We’re going to decide who has the best room! They will be given the name of Room King!! Don’t you want that title?”

Bakugo shoved her off. “Fine . But you know damn well that I’m going to win!”

“That’s the spirit!!”

Todoroki’s door opened. Iida and Todoroki poked their heads out.

“What’s with all the noise?” Iida asked.

“Oh, perfect!” Kaminari grinned. “We’re inviting everyone down to the common area so we can compare rooms!”

“I just finished with mine not that long ago.” Shoto said as they stepped out into the hallway. “Is everyone else ready?”

“Yeah!” Kaminari said, “We’re all meeting downstairs!”

Shoto couldn’t shake off the way Bakugo pinned him with a strange look as they went downstairs. Everyone lounged around on the floor or on the couches. His eyes found Momo’s and Shoto’s heart eased when they smiled at each other.

“Okay!” Ashido clapped her hands when everyone was present. “We’ll start with the girls, and then move on to the boys! Afterwards, we’ll all vote on who has the best room design!”

“Remember to be respectful of each other’s rooms!” Iida shouted.

“That’s just like our Class Representative...” Jiro said with a smirk.

Shoto kept himself at the back of the group as they looked at the girl’s rooms until they reached Yaoyorozu’s. His eyes widened as the others marveled at the traditional styled room, quite similar to his.

“W-well, I couldn’t bring anything from home.” She said as she rubbed her arm. “I’ve put a lot of thought about being more economical in my choices. I’ve recently gained a new appreciation for this style.”

The mood dampened, but compliments were given and they swept over to the boy’s side. Shoto noticed one key item in nearly every room. It didn’t matter if Jiro’s had a punk rock theme, or Aoyama’s dazzling decorations, or even Midoriya’s complete obsession with his All Might themed room.

With the exception of Shoji, Ojiro, Mineta, and a small handful of others, each one had some small memento of Joker. Whether it was a mask hanging in the window, a red and black postcard pinned on a board, or in Bakugo’s case, a rare figurine of Seth sitting regally on his headboard, wings splayed and mouth set in a silent roar. Uraraka and Ashido prized their neatly folded handkerchiefs with black and red patterns.

“TODOROKI!” Ashido’s voice brought Shoto out of his stupor. “Your room is similar to Yaomomo’s!?”

“We lived together for a bit.” Shoto stated as he and Momo avoided everyone’s gawking. “Is it not normal to have similar rooms because of that?”

Ashido whispered something in Momo’s ear, and she turned bright red. “Mina!! How could you suggest such a thing!?”

“What? Share the details, girl!”

“Enough, Ashido!” Iida interjected. “We have looked at Todoroki’s room, now we must move on!”

“Fiiine!” Ashido whined as they went next door.

Shoto paused after he closed his door. “What did she say to you, Momo?”

“Ah, nothing! It’s nothing.” Momo said, despite her ears turning red.
“Don’t worry about it.”

Shoto blinked slowly, but decided to drop it. They followed the others throughout other rooms. The girl’s cooed at Koda’s adorable room with a rabbit, harked on Kaminari’s tastelessness, or how Sato’s room smelled like a bakery, though it went unsaid as to why Midoriya and a few others couldn’t bare staying in the room for too long.

It wasn’t until they reached Tokoyami’s room that something truly sparked Shoto’s interest.

Darkness draped the whole space, the only spurts of light coming from purple candles and ominously archaic looking artifacts. Strange charms and posters hung all across the walls.

“Y-you have a sword!?” Midoriya asked as he hovered by the item leaning against the corner.

“Y-yes, please don’t touch anything!” Tokoyami practically drowned in puffed up feathers. “Could we just move on?”

“Wait, Tokoyami...” Shoto walked inside, all eyes on him, and stopped in front of Tokoyami’s desk. A Joker mask and a few decks of peculiar cards sat on the side. “What do you know about the Arcana?”

“Oh?” Tokoyami perked up. “I never thought that you would be interested in Tarot.”

Shoto looked in between Bakugo and Momo, each taking a keen interest.

“Now that you say it,” Kaminari said. “I’m kinda curious too.”

“Do you even have the brains to understand the Arcana?” Bakugo griped.

“Dude, harsh!”

“I admit...” Momo said as she crossed her arms. “After recent events... I am also curious.”

“Perhaps... we could do this in the common area? I would prefer to not have people standing awkwardly in my domain.” Tokoyami said as he took the decks from Shoto’s hands. “My room is the last to be judged, correct? We could take a vote after.”

“Sounds good!” Ashido said. “Everyone, to the common area!!”

Tokoyami pushed everyone out of his room, and they followed him back down to the commons area. Tokoyami planted himself on a couch with a coffee table. Everyone waited curiously as he fidgeted with the first deck, before clearing his throat.

“Before we start, I am curious.” Tokoyami’s eyes landed on Shoto. “What sparked your intrigue in the Tarot? They draw people for a reason.”

Shoto pursed his lips as he sat beside Tokoyami. “Joker.”

Class 1-A’s breath was stolen as the room became tense.

“How did Joker...” Midoriya’s eyes became laced with grief. “What does he have to with this?”

Shoto and Bakugo exchanged glances. Bakugo scowled as he plopped on the armchair beside the couch.

“Back at the Summer Camp, IcyHot and I encountered Seth.” Bakugo bristled as he ignored stares and a few gasps. “Seth... he said I was the Tower.”

“Seth also said that I was the ‘Hanged Man’.”

Tokoyami stiffened. “The Tower and the Hanged Man ?”

“Yeah, what of it birdbrain!?”

“Joker himself called me an Empress.” Momo added with a frown, “But the Empress is part of the Arcana, right?”

“That is correct.” Tokoyami opened the first pack of cards and lay them out on the table.

Everyone leaned forward to study their intricate designs.

“I wonder...” Tokoyami finished laying them out in order, before he locked his fingers together and leaned forward. “The Empress, the Tower, The Hanged Man... are you absolutely certain that those are the names Joker or Seth gave you?”

“Yes, he said it right to my face.” Momo said. “When he delivered the calling card for my parents...”

“A-as for Seth...” Midoriya clutched his chin in thought. “If Joker’s connection with his companions are as deep as I think it is... then it might as well have been Joker that called Bakugo the Tower, and Todoroki the Hanged Man.”

“Okay, I’m so lost.” Kaminari stated.

“Same here,” Kirishima scratched the back of his neck with a sheepish smile.

“It all begins with the Fool and his journey.” Tokoyami pointed to the first card, depicting a young man about to walk off a cliff. “With each card representing a step in that journey. For example,” His hand hovered over the second card, a picture of a steaming chalice, the figure behind was obscured by the wisps of smoke. “The Magician helps the Fool tap into his full potential. The next, the High Priestess, represents his unrealized potential-”

“Can you get on with it?” Bakugo snapped.

Tokoyami sighed as he looked to Momo. “You’re the Empress, who represents mother earth and abundance, of spirituality and feminine energy. If we skip to the Hanged Man, which is the 12th card of the deck, it is the Fool himself, turned upside-down as if his whole world has followed suit. It can represent self sacrifice needed to save another.”

“What about the Tower?” Shoto asked, brow furrowed.

“The Tower is a tricky card.” Tokoyami said. “It is commonly associated with danger, crisis, destruction, and other such things.” Tokoyami’s eyes bored into Bakugo’s widened ones. “It can be associated with unforeseen change, such as a way for the Fool to free himself from his shackles. It is one of the cards that people misunderstand the most. It is not an inherently bad card.”

Bakugo’s eyes were pinpricks. Unbeknownst to them, the sound of broken chains replayed in Bakugo’s mind.

“So... let’s say that Joker is the Fool, then does that make us each a card?” Iida asked, his brow pensive. “Each of us is a part of his journey?”

“It’s difficult to say.” Tokoyami said. “Joker has forged many bonds; this class, some chosen few heroes, and who knows how many others outside of our circle. For example, Midoriya could be the epitome of a Chariot, or Kirishima the Sun. Iida would make a perfect Emperor. I dare say that someone like All Might could be Judgement. However,” Tokoyami stared at the cards, “All of this can be taken with a grain of salt. If Joker is the Fool, then only he knows for certain. There are also other decks with additional cards such as Apostle, Faith, and Aeon. Who’s to say that Joker’s bonds belong to only a single deck?”

“This sounds way too complicated for my tastes.” Jiro deadpanned.

“Maybe, but I find it interesting.” Shoji said serenely.

“Me too!” Hagakure shouted as she waved her arms. “I wonder what Arcana I would be!?”

“It is much to take in all at once.” Tokoyami reached for the cards and packed the first deck together. “But if anyone is interested in them after tonight, then I have no qualms about answering questions... or even performing a tarot reading.”

“You know...” Uraraka leaned over the couch and pointed at the cards. “Can you do a reading now? About... Joker?”

“I suppose it won’t hurt.” Tokoyami said as he reached for another deck. “For some reason, it is the Thoth deck that calls to me.”

“Ooooh, spooky!” Ashido said.

Tokoyami sighed as they waited in anticipation. He shuffled the cards, slowly hovering his palm over each one. When Tokoyami felt a warm buzzing energy seep into his palm, emanating from the card as if it wished to be summoned, he took it and placed it face down on the table. He repeated until there were three cards.

“This card represents his past.” Tokoyami flipped over the first card. “The Fool. How fitting.”

“What does it mean?” Midoriya asked.

“It means that he may have taken his first steps into a new journey. I can think of one such event that could signify a new journey.”

“The USJ.” Momo stated.

“That is correct.” Tokoyami frowned as he stared down at his hand. “He appeared as if out of thin air. I mistook him for a villain.”

“B-but he wasn’t a villain!” Koda said as he wrung his hands together. “He didn’t hurt us at the USJ, a-and he saved me from a Nomu during the Summer Camp...”

“I would say he helped any number of us since then.” Iida said. “My brother would never walk again if it wasn’t for Joker.”

“Y-yeah. I...” Uraraka’s face flushed as she studied the corner of the room. “My family doesn’t have much money, so I was all alone in my apartment and struggling for food. If it wasn’t... wasn’t for what he and the Shinsou’s offered at the Blue Lotus, then I might’ve gone hungry between school lunches.”

“Ochako-chan...” Asui said as she rubbed Uraraka’s arm.

“Indeed...” Tokoyami nodded. “To our knowledge, he never made a public appearance before the USJ, so the Fool fits perfectly. Now, as for Joker’s present-”

Tokoyami flipped over the second card, many reeling back, aghast.

Uraraka paled. “I-Is that....?”

“Death.” Tokoyami said.

Shoto and Iida startled. Others whispered in shock or horror, or in Midoriya’s case, stared at it in dismay. Bakugo’s expression faltered, and ultimately fell into a scowl.

This card depicted a shadowy reaper riding a pale horse, its hollow eyes staring at them as it held a wickedly sharp sickle. A raven perched in a dead tree behind them. Other skulls and vibrant roses decorated the border. But there was one problem.

“Why is it upside down?” Kaminari asked. “Did it get messed up when you were shuffling?”

“Not exactly.” Tokoyami clasped his hands together. “In Tarot, having both Upright and Reversed cards is normal. Each bare different meaning depending on which one you draw, and how it is drawn.”

“So, what does a Death Reversed mean?” Shoto asked.

“Death...” They all held their breath as Tokoyami closed his eyes. “Like the Tower, is not always a bad card. It is often misunderstood, for it does not always imply a physical death, more of a metamorphosis and deep change. As for a Reversed Death, much remains the same. However, it means that he is on the verge of change, but at the same time, resisting it. He feels... stuck? I'm getting the feeling about something in his past, but I cannot see it clearly. My inner eye is clouded by an impenetrable veil, but I sense a sinister shadow lurking in its midst, overwhelming in strength."

"What about his past?" Midoriya muttered. "If he feels stuck, then is it impossible for him to experience the change he needs?"

"Not necessarily." Tokoyami said. "Sometimes a Death Reversed will provide more opportunities to embrace the change. I could say that a Reversed Death may have brighter outcomes than the Upright version. Whatever it is, I feel that this card represents him the best at this moment."

"A-and the last one?" Asui said as she and Uraraka huddled close. "Is it Joker's future?"

"Yes." A deep breath steadied Tokoyami's hand as he flipped it over. The troubled look in his eye vanished. "The... the Aeon."

The class zeroed in on a card depicting an angelic being rising into the clouds, her fantastic splay of feathers dyed by the vibrant sunset behind her. Long golden hair fell down her back and hung below her ankles. A flowing ribbon twirled around her body, and in her hands was a golden goblet of overflowing water.

"Spit it out already." Bakugo said. "What does it mean?"

"The Aeon Arcana is unique to the Thoth deck. There will be changing times ahead, filled with hope and most importantly, redemption. Rebirth, renewal, transformation." Tokoyami leaned back into the couch with a sigh of relief. "The reading I get is this: Joker began a new journey when he stepped into the USJ, performed fantastical feats both mundane and extraordinary. Then, the present. Kamino happened, and Joker is experiencing a Reversed Death of some sort, but that death eventually leads him to the Aeon. Joker's future... I sense a profound aura of hope within the despair."

"So... that's good?" Kirishima's eyes watered. "H-he'll be okay?"

"In due time. The Thoth deck drew me for that reason." Tokoyami firmly nodded. "For now, he is locked in a battle of significant change, but I believe that Kurusu will be alright. Perhaps we'll see him again after his transformation is complete."

Bakugo vaulted himself from the chair and stomped towards the stairs.

"Bakugo, we're not done! Don't you want to know who wins Room King!?" Ashido shouted.

"I don't give a shit anymore." He looked over his shoulder and stared at the Aeon card, his eyes unreadable. He shoved his hands in his pockets and turned his back on them "I'm going to bed!"

Iida cleared his throat, face pallid, "Perhaps... we should all finish up and call it a night. It's been a long day."

"I agree." Tokoyami said as he packed the cards away. "Giving such an extensive Tarot reading drains your energy."

"Okay, voting time!" Ashido said. "Does anybody have a piece of paper so we can keep track?"

In the end, Sato claimed the title of Room King because he bribed everyone with cupcakes and an absurd amount of chamomile tea.

Little bit of a shorter chapter, the next chapter will be a bit longer and have quite a lot of humor in it. I seriously can't wait ;)

Counterfeit Phantom

Chapter 66: Counterfeit Phantom

“Just peachy.” Sansa hacked as he pounded his own chest. Then, he looked down on himself. “What the- ARE YOU FREAKING KIDDING ME!?”

This story broke some more milestones!! Over 400k hits, 1500 bookmarks, and steadily on the way to 7500 kudos? That's beyond crazy to me, thank you guys so much!

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

FANART!

Kirisuma on Twitter!

Atsuhiro stepped over the sleeping forms scattered in the dark attic. Having memorized where everyone slept in this cramped space allowed him to move without stepping on everybody.

“Where are you going?”

He flailed his arms as he almost tripped over a blanket, but stabilized himself with a strangled huff.

“I’m going... shopping.” He whispered to Manami.

He sensed her blank stare through the darkness. “This early in the morning? The sun’s not even up.”

“Yes, well... the early bird catches the worm and all that.” Atsuhiro stepped over a snoring Shuichi and his feline friend.

“You know that’s not a good idea, right?” She said. “There’s still some suspicion towards you even after everything you’ve done for us. Sneaking out isn’t a good look.”

“I’m not going shopping for me . Look at him.” Atsuhiro stared towards Kurusu, the dim lighting outlined how he was curled on his side. His brow became scrunched and he snuggled his face into Morgana’s fur. The feline’s ears and feet twitched in a dream. “We can’t just sit on our hands and wait for him to feel better by himself, he needs some sort of motivation. I have some ideas on gifts that might improve that situation. Would I be able to call on you later so I can make sure I get everyone something that they would like?”

An awkward stillness permeated the attic as he felt her stare grilling into his skull. Another long moment passed before the feeling dissipated, and she sighed.

“... Okay, at least it sounds like you have a plan.”

“Trust me, this shopping spree will be worth it.”

“Fine.” She grumbled, but her voice took on a noticeably softer tone. “Just don’t be an idiot while you’re out, alright? We have enough of those in this group.”

“Duly noted. I have several potential venues to visit, so I might be back late tonight.”

He made it to his personal pack in the far corner without a whisper of noise. Atsuhiro swiped up all the blue marbles he might need for his little ‘shopping spree’. He nodded to Manami when he was finished gathering his things, who rolled her eyes and dove back under her blankets.

Nobody noticed Atsuhiro vacate the bar in the early hours of the morning.

Wisps of steam curled from bubbling curry pots and the mouthwatering sweetness of baked goods wafted through the kitchen. Risumi leaned against the flour speckled counter as she skimmed through the news article on her phone for the twentieth time that morning, feeling just as flabbergasted as when she and Ayumu read it an hour ago.

Silver Falcon's Verdict: Guilty!

After a long and arduous battle in court, Kyogi Munashisa, aka the former hero Silver Falcon, has been declared guilty by a jury of his peers. The charges include, but not limited to, several accounts of assault and battery, property damage, menacing charges both brandishing and stalking, among many others.

Brave victims of the former hero's tyranny testified under oath, and relived their terrifying experiences to judge and jury.

While his sentencing will be determined at a later date, these charges are usually followed by extensive fines and prison sentences-

A knot in Risumi's chest unfurled. She gently rubbed at the scar on her stomach, a sense of satisfaction curling up her spine. Silver Falcon's article became buried underneath a slew of speculation and other events related to Joker or the top ten who helped him. A few articles spoke about how Silver Falcon became Joker's first target. The man would eventually be buried underneath a sea of scorn, to be locked away and never see the light of day again, forgotten and left alone to rot. Nothing less than he deserves.

She couldn't help but feel vindicated.

Curious, Risumi scrolled to the comments on the bottom.

Ubomi48: Wait, when Silver Falcon got arrested for attacking a 'quirkless' person, do you guys think it was Joker?

Anon7538: @Ubomi48 omg what if it was??

Yumi382: With how high Japan's rate of getting guilty verdicts (currently at 99.7%), its not long before the rest of Joker's targets get their just desserts. I don't think even Kunikazu will be able to escape. Even if he miraculously doesn't get convicted, he wouldn't last long on the streets.

Cr3st: @Ubomi48 Silver Falcon got played LMAO

Anon8902: I tried congratulating Joker on his Spotlight, but it immediately got buried. It looks like he hasn't posted anything since before Kamino, I hope he's ok :(

Anon3472: All of this senseless drama could've been avoided if somebody just stood up to Silver Falcon :/ Why should Joker get praise for what anyone would be able to do in the first place? What a load of crap.

IcyDok28: @Anon3472 you.... you're not being serious, right? It's easy to point at someone else's life and think its so simple to take care of a problem, but it's an entirely different ball game if you're actually in that situation. I'd know. I've never dealt with Silver Falcon, but I've had my fair share of slimy heroes taking advantage of people and being helpless to do anything without severe consequences to myself or those I love.

Anon6201: @Anon3472 You know there's this cool little thing called Empathy, maybe you should try it instead of bashing people who needed help. The only one to give that was Joker. So yes, he does deserve some praise.

Risumi sighed as the comments devolved from there. She closed out of it and set her phone aside. It was just then that Ayumu walked into the kitchen, rubbing the sleep out of his eyes as he smiled at her.

"How did it go?" She asked as he kissed her on the cheek.

Ayumu sighed as he rested his forehead on hers. "It went about as well as you'd imagine."

"You've never spoken to an animal in their dreams before. Could you not do it?"

"It's not that." Ayumu stepped back and shook his head. "Actually, Mona's mind space is surprisingly close to a human's, all things considered. I even got to chat with Mercurius. He's nice enough for a mythical god."

In truth, Ayumu's quirk wasn't the mere dream walking quirk stated on his official file. He chose his targets at will, diving deep into their psyche whether or not the other person wanted him to. Controlled their dreams as easy as breathing. Mystical worlds. Floating islands. An ocean flowing over the skies filled with ancient monsters, such dream creatures that were so life like it's as if they stepped right out of reality. He created fantastical landscapes to escape from the world without leaving their home... or concoct the vilest of nightmares for their enemies.

Risumi became certain that Kunikazu often woke up in a cold sweat within his pathetic jail cell.

But the creative uses for her love's quirk didn't stop there. It was helpful for communicating long distance without leaving physical evidence behind. Sure, La Brava could conceal texts or emails like she did with Hitoshi's phone, but it was better to not leave a trail at all.

"Mona says the kid's not doing well. He's lost a lot of weight and doesn't have an appetite, doesn't want to do much else except sleep. It's bad."

"... What?"

"And whenever I try to visit his dreams to help him, I feel..." Ayumu looked down at his hands, and curled them into fists. His brow pinched together. "It's so dark and desolate. I hear strange voices I can't make out, and it's as if something keeps trying to take him away somewhere, but they fail every time they try. He doesn't seem to remember it though. It makes no sense to me."

"I... I see." She collapsed against the counter as her heart hurt. "I wish we could be there to help him. It must be worse than when he was brought to us after the raid."

"We'll do what we can to show him our support from here." He took her hand in his and massaged her palm with his thumb. "Besides, he wouldn't want us to be upset on our reopening day."

"It won't be the same without our boys here."

"I know."

"And the police officers stick their nose in everything."

"Hey, if they give us trouble then we ban them from our food. Simple as that."

Risumi huffed. "Prohibiting coffee would be a proper punishment."

“How ruthless.” He smirked as he kissed her on the forehead. At least that got a smile out of her. “They need their caffeine fix to function throughout the day.”

“Exactly.” She looked at the clock, her playfulness falling. “Let’s get everything to the front. It’ll be time to open soon.”

Ah, the rush of an early morning Japanese market was a unique atmosphere indeed. He’s encountered many bustling markets during his travels, but the excitement and intrigue was palpable on the breeze.

Atsuhiro flowed through the crowd vying for stalls of delicious food and hot drinks. He knew that the freshest of fish had already been auctioned off, their buyers eager to put their artistry to work. Watching a man slice up a fully grown tuna in less than a minute took serious skill. He stood in front of one such stall, and he smiled as other patrons around him clapped, dispersing to warm themselves from the cold ocean air.

With a quick word and a generous roll of yen, the chef passed him a container with the best slices of fatty tuna. He nodded his thanks and left the market behind. The lonely alley provided the perfect cover to use his quirk, thankful that it kept food as fresh as the second it was locked in the marble. He rolled the marble over his fingers before it vanished into his sleeve with a wave of his hand.

Morgana would be ecstatic.

A hill rolled at the end of a cemetery, a lonely wave surrounded by a sea of weather worn headstones. Toshinori grasped the hem of his shirt as he stared down at the small plaque in the ground. No name. No date of death or birth. Only a serial number. The recently disturbed patch of dirt hinted at the freshness of All For One’s tiny, unremarkable grave.

Toshinori took it upon himself to witness All For One's body being cremated, down to choosing an inconspicuous urn and an empty lot to bury the ashes himself. There was no funeral or ceremony, no flowers or farewells gifts, not that this villain deserved anything like that.

Sometimes he was convinced that this was a dream. Here he stood, free of that scar and the debilitating pain, in front of All For One's final resting place.

Tsukauchi stood beside him as a gust of wind tugged at their clothes. "Are you okay?"

"Not really. I thought I would be..." Toshinori frowned. "I didn't think I would live long enough to see this. I'll be fine... eventually."

Toshinori turned and walked down the hill.

Tsukauchi shuffled on his feet as he studied the grave a few moments more, before he followed his best friend.

"Aren't classes resuming soon?" Tsukauchi asked, smiling as Toshinori latched onto the change of subject. "I figured you would preparing at school rather than visiting the grave again. I'm glad you called, though. I still have a hard time believing everything myself."

"Yes, they will begin working on their signature moves first thing tomorrow. Aizawa wants to prepare them for their provisional license exam. I wanted to take care of a few things before classes started. Nezu understands." Toshinori stopped at the gate, glancing back at the hill in the distance. Tsukauchi waited patiently before they left the cemetery behind. "How about you? I'm sorry I haven't been around as much. Aizawa said you haven't accepted your promotion yet?"

"Don't be." Tsukauchi snorted, but his expression fell. "I... I'm not ready yet. Inu left behind an absolute mess, and there's still a lot of work to be done before it can return to normal. Not to mention..."

Toshinori's eyes softened as Tsukauchi sighed. "What is it?"

"There's just... so many loose ends. The League is still out there somewhere, we just don't know where. We need to go through evidence left behind by Joker's team during the Summer Camp, but nobody can crack La Brava's laptop or Joker's phone. Nezu pulled a lot of strings to get his knife, but there are other strange items and artifacts I don't even have a name for. Sansa thinks some of the items belong to the occult." Tsukauchi stopped in the middle of the sidewalk. "It just feels wrong to go through their stuff when the kid is still out there somewhere."

"I get it." Toshinori smiled. "But maybe you could find a way to help Joker if you understand him better. Something as personal as a laptop or a phone would be a great insight."

"Tell that to the people who are pulling their hair out trying to break into them... or the analysts too creeped out to work with eerie objects. And don't even get me started on the mountain of work going towards Kunikazu's eventual trial. In any case, I might accept the promotion after everything is over." Tsukauchi frowned as his phone pinged. He checked it, then sighed as he stuffed it back into his pocket. "That's Sansa. I should be going back."

"Wait." Toshinori latched onto Tsukauchi's arm. "You're overworking yourself Tsukauchi. Why don't you take a short break and have lunch with me, instead?"

"I don't know..."

Toshinori raised a brow. "Ill text Sansa myself and tell him I kidnapped you for coffee and decent food. He can't object then."

Tsukauchi snorted. "Alright, alright. What did you have in mind?" Tsukauchi frowned as Toshinori gave him an odd look. "What?"

"I was thinking the Blue Lotus."

Tsukauchi's eyes widened. "Are you sure that's a good idea?"

"Why not?" Toshinori looked down on himself. "I wasn't able to enjoy their food the first time I went there, but now... I might be able to."

"Toshinori..."

Another alien thing that Toshinori was getting used to. Breathing pain-free. Walking and exercising in the sunlight without having to stop, or worry if he always had a handkerchief on hand to wipe bloody lips. He had no quirk anymore, but he was finally free.

Having a steady, protein-based diet helped him gain a healthy weight. No longer was he just a living corpse of skin and bone. His face and body slowly filled in with muscle. Recovery Girl approved of his progress. He thought he would treat himself now and again, and the first place that popped up in his mind was the Blue Lotus. After everything that's happened... he felt a sudden obligation towards the Shinsou family for looking out for Joker. But whether or not they shunned or accepted him was yet to be determined.

They had every right to throw him out, should they choose to.

"Toshinori?"

He blinked, and looked at a concerned Tsukauchi. "Apologies, I was lost in thought."

"Don't worry. I'll go with you, I've been meaning to check in with them personally." Tsukauchi smiled sadly, "Let's be careful, okay? They aren't exactly happy about police and heroes hanging out on their doorstep."

Locating something for Spinner and Lady Stubbs proved to be difficult. Manami pointed him towards a boutique nestled within a mall. It took Atsuhiro a two hour train ride and another hour of exploration to locate it.

To say it was a one of a kind experience put it lightly. He practically stepped into another world. Hints of spice and sweetened smoke stained the air. The muted lighting added a touch of mystery. Rolls of fine silk in all colors decorated the walls, with finely tailored costumes and other articles of clothing displayed around the main floor. The ceiling was arched high overhead, enough to where no light touched the top. He compared it to a cocoon or an egg, as much as the thought unsettled him.

“Welcome to my parlor,” A woman draped in a lavish kimono, her face as beautiful and pale as the moon, stood behind the counter. Her raven dark hair was trussed up in a traditional Edo style, her golden accessories glittered like drops of sunlight. “How may I help you?”

“I’m looking for a gift.” He traipsed up to the counter with an easy smile. “I’ve gotten word that your store might have what I need.”

“A gift?” She tilted her head. “What kind of gift?”

“Friends of mine are trying to piece together a costume. Their colors are black, green, and yellow. I was thinking something simple, yet elegant. Another pop of color is so dearly needed.”

“Simple and elegant, but with a pop of color. I would suggest a scarf or a handkerchief. I have all sorts of greens and golds at my disposal.” She waved a milky-white hand, her kimono sleeve flowing with the movement. A sharp, metallic tap tap came from beneath the layers of kimono. “Feel free to peruse my wares on the right handed side. If you don’t see anything befitting your friend, then you can place a custom order.”

“Perfect!”

He turned on his heel and explored the parlor. Lustrous silk shone in the low lighting of this store. Their quality was assured and the colors were vibrant, almost jewel-like in appearance, but there was something about the silk that felt strange as he ran his fingers over it, organic in a way that didn't come from normal silkworms. He pushed it out of his mind as his eyes were drawn to a soft golden scarf.

Dark enough to not attract unwanted attention in the shadows, and not too bright to clash with Spinner's green scales. It complimented the gloves Joker bought for him. With a nod, he took the scarf and an additional handkerchief of the same color to the counter to pay for them.

The strange woman waved with a knowing smile on her lips.

He shrugged it off and packed the gifts away.

Three presents down, four to go.

Flowers and gifts overflowed the cafe's store front.

Toshinori marveled at the sheer quantity of items before they walked in through the door. The bell chimed, and the natural ambience went silent. Chills crept up Toshinori's spine as other patrons' eyes lit up in recognition, but more than a few became wary or on the verge of hostile.

Shinsou Risumi placed her hands on her hips as they walked to the counter, their footsteps louder than they should have been. Sweat broke out on the back of his neck as keen eyes followed them the whole way.

"Detective Tsukauchi." Her eyes flicked to Toshinori. "... All Might. How may I help you?"

"Please don't be so tense." Tsukauchi said with his signature smile. "We're only here for lunch."

"You don't say." She stared oddly at Tsukauchi, before her eyes scanned the cafe of tense patrons. She waved her hand, and the ambience returned, albeit stilted and tense. A majority of them watched from the corner of their eye. "I recommend today's house special. A new dish recently added to the menu: Curry Buns. It is... a recipe given to us by Kurusu. We have a spicy variety as well as a sweet one."

Toshinori shared a look with Tsukauchi. "I'll have one of each, and a cup of your best coffee."

"Feeling adventurous, All Might?" Risumi said as she wrote it down. "And you, detective?"

"I'll take the same, as well as two of your famous brownies." Tsukauchi said.

Risumi nodded. "Go on and take a seat, I'll get your order ready."

A red-haired woman glared at them as they found their booth. Toshinori tried to make himself seem as harmless as possible. Forcibly relaxing his shoulders, not bouncing his knee. He felt more vulnerable here than on the battle field.

"Don't let it get to you." Tsukauchi said as he calmly placed his hands on the table. "This cafe has protective customers. They're probably just nervous without Kurusu."

"I understand." Toshinori sulked in the booth. "Perhaps this was a bad idea after all."

"Don't say that." They looked up as an older woman approached, bearing the warmest smile of the entire cafe. "It was awfully brave of you to come here. I think Kurusu would be happy that you visited."

"Oh." Toshinori blinked. "Are you a long time patron, mrs....?"

"You can just call me Haru. Yes, I come here every single day for a cup of tea." Her eyes sparkled as she looked between them. "And... I want to thank you gentlemen."

The cafe went quiet, all ears tuned in.

“Thank us?” Tsukauchi asked. “For what?”

“For helping our boy, for giving him a real chance .” She put her hand on Tsukauchi’s shoulder. “You and Eraserhead did your best, I know in my heart that you just wanted what was best for a boy who was lost in the world.” She turned her eyes on Toshinori, and a spark of warmth flooded his heart. “And you, too. It takes someone of genuine character to admit your shortcomings, let alone doing it in front of the entire country while sticking up for a young man who dearly needed your support, and you gave it willingly. I cannot speak for everyone here, but I wanted you to know how much I appreciate your efforts.”

“Thank you.” Tsukauchi whispered. “We were just doing what we had to.”

Toshinori nodded. “I believe Kurusu will come back one day, and I wish to be at his side when he does.”

Haru beamed and patted both of their shoulders. “I’ll get out of your hair.” She looked over to Risumi, who stood with a tray in her arms. “Enjoy your meal.”

The sharp tang in the atmosphere melted with Haru’s honeyed words. Tension drained from the other patrons and a sense of calm settled into their bones. Risumi set out their dishes and tucked the tray under her arm.

“She’s right, you know.” Risumi directed a smile at Tsukauchi. “We know what you’ve done for us behind the scenes, detective. Without you, this cafe would never open again, and Ayumu and I would probably be thrown in a cell somewhere. Not to mention what could’ve happened to our son. You have our thanks.”

“How did you know?” Tsukauchi sat ramrod straight. “I’ve never mentioned anything about that.”

Risumi winked at him before she walked away.

“It’s no wonder Kurusu got along so well with them.” Toshinori chuckled. “They have the same level of mystery and know how to execute it when it suits them.”

“Tell me about it.” Tsukauchi shook his head and stared at their steaming dishes. “I hope Eraser won’t get mad at us for coming here without him.”

“It’ll be fine.” Toshinori snorted as he picked up one curry bun, the wrapper spreading warmth into his hands. “Perhaps I can request some treats to take back to the dorms. He can’t stay mad at us then.”

“True. Well, bon appétit.”

Toshinori took his first bite.

An explosion of flavor coated his palate. Cinnamon and hints of spice danced together on his tongue, with the natural sweetness of apple and brown sugar waltzing in the back. The crust, perfectly crisp while still fluffy in the middle, tied everything together in an epic symphony.

With how masterfully the flavors and textures worked alongside one another, it wasn’t something mashed together without a care in the world. Whoever made this truly put their heart and soul in it.

“Toshinori?” He looked at Tsukauchi, who had genuine worry in his eyes. “Are you okay?”

“Y-yes, I’m-” Toshinori blinked as his vision became blurry. He put the curry bun down and touched his face, surprised that his fingers came away wet. “I-I don’t know why I’m crying over a curry bun.”

Tsukauchi’s eyes softened. “When was the last time you had any real food? And I mean a really good, home cooked meal.”

“I don’t know. I could barely eat after my injury, and before then I...” Toshinori reached into the depths of his memory, but came out blank.

He wiped his eyes with a napkin and tried to calm his rabbiting heart. "I honestly don't remember the last time I had a home cooked meal, if ever. Nana and Gran tried, but they weren't the best of cooks..."

"Well," Tsukauchi murmured. "There's a first time for everything."

"R-right. It's another thing I have to thank that boy for."

Tsukauchi smiled, and they continued their meal, sipping on real coffee and enjoying their food without the worry of it coming back up in a bloody mess later. Genuine joy nestled within Toshinori's heart as they finished the curry buns and moved on to the brownies. He had forgotten what chocolate tasted like.

Toshinori truly felt full for the first time in years.

Tobita was the easiest one to shop for.

Manami pointed him to the man's favorite tea shop run by an older couple. The building, despite being the smack dab in the middle of Musutafu, looked homely. A quiet cottage with green grass and a garden. Quite unlike the cheap convenience store and other skyscrapers around it.

He stepped inside the tiny cafe and purchased a vast quantity of Golden Tips Imperial Black Tea. Enough for Tobita's tastes, at least. Who knows when they would be able to go out normally. While it slowly diminished like an untended bonfire, the attention zeroed on their group remained steady for the better part of the past month.

People wondered for what Joker would do next, demanded an encore while the actors were so helplessly exhausted. Personally, it sickened him. He adored the attention of the masses from time to time, but such vicious hunger from an eager audience could be merciless. An inexperienced thespian would be swallowed by it.

It made it more difficult for Tobita to test the new limits on his quirk. He suggested they search for an empty warehouse or something of the like, but until they found a suitable place he would be forced to lay low and keep that cuff on at all times.

Atsuhiro sighed as he walked out of the tea shop, looking up into the cloudless sky.

Now, for the hard part.

Kaito; the complete enigma. No matter how much Manami prodded him, he just shrugged her off and said he'd be happy if Kurusu was happy.

He had a plan for Joker. The angelic gun was still in his possession, along with another idea that floated around his noggin. But he didn't know if that particular gift would ease his pain, or make it worse. Finding somewhere that cleaned books, especially an old book with prominent blood stains, was a challenge in its own right, but he managed to find somewhere weeks ago that wouldn't ask questions when a hefty bribe was waved under their noses.

As for Manami...

It's not like he could ask without spoiling the surprise. She liked all manner of gadgets and technological gizmos. Perhaps another laptop or something similar?

Something similar...

Perhaps something that already existed?

"That's it!" He cried as a light bulb turned on in his mind.

He ignored the few people who turned to stare at him as he marched down the street. Atsuhiro didn't know what she would prefer normally, but that didn't mean there wasn't something out there that both she and Joker dearly missed.

Like certain items tucked away in evidence lockers right here in Musutafu.

Manami drummed her fingers on the side of her phone.

The afternoon stretched on into early evening, and she hadn't heard from Atsuhiro for the last few hours. The rest of the team kept themselves busy, doing small chores around the bar for Magne. They were thankful to have something to keep their hands busy.

Except for Akira and Morgana.

They didn't allow Akira to be on his feet for more than ten minutes at a time, but boredom seeped into every fiber of his being. He kept fidgeting or just staring blankly out the window. Currently, he was slumped over on his side, wrapping himself and Morgana in a cocoon of blankets. Hitoshi's laptop sat in front of them, playing a movie.

Morgana was engaged and made comments, or showed genuine surprise at a plot twist. Akira nodded and hummed at the right moments, but Akira's eyes were dull and unfocused. He stared at the screen, and yet his mind was far away from whatever movies Morgana picked out.

She jumped when her phone went off.

Akira blinked at her as she picked up.

"Hello?"

"Manami! I need a quick favor."

"You..." She sighed as she stood up and went down the stairs, both Morgana and Akira's eyes following her. She huffed at the bottom of the stairs. "Where have you been? You haven't checked in with me in hours! I was getting worried."

"You? Worrying about me? I'm flattered."

Manami's eyes twitched. If she didn't know better, she would think he and Akira were related just by their similar(horrible) taste in humor.

"What do you need?"

"Don't be mad, but I need you to hack into the cameras of the Musutafu police station. As much as I love being the center of attention, I don't think now would be the best choice to show off."

Her brain short circuited.

"Shopping." She ground through her teeth.

"Pardon?"

"You said you were just going shopping!"

"I was! And I did go shopping, but why waste this opportunity? I'm was Musutafu for that tea, so why not reclaim what was lost during the Summer Camp? Do you want to take the chance of them cracking Joker's phone or your old laptop? It's been quite some time and they might be close to a breakthrough."

"Well, no, but-" Manami sighed sharply through her nose. "You shouldn't have gone it alone! We're all part of a team, remember? We could've created a plan together to get everything back!"

"I... I meant no offence." He sighed, "I've never been part of a team, even when I was temporarily allied with the League. That video with Toga doesn't count. I'm used to doing everything by myself. I do apologize."

Dammit, now she felt guilty.

"It's fine." She pinched the bridge of her nose. "Is that why you haven't checked in?"

“Yep, I’ve been monitoring the station. Discreetly, of course. Detective Tsukauchi returned some hours ago and I wanted to wait until nighttime anyway. I have a plan, but I don’t want to risk it with cameras or any other security measures.”

“I understand.” She said as she turned towards the stairs. “I’ll message you when I’m done.”

“Much appreciated!”

“And we will be having a talk when you get back. Understand?”

“U-understood. Oh, and tell Magne and Tobita not to worry about dinner tonight. I’ll pickup something special after I visit the station. With any luck, it’s just the thing Akira needs to recover his appetite. Ciao!”

She scoffed as he hung up. She ran a hand down her face as she shoved her phone in her pocket.

“Merp.”

Manami looked down as Lady Stubbs pranced through the little hallway connecting the back storeroom to the kitchen, and rubbed on her leg.

“Tell me about it.” She muttered as she scratched the ghoulish cat’s head. “I wasn’t sure what to think of Mr. Compress at first, but he fits right in with our boys, don’t you think? Right down to being a lovable idiot. He almost feels like a natural part of our team, now. Almost.”

“Merp.”

“I know. We all just... need some time to accept things.”

“Merp...”

“We’re not going to let this get the better of us. Everything will get better, right? We just need to stick by our boys!”

“Merp!” Lady Stubbs puffed up her fur in some semblance of a feline salute.

Lady Stubbs dashed into the store room to resume her secret guarding duties. The back door in the storage room led outside into the intricate labyrinth of alleyways twisting through this city, and it was the cat’s job to make sure nobody broke in. A strange job for a cat to be sure, but then again, Lady Stubbs wasn’t a normal cat. Not like Morgana... but still unusual.

Manami chuckled, then went back upstairs.

Akira sat up, his blankets pooling around his waist. “What was that about?”

“O-oh, Compress is out shopping and he needed help with something. Could I borrow that laptop for a little bit?”

“Yeah, sure.” He said. “It’s yours anyway.”

“Technically Hitoshi’s.”

Akira frowned. “Right...”

A beat of silence passed between them. Morgana looked like he wanted to say something, but Akira laid down and pulled the covers over him, his back turned towards them.

“Do you need anything, Akira?” She whispered, her hands fidgeting together.

He flinched, as he did whenever they said his name now, “No.”

“Are you sure? You haven’t eaten anything today-”

“I said I’m fine.” She snapped her jaw shut as her heart lurched. Akira released a long, exhausted sigh, and turned his head to look at her from under the covers. “Sorry, I didn’t mean to sound so harsh. I’m just... so tired.”

“It’s okay.” She whispered. “I’ll check on you two in a bit?”

“... Okay.”

Morgana’s eyes watered as he stared at her, but he kept himself together as he took his spot under Akira’s arm. She couldn’t see, but she knew how Akira’s knuckles turned white as he held Morgana to his chest, black fur spilling between his fingers. As they did every single night.

She walked over and picked up her laptop, closing out of the movie before she nestled in the corner to start hacking. Manami hoped Atsuhiro’s plan worked.

She couldn’t bear seeing Akira in so much pain.

Tsukauchi paced around his office.

He returned to the station after lunch with Toshinori, but any sense of calm eroded away as he became swamped in work. He searched through files and reports and so so many maps, but his eyes occasionally went to the police commissioner badge sitting at the end of his desk. A slight nudge from Tsuragamae.

Although the chief insisted that he accept whenever he was ready, the thought of him being the commissioner distracted him. Not to mention the detailed map that hung on the cork board behind his desk, dotted with pins all interconnected with string. The Blue Lotus marked the center. They swept through the surrounding area, but there was no sign of Joker or his teammates.

There was a possibility they weren’t even in Musutafu anymore.

Tsukauchi scrubbed at his eyes.

He trusted Nezu. The rat was too smart for his own good, so if he predicted that Joker would return and eventually make his way to U.A., then Tsukauchi had no doubts. But it didn't mean that he didn't worry for the kid. It's been over a month of radio silence since the Kamino Disaster. Tsukauchi couldn't even imagine what trauma this teenage boy shouldered at this very moment.

There was a knock on the door, and Tsukauchi pulled himself together with a sigh. "Come in."

Sansa stepped inside. Alarms blared in Tsukauchi's head when he took in Sansa's bug-eyed look.

"We have a problem." Sansa said.

"Is it Joker?" Tsukauchi asked, unable to keep the hopeful lilt out of his voice.

"No... at least I don't think so." Sansa said, grimacing. "The techies wanted to take another crack at Joker's phone before they called it a night and, well.... you better come see for yourself."

A renewed sense of fatigue pressed down on Tsukauchi like a mountain, but he followed Sansa through the station. Whispers from other officers filtered through the hallways. A small group hung around the door to the evidence lockers, and they cleared the way when Tsukauchi came through.

Most of the lockers were left undisturbed, except for one. Tsukauchi rushed to it, dread washing through him as everything was gone, save for a single blue marble rolling back and forth in the corner.

"Do we have any camera feed?" Tsukauchi asked as he picked up the blue marble, a sense of strange familiarity came over him.

"Nope." Sansa said as he crossed his arms and glared at the marble. "Take one guess why."

"Cameras were hacked?"

"Yep."

“It was most likely La Brava. Then we can guess that this was the work of-”

Sansa shrieked as the marble exploded. Clouds of dust drowned the evidence room. Tsukauchi became blinded as he tried to feel his way out. A hand latched onto his arm and dragged him into the hallway.

“Are you two okay!?” An officer shouted.

“Just peachy.” Sansa hacked as he pounded his own chest. Then, he looked down on himself. “What the- ARE YOU FREAKING KIDDING ME!?”

“What’s wrong?” Tsukauchi said as he blinked rapidly to regain his vision. He didn’t hurt anywhere, so he doubted anybody sustained injuries, but his eyes widened as he looked down at his stained clothes. “Glitter?”

“Yes, glitter!” Sansa threw his arms up. “I’m still finding glitter around the station from his live interview months ago, now this!? It’ll take years to fully get rid of this stuff! YEARS!! What a mess!!”

Tsukauchi’s soul left his body. It was everywhere . Sparkling silver and red powder floated through the air, stained the hallway, the vents, the walls, which glimmered like fresh snowfall on a winter’s morning.

“Sansa.”

“What ?”

“You have something on your ear.”

Sansa blinked. He reached around his ears and pulled a slip of paper stuck in his fur. He glared as he read it aloud.

““Dear Detective, I want to extend my thanks for keeping our items safe, but it’s time everything was returned to its rightful owners. From, a mutual friend.””

“Any name?” Tsukauchi asked as he wiped himself down, but it only made the glitter spread further. The rest of his officers kept a healthy distance away, lest they suffer the sparkly wrath alongside them.

“Nope.”

“Wait... testimony from the U.A. kids stated that Bakugo and Tokoyami were trapped in blue marbles, a quirk belonging to Mr. Compress. He could be the one who ambushed us when we had La Brava and Gentle Criminal.”

“You really think so?”

“I’m positive. We actually had him on file before the Kamino Raid, but he wasn’t there. If his quirk can trap live people in it...”

“Then, yeah. That would match what you and those kids went through.”

Sansa pointed at the note. “But it says from a ‘mutual friend.’ Would that mean Mr. Compress switched sides and started working with Joker and his crew?”

“It’s possible. But why would he switch sides all of a sudden?”

Sansa shrugged. “That’s a question we have no answer for right now.”

“You’re right. In any case,” Tsukauchi said as he felt an impending headache. “We have to report this to the chief and Nezu.”

Nezu and Aizawa reached the station first. Nezu took one look at Tsukauchi covered head to toe and glitter, laughing so hard that he fell off of Aizawa’s shoulder and rolled around on the floor. His howling cackles echoed through the hallways for the rest of the night.

Risumi busied herself by cleaning the empty cafe.

Tables were wiped, and a mountain of dishes piled up on the counter. She put her hands on her hips and stared out the window. She had yet to sort through today's 'gifts' left by patrons. Risumi looked over her shoulder and opened her mouth to call on Akira out of habit, but there was nobody there. Her heart squeezed.

Their first day was eventful. The customers were many and the regulars offered her words of comfort and support. But something was amiss. Akira. How he had flowed through the cafe, taking care of customers with that saccharine smile. How easy it was to work alongside him, how he played to her strengths and covered weaknesses.

She had forgotten how much energy it took to run the front by herself, let alone how the cafe earned national attention. Risumi lifted her glasses and wiped at her eyes. She would not cry now. She refused to cry.

Risumi took a breath and rolled up her sleeves. She had too much work to-

"Risumi?" She turned to Ayumu, who poked his head out of the kitchen door.

"What's wrong?"

"Did you put the leftovers somewhere?"

"I've been out here cleaning." She frowned at his confusion. "Why? I thought you were taking care of it."

"No. I was in the office double checking our shipments for next week. Just to be sure nobody tampers with them again."

They stared at one another for a moment, before they dove inside the kitchen together. It was like Ayumu said. Today's leftovers disappeared. At least two pots of curry, baked goods of all sorts, and a few bags of coffee.

“You don’t think somebody broke in?” Risumi asked as she walked around the kitchen.

“It seems like it.” Ayumu muttered as he checked over the ovens and other appliances. “At least they didn’t break anything. Should we report it to the heroes outside? I think its Mt. Lady and Kamui Woods patrolling tonight.”

“No... wait.” She plucked a blue marble from the same shelf that held their recipe books, the marble itself sat in front of Akira’s notebook. “Is this what I think it is?”

Ayumu crossed his arms. “But why would he-”

The marble snapped. Risumi flinched as items landed in her palm. A thick roll of yen and a tiny Joker mask pin. A slip of paper floated down to the floor as light as a feather.

Ayumu picked it up and read aloud, “To the Shinsou family: Apologies for barging in unannounced and stealing the results of your hard work, but we both know how much a growing young man needs to eat. I do hope I left enough to pay for it all. From: A mutual comrade in arms.” Ayumu snorted as he went to the stove and turned on the burner. “Compress is as flamboyant as Joker. How much did he leave?”

Risumi counted the bills as Ayumu turned the note to ash. “Enough to pay for all of it twice over, and then some.”

“And the pin?”

Risumi smirked as she put it on her apron. “People have left enough Joker merch on our doorstep. What’s one more tiny, inconspicuous little pin?”

Ayumu chuckled and turned off the stove. "Oh no, the note from the mysterious stranger seems to have burnt up, and our left overs won't go to waste. We shouldn't bother the heroes with something so small."

"Exactly." She smirked at her husband. "Oh, and Ayumu?"

"Y-yeah?"

"I believe its your turn to do dishes. They're already piled on the counters up front."

"Has it been one month already?" He wilted as her smirk widened. "Y-yes ma'am."

She chuckled, the sound sent bubbles of joy through his heart. Risumi stepped up and kissed him on the cheek.

"I'll double and triple check our shipments, just to be sure."

Ayumu nodded as she slinked off to the office.

Atsuhiro hummed a tune as he slipped in the backdoor of Magne's bar.

"Merp!"

He cut off the screech in his throat as he jumped back. Lady Stubb's eyes were like bright lamp lights in the dark room. He put a hand over his heart.

"Geez, give a gentleman some warning!"

"Merp."

"Hey, don't look at me like that. My shopping trip was successful!"

The cat seemed to roll her eyes as she hopped down from a pile of boxes. He followed her through the door, where Magne awaited in the hallway, leaning against the wall.

“Magne-”

“It’s okay.” Magne waved a hand. “I already closed the bar for the night. You owe me, mister.”

Atsuhiro smirked. “It’s a Sunday night, I doubt you would’ve gotten much business.”

“How dare you.” Magne matched his playfulness, but gestured towards the stairs. “Everyone else is already upstairs.”

“Why don’t you join us?”

Magne flinched. A simple flicker of emotion before she turned stoic. She stood fully from the wall and turned her back on him.

“Nah, you go ahead. I still need to clean some before tomorrow.”

Atsuhiro sighed as she walked away.

“Merp?”

Atsuhiro shrugged as the cat tilted her head, and they made their way upstairs. He ducked underneath that wooden beam with a practiced motion, and stood before the group. Manami stared at him with puffed cheeks, Shuichi and Tobita sat next to each other with cups of tea.

“I told them what you did.” She said.

“R-right. I can explain, but first... how about we set up for dinner?” Atsuhiro said. “I have enough food for a feast!”

“Sweet!” Shuichi grinned. “I heard you got us presents too?”

“You’ll have to wait until after dinner.” Atsuhiro scolded.

“Aw man...”

“I’ll go ahead and set everything up.” Tobita said as he stood.

“Thank you. Magne wanted to clean the bar, so we’ll have to eat up here.” Atsuhiro set a handful of blue marbles on the floor. The others gasped when he snapped his fingers, and a delectable banquet from the Blue Lotus was unveiled before their eyes. “Where’s Kurusu and Morgana?”

They stiffened and exchanged hasty glances. Shuichi pointed his thumb towards the window, where a cool breeze filtered through the open slit.

“Ah, I see.”

“Why don’t you go speak to them?” Tobita said with a smile.

“Me ?”

“Are you sure?” Manami asked as she fidgeted. “Akira isn’t.... in the best mood.”

“Perhaps some words of encouragement are needed.” Tobita nodded. “Who knows. You two are alike in so many ways, it might help him more if they came from you.”

“I’m still new to the group, and I...” He cleared his throat, “It’s partially my fault for the state he’s in. After everything, I figured I would be intruding.”

“A new perspective might be just what he needs.” Atsuhiro never noticed Kaito sitting in the back corner, looking thoughtfully at that silver band. What, were his sense getting rusty or something? “I’m sure he’s tired of hearing the same words from all of us.”

“It’s worth a shot.” Manami looked at the array of dishes on the floor. “Besides, I think... he would appreciate what you did today. Maybe a good meal with friends would help him feel better.”

“So I’m not in trouble?” He asked, hopeful.

“Oh, I never said that.” She deadpanned. “We’re still having that little chat later.”

Tobita and Shuichi chuckled as he sulked. He shook himself out of it and approached the window. The sill groaned as he slid it open and stepped out onto the rooftop, light from the attic spilling out into the blackness. It took his eyes a moment to adjust before he saw them.

Morgana’s head snapped towards his direction as Atsuhiro’s footsteps crunched over gravel. The feline sat beside Kurusu, who hugged his knees to his chest as he stared out into the boisterous city. The kid didn’t move when Atsuhiro approached, though Morgana watched him carefully.

“May I sit?” Atsuhiro asked.

Kurusu shuffled, his eyes flicking to meet Atsuhiro’s for a moment before they darted back to the city. “Do what you want.”

Atsuhiro sat half an arm’s length away, with Morgana in between them. Morgana’s eyes were unreadable as he curled his tail around himself and waited in silence.

“Beautiful night, isn’t it?” Atsuhiro said.

“I guess.” Kurusu muttered.

The boy flinched when a police siren echoed somewhere in the city, his knuckles turned bone white as his nails dug into his sleeve. He stared into the city with longing in his eyes. Atsuhiro and Morgana exchanged glances as the siren fell off into the distance. Kurusu curled into himself.

Guilt and remorse stewed in the boy's soul. Anybody could see that. Maybe a touch of home sickness, too. Atsuhiro knew that feeling all too well.

"Do you know what two of my favorite phrases are?" Atsuhiro asked. Kurusu didn't move as Atsuhiro looked out into the city. "'Que Sera, Sera' and 'C'est La Vie'."

Kurusu pulled his head up. "What?"

"They mean 'What will be, will be,' and 'Such is life,' respectively." Atsuhiro leaned back on his hands and stared up at the heavens. "The paths we take in life can be as numerous as the stars in the sky, but that doesn't mean you always retain control. Life just... happens, and it is up to us on what to do when something inevitably goes wrong."

Kurusu's lips pursed.

"I know how you feel about All For One's death." Atsuhiro said before he could stop himself. The boy flinched and his expression fell into a muted despair, a dam of emotion only held back by sheer will.

"He didn't just die. I-I... I killed him."

"I know, and so does the rest of the world. All Might took responsibility for it, but you still feel guilty that the blow was done by your hand." Morgana glared at Atsuhiro as a sharp breeze blew across the rooftop. He continued regardless. "I could tell you that All For One was the bogeyman who controlled the underground for over 200 years, wax poetic about how he was beyond cruel and caused hundreds of thousands of casualties over those years. I would even go so far to say that his death saved us from a future where millions more might suffer under his reign. A prison like Tartarus would never hold him for long."

"What are you getting at?" Kurusu muttered. "Are you just mocking me?"

“Of course not.” Atsuhiro absorbed the pain and suffering lingering beneath faded silver. “I know that all of these words don’t mean much to you. You feel as if you have failed, that you have committed a grave sin for which there is no forgiveness. Am I correct?”

“Just get to the point.”

“What I’m saying...” Atsuhiro placed a careful hand on the boy’s shoulder. Kurusu went rigid, his eyes widened at the warm hand on his shoulder, at the kindness in Atsuhiro’s eyes. “Is that life happens, and you need to learn to forgive yourself and move on.”

Kurusu shook his head and clutched at his chest. “How could I ever forgive myself after what I... what I let Sraosha do? Taking a life is against everything we ever worked for!”

“Akira...” Morgana whispered.

“The fact that you feel so guilty is proof that you’re still a good person.” Atsuhiro tightened his grip on the boy’s shaking shoulder. “What happened was unfortunate, but far beyond your control. Steel your resolve, learn from what happened and do better in the future. Learn to accept the forgiveness that you so righteously deserve, because if anybody in this wretched world deserves such forgiveness, it is you.”

His words struck Kurusu. He blinked rapidly to stem the flow of tears, to swallow back the emotions trying to claw themselves free. His efforts were futile.

That was it. The straw that broke the camel’s back. The agony that this boy, this child with the weight of a world on his shoulders, needed to finally break down. Atsuhiro held a firm grip and Morgana huddled against the boy’s side as he let the tears fall. Atsuhiro let go to reach inside his pocket. Kurusu gave him an odd look, but he accepted the teal handkerchief from Atsuhiro.

Time passed strangely as Kurusu allowed himself to cry. Whether it was minutes or hours shared upon that rooftop, Atsuhiro wouldn't know, but Kurusu wiped his eyes and sniffled as he calmed down. Then, silence. The calmed wind carried the sounds of the streets below, but they didn't seem to notice. No longer did the lull in Kurusu's actions contain barbed wire and glass shards.

The boy's posture softened, comfortable, as did the silence that spread between them.

"Thank you." Kurusu spoke first, clutching onto the damp handkerchief for dear life. "I think I needed that."

"It was a long time coming." Morgana said as he rubbed against Kurusu. "Do you feel a little better?"

"Yeah, I feel... lighter?" Kurusu said.

"A good cry is something we all need every once in a while." Atsuhiro smiled as he squeezed the boy's shoulder one last time before his hand dropped. "I have something to help ease your burden. Well, many some things, but I think you need this one first."

New interest simmered in Kurusu's damp eyes.

Atsuhiro waved his fingers with a dramatic flourish. A blue marble appeared in his right hand, held between his pointer and middle finger. He rolled it over his knuckles and flipped his palm. It disappeared. Morgana stared at him, unimpressed.

"Sorry, old habit. Perhaps I can teach you the finer nuances of slight of hand sometime." Atsuhiro said as he rolled his left palm towards the sky. The marble reappeared. The inky blackness and the city lights reflected within the marble, almost as if it contained the entire city. He held it out for Kurusu. "Go on. Take it."

Kurusu uncurled himself as he reached over and grabbed it, his legs swinging over the edge. With a snap, the marble popped out of existence. Kurusu jumped as a book fell in his lap. Thankfully, all of the pages could be saved, but the cover of the book had to be completely replaced since it soaked in most of his blood. It's a shame, that old cover was something Atsuhiro grew fond of over many years, but the sleek black cover and flowing gold writing on the front and spine was something to behold.

Kurusu put down the handkerchief and held the book in both hands, his brow falling. Panic jolted through Atsuhiro. He should've asked Manami if Kurusu could read any other languages. Atsuhiro was about to say the book's name out loud, but there was no need to worry.

"Arsene Lupin, Gentleman Burglar by Maurice Leblanc." Kurusu said, his voice quaking as he traced a finger over the word Leblanc .

Morgana blinked. "When did you learn to read that? Usually Lady Ann would have to translate these sorts of things for us."

Kurusu went stone still.

Morgana's fur bristled and he looked down in shame.

"That book has been passed down through my family for several generations. It was one of the original copies from Leblanc himself." Atsuhiro said before the air soured. "And now, I'm giving it to you."

"Me?" Kurusu's eyes widened as he gaped at Atsuhiro. "But this is something you've had for-"

"Pretty much my entire life." Atsuhiro's expression turned thoughtful as he threaded his fingers together. "It is an important heirloom, but I believe you deserve it more than I ever did. After all, Arsene himself chose you . I still think about our first meeting in the Yaoyorozu manor, and my awe for Arsene has more than doubled since then. Well, after I recovered from the thrashing he gave me, of course."

“But...” Kurusu’s shook his head. “Arsene is gone. All of them are gone .”

“I don’t think so.” A small smile pulled at Atsuhiro’s lips as Kurusu stared at him. “Yes, they may not heed your call right now, but if I had to take a guess at how your power works, then I would say your bond with them runs deeper than any ‘quirk’. Blood flows thicker than water, but what you have flows stronger than any mortal flesh ever could. I’ve sensed something special about you ever since we first met.”

The tears renewed in the kid’s eyes. Morgana looked torn as he frantically looked back and forth.

Now, for the real test. Atsuhiro stared at the book in Kurusu’s hands.

“I have a question. Do you remember where Arsene Lupin originates from?”

Morgana squinted at Atsuhiro, but Kurusu nodded.

“That’s easy.” Kurusu replied as if nothing were amiss. Morgana’s head snapped the opposite direction so fast that Atsuhiro was surprised he didn’t get a neck cramp. “His story takes place in France.”

“More than just France, my dear boy. His tales span multiple countries and continents, he rode on trains and boats alike, he takes on different identities as easy as breathing. He was fluent in a number of languages and charmed many a fine lady. Now, doesn’t this sound familiar?”

Kurusu glared at him, but it wasn’t heated.

A coil of satisfaction curled around Atsuhiro’s heart. The boy was slowly coming out of his shell, and he hadn’t yet caught on despite Morgana’s jaw falling to the floor.

"But... there is one section of the story that may interest you. It correlates to your current predicament. May I?" Atsuhiro held out his hand. Kurusu hesitated, but handed the book over. He flipped it open to a familiar chapter he knew by heart. He placed the book in Kurusu's hands and pointed at a particular page. "Read this passage."

Kurusu's eyes flicked over the words with ease, slowly widening.

"Even the great Arsene Lupin needed a break after all of his feats. To rest and recover, to regain his true identity." Atsuhiro placed a careful hand on Kurusu's shoulder once more. "Reclaim your true self. Kurusu Akira is a fine name, don't get me wrong, but I think it's time you stopped lying to yourself and use your real name. It might be just as important as forgiving yourself."

Ice flowed through Kurusu's eyes. "How did you know I was using a fake name?"

"Arsene is a man of many faces and names. I expected no different from you." Atsuhiro shrugged. "I recognize the shame in your eyes whenever we call you Akira or Kurusu now."

"Arsene is gone for good. He evolved into Satanael at Kamino."

"I don't believe that for a moment. Even so, he would still be a part of Satanael, no?" Atsuhiro would have his own little crisis at discussing a biblical figure appearing in the flesh later. "He's still in there somewhere, along with the rest of your comrades."

Kurusu looked away, his voice like frail glass. "How can you be so sure?"

Atsuhiro chuckled. That earned another glare from the boy, but Atsuhiro shrugged.

"Where did you learn to read English so well? Morgana seems surprised you could read it at all. Let alone..." Atsuhiro leaned closer to the boy and whispered. "You haven't noticed how we've been speaking French for the past several minutes ."

Kurusu jolted. He stared down at Morgana, mouth as agape as his partner's. "Were we....?"

"Yeah!" Morgana hopped up to all fours and put his front paws on Kurusu's knee. "I couldn't understand what you were saying! Where did you learn to speak like that!? Were you holding out on me the whole time!?"

"Of course not! I would never-" The panic vacated the boy's body as he took in Morgana's playful smirk. "I didn't know I could do that..."

"Did you know?" Morgana asked as he looked at Atsuhiro.

"Nope." Atsuhiro shook his head. "It was simply an educated guess. But my point stands. Your comrades might not be here physically, but I believe they're still with you, buried deep and just waiting for the right moment to return." Atsuhiro stood and brushed gravel off his pants. "Now, I believe the others might worry if we're out here much longer. Are you ready to go back inside?"

Morgana hopped onto Kurusu's shoulder as he gathered the book and handkerchief in one arm and latched onto Atsuhiro's hand with the other. He pulled the boy to his feet. Atsuhiro held on while Kurusu steadied himself, for he was scarily thin and they were on the edge of a rooftop.

"Wait, there's one thing I want to ask." Kurusu said before Atsuhiro could pull away.

"Oh?"

The boy stared down at the book, then looked at Atsuhiro with a raised brow. "You said this was an heirloom, right?"

"... Yes."

“How did it become an heirloom when the author was from France?”

Atsuhiro chuckled. “Perhaps, in times long past, Arsene Lupin took on the moniker Maurice Leblanc to write his adventures down, and perhaps... my ancestral name just happens to be Lupin.”

Kurusu’s paleness gained another level. “Y-you... you’re...”

Atsuhiro squeezed Kurusu’s hand before he pulled away and turned towards the window. “Come now, there are yet other surprises in store for tonight and we don’t want the food to get cold. Why do you think I was gone for so long? This little group isn’t easy to shop for!”

Kurusu and Morgana exchanged flabbergasted glances before they followed. They trailed back inside and were greeted with a delicious spread of curry dishes and desserts laid out on a blanket, with cushions surrounding it.

“There you are!!” Shuichi grinned from his cushion. “We were just about to come check on you.”

“Sorry.” Atsuhiro said as he sank into the seat closest to the window. “Our little chat went on longer than anticipated.”

“Did you go to the Blue Lotus, too?” Kurusu asked as familiar scents washed through the attic.

“One of many stops. Don’t worry, I left them a hefty tip.” Atsuhiro waved a hand as the others smiled at Kurusu.

“Do you want to try eating something, Akira?” Manami asked. “Y-you don’t have to if you’re not feeling up for it!”

“I...” Kurusu scanned the group, then stared at the plates of steaming food. He sat between Atsuhiro and Kaito, then put the book and handkerchief aside. “Sure.”

The attic was so tiny, but they were comfortable despite everyone rubbing elbows. Dishes clattered as food was passed around.

Manami, Kaito, and the others froze when Kurusu grabbed one of the curry buns and took a bite. Nothing more than a small mouthful, but it was a start. His first bite of real food in weeks. His eyes gained the first lukewarm embers of life.

Kurusu looked up at the silence. He swallowed as he took in everyone's attention. "What?"

"N-nothing!" Manami chuckled as her eyes watered. "I-It's nothing! Would you like some coffee?"

Kurusu blinked. "Sure?"

Atsuhiro caught Kaito's subtle nod of thanks and the meal progressed smoothly.

Shuichi's boisterous laughter, Morgana's banter, how Kaito discreetly pushed more food towards Kurusu. The obvious love in Manami's eyes, and Tobita's quiet and gentle demeanor. Atsuhiro absorbed everything, and in turn, studied how it affected the boy sitting beside him.

Once Kurusu finished eating, no more than half a bun and only a few spoonfuls of curry, Atsuhiro grabbed Kurusu's wrist and placed two marbles in his palm.

"Tsukauchi might've sent his regards, but I didn't stop long enough to chat with him."

"What are you talking about?" Kurusu asked.

Atsuhiro snapped. The angelic gun and the boy's phone popped into existence. Morgana gasped. Kurusu held the items in each hand. His breath left trembling as he put the gun down and unlocked his phone. He ran his fingers over the screen as it lit up.

"Thank you."

Atsuhiro blinked. He's never recieved such heartfelt thanks before today. He cleared his throat before the lump could choke him.

“Yes, well... I retrieved a majority of your equipment, but I couldn't get everything. Your knife was missing.”

“It's alright. Morgana told me it was in a safe place.” Kurusu's hand tightened over the phone as he looked at Atsuhiro. “But it means a lot that you got this much.”

Atsuhiro winked as he handed out the other prizes.

Morgana screeched in joy at the platter of fresh fatty tuna.

Lady Stubbs purred like a motorboat when Shuichi tied the handkerchief around her neck, then donned his own golden scarf with pride.

Tobita made enough tea for everyone, the fragrance and freshness invigorating after a heavier meal.

Manami typed away on both computers.

Morgana lazily sprawled out over Kurusu's lap, his belly bulging with tuna.

True to Kaito's word, he was happy to see everyone else marvel over their gifts.

Kurusu slowly ran his hand over Morgana as the feline dozed. His other hand held open his new book, and he read with rapt attention, though occasionally his eyes flicked to the phone resting on his knee. Atsuhiro couldn't read the strange expression on Kurusu's face, for he received no messages on it. In fact, he seemed hesitant to open the message app at all.

When it was clear that everyone finished eating, Atsuhiro offered to put away the food and wash dishes. Kaito helped. There were still some cinnamon rolls left over, so he saved them for Magne. He knew she liked them.

“Thanks for that, by the way. Whatever you two talked about worked wonders.” Kaito said after they took the stacks of dishes down to the kitchen. “It’s the first time he’s been so lively since...”

“You don’t have to say it.” Atsuhiro focused on the steam from the tap, and the sprouting bubbles bobbing over the water. “I’m glad I could do... something to start repaying my debt to him. I probably haven’t scratched the surface, though.”

“You shouldn’t be so hard on yourself.” Kaito said as he rolled up his sleeves. “He wouldn’t want that.”

The lull in conversation stayed until a third of the dishes were done.

“You should get some rest.” Kaito suddenly said. “I got it covered.”

“Are you sure?” Atsuhiro raised a brow. “There’s still a lot left, and we all need our beauty sleep.”

“I’m not the one who needs sleep.” Kaito snorted as he held up the plate. “Besides, this is the third dish that’s still dirty.”

“Oh. Sorry.”

“It’s fine, I can finish up. I could use something to keep my hands busy.” Kaito flexed the wrist with the quirk suppressant. “Even with this thing on, I don’t need to sleep.”

“Wait, but you...” Atsuhiro tilted his head. “Have you spent every night laying awake while the rest of us are asleep?”

“Mostly. I kept an eye on Akira. He’s lost everything... again.” Kaito stared at his own reflection barely visible in the plate. “I was afraid he would try to sneak out and do something stupid, and not the good-natured sort of stupid he’s pulled off before, if you catch my drift.”

Dread slithered down Atsuhiro's spine at the implication. "I... I see."

"In any case, you youngsters are the ones who need more sleep." Kaito snorted as he turned towards the dishes. "Go on. You've been out all day and look dead on your feet."

Atsuhiro nodded and dried his hands. He was on his way upstairs when something occurred to him. He stopped and scratched his head.

"You youngsters?" Atsuhiro muttered, "But I'm a few years older than him, and so is Tobita..."

Kaito remained the enigma. His youthful look betrayed his antediluvian mannerisms; like how often Kaito seemed to think everyone acted like small children most of the time, like he was too old to join in their antics. Sometimes he offered sound advice as if he's had decades of life experience. Shuichi slipped and called him 'grandpa' once.

At first Atsuhiro thought it was some inside joke he wasn't privy too, but now he wondered if it was related to Kaito's quirk. Kaito never talked about his quirk, but the others seemed to know what it was and why he kept that suppressant on at all times. Atsuhiro wouldn't ask.

He shrugged and continued upstairs, despite feeling like he just got playfully scolded by an elder.

I wonder if there are any of my long time readers who would recognize Arachne from my other fic? Both she and Kaito are tied for my favorite OCs to write, and I've always wanted to sneak her into DTESH somehow without directly involving her in the plot.

UPDATE SCHEDULE. I did decide to add a week between one of the upcoming chapters, because while I do feel a little better compared to a few chapters ago, there's still some lingering brain fog that has been making it difficult to write. Despite this, I'm still very excited for all of the twists and turns that are coming soon ;) We're still in a cool off period of the story, but it won't be too much longer before things kick off again.

Sweatshop - March 5th

Run, Run, Run! - March 26th

You Are Stronger - April 9th

Mementos(Upper Layer) - April 23rd

Sweatshop

Chapter 67: Sweatshop

“Oh yeah?” Vlad King raised a brow at him. “And how did he do with your training, Aizawa? You’re going to be the one training him the most.”

Aizawa deadpanned. “I’m keeping the details to myself.”

“Shouta, you’re no fun!!” Mic yelled.

This chapter covers several days worth of events.

I'm also quite surprised by how many people like Arachne last chapter! I don't know if she'll get anymore scenes in this story, but we shall see :D

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

Hawks floated above the city, in the darkness between rivers of golden light and the sea of twinkling diamonds. Wind swept through his hair and rustled pleasantly underneath his outstretched wings. He took a deep breath, savoring the familiarity of a light smog and the tinge of an approaching rainstorm that would wash it away, if for a few hours.

Hawks relished these moments.

Kept them hidden. Nestled them away from the rest of the world so that he could have something that was just his. Get lost within them to find peace on a particularly bad day when Kunikazu’s temper flared and his insides were flambeed. Not that he had to worry about that anymore, but he didn't think he'd ever break this habit. It was the only thing that kept him sane all these years.

Unfortunately, this little bubble of joy had to be popped. He expected the trill from his comm and the familiar voices pulling him back into reality.

"They did what with glitter!?" Miruko howled with laughter. "Oh my god, they'll never get rid of it at this rate!"

"Yeah, I know." Ryukyu's voice crackled, and Hawks felt the weight like stones tied to his wings. "No wonder Tsukauchi wants to keep this under lock and key. It's a small miracle that there's no articles on it, let alone how that police station wouldn't ever live it down with the public."

"Let's hope it stays that way." Hawks veered towards a skyscraper and perched on the corner like a gargoyle, his wings splayed in a fiery fan. "Someone breaking in and taking Joker's things wouldn't look good for any of us."

Miruko grumbled.

"Tsukauchi's theory on the culprit is more surprising." Best Jeanist stated.

"Jeanist!" Miruko gasped. "Buddy! Pal! Compadre! Where have you been!?"

"I apologize for my absence. I needed some time to recover after Kamino, but I'm feeling better now."

"Are you certain you should get back to work so soon? You don't sound like you've fully recovered." Gang Orca said. "We won't blame you for needing more time away."

"It's fine. I admit that I felt crushing guilt after Joker... died. I almost passed out from relief when I heard you say he was alive, Hawks."

“So you did watch our interview.”

“Of course I did. I’m sorry I couldn’t be of any help with that.”

“Hey, don’t worry about it!!” Miruko said. “We totally had your back 100%!”

“Agreed.” Ryukyu added.

“I’m glad you’re hanging in there Jeanist.” Hawks said as he shuffled his feathers into a more comfortable position. “What’s your take on this little break-in? Have you figured something out?”

“Maybe. This is only a theory, but it makes sense to me. Have any of you read reports from the Summer Camp incident?”

“You’re gonna have to be more specific.” Hawks chirped. “There was a lot to take in from that.”

“Fair enough.” Jeanist huffed, “I’m talking about the report where police tracked the center of Joker’s attack that leveled the mountain range and the surrounding forest. There was a large pool of blood nearby, but it was too contaminated to get a clean sample, let alone do any tests.”

“Okay, and?”

“Tsukauchi’s suspicions line up: The blue marble quirk was used with Bakugo and the incident with Gentle Criminal and La Brava, as well as a blue marble being left behind in the station before it exploded into glitter. One villain was missing from the League without a trace. If this theory is correct, then we could guess that the blood belonged to Mr. Compress.”

“Wasn’t Mr. Compress in Gentle Criminal’s video with Joker, too?” Gang Orca asked.

“Yes, ” Ryukyu hummed, “Alongside Himiko Toga.”

"That confirms his connection with the League, but we know that Joker wouldn't willingly hurt someone like that." Jeanist sighed. "My take is that Mr. Compress did something the League didn't like, thus they must've stabbed him in the back and left him for dead. He may only be alive because of Joker..."

Hawks frowned. "You okay, pal?"

"Yes." Best Jeanist did not sound okay, "I thought I would die in Kamino. I'm only breathing because Ishtar healed me."

"Jeanist..." Ryukyu whispered.

Best Jeanist sighed, and carried on. "What I'm saying is that it makes sense if Mr. Compress abandoned the League and helped Joker out for saving his life. Given the contents of Gentle Criminal's video, it can also be said that Joker and Mr. Compress share similar world views, more so than with the League."

Hawks whistled as the pieces all came together.

"Do ya think the League knows Compress is alive?" Miruko asked.

"I wouldn't be so certain." Gang Orca grumbled. "Any reports from the Summer Camp and onwards have been highly classified. Not just anybody has access to them."

"All For One kicked the bucket and the League barely has any members left after the Summer Camp. I doubt they'd have anybody snooping around in the police force for them." Miruko snarked. "They probably think he's as dead as a door nail."

"I agree, but it's only a matter of time before they figure out he's alive, and in turn figure out where our kid is hiding." Ryukyu said. "Right now, the best we can do is keep our eye out for Joker or any of his teammates."

"You're still searching high and low for him, aren't ya? You're the perfect mother hen of this group, Ryukyu!" Miruko teased.

"She's not the only one. Which one of us has been going from city to city all across Japan in search of our kid? Oh right, that was you, Miruko. You have no right to tease Ryukyu for doing the same."

"H-How did you know!?" Miruko sputtered. "You want to say that to my face!?"

"Nah, I'll pass." Hawks laughed at her muttered string of curses. "I'd sooner prove that waffles are always the better choice over pancakes."

Miruko gasped dramatically. "YOU TAKE THAT BACK, BIRD BRAIN! PANCAKE POWER ALWAYS BEATS WAFFLES!!"

"... Are we sure these two are mature adults?" Jeanist asked.

"Sometimes I wonder." Ryukyu said, her voice as warm as a mug of hot cocoa.

"They certainly know how to liven up a conversation." Gang Orca said. "But it's getting late and I have many preparations to make for the upcoming licensing exam. Thank you for keeping us up to date Ryukyu. Jeanist too for your valuable insight."

"Think nothing of it." Ryukyu said. "Make sure to get plenty of rest, everyone. I have a feeling there will be trying times ahead. We need to be prepared for anything."

"And they hang up on that ominous note." Hawks says as he reached for the button on his comm.

"Hey, I'm still here!!" Miruko shouted. "And we will be having another talk on why pancakes are better!!"

"Hmm? That's strange, I don't hear anything. Maybe my comm is broken. Gonna hang up now!"

“HEY!! DON’T YOU DARE HANG UP ON ME MISTER! I KNOW WHERE YOU LIVE!!”

“Not for long!” A genuine grin broke out on his face. “Ryoto fired all of the staff Kunikazu had on me, and he promised I could choose where I want to live now! No Commission housing will keep me cooped up any longer!”

“Hawks-”

Her sudden change in tune made his heart feel funny. He didn’t like it. “Ciao!”

“Wait, Hawks!!”

He snickered as his comms went silent, but his phone vibrated nonstop for the next couple of minutes as she demanded answers, and ended up offering to help him find a new place. Hawks bounced to and fro on his heels as he scrolled through his other messages, the perilous drop off the side of the building not two inches away. Chat rooms with various pictures from Ryukyu and Gang Orca, memes and playful fights from Miruko, and occasional bits of advice from Best Jeanist. A constant stream of questions and curiosities from Tokoyami (and Dark Shadow! As he was so often reminded) were in here, too.

Hawks checked Joker’s Spotlight again. Surprise! No updates, but plenty of hero and citizen banter flooded the page nonstop. Questions. Concerns about his safety. ‘Righteous’ demands that Joker return to his vigilante work or make an appearance, as if those people had any right to do so.

“They’re just saying whatever the hell they want.” Hawks muttered. “I should’ve given him a feather when I had the chance.”

He stood and stretched, absorbing the refreshing wind before the last leg of his patrol. Hawks carefully tucked his phone in his pocket and zipped it shut. Double checking that it was secure, he let himself fall from the building with the wind howling in his ears.

This is the first phone he never wanted to lose.

The sky glowed with the approaching twilight, the cool light glistening off the dew drops dappled on the grass like gemstones. The cold morning air stung Midoriya's throat as he jogged. The strange newness of the dorms hadn't worn off yet, and he thought a morning run would shake the sleepy fog from his brain, granted he'd come back to shower up and have breakfast with everyone before it got too late.

Classes resumed today.

It felt strange, going back to school after such a painfully hectic summer. Classroom shenanigans. Training. Happy lunches filled with excitable conversation. Mundane things. But perhaps they all needed a dose of normalcy . Time to properly cool off and focus on their studies as the world waited for the next big event.

Midoriya slowed down to catch his breath.

Cobblestone pathways twisted around the dorms, either side of the path lined with vibrant greenery. Shrubs, bushes, tall trees that would sprinkle shade during the daytime. An occasional break between the flora rewarded potential explorers with intricate gardens and blooms of all colors, clearings with faerie rings that were almost magical in nature. He heard water from a fountain or a small brook somewhere behind him, shrouded in verdant curtains. Birds woke from their slumber and the smallest of chatters came from awakening insects.

It was hard to forget that this was a school .

Footsteps pricked at his senses. He turned to look at the form jogging down the path. Purple hair. A sweaty face accompanied by exhausted, indigo eyes. Such eyes snapped to his.

Shinsou slowed to a stop and wiped his brow.

Shinsou, who he hadn't talked to since the Sports Festival, whose family became littered in online message boards since Akira's identity came out. Theories and rumors swirled on just how much the Shinsou family knew, or if they helped Joker, some even said that Joker tricked or threatened them.

All of it made his stomach churn.

Shinsou narrowed his eyes. "Stop staring at me like that, Midoriya."

"O-oh, sorry!" Midoriya scratched the back of his neck as warmth sprouted on his cheeks. "I was thinking it's nice to see you again?"

"Riiight. Because you totally don't have the thoughts of 'guilty criminal' written all over your face." Shinsou huffed. "My classmates have better poker faces. And they don't mutter."

Shame curled up his spine. "I-I didn't mean it that way! I swear! I just didn't expect to see you out here this early in the morning?"

"Whatever." Shinsou gave him a deadpan stare. "I don't have time for this."

Midoriya stayed rooted to the spot as Shinsou passed by, but he stopped beside Midoriya and firmly grasped his shoulder. Shinsou leaned in.

"Though I guess I should thank you." Shinsou whispered. "It turns out you did have the strength to rescue my best friend. Good job, Deku ."

Midoriya inhaled sharply as Shinsou patted his shoulder. The pressure on Midoriya's shoulder disappeared while his brain short circuited. His phone... he still had those messages of that stranger who pointed them to Kamino, even if he only got an error when he tried to reply now. Shinsou's wording was on purpose. That means...

“Shinsou!” Midoriya whirled around.

He was alone. Any trace of Shinsou vanished as if he were never there. He faded into the morning light like a ghost, or more appropriately...

A Phantom Thief .

An unsettling chill crept into Midoriya’s bones, but he returned to the dorm and kept his mouth shut as if nothing happened.

The door creaked shut behind Hitoshi, the too-loud echoes bounced through the darkness draping the far corners of the gym. His hair stood on end. A chill slithered into him as if someone ran the tip of an icy dagger up his spine. The pointed weight of eyes settled upon him, but he couldn’t see where they hid.

He shifted his stance before he walked forward. His footsteps became feather soft, his center lowered. Just like Joker taught him. His senses were as fine as a strand of silk, pulled taught and ready to snap at the slightest hint of danger.

Hitoshi went rigid at the displacement of air above him. He threw himself forward before a small gust of air brushed the top of his head. Hitoshi rolled into a crouch and looked behind him, where the dark shape of Aizawa stood, appraisal peeking through his coffee colored eyes.

Aizawa smirked. He waved Hitoshi forward in a challenge, one that Hitoshi eagerly met with his own smirk. He charged at Aizawa with a battle cry. Quick blows were traded. Or so Hitoshi would like to think. His punches and swipes hit nothing but air as Aizawa flowed around them as easily as water.

Aizawa didn’t return in hard punches or kicks, but soft taps. Gaps where Hitoshi remained open after overextending. A tap on his head, his shoulder. One tap on his ribs after Aizawa became a blur, weaving around Hitoshi's fist in an elegant and deadly dance.

Tap.

Tap.

Hitoshi's muscles burned. His movements became sloppy and sweat beaded on his forehead. Aizawa's eyes narrowed as he dodged the next sluggish blow, Hitoshi jerked back when the man jumped away and sent a wave of silver cloth at him. The fabric encased him in a cocoon, locking his hands at his sides. His stomach flopped as he teetered backwards, only for Aizawa to stop him mid-fall with a tug on his scarf before Hitoshi could smack his head on the floor.

They paused for several moments, the only sound was Hitoshi gasping for breath. He strained his neck looking at Aizawa, who studied him intensely.

"Not bad." Aizawa stated as he pulled Hitoshi into standing.

"Especially for a beginner. You're a bit rough around the edges, but we'll work on that."

"Thanks?" Hitoshi said.

Aizawa snorted. The scarf released Hitoshi in a flourish of silver fabric before it settled back on Aizawa's shoulders. How did it do that? It almost looked... alive. But it wasn't, not in the way Joker's weapons-

Hitoshi cut off that train of thought before the lump in his throat could form.

Aizawa frowned, as if he read Hitoshi's mind. "Joker taught you the basics, that's as clear as day. He also taught you how to be aware of your surroundings?"

“Yeah,” Hitoshi crossed his arms, “And also how to know when you’re being followed. It comes in handy.”

“Good.” Aizawa hummed. “Not many beginners could dodge my first attack or even know that somebody was watching them. But just because you know the basics doesn’t mean I’ll be go easy on you. Compared to my class, you’re still behind in several areas. I’ll train you so hard that it’ll feel like your muscles will give out, then train you some more. Given your routine with Joker, Nezu thinks that other teachers should test you on certain things too. This is going to be hell, but you already know that, don’t you?”

Hitoshi smirked. “Joker threw me on my ass more times than I could count, but I’m ready to get better.” Hitoshi set his jaw and met Aizawa’s eyes head on. “Bring it on.”

Aizawa grinned from ear to ear, and Hitoshi’s fate was sealed.

He’d be wallowing in sore muscles before morning classes even started.

Aizawa’s students studied Gym Gamma with awe.

High vaulted ceilings and large windows allowed plenty of space and lighting. Twenty spaces were marked off around the concrete floor, plenty of room for each student to get their own specialized training area.

Cementoss, Midnight, and Ectoplasm stood with him.

“Sir!” Iida’s hand shot to the heavens at mach speed. “Why do we need to come up with ultimate moves for our provisional license exam!?”

“The job of a hero is to save people from danger, like crimes, accidents, man-made and natural disasters.” Aizawa said, “Naturally, this exam will look at how well you handle those types of things. Cementoss?”

Cementoss nodded as he walked to the first square. He put his palms flat on the ground and the cement molded itself as easy as clay, forming miniature structures and towers.

“I came up with the idea that every student should be able to get their own space to hone their skills.” Cementoss nodded. “I’ll be able to create whatever you need to work through these next ten days.”

Midnight smirked. “This exam will also test your will and your ability to fight. It’s important to your future as heroes. If you are prepared, then you don’t have to worry. Creating an ultimate move will help you in this exam a lot more than you think. I’ll also help you pick good names for your ultimate moves, too!”

“And my clones will offer additional assistance.” Ectoplasm crossed his arms, his eyes carefully scanning the group of aspiring heroes. “I suggest you listen carefully and take heed of our advice. As my fellow heroes stated, this exam will put you through the wringer for combat and rescue, but also remember that teamwork and information gathering is vital for any operation. Communication is key to keeping down casualties.”

“You heard them.” Aizawa’s eyes hardened. “Are we clear on everything?”

“Yes, sensei!!” A chorus of voices shouted.

“Good.” Aizawa said. “Let’s hope that these next several days will be fruitful for you. I expect each and every one of you to come up with two signature moves before the exam. Now pick a spot and get to work.” Aizawa stared at the Vice Rep. “Except for Yaoyorozu.”

She stiffened and her other classmates gave her tentative glances, but most scattered when Aizawa’s eyes flared red. Only Todoroki stood at her side, his serene expression not betraying the tightness in his shoulders. Cementoss and Ectoplasm exchanged quick glances before they followed the other students around the gym. Yaoyorozu rubbed her arm as Aizawa approached.

“Sensei, did I do something wrong?” She asked.

“What?” Aizawa sighed. No wonder Todoroki stayed. “No, but I would rather have this talk in private.”

Todoroki shifted his weight between his feet, but stayed put.

“It’s okay.” Yaoyorozu smiled. “He can stay.”

Aizawa shrugged. “It’s about your parents’ upcoming trial. Nezu and I were informed that it will take place shortly after this licensing exam.” At that, both students went stone still. “You have unique circumstances, Yaoyorozu. If you choose to, you can decide to drop out of the exam and take it next year. Nobody would blame you.”

“I...” She looked at the ground, her brow pensive. Then, she took a deep breath, folded her hands at her stomach, and stood tall. She stared him straight in the eyes. “No, I’m going to take this exam with my classmates. I refuse to be cowed or remain stagnant just because of my situation. I won’t be emotionally compromised during the exam, I promise.”

Todoroki’s expression didn’t change, but there was a glimmer in his eyes as he stared at her.

“I see.” Aizawa huffed, but the proud smile crept on his face. “Then go on. You both have a lot of work to do before this exam.”

“Yes, sensei!”

They rushed around him and took their spots as Cementoss raised cement towers and plateaus tall enough to cast shadow over the rest of the gym. Ectoplasm created enough clones to work one on one with them. It didn't take long for screams and shouts and the explosion of quirks to overtake the gym.

Midnight smirked at him.

He raised a brow. "What?"

"Nothing." She approached and elbowed him fondly. "I'm just glad that you're almost back to normal, after... you know." Her expression fell and Aizawa felt niggling guilt worm its way into his heart. "Mic and I were really worried. After Joker and the hospital, and then you didn't answer our calls for a while... we didn't want you to fall down that hole again, Sho. You know we care about you, right?"

"I know." He dragged out a long sigh as his shoulders sank. "I'm sorry about that."

"Oh, don't be." Midnight shook her head. "It's fine. Just let us know when you go out searching for him again. We'll come with you!"

He glared at her. "How do you know about that?"

"Oh, please." She said with a smirk. "You go out on patrol at sunset, stay out all night, and then come back before sun rise looking like something Marshmallow dragged in during a typhoon. No wonder you nap with every free minute you have-"

Aizawa held in an annoyed groan. Yes, he had been out at night, especially more recently when Tsukauchi tracked down a number from one of the Shinsous' phone records. It led to an abandoned internet cafe called the Raven's Nest. There were signs it was once inhabited several weeks ago, but that hole in his heart deepened as he picked through dusty cubicles and broken computers.

Nothing but ghosts lingered there now. That phone number was discontinued, and there were no other clues pointing where they went. Yet another dead end in his search for the kid. Aizawa just wanted to make sure he was okay . Reluctantly, he tuned back in to Midnight's one sided conversation.

"You're too easy to read, Aizawa Shouta. You probably searched Musutafu high and low by now, but maybe we can-"

"I think I hear one of my students calling for me." Aizawa turned on his heel and marched through the maze of cement towers.

"You can't hide your feelings forever, Dadzawa!!" Midnight called after him.

Thankfully, his students were too loud for anybody else to hear.

"Did you see him?"

"Yeah, that dude's kinda hard to miss. If you ask me, he looks guilty."

"Are you kidding me? You think he's guilty just because he talked to Joker when he worked at that cafe?"

"No. Didn't you hear the rumors? Some people are saying that Shinsou was trained by Joker himself. No wonder the teachers are keeping such a close eye on him."

"But it's not like Shinsou did anything bad... right? I think being taught by Joker would be awesome."

"I'm telling you, Ectoplasm glared at us when my friends and I talked about Shinsou during math today."

"Sounds scary."

"Yeah! I totally thought we were going to get detention!"

Bang.

Bang!

BANG!

Hitoshi's heart pounded as a stream of smoke swirled from the barrel. The gun in his hands was cold and lifeless, much unlike Metatron's gun, where the silvery weapon thrummed with holy power. His hands tightened around the dead weapon, before he unloaded the empty clip and set everything on the counter. He removed his earmuffs and stared at Snipe.

Snipe whistled as he pushed the button to bring the target closer. Holes dotted the human shaped paper target, with one hole centimeters from where the heart would be. "Your stance is good and you did everything else right, but you definitely need more practice in accuracy."

"Thanks." Hitoshi said.

Snipe stared at him for a moment, his face unreadable under that tan gas mask.

Hitoshi raised a brow. "What?"

"Nothin'. It's just..." Snipe looked at the target, the gun, before he stared back at Hitoshi. "Joker really taught you all of that from one session?"

Hitoshi blinked slowly. "Yeah, he did. Why?"

Snipe shrugged. "Either Joker's a gifted teacher or you're a fast learner. Probably a mix of both if I'm bein' honest." Snipe waved his hand around U.A.'s range, carefully monitored and guarded by himself and Power Loader, "Getting a gun license for hero work is a mighty difficult thing to get. Come here after class every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday for training sessions with me, and we'll see what we can do from there."

Hitoshi smirked. "Trying to steal me from Aizawa-sensei?"

"Who knows." Snipe chuckled. "It was Nezu's idea for me to test you on this, but you've impressed me. This was an eventful day for you, so you're dismissed. Try to get some rest, alright?"

Hitoshi nodded, and walked out of the range.

The door closed behind him, the heavy automatic lock clicking in place. Snipe put a hand on his chest and sighed in relief. He stared at the bullet holes dotting the target. Not enough damage to kill immediately, but to seriously injure or cripple. Maybe looking after Joker's student would redeem him from shooting the vigilante at the USJ, not that he wasn't going to formally apologize to the kid whenever he gets here.

Dread trickled up Snipe's spine at the thought of reporting Shinsou's success at the gun range. Why did the rat always choose the most terrifying students?

It took only a day after Snipe's session for the other teachers to start gossiping.

"So I tried staking out 1-C's building to get a look at Shinsou, and a robot totally blocked me! It said I would get detention from Nezu himself if I didn't leave."

"I didn't know the robots could do that. I've seen them all over the grounds lately. Ectoplasm's clones, too."

"They didn't do that last semester, right? I wonder what's got them so worked up."

"I dare you to go up to him and ask about Joker."

"What!? No way! The dude looks like a zombie."

"Scaredy cat-"

"Crap, he's looking at us! Act natural!"

"I'm just glad Shinsou decided to come back to U.A. to be a hero."

Other teachers in the lounge looked at Present Mic. Aizawa raised his brow from his bright yellow sleeping bag in the corner.

"As opposed to what?" Aizawa asked, his voice pointed like a knife.

"Well, you know..." Mic waved his hand. "The little Listener really looked up to Joker, yeah? I figured he'd jump at the opportunity to disappear with his mentor instead of returning to school!"

"But he didn't." Midnight looked up from grading papers, the red pen twirling in her hands. "Why do you think that is?"

"Because Joker cared for Shinsou's future." Aizawa shrugged as they stared at him, either in shock or confusion. "Sure, Nezu wants to set up the Vigilante Program, but getting into the Hero Course with a clean record is a lot easier than if Joker allowed Shinsou to go along with his heists and got caught red handed or something."

"That's pretty considerate of Joker." Thirteen said.

"None of you interacted with him like I did." Aizawa sagged into his plush cocoon. "But it's plain as day when you notice how much he cares for those around him."

"Joker took the initiative when it came to training Shinsou, too." Snipe flinched when Midnight jabbed the pen towards him. "You were pretty spooked when you came back to the lounge after your session with him. Is Shinsou really that good with a gun?"

Snipe leaned back in his chair. "I figured he'd been to a range before, but it was only his second time handling a gun!"

“Joker is incredibly smart.” Aizawa sat up and leaned against the wall. “He broke down the basics of using a gun and explained it in a way that is easily understood. Given Shinsou’s own intelligence, I’m honestly not surprised how well he handled it.”

“Oh yeah?” Vlad King raised a brow at him. “And how did he do with your training, Aizawa? You’re going to be the one training him the most.”

Aizawa deadpanned. “I’m keeping the details to myself.”

“Shouta, you’re no fun!!” Mic yelled.

Aizawa rolled his eyes.

“In any case!” Nezu chirped from the door. Mic gasped in surprise and a few other teachers flinched. A stoic Cementoss nearly dropped his coffee mug. “Shinsou is still our student, and we shall treat him as such. Placing any suspicion on him would be an insult to his character.”

“How long have you standing there?” Midnight asked.

“Long enough.” Nezu grinned as he fiddled with a some sort of multi-tool.

“We can treat him like a student all we want.” Vlad King frowned. “But it’s the other students I’m worried about.”

Nezu’s ears pricked. “Have we come across any problems?”

“I noticed how others in his class avoid interacting with him.” Ectoplasm didn’t look up from grading, the page a sea of red marks. That poor soul. “I don’t think it’s out of fear, specifically. Some of them seem star struck. Students clear the way for him in the hallways between classes, but its obvious how many point and whisper. Rumors are swirling and the semester just started.”

“Yeah, I’m worried about the ones who are brazen enough to do something stupid.” Vlad King sighed and ran a hand through his hair. “You know how my students are. I’ve heard them whispering in small groups, and the name ‘Shinsou’ cropped up a few times.”

“We’ll have to keep a close eye out.” Midnight’s eyes hardened. “The last thing we need are Shinsou’s peers isolating or tormenting him.”

“I increased the security around 1-C’s dorm to dissuade stalkers.” Nezu hummed and pocketed the multi-tool. “But I don’t think we have to worry about it too much. Shinsou’s skills have been honed by Joker and will continue to sharpen under our tutelage. I have no doubt that he’ll give anybody a good runaround if they were to do something... unwise.”

“‘Unwise’.” Vlad King sagged in his chair. “I can think of a handful of my students that would fit that word perfectly.”

“We’ll handle it if it becomes too extreme.” Nezu said. “But in the mean time, we will watch and wait. Whatever happens, I cannot wait to see how much Shinsou grows!”

The heroes winced under Nezu’s wickedly sharp grin. The mouse laughed as he turned on his heel and marched out of the lounge, leaving the room’s inhabitants with lingering dread.

The days passed reasonably fast for Hitoshi.

He fell into a tight schedule; Wake up at an ungodly hour for training with Aizawa-sensei, shower and eat breakfast, go to class and don’t freak out over his peers’ whispers or how they fell over themselves to move out of his way. Rumors were a dime a dozen, but he ignored them as best he could. Find a secluded place to eat lunch. Finish class and have training with Snipe every other day. Rush back to his dorm room, do homework, check Joker’s Spotlight, tinker for a while, and then pass out for the night. Maybe have a short dream with his parents to catch up, but his dad looked too exhausted to do it every night.

Rinse and repeat.

It was after his third session with Snipe when he rushed through the school with a folder under his arm, headed towards the support labs. A familiar sensation prickled on the back of his neck. His hair stood on end. His breath caught in his throat, but he forced it out to try and stay calm.

There were no mirrors to check behind him, and the floor to ceiling windows lining the walls were too faint to catch anything concrete. Still, he heard the tell-tale sound of footsteps behind him. They stopped when he paused to look out the window, ears strained. He continued, and so did the footsteps. His heart pounded as he quickened his pace, hugging the folder to his chest.

Hitoshi turned a corner and scanned for an exit. The door at the end of the hall led outside, but if he just ran then he wouldn't figure out who followed him or why. He kicked open the exit door, but dashed through another door nearby. Darkness encased him as he silently shut the door to a supply closet and put his back against it.

"Dangit, he got away!" A female voice said.

"That door leads to the school grounds." Another female voice, a little bit deeper, said. "Who knows where he could be now!"

"I dunno about this, you guys." A male voice this time, "He seemed pretty spooked. Are you sure this is a good idea, Monoma?"

"We just wanted to talk to him!" The last voice, probably Monoma, shouted. "It's not like we were trying to hurt him."

"Yeah, but he doesn't know that." The second female said. "We see how other people treat him around here. He probably thought we were going to beat him up or something."

“Why are you so stuck on this, Monoma? Can’t we just leave the guy alone?”

“You know why, Honenuki!” Monoma griped. “We can’t let 1-A snap him up like they do with everything else. This is our chance to get ahead of them!”

“By kidnapping Shinsou?” Honenuki deadpanned.

“Befriending him!”

“Right, because there’s no ulterior motive to get to know Joker better.”

“Guys, enough! Lets just get out of here.” The first female said, “Shinsou is long gone and the last thing we need is our Class Rep getting suspicious. She acts weird whenever we mention Joker now.”

“Probably because Seth saved her hide during the Summer Camp.” Monoma grumbled. “Fine, let’s go.”

Hitoshi bit his lip as he heard them walk through the exit. He counted several heartbeats of silence before he let out a breath, his head thumping on the door.

“Wow, you handled that better than I thought!”

Hitoshi denied that he yelped like a frightened grade schooler. The folder dropped from his arms as he backpedaled away from the voice, paper spewing across the floor.

“Oh, sorry! I didn’t mean to scare you!”

Hitoshi squinted. There was... a face... in the wall. A puff of golden hair and a pair of sea blue eyes that looked at home in an ancient pre-quirk cartoon.

“Who the hell are you?” Hitoshi said with a scowl. “Were you spying on me?”

“No! Well, not really?” The face beamed. If it wasn’t so dark, Hitoshi would be blinded by it. “My friends and I were in a nearby classroom when you zoomed by. We saw those other kids following you and... well, thought you could use some help. Turns out we were wrong. Oh, I’m Togata Mirio, a third year!”

Hitoshi snorted. He bent down to pick up the scattered paperwork. Hastily drawn pictures and measurements and forms to request certain gear for his future hero costume. Joker’s dagger had been in a secure locker in Power Loader’s classroom. A once neat and tidy file was reduced to mish mash of paper sticking out in every direction.

“Are you sure you don’t need-”

“Yes .” Hitoshi griped as he double checked to make sure he didn’t miss anything. He held the folder to his chest and marched out without another word.

“Shinsou, you’re okay!”

Hitoshi held back a groan as he looked down the hall. A girl with long periwinkle hair and another boy with dark hair and pointed ears approached, though the boy half hid behind his energetic classmate. He looked as if he’d rather be anywhere else in the world right now. It was a mutual feeling. He recognized them now, part of the ‘Big Three’ of the third year hero course. More specifically the girl; Nejire Hado.

Ryukyu’s intern.

There was something about the way she stared at him. Despite the bright smile and bubbly vibes, a ripple of compassion flowed through her eyes. The thorns in Hitoshi’s chest dissipated, but sourness still had a strangle hold on him.

“I’m not in the mood.” Hitoshi felt more exhausted as the hour went on. “Whatever you have to say, save it.”

“Wait!” She reached out to him as he turned towards the door, but didn’t touch him. He stopped and glared at her over his shoulder. Her smile stayed genuine and kind. “I understand, Shinsou. I’ve never met Joker first hand, but I know how much Ryukyu has changed for the better because of him. Joker really means a lot to her, and in turn he means a lot to me. You were his friend, right? I want you to know that we’ll have your back if anybody gives you trouble!”

Hitoshi studied her. There wasn’t any malicious intent in her voice, and her posture remained calm and composed. She didn’t want to use him like those other students. He relaxed and let out a long sigh.

“Thanks, I guess.” He muttered. “Now if you’ll excuse me, I’ve had enough bullshit for one day.”

They let him walk away. Hitoshi marched outside as the sky bled orange and the first bite of autumn settled on the wind. He took a deep breath and turned towards the dorms, the long, deep shadows of trees protected him from prying eyes.

Power Loader told him to come in whenever he had time, to test out what Hitoshi knew about tinkering and gadgets. He figured he’d turn in the first version of his costume design while he was at it. He’s too burnt out to deal with anything else right now. He’d do it tomorrow.

In hindsight, waiting a day was the best decision he’d made that evening.

Ren poked his head into the kitchen.

They had everything they needed to whip up decent food for Magne’s patrons, good appliances and enough counter space for one person to move around with ease. Tobita stood at the stove, where a teakettle wafted with steam and a light, flowery scent took to the air. He turned to Ren, smiling.

“Did you need something? I’m about to whip up some of the tea Atsuhiro got for me, if you wanted to join in!”

Ren shook his head. “Actually, I was wondering if you needed any help around the kitchen?”

“I have everything covered.” Tobita gestured towards the door to the bar front. “It’s a weekday, so it has been rather quiet. I’ve heard Shuichi complain about how bored he is from in here.”

Ren pursed his lips as he stared at the door. What lay past there was still a mystery, for they didn’t want anybody to recognize him while the bar was open, and he had been too exhausted to bother on the days it had been closed.

And Magne. It felt as if she were avoiding him for some reason. Magne never came upstairs. She chatted with Shuichi and the others while the bar was open, but only when necessary. He wondered if their first encounter might have been responsible for her reserved behaviour. It wasn’t exactly pretty. Maybe he should apologize?

A soft hand on his arm made him jump.

Tobita flinched back, but his face softened with a warm smile. As it always does.

“Are you sure you don’t need anything? Perhaps a small bite to eat before dinner? There are some leftover chocolate chip cookies I made last night.” Tobita winked. “I won’t tell Manami.”

A sheen of silver caught Ren’s eyes, and he stared at the cuff on Tobit’s wrist. A reminder of everything he put these people through since he stepped foot in this world. Conflicting twisters of guilt and remorse nearly ripped him apart from the inside.

Ren forced a smile, but he shook his head and fled the kitchen. He felt Tobita’s worried eyes on his back before the door closed behind him. Soft voices trickled down the stairs. Ren ignored them and dove into the bathroom down the hall. The dingy, cramped bathroom was what you could expect from a bar. The only differences from the shabby bathrooms up front was that it was significantly cleaner thanks to Kaito and Manami's efforts, and it had a deep tub to relax in. Ren ignored the tub. He placed his hands on the sink and looked into the mirror.

His reflection stared back, as pale and sickly as it had been since he woke up. The deep circles under his eyes didn't help any. His hair lacked the usual lively floof to fall drab around his forehead and ears. 'Death warmed over', as Shuichi said the other day. Manami smacked him for it, but Ren had to agree. He felt like a hollow shell of himself. His knuckles tightened on the cold porcelain.

"Please... If you're still in there..." He whispered to nobody.
"Somebody answer. Please ."

Ren stood there, peering back into his own reflection in expectation. Silence. Ren forgot how eerily quiet a person's mind could get. Complete and utter lack of any voices or familiar presences comforted him. No golden spark flickered in his eyes, no warmth or flame to light the barren mindscape that had gone cold. Ren tried to keep that suffocating glob of emotion locked tight in his chest, but it eluded its confines to climb up his throat.

Tears came into his eyes as a suppressed sob escaped. Ren ducked his head, biting his lip so he wouldn't make any noise. His body trembled as he tried to keep it all in. The strangle hold of emotion lasted until black spots appeared in the corner of his eyes. Eventually, he buried it enough to where he could gasp for breath.

There was a scratch at the door.

"Merp?"

Ren wiped his eyes with his sleeves. "I'm fine, Stubbs."

“Merp?” The scratching intensified. She must’ve noticed the rawness in his voice. “Merp!”

He swore under his breath and opened the door. Lady Stubbs squeezed in and skittered onto the sink. Ren closed the door and turned to the cat, who’s ghoulish eyes were narrowed.

“What?” He said as his shoulders sagged. “I’m fine. I will be fine.”

“Merp?”

“I know Atsuhiro said I had to learn to forgive myself, but... it’s a lot harder than it sounds.”

“Merp.”

“No, you don’t need to tell the others. I don’t want them to worry. Please?”

She snorted. Lady Stubbs purred as she put her two front paws on his chest and licked his nose. He couldn’t help it. He smiled and ran his fingers through her thick fur and over the golden handkerchief tied around her neck. Morgana had a similar handkerchief in his Metaverse form.

“I’ll be okay, really.” He whispered. “I just need a minute.”

Her eyes, far too intelligent for any normal cat, softened. She butted her head against his chin before she hopped off the sink, and Ren opened the door to let her out. He closed it with a muted sigh of relief. He stared back at his own expression, his eyes red rimmed and puffy.

“Damnit...”

He washed his face, the cold water shocking the oily emotions back to their cage. Ren patted his face dry and took another moment to breathe, before he left the bathroom. He ventured up the stairs. At least he regained enough strength to go up and down by himself, without getting winded halfway through. And unlike Atsuhiro half the time, he remembered to duck under the beam.

The others were scattered around the spacious attic. Atsuhiro used his quirk to clear out the clutter, and moving everything down into the storage room more than doubled their living space. The floors were scrubbed clean and the colony of empty cobwebs in the rafters were gone. Ren didn't know why they waited until now.

Maybe they were so worried over his health that they didn't even think of their own comfort.

"Check mate." Kaito said as he and Atsuhiro played chess in the corner, one of many board and card games Magne picked up last time she went shopping.

"How!?" Atsuhiro clutched his head. "I thought you said you never played chess before!"

"Well, / haven't." Kaito smirked as he tapped the silver band on his wrist. "But I used to know someone who did."

"What?" Atsuhiro's eyes flicked between the band and Kaito's expression "What does that even mean!?"

Ren huffed at Kaito's sudden fascination with teasing Atsuhiro. Maybe it was because in a strange, twisted sort of sense, he and Atsuhiro were related. Somewhat. Ren... decided not to think about it too much. He went to the opposite corner where everyone stashed their things, swiped his phone and book from his bag, and went to the window.

Manami stopped typing as he walked by. Morgana sat by her, and Ren couldn't meet his eyes, either.

"I just need some air." He told them before he stepped out onto the rooftop.

The final rays of the sunset had long cooled into deep purples and blues. Ren planted himself at the edge of the rooftop and watched until the black of night threw a curtain over the city. Few stars glinted over the city's golden glow.

Ren closed his eyes and took in the scents and sounds of a bustling city, of the wind that corded through his hair. He knew it was Morgana's, yet he didn't feel the magic in it anymore. He opened his eyes and stared at the heavens.

Six familiar stars twinkled at him. No, that wasn't right. A seventh star joined the strange constellation, but whether he just noticed it now or if it had always been there, he didn't know.

"What am I supposed to do, you guys?" The breeze carried Ren's whisper into oblivion. The familiar weight of his phone sat in his lap alongside the book, but he didn't have the courage to open the Phantom Thief chatroom yet. "What am I supposed to say? 'Hey, it's been a while since I last checked in! I died several times and killed a megalomaniac almost as bad as Yaldabaoth. I destabilized an entire world and Akechi told me off about it when my soul was in Limbo. He says hi by the way!'" His face fell in his hands as he fought against another wave of frustrated tears. "It'd probably just give me another stupid error. Yeah, Morgana would look at me like I'm insane."

Ren's hands fell and he picked up his phone to unlock it. The little message icon taunted him. No new messages. He swallowed the lump in his throat and fled to various news sites, absorbing a few of tonight's batch of colorful headlines.

Silver Falcon's Guilty Verdict: Was it a fair trial?

Joker's 'Quirklessness': Clever ruse or Malicious Lie!?

Three HPSC Board Members Resign Following Kunikazu's Shocking Arrest!

Yaoyorozu Trial Date Set!

Vigilante Numbers Skyrocket Amid Rise In Villain Incidents!

Ominous Howling Heard Throughout Japanese Alps!

U.A. Vigilante Program Deemed 'Promising' As Ryukyu and Gang Orca Vow To Follow In Nezu's Footsteps With Villain Program: Should Villains Be Redeemed?

Remembering The Kamino Disaster: Mayor To Unveil Statue and New City Centre.

Ren shook his head and set his phone face down next to him. He stared down at the book, and opened it to where he had put the familiar bookmark last night. The double sided bookmark flowed with intricate vines of the deepest blue, with glittering gold leaf tracing the edges. A bold 'V' was stamped in the middle.

"Don't forget that you're rehabilitation isn't over yet!" Caroline tapped her metal baton on the floor and leveled him with her signature glare. "One more thing, don't tell our Master about what happened here. You absolutely can't tell him we battled! You got that, Inmate!?"

Justine simply twirled her clipboard and chuckled softly. "Honestly, I do not feel particularly guilty about keeping this secret. Caroline, let's reward him for his substantial progress."

"R-right! I was getting to that!!"

Caroline shoved a whole mess of healing items in his hands, most of which they used during Yaldabaoth's fight. Justine, however, gently placed this bookmark on top of the pile. He'd kept it close ever since-

He frowned at that bookmark. "Lavenza..."

Ren heard the window slide open. He shoved the bookmark back in its place and closed the book as Morgana jumped out. He spotted Ren and approached, stretching before he sat at Ren's side. They both sat in companionable silence, with Ren not wanting to breach it. Morgana spoke first, albeit hesitantly.

"Are you okay? You looked upset when you came upstairs."

Ren sighed. He figured Morgana might see through it. "I've had a lot on my mind."

"Do you want to talk about it?"

It was an invitation. An offer. Morgana wouldn't force him if it came down to it, but his chest tightened at the thought of keeping silent now.

"I still can't feel them. Any of them." Ren put a hand on his chest. "Not when I meditate or try to talk to them. I can't summon my costume and trying to activate Third Eye just gives me an instant migraine. I just can't...." His voice simmered down to a cracked whisper, "Why would they abandon me?"

"Hey, don't think like that!" Morgana hopped onto his lap and stared into Ren's eyes. "You know they would never leave you like this! Mercurius agrees with me. Actually, we came up with a theory on why they're not here."

Ren blinked. "Really?"

"Yeah." Morgana's expression faltered, and he blinked rapidly to battle against tears. He curled in Ren's lap, his claws sinking into Ren's pants. Ren put his hand on Morgana's back as the feline trembled. "You were... Atsuhiro and I saw your body . You... you died... you were dead."

Ren's hands stilled over Morgana's fur.

“And I’m thinking maybe, just maybe, your Will Of Rebellion died with you.”

“What ? But that’s- Is that even possible ?”

“I don’t know, but it makes sense, doesn’t it? You can’t even don your costume, the symbol of our Will Of Rebellion.” Morgana turned to face Ren. “It’s not like we could test that back home, and we both know the rules of this world are different.”

“But what about you? You can’t turn into your other form, right?”

“Yeah, but I still have Mercurius and I can turn into a bus.” Morgana sighed. “Maybe my other form is still with me, somehow, and I just don’t know how to use it yet.”

“So... do you think we can reawaken it? My Will Of Rebellion?”

“Maybe, but awakening to your powers back home was an incredibly lucky coincidence. I don’t think we’ll be able to force one this time around.”

Ren scowled. “So what? We’re supposed to wait and hope for another chance? That I’ll be completely powerless until we figure out a way home?”

“I didn’t mean it like that.” Morgana sighed. He closed his eyes and lay his forehead over Ren’s beating heart. “We’ll just take it day by day, okay? We’ll figure this out. We always do. I know we’ll get past this, we just have to be patient. In the mean time we need to lay low and wait for you to recover, Akira. ”

Ren flinched.

Morgana pulled his head up, brows furrowed. “What’s wrong?”

“I think it’s time the others knew my real name.”

Morgana’s eyes widened. “So you are taking Atsuhiro’s advice.”

“And snippets from Gentleman Burglar. It all makes sense to me.” Ren looked down at his hands. “Maybe... maybe accepting my old identity again will help us reawaken my powers? We could try putting a picture on Spotlight, too.”

“It might be a long shot, but it can’t hurt to try.” Morgana smiled at him, as sad as it was. “When did you want to do it?”

“Soon.” Ren unlocked his phone and checked the date for the Kamino Memorial. Morgana tilted his head as he read the headline. “I want to check something out first.”

“It’ll be hard convincing the others to let us go out.”

“The Memorial is only a few days away.” Ren said. “I’m sure we can manage if we let everyone tag along.”

“Why do you want to check out this statue anyway?”

Ren grimaced. He hasn’t told Morgana about his encounter with Akechi, or the truth of just how many times he’d died while under the heroes’ watch. The footage from Kamino and the hospital, of watching himself pass away in Aizawa’s arms... it was too much for the both of them. Morgana didn’t show it, but Ren knew he loathed the heroes now more than ever.

“Ren?”

He shook his head. “I just want to confirm something. You need to trust me on this, okay?”

“Okay.” Morgana’s eyes softened, and it sent a sharp pang through Ren’s heart. “I’ll leave this to you.”

Ren nodded. But something was bothering him since the others caught him up on the news in the weeks following Kamino. He knew Morgana wouldn’t like the idea. It was better to rip off the band-aid and have it out in the open, though.

“Morgana, there’s something else.”

“What is it?”

“If... if this doesn’t work, and I can’t get my powers back, then I think we should go to U.A.” Morgana stiffened, but Ren pressed on.

“Maybe they could figure out something we can’t-”

“No!” Ren’s jaw dropped, and Morgana blinked rapidly, as if surprised by his own outburst. “I-I... I don’t trust them. After what the police and heroes put all of us through. You... you died under their watch!”

“What if something worse happens?” Akechi’s words haunted him.

“We don’t know if Yaldabaoth can find a way here, or if the Metaverse will affect the school and surrounding areas. Shouldn’t we be there to prevent something from happening?”

Morgana flattened his ears. “And if you don’t get your powers back? Mercurius and I aren’t strong enough to protect you against something like Yaldabaoth on our own! I couldn’t even protect you during the Summer Camp!”

“So we should just abandon them to the Shadows in case something does happen with the Metaverse?”

“N-no, that’s not what I-”

“You heard Nezu’s words in that interview, he said we could go there if we wanted to find our home . He has to have figured it out, and he promised he would let us go to the USJ before the Summer Camp.” Ren’s words tumbled over each other as Morgana looked appalled, his fur standing on end. “Maybe we could find out what happened to the others and-”

“I can’t lose you again!”

The resulting silence turned thick with stewed emotions. Ren's brain stopped functioning as tears flooded Morgana's eyes. The wind whipped around them, and Morgana ducked his head to pull himself together. Several seconds passed before the breeze returned to normal.

"Morgana, I'm sorry." Ren's heart sank when Morgana trembled. "I didn't mean to upset you so much."

"N-no, don't be. I miss the others too, but I felt so helpless when we were separated a-and the next time I saw you was in the morgue-" Morgana's voice wavered as a few tears plopped onto Ren's pants. "I can't handle another Summer Camp or Kamino incident. I-I don't want to see you get hurt. I don't trust the heroes not to hurt you anymore. Just... let's wait and see what happens before we make another big decision, okay? Please?"

"Okay." Ren wrapped his arms around Morgana and held him close. "Then we'll wait."

"Promise?"

"I promise."

Morgana tucked his face into Ren's shirt. They stayed that way for several minutes, holding one another. The groan of the window sill finally made them move, as stiff as their muscles were in their embrace.

"Hey, we're about to eat dinner." Manami's head popped out of the window. "You guys better come inside before it gets too cold. You know how Kaito will get if you try to skip out, Akira!"

"W-we're coming!" Morgana called as he untangled himself from Ren's arms. "Sheesh."

"Go on, I'll just be a minute."

“Okay,” Morgana whispered, his voice a bit hoarse. “Don’t be too long or Kaito might really come out and drag you back inside.”

Ren snorted as Morgana went back inside. He looked up at the small cluster of stars. Their brilliant light flared and it was almost as if he could reach out and touch them.

“Just wait a little longer, everyone.” He whispered.

As if the stars could do anything but.

Hitoshi checked over his shoulder.

No footsteps or ominous whispers haunted the hallways he crept through. Though as usual, Aizawa-sensei asked every morning if he had any troubles with the other students. Hitoshi denied of course, but for some reason Aizawa never believed him. The man didn’t push it, and they continued training as normal. Hitoshi knew somebody followed him earlier today before lunch, only for his pursuers to vanish after a flash of periwinkle hair appeared in the corner of his eye.

He dragged out a harsh sigh as he pushed forward. The folder under his arm had been rearranged into the neat and tidy pile from yesterday before the... incident . Unfortunately, keeping his papers in order wasn’t in the cards.

The large steel door to the support lab was down this hall. Strange vibrations rumbling from the lab slowed his steps, and he stared at the door as streams of smoke wafted from it. Panicked voices shouted from behind.

“Wait, don’t-!”

Hitoshi was blown off his feet as the door burst open, torn off its hinges by an earthshaking explosion. He groaned and rubbed his head as he sat up. Thick clouds of smoke fumed from inside, but his eyes latched onto the tangle of limbs splayed out on the floor in front of him.

None other than Hatsume Mei's bright pink curls stood out at the top of the pile. Underneath her were familiar students. Midoriya Izuku, Uraraka Ochako, and Iida Tenya.

"Dang it, Hatsume!!" Power Loader burst through the smoke cloud. "Didn't I tell you to be careful!?"

"You did, Power Loader-Sensei!!" Hatsume beamed. Midoriya groaned as her knee jabbed into his stomach. "But I just-" Her eyes locked onto her next target, and her expression morphed into feral delight. "Shinsou!!!"

Midoriya made a noise between a gag and a pained yelp as she scrambled towards Hitoshi.

"It's you!!" Hatsume latched onto Hitoshi's wrist and yanked him to his feet. He stiffened when she wrapped her arms around him and squeezed the life out of him. "I was wonderin' how long it would take before you visited me!! Momma has been really worried-"

"Hatsume..." Power Loader facepalmed as Uraraka and Iida helped Midoriya to his feet.

"-Because you haven't visited us once since you-know-what!"

"Hatsume-"

"Momma will be so happy you're okay and I-"

"HATSUME!" Power Loader groaned as she whipped her head towards him. "Let the boy breathe, please."

"Oh. Right!"

Hitoshi gasped as her crushing weight disappeared.

“Apologize to Midoriya!!” Iida frantically chopped his arm. “That is the second explosion you’ve caused and the second time you’ve caused Midoriya either pain or embarrassment!!”

“It’s okay, Iida.” Midoriya clutched his abdomen. “It was an accident?”

“You can’t call that an accident!” Iida shouted.

“Iida, Deku said it was okay!” Uraraka blinked when she heard a crinkle under her foot. “What’s this?”

“That would be mine.” Hitoshi said dryly. He gestured towards the mess in the hallway. “All of that would be mine.”

Hatsume cackled, unabashed.

“Oh!” Uraraka smiled at him. “We can help you pick up!”

Power Loader crossed his arms and watched as they gathered the papers together. Midoriya suddenly froze, wide-eyed as he stared at one of the forms. Sketches of a dark costume, with a certain silvery symbol etched into the shoulder piece.

“A moon card?”

Hitoshi stiffened when he reached for the next paper.

Uraraka and Iida peeked curiously at the page. Midoriya lowered the paper and looked at Hitoshi with an odd mix of emotion. It was like something in Midoriya’s brain clicked. Realization, awe, and a tiny smidgen of grief fell over him.

“You’re the Moon?” Midoriya asked.

Iida and Uraraka looked confused for a moment. They startled as their eyes went wide, and they both gaped at him.

“That... that makes sense...” Midoriya whispered.

Hitoshi's scowl darkened. He snatched the page away and turned his back on them. "That's none of your business."

Midoriya rushed to his feet. "But-!"

"I think," Power Loader stepped in between them, "You should call it a day. Midoriya, Iida, Uraraka, we'll work on your new costume designs and let you know when they're done. You'll have them back before your exam. Capiche?"

"Y-yes, sir." Iida gently grabbed his classmates' arms. "Let's return to the dorms before it gets too late!"

"O-okay." Uraraka said with a shaky smile.

Midoriya stared past Power Loader, his gaze digging into Hitoshi's back. At Iida's behest, he and his friends walked down the hallway.

Hatsume tilted her head. "What the heck was that all about?"

"Are you alright, Shinsou?" Power Loader put a hand on Hitoshi's shoulder. "They didn't do something to upset you, did they?"

"No, I'm fine." Hitoshi sighed as he looked down to the messy folder. "I came here for your test and to turn in my costume design, but..."

Hatsume's eyes lit up like Christmas lights.

"Right, Nezu did want you to come in for that. Don't worry about how messy your paperwork is. I've dealt with worse." Power Loader held his hand out. "I'll take care of it."

Hitoshi handed the folder over.

Hatsume latched onto Shinsou's arm. "Sooooo, did you want to take a look at my babies!?"

"Hatsume!"

“What? He looks sad and I wanted to make him feel better!”

Hitoshi huffed. “Sure. I’ve gotten better at tinkering myself. Maybe we could make something together sometime?”

“Really!?” Hatsume gasped and looked at him as if he hung the stars. “You want to make babies with me!?”

“Th-that’s not what I meant!!” Hitoshi shouted, his face turning cherry red.

Power Loader chuckled as she dragged the poor kid back into the lab. The hero sent a quick text to Nezu explaining what happened. With luck, and maybe a bit of elbow grease, the lab could be one of Shinsou’s safe havens away from the constant rumors. He tucked his phone away and looked at the dirty folder in his hands.

“‘The Moon’, huh? I wonder what that means.”

He didn’t have time to think on it when another explosion shook the lab.

“Take this!”

Concussive forces struck Bakugo’s body through the veil of smoke and the smell of burnt caramel. The ringing in his ears faded as Ectoplasm’s clone splattered across the cement tower, surrounded by an array of deep craters. Bakugo panted as he stared at the stain. He scrunched his eyes shut and turned away.

The goop was not black. It wasn’t . It was just a stupid clone! There was nothing to panic about, despite how his heart pounded, and his brain snapped back to Akira leaking inky sludge from his eyes. About those strange dreams of red skies and ancient bones jutting from the earth-

“Bakugo.”

He whirled around to another of Ectoplasm's clones staring at him. That stupid mask hid his expression, but the slight narrow of Ectoplasm's eyes pinned Bakugo to the spot.

"Are you alright?" Ectoplasm clone number who-the-frick-knows asked. "You act strange whenever you defeat one of my clones. I didn't want to say anything, but it's been over a week."

"It's fine. I just need to fine-tune this technique, so can we just get on with it?"

"Bakugo," Ectoplasm sighed. "You went through a lot during the Summer Camp-"

"What the hell would you know!?" Bakugo snapped. He clamped his mouth shut and glared at the ground.

Ectoplasm studied him, the silence between them not tense, but strangely... sad.

"Let me show you something." Ectoplasm unbuttoned his cloak, revealing darker clothes striped with vertical gold lines underneath. Bakugo's eyes weren't drawn to them, rather to the two combat prosthetics. They looked like nothing more than strange peg legs, and Ectoplasm must've had considerable balance to even stand. "I was in a battle many years ago with a heinous villain. We won, but in the end I lost my legs."

Bakugo tore his eyes away. "What's your point?"

"I felt lost for a long time afterwards. I thought my life was over." Ectoplasm buttoned his cloak and shuffled his shoulders. "But because of the people who stuck by my side, the ones who encouraged me to continue hero work despite my... disability, I managed to stand back up on my own two feet. Well, prosthetics in my case."

Bakugo narrowed his eyes.

“My point is that there’s no shame in reaching out for help when you need it. Even the strongest of heroes need others to support them from time to time.” Ectoplasm knelt and stared him straight in the eyes. “You’re still young, Bakugo, but you’ve been through a lot more than others your age.”

“Whatever.” Bakugo scoffed. But the more he rolled Ectoplasm’s words through his brain, the more he wondered, “Actually, I want to ask you something.”

Ectoplasm stood to his full height. “What is it?”

Bakugo walked to the edge of his cement tower. Ectoplasm followed. Far down below, All Might walked around the gym. Though he was nowhere near healthy, at least he wasn’t a walking corpse that would give small children nightmares. The man eagerly gave advice to Bakugo’s classmates, despite the accident yesterday. If Deku didn’t charge in with that stupid new style he developed, then the man would’ve been reduced to bloody paste when one of Bakugo’s super moves dislodged a large chunk of concrete.

Bakugo clenched and unclenched his hands. He grit his teeth as if to chew through some invisible glue that clamped his mouth shut. Why was one question so hard to ask!? He ran a hand down his face as spat out the words.

“Joker healed a lot of people.” Bakugo growled. Ectoplasm’s expression didn’t change, but his shoulders tensed. “If you had the chance, would you ask Joker to heal you, too?”

The real Ectoplasm near the door stared up at him. Aizawa, who Ectoplasm spoke with, turned to follow his gaze. Over half the clones dotted around the gym hesitated, a few swiveled their heads in Bakugo’s direction. It only lasted a moment, and none of the other extras really noticed it. Except for Aizawa.

Bakugo couldn’t see it from here, but he practically felt the hobo raise an eyebrow. Bakugo’s heartbeat ticked the seconds as they went by. At first, he thought the hero wouldn't answer.

"Why do you want to know?" Ectoplasm asked calmly.

"I've read the forums and watched the news. Hell, I looked up to heroes all my life" Bakugo's mouth went dry. "I want to be the top hero one day, but its so stupid that the public expects heroes to do everything for them while they sit on their asses. I want to see what an experienced hero thinks of it. Someone other than All Might or the hobo, since both of them have been healed by him already."

"I see. That's an interesting perspective." Ectoplasm turned on his... prosthetics? And walked to the center of the plateau. "I agree that it's unrealistic to place so many burdens on one person. Despite what the public thinks, such a thing is impossible even for one as powerful as Joker. But to answer your question," He looked over his shoulder, and Bakugo suppressed shivers as the hero peered at him, "While I'm glad Joker healed All Might and countless others, I would not want Joker to heal me. It would erase everything I've accomplished after that villain took my legs. I've grown comfortable and accustomed with how I am today. Does that make sense?"

Bakugo nodded, nearly dumbfounded.

"Good. Now, if you don't have any more questions, then why don't you take a short break? Or..." The clone widened his stance, "Do you want to continue training? The exam is close, but you know yourself best."

Bakugo huffed as he launched himself at Ectoplasm.

Toga clutched the vials of blood to her chest and grinned.

"You look creepy when you do that." Dabi said dryly.

"Shut up!" She stuck her tongue out at him and pocketed them. They both stared at the unconscious girl laying in the damp alleyway. "I'm just excited, that's all!"

Dabi raised a brow. "Why?"

"Because," Toga smirked as she stared into the black sky. "I might be getting some answers tomorrow."

"Answers for what?"

Toga didn't answer at first, instead she crouched down by the unconscious student and played with strands of her long hair. Dabi raised a brow, but he wouldn't force her. He sighed and made to move, when Toga spoke.

"Why are we still with the League, Dabi?"

He froze. "... What?"

"We've had so many people come and go. Members who got arrested or killed, some who just disappeared without a trace." She looked up at him, her usual playfulness drowned by a somber expression. Lines in her forehead and under her eyes deepened. "You and Shiggy fight all the time, and you always storm off for hours on end. Twice is adorable, but he doesn't know what to do. Kurogiri is almost never around. Who's next on the chopping block? It doubt it'll be long before the next casualty in our group."

"What about you?"

"I've always wanted to live the way I want, but I don't know what I want anymore." Toga brushed the girl's hair with her hand, and stood with her arms folded behind her back. "Why are you sticking around with the League, Dabi?"

Dabi rolled his eyes. "Because of Dusty's sudden obsession with Joker."

"Ooh. You want something with Joker? You've been acting different since the Summer Camp. What did he say before your clone set himself on fire?”

“That’s my business.” Dabi griped. “Just focus on yourself and don’t piss off Shigaraki with whatever you’re doing behind his back.”

“Aww, you’re no fun!”

Dabi rolled his eyes and shoved his hands in his pockets. “If you’re done screwing around, we have to move this girl before she wakes up.”

“Fiiine.”

She skipped away, giggling as Dabi cursed under his breath and threw their victim over his shoulder.

Toga couldn’t wait for tomorrow’s exam.

The world is a bit hectic right now. Stay safe and take care of yourselves <3

If you want to see a full list of the Personas and their builds, as well as a list of confirmed Arcanas, then head to chapter 8 of the Thieves Den. It will continuously be updated accordingly as we continue our journey through this story :)

Run, Run, Run!

Chapter 68: Run, Run, Run!

“You know,” Ms. Joke lost her smile as she propped up her chin with the palm of her hand, “I met him at the Sport’s Festival.”

Aizawa groaned. “Who are you talking about?”

“Joker.”

“What?” Aizawa shot up in the chair. “Where?”

(See the end of the chapter for notes.)

“It’s a tragedy!” The doctor’s voice ricocheted across cold steel and ginormous acrylic tubes. “That ingrate doesn’t know what he took from the world when he killed our master!”

The rows of floor to ceiling tubes were filled with viscous, translucent fluid, and although one couldn’t see directly inside, dark and monstrous shapes floated within. Kurogiri kept pace with the frantic doctor, ignoring how a Nomu’s palm suddenly slammed against the tube they passed.

“I know.” Kurogiri’s wispy body curled with indignation. “Shigaraki Tomura is not taking it well, either.”

The doctor stopped and leveled him with a look, the thick goggles made it impossible for Kurogiri to guess what emotions lay within.

“And Gigantomachia?”

Kurogiri sighed. “... Still inconsolable, but he knows his duty. He will come around.”

“I would hope so. You cannot keep moving him whenever he draws attention during his fits.” The doctor sank against the nearby tube, the Nomu within swimming closer to inspect. “The last thing we need are those heroes snooping around, or worse yet, that vigilante brat sticking his nose where it doesn’t belong. If anyone could bring Gigantomachia down in his current state, it would be Joker.”

“Joker has yet to return to the public eye.”

“But for how long? It’s not smart to underestimate him. We learned that the hard way. I can’t even show my face in public since the raid of our Sapporo laboratory ruined any chance of anonymity.” The doctor waved a hand. “At least his absence gives me time to work. I’m not going to forgive him for taking our master away from us.”

“It’s not what our master envisioned, but maybe Gigantomachia and Shigaraki Tomura could find companionship in their grief.”

“Perhaps. The both of them want revenge.” The doctor hummed. “If they were to unite, and maybe with the additional power of our Nomu...”

Kurogiri studied the Nomu in the tank. Intellect and awareness sparkled in its eyes, but the slight dullness of it told him that it wasn’t completely conscious, either.

“Let’s not get ahead of ourselves.” Kurogiri said. “Remember Kamino. After days of fighting, Joker still had the power to summon that gigantic demon and deal the killing blow to our master.”

“But not without great cost to himself. The heroes may have fooled the public with that little interview, but its clear to me that such a cost was too much for him. Perhaps he has lost that power altogether...” The doctor pulled himself from the tube and tapped his chin, “But we can’t count on that either. A united force of Shigaraki and his reminaing minions, my High Ends, and Gigantomachia may be enough to finish him if he’s weakened.”

“We may need more forces than that, I’m afraid.” Kurogiri’s wispy body sagged a little, “I do not want another tragedy like our master.”

“Then do some recruiting.”

“Giran used to handle that. It’s a shame he was lost.” Kurogiri narrowed his eyes, “But I will try. I’ll talk with Shigaraki Tomura and Gigantomachia, and then search for allies. I’ve heard that those in the Yakuza may be more inclined to join up.”

“That ruffraff.” The doctor scoffed. “But beggars can’t be choosers, I suppose. I need more time with my Nomu, after all the irreplaceable knowledge and resources we lost after that insufferable brat’s antics, and then our master...” He scratched his bald head, and he turned to face the tube. He ran his hand down the acrylic tube, almost fondly. “We’re lucky to have so many quirks copied, but raw materials are running dry. These High Ends require a lot more work than the brainless puppets we’ve used before.”

“I’ll see if I can rectify that.”

The doctor stared at him again, and Kurogiri felt strange prickles through his body at the intensity of it.

“Don’t run yourself dry, Kurogiri. You have your own duties to tend to, and we can’t afford to have you exhausted trying to keep everyone else afloat.”

“I will keep that in mind.”

Kurogiri bowed, and disappeared into his own mist.

The doctor grumbled. He pulled himself away from the tube and wandered down the rows, listening to the low gurgles of Nomu.

“I-it’s huge!”

Class 1-A stood outside their bus, staring at the building looming over them. Other classes from schools across Japan had arrived. Most kept their distance, but they all felt lingering stares within the tidal wave of people heading inside.

“Alright everyone, listen up.” The class stood at attention. Aizawa looked nonplussed by the nerves gnawing through the air. “If you pass this test and get your provisional licenses, then you novice eggs will become chicks. You’ll hatch into semi-pros and you’ll be one step closer to your goal. Do your best.”

“Yes, Aizawa-sensei!” They shouted in unison.

“How about we call out the usual?” Kirishima pumped his fists and grinned. “Plus-”

“PLUS ULTRA!!!”

Midoriya jolted at the intruder standing within their group, his fists to the sky and a near crazed grin on his face. He was taller than anybody else in the class and built with muscle. He wore a different uniform, a white collared shirt and dark pants, but the most eye catching piece was a navy blue hat.

“You shouldn’t just barge in on other people’s huddles, Inasa.” Another pair of students lingered a few steps away, the boy who spoke wore a similar uniform, his dark purple hair messy underneath the hat. “It’s rude.”

The other student, a girl with long auburn hair, watched on. A predatory look came in her eyes as she stared at 1-A.

“Oops! I... am...” Midoriya and the others back away as Inasa locked his hands at his sides, and bowed... head first into the concrete. “So very sorry!!”

“Uh, you okay there dude?” Kaminari asked with a sheepish smile. “I think you’re bleeding?”

“Oh!” Inasa righted himself so fast that Midoriya expected him to get a cramp. He didn’t, as if his infinite enthusiasm scared off any thought of one. “I’m okay!!”

“I-if you say so...” Kaminiari stuttered.

“Oh, blood...” The other girl by Inasa stared at the red splotched dripping down his forehead.

“Wait a minute...” Jiro narrowed her eyes, the her expression fell into shock. “I recognize that uniform.”

Iida pushed up his glasses. “Shiketsu...”

“U.A. is the most famous in the east,” Bakugo muttered, “Shiketsu in the west. It’s an elite school that rivals U.A.”

“You can stand there and gawk all you want,” The purple haired Shiketsu student muttered, “But we have some place else to be.”

“Right!” Inasa grinned wide at them, “Thank you for letting me join in!! I freakin’ love U.A.!!”

“We didn’t let you join in...” Sero said as the Shiketsu group wandered towards the massive building.

Aizawa simply sighed. “That’s the sort of competition you’ll have in this exam. Don’t let your guards down around them. Inasa Yoarashi scored first place on U.A. Recommendation exams.”

“F-first place!?” Sero shouted. “Then why go a different school...?”

“Right? What a weirdo.” Ashido said.

“Like you’re one to talk.” Kaminari smirked, but yelped when she playfully pinched his side.

“He might be weird, but he’s no pushover.” Aizawa deadpanned. “Don’t think that you should underestimate any of the students that came here today. Doing so could put you in hot water.”

“Eraser!? It’s you, isn’t it, Eraserhead!?”

For the first time ever, they saw Aizawa’s eyes widen in panic. He stiffened as a woman with minty green hair marched towards him. She donned an orange bandanna on her head, and smiley faces on her belt. Her striped pants and gloves popped out against her black shirt.

“I knew it was you!” She said as her smile widened. “I haven’t seen you in ages, Eraser!!”

Aizawa’s eyes twitched. “Ms. Joke…”

She stopped in front of him and put her hands on her hips. “Let’s get married!”

“No.”

“Oh, c’mon Eraser! Stop being a tease!”

“Wh-whaaaat!?” Ashido flailed her arms. “I never thought Aizawa-sensei had a special someone!!”

“She’s not .” Aizawa glared, his eyes flaring red. “Don’t get any funny ideas.”

Ms. Joke walloped him on the shoulder, cackling, “That’s a good one Eraser!!”

“You’re hard to talk to, as usual Joke-” Aizawa clamped his jaw shut, as if he were about to say something else. His annoyance dissipated into something… inscrutable. Ms. Joke frowned. She opened her mouth to say something, but Midoriya blurted the words out before he could stop himself.

“The Smile Hero; Ms. Joke!!” Midoriya vibrated in excitement as the others looked in between their teacher, Midoriya, and Ms. Joke. “Her quirk's Outburst! She forces those near her to laugh, dulling their thinking and reaction times! Her villain fights always end up having a lot of craziness!"

"Wow! This kid's good!" Ms. Joke smiled, albeit a bit forced this time.

"You seem to know our sensei really well, kero." Asui said.

"Our agencies used to be close together!" She jabbed a thumb towards Aizawa. "We fell in love-"

Aizawa jolted. "We did not ."

"He refuses to marry me, but my heart is set!" Aizawa face-palmed as a few of his students snickered. Ms. Joke gently nudged Aizawa with her elbow. "You're so worth teasing, Eraser!"

Aizawa inched away from her and crossed his arms. "Joke, since you're here, that means..."

"That's right!" She looked over her shoulder and waved. "Come here, everyone! It's U.A.!"

Another group of students approached. The one in the lead had messy black hair and matching gray eyes, eyes which reminded them all too much of somebody else. Aizawa noticed how some of his students' expressions changed as he smiled brightly at them, the others in Joke's class lingered a few steps behind. Bakugo in particular growled low and glared daggers.

"Oh, it's the real thing!" The lead student stated.

A girl behind him giggled. "Wow, that's so cool! I've only seen them on TV!"

Ms. Joke beamed, "Class 1-A, meet my second years from Ketsubutsu! Please be kind."

“Nice to meet you all!” The lead student approached Midoriya and latched onto his hands. “I’m Shindo! U.A.’s had it tough this year, huh? It must’ve been so rough for all of you!”

“Uh, y-yeah...” Midoriya took a step back, and Shindo blinked rapidly as he let go of Midoriya’s hands.

“What’s wrong?” Shindo’s plastic smile didn’t reach his eyes. “Aren’t you glad to meet another school that looks up to yours? You’ve beaten back villains many times and Joker even hailed you as the next symbols of peace! Boy, it must be hard to live up to such praise!”

“W-well, i-it’s not that,” Midoriya looked behind Shindo and stared between Aizawa and Ms. Joke, each equally confused.

“We can see past your fake smile, jackass.” Bakugo shoved his way to the front of the group, his nose inches from Shindo’s as he snarled. “You don’t fool any of us, so drop the act.”

Aizawa’s eyes widened as a few of the Ketsubutsu students gasped. Shindo himself blinked, caught off guard.

“Oh? I was just trying to be nice!” Shindo’s smile gained a cruel twist to it, his eyes narrowing. “How did you figure it out?”

Bakugo scoffed. “There’s someone else who was a lot better at it than you. You don’t even hold a candle to him, so back off jerk wad.”

The air around them became heavy as everyone held their breath.

“So the rumors are true.” Shindo, still face to face with Bakugo, chuckled. “I wonder, did your class always have this sort of bite, or is it because Joker favored your school over everyone else’s? He seemed close to you in particular. After all, he saved you in Kamino, Bakugo.”

Bakugo bristled, his hands curling into tight fists. Anger sparked many darkened expressions within Class 1-A, with a few like Ojiro and Mineta lingering at the back of the group, unchanged. Asui was the only one with a carefully blank expression.

“Shindo, that’s enough!” Ms. Joke appeared between them and gently pushed them away from one another. A hard line came into her brow as she gave her students a stern look.

Shindo held up his hands. “I didn’t mean anything by it, sensei. Just some light teasing is all!”

Ms. Joke shook her head. “Everyone, go inside and get ready. Save your eagerness for the exam, okay?”

“Okay, okay!” Shindo’s smile of fractured porcelain returned. “We’re going!”

A few of the Ketsubutsu students cast apologetic stares at 1-A as they ventured into the building.

“Sorry about that.” Ms. Joke looked between the class and Aizawa. “I dunno what got him so riled up all of a sudden! Must be pre-exam nerves, you know?”

“It’s fine.” Aizawa stepped up next to her, his eyes on Bakugo, who’s knuckles turned white. “She’s right. You need to prepare before it’s too late. I don’t want to hear about anybody starting fights and getting disqualified before the exam even starts. Am I clear?”

“Y-yes, sensei!” Iida stood ramrod straight. “I’ll be sure to keep everyone in line!!”

“Good. Now go.” Aizawa waited as his class flowed around him, a good majority disturbed by Shindo’s brashness. After they left, he sighed, long and exhausted. “Sorry about that.”

“It’s fine. Shindo means well, and U.A. went through a lot.” Ms. Joke patted his shoulder. “Anywho, I’m actually surprised! You’ve kept your whole class this year? That must be a record!”

Aizawa rolled his eyes as he turned towards the building. “They proved their worth as future heroes. That’s all there is to it.”

“Uh huh.” Ms. Joke chuckled as she fell in step with him. All other students had gone inside the exam building, and now only a few other teachers waited around. “I think you’re going soft, Eraser. You really do have a heart under your gruff exterior! Will you marry me after all!?”

“No.” He growled. “And I am not going soft.”

“Suuuure.”

Aizawa buried his face in his scarf as they went inside. The last of the students disappeared into one of the hallways to change into their hero costumes, but Aizawa went down another corridor. Joke followed him.

Aizawa paused halfway there, his eyes locked on somebody leaning against the wall as he stared down at his phone.

Gang Orca looked up as he felt eyes on him. They shared a mutual nod and went their separate ways. Ms. Joke raised a brow, but didn’t say anything as they finally made it to the stands.

Aizawa scanned the vast stadium. It was a city; complete with skyscrapers, a forest, and an industrial type area similar to one of U.A.’s own gyms. A smaller building nestled against the wall was where the students gathered for the exam, before the building would open up and reveal the true scope of the area.

There was enough room to where Joker’s golden dragon could float around with space to spare. A pang tugged at his heart, and he pinched the bridge of his nose to ward off an impending headache.

“Eraser, are you sure you’re okay?”

“Yes. I’m fine, Joke.” He shouldered past her and chose the middle of a random row to sit. Other teachers and heroes milled around, others on the opposite side of the stadium were mere specs. He glowered at the Hero Commission grunts in suits, who didn’t pay him much mind. “Just have a lot on my mind.”

“Hmmm.” Ms. Joke sat in the row directly front of him. She turned around and lay her arms over the back of the chair. “I know you, Eraser, and I know when something’s bugging you.”

He crossed his arms and sank into the chair.

“You know,” Joke lost her smile as she propped up her chin with the palm of her hand, “I met him at the Sport’s Festival.”

Aizawa groaned. “Who are you talking about?”

“Joker.”

“What?” Aizawa shot up in the chair. “Where?”

“In the first year stands. Some other heroes were bashing your class because news of Silver Falcon just broke out around then. He stuck up for your students when I asked him about it, said that they already feel pressure from society to be the best heroes they can be.” She shrugged as Aizawa stared at her, incredulous. “His answer was real interesting for a kid his age, so I committed his face to memory. I was completely floored when his real identity came out!”

Joker broke into the teacher’s lounge during the Sports Festival. It would make sense that he found a way to bide his time before then, but Aizawa never expected Ms. Joke to have an encounter.

“He’s a smart kid, Eraser.” Ms. Joke grinned at Aizawa. “I’m sure he’s alright, wherever he is.”

A hiss of steam echoed through the stadium before he could say anything, and they stared as the small building down below opened up like the petals of a flower. Hundreds of astonished cries reached their ears.

Ms. Joke whistled. “Hey Eraser, you told your class about the ‘Crushing of U.A.’, right?”

“Nope.”

Ms. Joke gasped as chaos ensued. A deep rumble chattered everyone’s teeth and broken earth splintered the testing ground. Great plateaus and cliff faces rose high into the sky, as if from nothing. It reminded Aizawa of Cementoss’ quirk, but with earth instead of cement.

“Of the 1600 students taking this exam, only the first 100 applicants are passing the first round this year, a tiny fraction compared previous years.” A terrifying smirk broke out on Aizawa’s face as his students became scattered. Others from different schools descended on them like a murder of ravenous crows. “My class shouldered situations far worse than what they’re facing today. They’ve grown so much between now and the Sports Festival, so these brats are in for a real surprise if they think they can underestimate my class.”

Ms. Joke cackled as she righted herself in her seat. “I guess we’ll see what our students are made of, eh Eraser!?”

Aizawa nodded, and got comfortable while his class fought tooth and nail for their right to be heroes.

The ground split open, and the deep rumble overtook the screams of his classmates. Shoto growled as ice bloomed around him, the snap chill stealing startled gasps of students from other schools. But even the crystalline sheen on the ground wasn’t enough to contain it, and spires and platforms rose high over their heads, enough to where it cast shadows and sprinkled broken bits of ice on him.

“Shoto!” Momo rushed to his side.

“Are you okay?”

“Yes.” She scowled as haughty laughter came from above. “They split us up, so we can’t stay here for very long.”

“D-don’t forget about meeee!” Ashido slid around an earthy spire, using her quirk over the ice. “Man, this exam really is intense!”

Shoto huffed as he stared down at one of the targets he placed over his heart. “We stick together and take out whoever we can. With any luck, we’ll be able to help out our other classmates, too.”

Momo put her hand out. “Together.”

Ashido cackled and slapped her hand on top. “Together!”

They stared at Shoto expectantly. He gently lay his hand over theirs, their warmth seeping into his.

“Together.” Ashido grinned and Momo smiled softly at him.

“I have a plan.” Momo said as she produced a pair of ice skates with her quirk. She talked while she slipped them on. “Mina, you’re good at skating, and I’ve had training since I was young. Shoto, you make our way forward with your ice, and Mina and I will cover you from behind.”

“Oh, I cannot wait to see their faces.” Ashido smirked as she tested the weight of the brightly colored balls that were passed around before their exam started. “Time for payback, baby!”

“Got it.” Shoto glanced in between them. “Ready?”

They both nodded, and the scenery exploded in a frosty cascade.

“There they are!!” Voices shouted from above.

Shoto took the lead, his breath coming out in a frozen cloud. Ashido cackled as she and Momo kept speed a few feet behind him.

It wasn't long before more screams rang out, and not from their classmates this time.

“Watch out!”

Iida's world became a blur as he tackled Asui, just in time to avoid a barrage from above. He skid to a stop behind some rocks and set her down. She nodded her thanks and they took off in a random direction, but the shadows of hostile students dogged their steps at every turn. Iida held back a desperate huff as they were surrounded on all sides.

A sudden, blood curdling howl echoed through the man-made canyon, and a dark shape bolted from a crevice. The other students screamed as Dark Shadow rose up and tore the earth out from under their feet, a shower of dust and chunks of rock fell down the spires like waterfalls.

Dark Shadow veered towards them with his arms held wide. Iida got the wind knocked out of him as the sentient quirk scooped them up, their escape covered by the lingering dust clouds. Dark Shadow weaved around the broken earth and set them down. Iida wavered on his feet at the sudden dizziness plaguing him, but he shook himself out of it.

“Are you two okay?”

Iida looked between Shoji and Tokoyami, Dark Shadow loomed over Tokoyami's shoulders like an ebony umbrella.

“Yeah. Thanks for saving us, kero.” Asui croaked.

Iida nodded. "Yes, thank you."

"Think nothing of it." Tokoyami snorted. "But we better come up with a plan to extricate ourselves from this dire situation."

Shoji, his extra limbs forming ears and eyes, nodded. "They're confused, and still can't see because of the dust, but it won't be long before they find us again."

Iida clutched the piece of his helmet covering his chin. A memory flashed in his mind. A dark alley drowned with the scent of sticky copper, the crackle of Midoriya's quirk, and the bright flames from Todoroki. The overwhelming windstorm that blew Stain out of that alley, and Joker-

Joker...

He commanded such authority that called for teamwork. Himself, Todoroki, Midoriya, and Joker took on Stain with a unified attack under Joker's leadership. An attack from all sides that left the opponent nearly helpless... but would it work on multiple targets?

"Iida? Are you okay?" Asui asked.

"Y-yes." Iida snapped out of it and looked at his classmates. "Did anybody get hit yet?"

They all checked the various targets stuck around their bodies.

"Not so far." Shoji said.

"Same." Asui nodded.

"I got Fumi covered!" Dark Shadow cackled, "Aaaand... I stole these from those kids!"

Tokoyami puffed up his feathers as Dark Shadow dumped a large pile of brightly colored balls at their feet.

"I almost don't want to know where you hid those, Dark Shadow."
Asui said with an innocent tilt of her head.

Tokoyami facepalmed. "We don't have time for this."

"Yeah," The urgency in Shoji's voice sent prickles across Iida's skin.
"They're getting closer. It will only be a minute or two unless we move."

"Are they the same students from before?" Iida asked.

"I think so." Shoji said as he looked over his shoulder at Iida. "Why?"

"Most of them would be unarmed thanks to Dark Shadow. If they're still approaching, then either they haven't noticed or they're severely underestimating us." Iida crouched down and snatched the ball at the top of the pile. "It'll be our chance to launch a counter attack with minimal casualties." Dark Shadow chirped in excitement, but the others looked at him in shock. "What?"

"Nothing." Asui poked her cheek. "I never thought you would suggest an ambush."

Iida shrugged, though something small twisted in his gut. "We have no choice, and it's our best bet of all of us escaping and finding the others. Any objections?"

They shook their heads and split the extra ammo between them. They stiffened as the sound of several pairs of footsteps echoed nearby.

"I'll use my speed to split them off in smaller groups." Iida whispered as they crouched together. "Tokoyami, you and Dark Shadow throw down cover fire and prevent anybody from escaping. Asui, climb up above and take out as many as you can. Shoji, see if you can get behind them and take them from that route. Everyone be on guard since we don't know what quirks they have. Understood?"

Determination sparked in their eyes and they nodded in unison.

Iida took a runner's stance as flames burst from the engines in his calves, "Let's go!"

Midoriya's heart hammered against his ribcage as he pressed himself against the wall. He was alone, surrounded by hostiles on all sides. His quirk buzzed just under his skin, and small serpents of green lightning crackled around his fingers. But he couldn't just burst away without attracting attention, stranded and without a plan he was-

"Izuuuukuuuuuu!!!"

He whirled around. It was that Shiketsu girl who had tagged alongside Inasa. Her hero costume was nothing more than a black skin tight suit. Midoriya felt a blush as it highlighted all of her curves, but snapped out of it when she slid down the cliff and sauntered towards him. He fell into a battle stance, a ball in his hand as he aimed for the target on her left shoulder.

She blinked and came to a stop. An easy smile slid on her face, but her eyes were hungry and full of bloodlust. It sent a chill down Midoriya's spine. That sort of look was familiar somehow, but he couldn't quite put his finger on it.

"It's okay, silly!" She said as she put her hands up. "I just wanna talk!"

Midoriya didn't move. It could be a ploy to get his guard down, but the fact that she called him by his first name unsettled him.

"What?" He said as he kept his eyes locked on her, ready for any sudden movements. "Why do you want to talk to me?"

"Well..." She tilted her head and ran a finger under the rim of her Shiketsu hat. "You were friends with Aki-chan."

Midoriya's breath caught as ice thrummed through his chest.

"But he betrayed you, didn't he? I doubt he told you he was Joker all along. That must've hurt, huh? To live a lie where you're none the wiser." Her bubbly voice shifted into something darker, "Do you still consider him a friend, Izu-kun? Would you still reach your hand to him even when he broke the law? Aren't heroes supposed to bring criminals to 'justice'?"

"I-I..." Midoriya shivered. How in the world did she know? The girl's eyes dug into his skin like a predator's talons, and he wet his lips despite the sudden dryness in his mouth. "Akira did hurt me. A lot. It's not like I've forgiven him yet, but I... I understand his reasons. I would save him if I could, no matter what."

Her eyes widened. "So you think it's a hero's job to save everyone, no matter what they did in the past?"

"I do." Midoriya said, his expression hardening with resolve.

She giggled. "Ooooh, no wonder why Stain liked you so much."

"Wh-what?"

"Deku-kun!!"

Uraraka shot around the corner and threw a ball at the other girl. The Shiketsu student zipped away in a blur, the ball zinging through empty air.

"Better luck next time." The Shiketsu girl winked, "Ah well, later Izu-kun!!"

Uraraka gaped at her until she disappeared, then she rounded on him.

"Deku, are you okay!?" Uraraka asked. "You don't look so good. What did she say to you?"

“N-nothing.” Midoriya shook his head frantically. “I-it’s nothing. Let’s just focus on the exam, okay? Are you hurt anywhere?”

Uraraka studied him for a few seconds, but released a breath. “No. I’m okay.”

“We need a plan.” Midoriya peeked around the boulder, Shindo’s derisive laughter echoed from somewhere up ahead. “If only we could get a signal to the rest of our classmates, something we could-”

A beam of sparking light rose up and pierced the heavens.

“Aoyama!” Uraraka said.

“Let’s go while everyone is distracted!”

Uraraka beamed, “Right behind you, Deku-kun!”

“Do you think we’re the first in our class to pass?” Ashido said as she waited alongside himself and Momo.

Their targets had turned a soft blue, and they were given directions to a small waiting room located on the edge of the testing area. It was minuscule compared to the arena outside.

“It’s still early.” Momo said as she looked around. Her eyes passed over the delectable buffet, but ultimately landed on the large screen taking up an entire wall, showcasing Bakugo with Kirishima and Kaminari as they fought against that purple haired Shiketsu student. “I’m sure everyone will be here soon.”

“Yeah.” Shoto narrowed his eyes as they watched the destruction for a few moments, but he felt a prickle on the back of his neck. He scanned the area, it wasn’t difficult to locate the perpetrator.

“Shoto, we’re going to grab something to eat. You want anything?” Momo frowned when he didn’t answer. She exchanged a quick look with Ashido. “Shoto?”

“Go on ahead,” He said as he walked away.

“We’ll grab you something!!” Ashido shouted with an enthusiastic wave.

Shoto stared back at Inasa’s scathing glare. He stopped a few feet away from the towering giant, who had his arms crossed and chin raised. His hero costume was different to his school uniform. He kept the hat, but the rest of his burgundy suit was pinned together with yellow-gold buttons. A long cape fell down his back and fluttered at his ankles, and there were strange tubes sticking out of his legs. He wondered if it wasn’t a propulsion system for his quirk.

Inasa’s glare intensified as Shoto met his eyes once more.

“Did I do something to offend you?” Shoto asked calmly.

Inasa bristled. “Oh, I’m sorry, son of Endeavor,” The anger in Inasa’s eyes boiled over to something... dark. “But I absolutely hate you. You’ve changed quite a bit since I last saw you, but your eyes are the exact same as Endeavor’s.”

Shoto blinked as Inasa turned on his heel, his cape flaring with the movement, and walked away.

“They’re.... like Endeavor’s?”

“Shoto...”

He looked over to Ashido and Momo, their mouths wide.

“What the heck was wrong with that guy!?” Ashido muttered. “Should I go beat him up!?”

“Mina.” Momo never looked away from Shoto’s eyes, “Please go wait by the door. In case some of the others come here.”

“O-oh.” Ashido looked between the two of them. “Right. Sure thing!”

Shoto studied an interesting speck on the floor. He didn’t see how Momo pursed her lips and tightened her grip on the water bottles and snacks she held.

“Shoto-”

“I’m fine.”

“Shoto . Look at me.” He did, looking rather like a kicked puppy on the verge of turning feral. She shoved some food into his hands, and then placed her free hand on his shoulder. Something about her soft touch dumped a bucket of ice water on the quiet rage simmering in his heart. “I know you better than that. What that jerk said wasn’t true, not in the slightest. You’re not like him, Shoto, not at all, the same way that I’m not my parents, either.” He stiffened when she linked her arm with his. “And we’ll show him just how wrong he is when we pass this exam together.”

“Right.” He huffed, but smiled as the rest of the anger flooded out of his veins. “Thanks, Momo.”

Her smile crinkled her eyes and made them twinkle. “Any time, Shoto.”

“Only eleven more spots until the exam is over...” The tired voice over the comms gave Aizawa a run for his money, “Eleven spots....”

“Come on, kids...” Aizawa growled under his breath.

“Only ten spots left... ten...” A yawn overcame the comms. “... spots left...”

Several other teachers from separate schools watched as his class reunited. A veritable sea of pigeons stormed around Aoyama as he blasted his laser into the sky. Familiar quirks came out of the wood-works, from Mineta's ability to stick helpless students to the ground, to Ojiro's flowing movements and Hagakure's power to leave them blinded. Midoriya and Uraraka joined the fray as easy as breathing.

The resulting all out attack left no survivors. It would have been a bloodbath if the balls had been bullets or their quirks struck with fatal intent.

"Time's up." The tired voice called. "All 100 spots have been filled. Hooray."

Ms. Joke's jaw dropped to the floor.

"Geez, those kids scared me for a bit." Aizawa snorted, his terrifying grin returned with a vengeance. "I told you they would all pass."

"You totally did! I'm proud of the ones who passed in my class, but everyone from 1-A actually survived!" She turned her head and did a double take. "Eraser!! You're... SMILING!?"

"Shut up."

"Izuuuuu-kuuuun!" Midoriya stiffened as that Shiketsu girl ambushed him with a tight hug, nearly smothering him. "I'm soooo glad we made it together!!"

"Hey! Get your hands off of him!" Uraraka shouted with puffed cheeks. "Can't you see he can't breathe!?"

The girl blinked, and looked down to Midoriya, who had turned cherry red. "Oops! Sorry!"

Midoriya gasped as she let go, rubbing his throat as Uraraka glared at the girl and grabbed Midoriya's arm. The Shiketsu girl's giggle slithered in their ears as Uraraka dragged Midoriya away, closer to the huddled group of Class 1-A.

“Midoriya!” Kaminari and Mineta were on him as soon as Uraraka let go. Kaminari glared. “How do you know her!? She gave you a hug, a-and you were right into her-”

“Tell us your secrets, Midoriya-kun!!” Mineta shouted as he clapped his hands together in a prayer. “Please!!”

“Knock it off, you two.” Yaomomo pinned them with a stern glare. “It’s embarrassing to yourselves and humiliating for Midoriya.”

“But-!” Kaminari and Mineta looked over their shoulders.

Iida had crossed his arms and gave them the same look, and Todoroki’s icy glare from behind Momo killed off their boyish desires. The two of them crept into the far corner and muttered between themselves.

“Geez, what’s their problem?” Jiro deadpanned.

“Although they have a point, kero.” Asui simply blinked as the others locked onto her with shocked glares. “Not about... that, but that girl seemed to know you, Midoriya.”

“She was with him during the exam!” Uraraka balled her hands into fists.

“N-no she wasn’t! Not like that!” Midoriya waved his hands frantically as his cheeks burned. His hands stilled and they fell to his sides as he scrunched his brow. “But she... she...”

Iida and Yaomomo exchanged a long glance.

Todoroki stepped beside them, frowning, “What’s wrong, Midoriya?”

“She knew about Akira.” Midoriya’s expression pinched “How I was friends with him before... She asked me if I would abandon him just because he broke the law.”

Many in Class 1-A openly gaped. A few stared at the Shiketsu girl, who now chatted among her other classmates that passed the exam. Bakugo froze. The plate of food in his hands, which he had been eating as if the food itself insulted him, creaked ominously.

“Well, there are many rumors going around on forums still, but...” Todoroki’s eyes hardened. “How would she know you were friends with him? Do you think she visited the cafe and saw you there without you noticing?”

“I don’t know.” Midoriya shook his head. “I mean, it’s possible but I don’t think that’s it. Maybe she saw us during Kamino and took a wild guess?”

“Whatever the case, we shouldn’t let them get to us.” Asui gently rubbed Midoriya’s arm. “Both Ketsubutsu and Shiketsu students seem to know what makes us tick, so they’re just saying whatever they want to throw us off. We can’t let them get to us if we want to pass this exam.”

“That, and maybe they’re trying to prove something.” Todoroki scanned the room. “U.A. isn’t the only school Joker put on a pedestal.”

“I guess that makes sense.” Jiro said as she folded her arms. “But they don’t have to be so damn mean about it.”

“In a way, we have to get used to it.” Iida said, though his hands were curled into tight fists. “There will be plenty of rumors and naysayers about us when we become full fledged heroes. I agree with Asui, it’s best not to let their words get under our skin.”

“You know you can just call me Tsuyu.”

Iida flinched. “Right. Thanks, Tsuyu.”

“No problem, kero.”

Bakugo slammed his plate down on a table and stomped away. Kirishima nearly jumped out of his skin, but he trailed after Bakugo as the rest of their classmates gawked.

“What was that was about?” Uraraka whispered.

“I don’t know.” Midoriya said. “Maybe something upset Kacchan? He’s... not really one to let go of things easily.”

“I hope he can control his temper.” Tokoyami, who leaned against the wall, said. “The last thing he needs is to fail the exam simply because he couldn’t soothe his own inner demons.”

Todoroki grimly nodded, and his eyes went to Inasa on the other side of the room. Yaomomo took his wrist and gently squeezed. An alarm blared overhead before they got their wits together, and the giant screen switched to a city swathed in destruction.

“Attention, all heroes!” A voice rang overhead. “Villains have begun a large-scale terrorist attack! This is occurring in all areas of ‘City Name Here.’ Er...” The voice cleared its throat. “Due to the collapsed buildings and other hazards, there are many injured civilians!”

“Wait.” Tsuyu tilted her head. “This is the scenario for our next exercise? Isn’t it just like...”

“Kamino.” Iida muttered.

“Injured civilians...” Yaomomo’s eyes widened. “But many civilians were healed because of Joker.”

“Not all of them, though. Maybe that’s why they chose this.” Midoriya’s eyes hardened as he stared up at the screen, where ‘civilian’ actors had painted themselves with fake blood and pretended to have excruciating injuries. “They want to see what we can do in a situation like Kamino without someone like Joker around to help.”

“Geez, they weren’t kidding around when they said it’d be a brutal exam.” Sero said.

Like the first exam building, this one trembled as the ceiling and walls opened up. Many shielded their eyes as sunlight blinded them.

The announcer continued, “Due to heavily damaged roads, the first group of rescue workers have been delayed! Until they arrive, the heroes in the area will lead the rescue efforts.”

They blinked as the destruction surrounded them. Midoriya, Iida, and the others who snuck into Kamino suppressed bone chilling shivers. The mass destruction was identical to when All For One blew half of Kamino off the map. Midoriya looked up, half expecting to see the sky streaked with countless shooting stars, and the descent of an angelic being.

Thankfully, it was sunny with only a few clouds. No stars, demonic villains, or over a dozen mythological beings in sight... yet.

“Bakugo, wait!!” Kirishima shouted.

Bakugo was the first to launch himself into the destruction after the announcer gave the green light. Kirishima rushed after him, and other students began to follow.

“Remember what Midnight-sensei said.” Yaomomo’s voice carried over to other student groups, who turned to stare at her. “This is a rescue operation, with a chance that a powerful villain will show up. We need secure communications lines as well as a base of operations, and split up into groups to handle specific tasks. One to protect the injured, one to launch a counter attack should this villain show his face, and the final group should be medics to look after the wounded.”

Other students murmured and Iida furrowed his brow. "Does anyone have communicators?"

"I'll make them." Yaomomo walked to the nearest table as her quirk sparked to life. It took only moments for her to make a large pile of ear pieces. Kaminari helped fine tune them. "Everyone! Please take one and break up into those groups. This city is counting on us!"

"Hell yeah!!" Inasa grinned. He was the first student not in 1-A to swipe up an ear piece. "Leave it to U.A. to take the lead!!"

Others in Shiketsu followed. The one girl winked at Midoriya as she took one and then pranced off in the same direction where Bakugo stormed away.

Shindo and his classmates from Ketsubutsu were next, and it wasn't long before the rest of them had the same earpieces.

"Will Bakugo and Kirishima be okay?" Kaminari asked.

"They can take care of themselves." Shoji said. "We just have to believe in them."

"I hope this works." Todoroki muttered.

"It will." Yaomomo said. The pure confidence in her tone eased their worries, and she stood tall and bore a smile. "Everyone, move out!"

"Bakugo, wait up!" Kirishima's footsteps pounded over debris as Bakugo skid into a landing, kicking up a small cloud of dust. Kirishima grabbed his arm before he could launch himself again. "Dude, what's wrong?"

"What's wrong?" Bakugo tore his arm away, and he refused to look Kirishima in the eye. "What the hell do you think is wrong!?"

Kirishima blinked rapidly. "Uh, are you upset because someone brought up Aniki?"

Bakugo snarled as he plowed his way through the destruction. Kirishima was at his heels, utterly bewildered.

"Dude, if you need to vent about something, then vent!" Kirishima half jogged to stay at Bakugo's side. Bakugo's eyes carried a heavy storm and his shoulders reached up to his ears in a predatory slouch, his lips curled sharply into a scowl. "I know something has been on your mind since... well, since we got to the dorms. I'm here for you dude, you just need to talk to me!"

Bakugo stopped. It was so sudden that Kirishima almost lost his balance and crashed into him. Kirishima kept eye contact as Bakugo just glared. After a tense moment, some of Bakugo's anger drained with a long sigh.

"Fine. Fine." Bakugo growled. "You want to know what's wrong?"

"Yes! I do."

Bakugo opened his mouth when a shrill laughter came from behind them. That Shiketsu girl in the skin tight body suit stood on a pile of rubble, staring at them with a smirk. Her gaze stabbed them like a knife and every hair on their bodies stood straight up.

"I think it's obvious what 'Kacchan' is so mad about." She teased.

"Who the hell do you think you are!?" Bakugo snarled at her.

"It's pretty simple." The girl's lips were set in a pout, but the sharp edge in her voice remained steady. "This place looks exactly like Kamino, doesn't it? Except Joker's not around to save your sorry lives again."

Kirishima's mouth dropped open.

"You-!!" Bakugo snapped.

“Oh, but he didn’t just save you, did he?” She leaned forward, and the rim of her hat draped her eyes in shadow. “In return, you left him for dead. You decided to save your own sorry skin and left Aki-chan to die at the hands of that villain.” Her eyes roamed over Kirishima, “You’re just as guilty. Don’t pretend otherwise.”

“We didn’t-” Kirishima tried, but she waved him off with a bored sigh.

“Some hero students you turned out to be.” She shook her head “You can’t even save people who are right in front of you. It’s no wonder Aki-chan won’t show his face, maybe the Kamino Disaster crippled him for good? You should really be ashamed of yourselves!”

“Shut up, SHUT UP!!” Bakugo threw a hand forward, the concussive blow reducing the rubble to ashes. The girl giggled as she jumped away and disappeared into the wreckage. Bakugo panted until the grit clogged his throat.

“Bakugo.” Kirishima fully faced towards his friend. “Don’t let her get to you, man!”

“No, she’s right.”

“She’s not!” Kirishima latched both hands on Bakugo’s shoulders and resisted the urge to shake him. “She’s just saying whatever the heck she wants to piss you off! She doesn’t know what she’s talking about!”

Bakugo knocked Kirishima’s arms away, his eyes red rimmed. “But she’s right .”

“I’ll say it again, she isn’t!” Kirishima cried. “I-I was there too! Aniki didn’t want us to stay there, he wanted us to get to safety! We didn’t abandon him!”

“You don’t understand.”

“Then help me understand!”

"I... I saw him, up close." Bakugo stared into his palms. "He was practically oozing black stuff from his eyes and mouth." Kirishima grimaced as Bakugo stared him in the eye, "We really left him for dead."

"I don't get it?" Kirishima's heart pounded in his ears. "The heroes said he was alive, right? That he just faked his death?"

"... Nevermind." Bakugo huffed as he turned on his heel and walked through an opening in the rubble.

"Hey!" Kirishima piped up as he fell in step with Bakugo again. "What do you mean?"

"Forget about it, Shitty Hair!" Bakugo snapped. "Let's just get this stupid exam over with so we can go home."

Kirishima studied Bakugo, but any comforting words were stuck in his throat. Instead, he smiled, or tried to. It came off a bit shaky.

"O-okay. But remember what I said. If you need to talk, I'll always be in your corner."

"Whatever," Bakugo growled. "Let's just locate the damn villain so we can kick his ass, alright? We'll show them that we don't need anyone to rescue us."

"That's the spirit!"

Kirishima threw on his brightest grin, despite how the falseness of it made his own skin crawl. But he'd push through for his buddy, no matter what.

Gang Orca stared down at his phone. Hoping . Waiting for a text from some unknown number, but he'd know who it was from. It never came. His phone creaked under his grasp as it remained silent. He knew he gave the kid his personal number after the Sapporo incident, so why hasn't he called?

Did he not trust Gang Orca?

Did he simply not need help?

Or... was he in a state where he couldn't call for help, even if he needed to?

"Gang Orca, it's almost time for your villain debut. Are you in position?"

"Almost." Gang Orca grumbled as he put the phone in the locker and shut it, his claws lightly grating on the metal. He headed towards the exit. "How are they doing?"

"Reports are flooding in from the H.U.C. A majority are doing well, honestly a lot better than I expected. One class took charge and assigned tasks to groups, and they've even established a command center and first aid stations. Other teams are working together to comb through the rubble. A good chunk of the 'civilians' have been saved, but a lot more are still in the wreckage."

Gang Orca hummed as he walked through the hall. "Did something happen?"

"Well, we docked two students' points at the start because one taunted the other into attacking. Another student intervened before any real damage was done, but they'll probably fail if they don't get their act together."

"I see. I'll begin the attack in 60 seconds." He turned a corner, where many 'minions' in dark suits and masks waited for him. They were armed with cement guns, bombs, and other gadgets ready for mock combat. Gang Orca jumped into character. He wasn't one of the top rated heroes who looked more like a villain for nothing. "Remember everyone, we're testing these heroes to the best of their abilities! Don't hold anything back!"

"Yes, Boss!!" Many voices chorused in unison.

Gang Orca laughed and cracked his knuckles. He faced the wall and threw on a wicked grin. He took a deep breath, and the wall exploded under his sonic blast. His thunderous footsteps echoed into the decimated city, followed by the rhythmic marching of countless minions. Other explosions rocked the city.

He emerged from the dust cloud, his dark cape flaring. Many young heroes looked at him in terror. He was less than half a kilometer away from the main control center, where a majority of the injured civilians were being cared for.

"Fight and save." He announced, his voice carrying like the smoke clouds hanging over the city. "Can you do both at the same time?"

Gang Orca sliced his hand towards the command center, and his minions charged with a unified cry.

"Villains have appeared and started their pursuit!" The announcer screamed. "Hero candidates at the scene should continue their rescue efforts while also suppressing the villains!"

"What will you do, little heroes," Gang Orca chuckled as his minion army continued to run past him. "Fight, or protect? Save, or run?"

Ms. Joke gasped as chaos erupted across the city.

"This situation would be difficult even for a seasoned pro." Aizawa said.

"Man, they're really not holding back this year." She said as she leaned forward.

“Yeah, I didn’t think they would push it this far.” Aizawa pinched the bridge of his nose. Familiar words formed at the tip of his tongue. “This is really a trial by fire. It wasn’t enough to launch a full scale rescue effort.”

“A trial by fire, huh?” Ms. Joke hummed. “Isn’t that what Joker said ages ago?”

“Yeah,” Aizawa grimaced as Gang Orca directly assaulted the command center. He recognized a handful of his students standing between the ‘villains’ and the injured civilians, among a few from other schools. “I never thought the HC would take it so literally.”

“Especially coming from a kid vigilante.”

Aizawa sighed as he leaned back in his chair, “I doubt they’re doing this just because of Joker.” His eyes roamed across the stadium, picking out the groups of HC grunts whispering and pointing at the students below, “Sure, Joker had a hand in it, but maybe this shit system was always going to fall apart from the beginning, with or without him.”

“Maybe, but I’d argue that Joker made people more aware of the problems so they’d be prepared! People still have faith in heroes, especially when it comes to a certain group of top pros... and maybe a few students.”

Aizawa shrugged, he was about to reply when Ms. Joke suddenly gasped and shot to her feet.

“Shindo!!”

Shindo became paralyzed by Gang Orca’s debilitating sound waves. Todoroki and Inasa stormed onto the scene, wind and fire coiling together, but it wasn’t a unified attack. The sudden change in air pressure whipped Todoroki’s fire away from Gang Orca and directly towards a paralyzed Shindo.

Aizawa gripped the edge of his seat as Midoriya zipped by, clad in green lightning. He grasped Shindo by the back of his hero costume and shot away before the fire consumed them.

“What the hell are they doing?” Aizawa growled.

Ms. Joke gripped her head with both hands. “Those idiots! They almost got him injured, or worse!”

Aizawa buried his face in his capture weapon, hiding his grimace. The battle suddenly changed when Bakugo shot into the sky like an angry dragon, right above Gang Orca and his surrounding minions.

Gang Orca looked upwards, the sun's glare shielding Bakugo with blinding rays. Gang Orca smirked. That was a smart entrance.

“Dragon Cannon!” Bakugo screamed.

Streams of explosive fire burst from his hands, dozens of comets with long tails that streaked through the sky. They whistled ominously as they sped towards the ground.

“Get back!” Gang Orca shouted, but it was too late.

His minions' screams were overtaken by the bone deep explosions strong enough to gouge the earth. Bright flashes and thick smoke clogged his senses as the relentless assault continued. His ears rang and his eyes burned. A thread of explosive fire burst next to him, and he was thrown aside.

He rolled to a stop, his claws scratching the ground as he got to his knees. Silence permeated the grounds as the smoke lazily danced with the wind. His minions were splayed out around him, knocked unconscious by the concussive force. None of them have been hit directly. There were no gory injuries. Plenty of burns, his own skin steamed from the bursts of intense heat, and yet nothing indicated that the attack was intentionally lethals. No stray comets were anywhere near the civilians.

Bakugo landed in front of his stunned comrades. The boy's hands streamed with smoke as he stomped towards Inasa with murder in his expression.

"What the hell was that!?" Bakugo snarled in Inasa's face. The other boy was several inches taller, but Bakugo wasn't cowed. "Are you trying to get people killed!?"

Inasa flinched, matching Bakugo's scowl with one of his own. "No! Todoroki was in my way! I was just trying to handle the villain and his attack messed it up!"

"Me?" Todoroki asked, his voice scarily calm. "You should know that heat changes the air pressure. I already launched my fire towards the villain before your wind redirected it."

"Don't blame IcyHot for your stupidity!" Bakugo jabbed Inasa in the chest and jerked his chin towards Shindo, who was still paralyzed as Midoriya set him down. "What do you think would happen if this were real, huh!? What sort of hero puts his own comrades in danger!?"

Inasa scowled. "Endeavor's son doesn't deserve to be a hero."

Gang Orca noticed heat waves warping the air around Todoroki, but he remained calm and in control.

"Gang Orca, what are you doing?"

"Perhaps this young hero needs to face the harsh reality of his actions." Gang Orca whispered. "I won't let it go on too long, but I want to see where this conversation goes."

There was a curious hum over his comm before it went silent.

"IcyHot isn't Endeavor, dumbass." Bakugo snapped. "Even Endeavor wouldn't be this stupid." Bakugo inched closer to Inasa. "I was at Kamino. I witnessed what a real villain would do in a moment of weakness. You would have blood on your hands.” Bakugo jabbed a finger towards Shindo, “Could you look his family in the eye and explain why he died because of your ego? If you ask me, it’s you who shouldn’t be a hero!”

Inasa’s mouth dropped open. A faint tremble overtook the boy’s body as he glanced at Shindo, who glared back. The weight settled on his shoulders, but Bakugo didn’t give him any time to answer as he turned away.

“Hang back and let the real heroes do their work. Protect the civilians and the rescue heroes behind us!”

“Midoriya, are you okay!?” Another red-headed boy emerged from the rubble, panting. “I saw what happened.”

“Y-yes! We’re fine!”

“Easy for you to say.” Shindo grumbled as he tried to move, but couldn’t.

“Listen up, extras.” Bakugo said as he took charge. “I have a plan if-”

Gang Orca waited long enough. The rest of the smoke cleared and Gang Orca howled with laughter, pushing himself to his feet despite the pulling pain of light burns across his skin. The students whirled towards him, falling into battle stances. Bakugo, Todoroki, Midoriya, and Kirishima.

Inasa stepped back, his eyes still wide in terrified realization.

“Well done!” Gang Orca spread his arms wide. “But I’m not down yet! You’ll have to do better than that, heroes!”

Bakugo bore a malicious grin. “Bring it on, Fish Face!”

Gang Orca matched this boy’s devilish expression, and took a step forward. Suddenly, his hero intuition screamed . A spike of real malicious intent stabbed his spine. He whipped around, fist outstretched. The crunch of a bone breaking crept into his knuckles, and a Shiketsu girl cried out as he knocked her away into the rubble. Something metallic shone in the sunlight before it was lost in the wreckage.

When did she-

Gang Orca didn't even hear her approach.

"Now!"

His attention snapped back to the U.A. students.

Kirishima charged, his whole body going rigid as he used his quirk. Gang Orca blocked the rapid fire punches from Kirishima, who smiled as their fists clashed together. They were locked in a battle of attrition. Gang Orca's bulk and strength would overpower him in time, but Kirishima wasn't backing down.

Gang Orca snarled when they were swallowed by a swirling storm of fire. The flames nipped at their clothes and Gang Orca's previous burns flared in pain.

Kirishima grimaced. His skin wasn't effected by the fire as long as his quirk was active, but his hero costume smoldered. Gang Orca felt his strength drain, and he was steadily losing ground. One of his knees buckled under the sweltering air.

"Now!" Kirishima shouted.

The flames cut off. Gang Orca's skin lightly bubbled. His costume helped shield his body, but most of the pain was around his face and chest. Viridian sparks appeared in the corner of his eye when Midoriya dove for them. The power of a freight train crashed into Gang Orca as Midoriya's kick threw him through the air.

"Die!"

Gang Orca grinned as Bakugo took a wide stance. He aimed at Gang Orca and pulled the pin on his grenade gauntlet. The world was consumed in burning light and the crack of thunder.

He felt himself crashing into a pile of rubble, the scent of his own injuries curling his nose.

“Th-the head villain has been defeated by the heroes!” The comms shouted as his vision wavered. “I repeat, the head villain has been defeated by heroes!!”

The world turned black, and the next time he opened his eyes a medic was crouched over him. He shifted, and the woman smiled.

“Take it easy, Gang Orca.” She said. “Those kids really did a number on you, huh?”

Gang Orca sat up. They were still in the testing city. Bandages and cool cream covered his injuries, and he didn’t hurt as much.

“The exam?” He said as he checked himself over.

“It ended a bit ago.” She said as she packed up her first aid kit. “The students cleared out while medics are double checking the testing site. Your injuries weren’t as bad as they looked and you should be able to move normally, but don’t stress yourself too much, alright?”

She made to leave, but he caught her arm. “There was a student... that girl from Shiketsu. Is she alright?”

The medic blinked. “A girl from Shiketsu? I’m not sure, she might still be around somewhere.”

He nodded. Gang Orca stood fully and scanned the decimated city, particularly the area destroyed by Bakugo’s surprise attack.

“‘Dragon Cannon’?” He whispered to himself. He remembered Seth’s battle with Ryukyu ages ago, and of the striking similarity of certain attacks. “I wonder if Bakugo was inspired by Seth?”

He shook his head and crossed the quiet battleground. It wasn't until he went inside, and had gotten directions from a few other medics, that he finally found who he was looking for. The Shiketsu student leaned against a wall in a forgotten hallway, her arm wrapped in a cast and bandages around her forehead.

She heard his footsteps and grinned at him. "Gang Orca!"

He stopped in his tracks. Something about her smile set off his predatory instincts. "Are you alright?"

"Oh, this?" She waved the cast. "I'm fine! It really hurt at first, but the medics here sure know what they're doing! I'll be fine in no time!"

"I want to apologize." He sighed when she raised a brow at him. "You snuck up behind me and I never sensed you. I used more force than necessary when I felt..." Murderuos intent? But that can't be right. He cleared his throat, "How did you do that?"

She giggled, the sound curdling his blood. "Oh, I've been practicing my stealth! I clear my mind of any thoughts and try to move as quietly as possible. It's really hard, and I've been getting better at it, but I guess it could still use some work."

"I... see."

"I want to ask you something." Gang Orca blinked as she pulled herself from the wall, and lowered her gaze so her hat shielded her eyes. "You want to do that program with Ryukyu, right? Do you really think villains deserve a second chance?"

Gang Orca peered at her, his gaze intense. He answered honestly. "Yes. Villains, especially younger ones, should have a chance at redemption should they want it. I don't expect every villain to go along with it, but for the ones that do-" He looked down at his clenched fist, "They should at least have a chance for a new lease on life."

“Hmmm.” She turned her back to him, her expression hidden. “I like you, Gang Orca. Maybe there is Hope for a decent future after all. This exam has been... enlightening.”

A pit fell in Gang Orca’s stomach as she walked away. “Young lady, wait.”

She stopped, but didn’t turn around to look at him. Her tense posture confused him, as if she were in flight or fight mode.

“I want you to answer me honestly, and I promise that whatever you say won’t get you in any trouble.” He said softly. “Do you need help? Are you in any danger?”

She giggled again. She turned to look over her shoulder and gave him a genuine smile. Something about it was a bit sad, though.

“I’m fine, I promise! I was just curious about your program, that’s all.” She tipped her hat and walked away. “See ya!”

Despite his instincts saying otherwise, Gang Orca let her go.

Several hours passed before they found the real Utsushimi Cami drugged and unconscious in a supply closet.

The sunset’s warming rays streamed in from the windows and painted the teacher’s lounge in a golden haze. Toshinori smiled at his phone. His successor sent a picture of himself beaming while holding up his provisional license. His smile faded as he thought of Aizawa’s texts.

Most of 1-A passed the exam: except for one.

Bakugo. One point away from passing, simply because a villain masqueraded as a student and taunted him into attacking her. Apparently he also yelled at a few civilians who weren’t so injured that they couldn’t move on their own. But he defended Todoroki and led the final attack against Gang Orca. That should've counted for something!

It was ridiculous. That boy must be devastated and embarrassed. Maybe Toshinori could invite him for tea sometime? But then again, Bakugo hardly looked at him ever since Kamino.

With a long sigh, he congratulated Midoriya and went into his contact list. His finger hovered over Nighteye's number. Gran Torino was busy with other things, and Nighteye could teach Midoriya a lot. It's a bit early for the students to think about long-term work studies, but it wouldn't hurt to ask ahead of time.

Toshinori steeled himself and pressed the call button.

"Maybe this was a bad idea, after all." Kaito said.

"I agree." Gentle Criminal skimmed over the dark alley. "It's not wise for us to be out and about. Especially you, Akira."

"I told you, this is important." Ren said as he heavily leaned on the cane borrowed from Gentle Criminal. While he steadily regained strength, he still didn't trust himself to walk any great distance. Compress carried them with his quirk for most of the way, but he wanted to do the rest by himself. He had to. "We're not staying long."

Other shadows clung to the alley. Spinner and Lady Stubbs leaned against the cold wall, their gilded scarves adding a touch of warm color. Mr. Compress sat cross legged on a dumpster lid, twisting his cane around his hands, his expression indiscernible under that Arsene-like mask. Gentle Criminal and La Brava were glued at the hip, always within an arms length of each other.

"But why?" La Brava asked softly. "There are pictures of it online and the grand reveal has been replaying on the news-"

“It’s not the same.” Ren interrupted. “I just need to confirm something in person. That’s all.”

La Brava bit her lip, but relented.

“Well,” Kaito was the closest to Ren, holding the bag where Morgana hid. “Let’s do what you want to do and get out of here.”

Ren pulled the hood of his jacket tighter as the curious stares digging into his back intensified.

“Kaito and I are going with him.” Morgana said from the bag. “The rest of you stay here so we don’t draw unnecessary attention.”

Ren took the first step out into the street.

Kaito clenched his jaw as he followed. Ren felt Morgana’s nerves as he peeked through the slit in the bag. The light clack clack of Gentle Criminal’s cane echoed in the sleepy street. A low, thick fog clinging to the city hid them from anybody who decided to wander around this time of night, the coolness of it gracing their faces. Sunbursts of diffused light came from the streetlamps speckling the area.

Ren powered on towards the new square in the dead center of Kamino. Scorched and burning earth had been smoothed out by fresh concrete, shattered buildings replaced as easily as setting broken bones. Hell, he knew where each and every Persona had been birthed into the world under a united purpose to defeat an underground demon lord. Funny, how so much time could pass in the blink of an eye when you were ill.

He stopped suddenly.

Kaito froze, ready to catch him should he collapse.

“There,” Ren pointed at a building to his right, half hidden by the fog. “Is where Satanael came down from the sky. That building looks a lot smaller than he was, though.”

Morgana held his breath as Ren continued, and they stopped once more in the shadow of a statue several feet high.

All Might, in all of his muscled glory. Joker, coat tails flaring as he held a charming smirk. They stood back to back, with a larger Satanael posing with his arms and wings wide over them. Every detail of the statue was immaculate, so close to the real things that they could come to life and jump down from the pedestal. No smug grin was on Ren's face like his Joker counterpart, nor did Satanael whisper his thoughts in his desolate soul.

Cold candles and photos littered the base of the statue. Damp letters and cards with loving messages scrawled on them. Those who were lost to the destruction.

Ren's throat tightened.

Akechi was right.

This statue felt wrong . A diseased monument jutting out of the earth, an object that never should have been . Ren felt dizzy just looking at it. He longed for those brilliant azure flames that brought his Personas into reality, if only to reduce the fake Joker and Satanael to dust with rending claws. Only All Might deserved to be here.

"Akira?" Kaito whispered after a prolonged disquiet.

"Let's take the picture and be done with it."

Kaito looked around. "Are you sure you want to do this?"

"Yes. We'll wait a while before we post it in order to cover our tracks. Morgana?"

Morgana stuck his nose out. "There's nobody around." He climbed out of the bag and jumped onto Ren's shoulder.

Kaito sighed as Ren handed the cane to him. Ren stood tall and pocketed his hands, and threw on a grin despite the shadow of his hood. He thought it felt sharper than usual, or perhaps not as genuine. He hoped the hood would hide his sickly appearance.

Morgana took a breath and tried to look regal.

Kaito held up the phone, and they heard the snap as he took the picture. Morgana climbed down and hopped back into the bag as Kaito stuck his phone in his pocket.

“We’re done here.” Ren grabbed the cane from Kaito and turned his back on the statue. “Let’s go.”

The hair on the back of Kaito’s neck stood on end. He had never heard a kid sound so bitter. It twisted like a knife into his heart, but he kept his mouth shut as he followed with Morgana in toe. They returned to the darkness of the alley. Their Leader kept his head down as he walked past all of them, the tap tap bouncing from the walls.

“Akira-” La Brava said.

He stopped dead in his tracks, his back turned to them.

“No. Manami, you know that my name is not Kurusu Akira. It’s simply the one I gave you so you could forge a fake identity. I’ve never told you my real name.” Ren said as Morgana wriggled out of Kaito’s bag and climbed on his shoulder once more. Ren turned to face them fully, jamming the end of the cane in the concrete to rest both of his hands on. “But that lie died in the hospital.”

“What !?” Spinner screeched.

Mr. Compress shot up as if he had been electrocuted. “You mean...?”

“Yes. My name...” Everyone held their breath as their Leader, as broken as he had been these past weeks, raised his head with the last dregs of strength. A new light glittered in his eyes like a silver flame rekindled. “My real name is Amamiya Ren.”

The World Arcana thrummed within Satanael like a fading heartbeat, and through him it sustained the others’ deeply slumbering forms resting within. Their one tie to life after the Trickster was brutally ripped away.

Without the World Arcana...

If he had been a moment too late to fully absorb the World Arcana’s powers and save the other Personas, if the wave of the Trickster’s final death struck them before... He didn’t want to think about it. But now they were stranded in a sea of caustic shadows with no way back to their true self. If he even lived. That terror froze Satanael to his core, but he forced himself to believe the Magician revived the Trickster in time, lest he go absolutely mad in this hellish void.

A small twinkle glimmered in the corner of his eye. He swiveled his head towards the tiny blue flicker of flame, glowing to spite the vast Sea smothering it. The writhing shadows recoiled away when it pulsed with faint strength, as if they were afraid. Satanael reached a clawed hand towards it, the warmth seeping into his body.

It sank into his palm, and Satanael gave off a subtle blue glow. It was there and gone within a moment, but the World Arcana drank deeply of it like the roots of a parched tree. A new vigor coursed through them as another small star burst to life within the void.

Satanael smiled.

Not much longer now :)

Also, here's a playlist of any DTESH related streams over on youtube. If you want to see the DTESH Personas in action, then feel free to check them out!

[https://www.youtube.com/playlist?
list=PLlhgzsrNwArRNB12y01IMm5YcZiplmxFC](https://www.youtube.com/playlist?list=PLlhgzsrNwArRNB12y01IMm5YcZiplmxFC)

Next update - April 9th

You Are Stronger

Chapter 69: Slight Change In Update Schedule

Hey guys, whats up. Like the title says, there will be a slight delay in chapters, but not for terribly long. Something happened and I need a little bit of time to recuperate.

Update schedule:

You Are Stronger - April 23rd

Mementos(Upper Layer) - May 7th

Anti-HERO - May 14th

We are extremely close to the next twist in the story, and while the next chapters would have been finished in the usual schedule, it wouldn't hurt to have extra time to polish them more. This bit will be deleted when the next chapter goes up.

Thanks guys. Much love <3

Mementos(Upper Layer)

Chapter 70: Mementos(Upper Layer)

Bruno said it looked like rain~

(See the end of the chapter for notes.)

Tsukauchi rubbed the sleep from his eyes before he entered the little courthouse library. There were a few small cubicles concentrated in the middle, with a small kitchenette on the other side. Tsukauchi heard Nezu from a smaller room to his right, and looked in to see Nezu sitting next to Yaoyorozu.

Nezu looked at him and nodded.

“I won’t be gone long, but do send a message if you need anything.” Nezu said as he squeezed her hand.

“I’ll be alright.” She said, though her smile felt as exhausted as Tsukauchi was.

Nezu nodded, and walked beside Tsukauchi as they went out into the hall.

“Is she holding up alright?” He asked.

Nezu sighed, “As well as can be. It’s never easy in a situation like this, let alone going against her own parents. She’s strong enough to where it won’t break her.”

Tsukauchi nodded. They remained silent as they walked the rest of the way, their footsteps loud in the relative disquiet of the courthouse. Ryoto leaned against the door to a smaller courtroom, away from the main cluster of larger courtrooms down the hall.

“I got your message,” Ryoto said as he pulled himself into standing, “Come on, there’s no one else from our little group yet, so we can talk in here.”

This courtroom was a fraction of the size, with a few rows of seating. Ryoto walked towards the tables up front. Small pitchers of water, glasses, and an assortment of pens on the tables were ignored for now.

“I’m afraid this won’t be as entertaining as when you were in the Kamino hospital,” Ryoto said as he stared at the empty judge’s seat, “With Kunikazu out of the picture, and no objections from the rest of the Commission, this will be a cake walk.”

“I’m surprised no other Commission members came today.” Tsukauchi said.

“Some of them resigned,” Ryoto shrugged, “And those who are left are spineless without Kunikazu’s shadow to cower under. I handled most of Kunikazu’s business while he was still President, so running things has been second nature for me.”

“Speaking of Kunikazu,” Nezu exchanged a glance with Tsukauchi, “Do you know anything about the money that went missing from his accounts?”

Ryoto’s eyes widened, “Missing money? I managed his accounts before he got arrested, but I’ve been locked out since. How much went missing?”

“His accounts were practically bled dry.” Tsukauchi frowned, “There’s no trace as to who had access to his accounts at that time, as if it had been wiped.”

“I’m sorry, I don’t know anything about that.” Nezu looked at Tsukauchi, who nodded. Ryoto was telling the truth. The man cleared his throat, “I’ll do some digging at the office when I get back, and contact you if I find anything significant?”

Tsukauchi smiled, "That would be appreciated."

Ryoto nodded. It was that moment when the doors opened, and Ryukyu and Gang Orca walked in together, with Hawks lingering right behind them. Hawks wore casual clothes, while Gang Orca and Ryukyu chose fine suits and ties, but Gang Orca's looks and Hawks' wings were dead giveaways no matter their wardrobe.

Ryukyu held a bulging folder under her arm, smiling as she placed it on the table at the front. "Are we early? They said 11, right?"

Tsukauchi looked at the clock, which read 10:40, "A bit."

Hawks sighed and draped himself over the nearest chair, "Figures. I should've gotten a snack before we came in. Maybe I'll shoot Rumi a text so she can nab something for me before she gets here."

Gang Orca snorted. "Maybe she'll bring you pancakes."

Hawks gasped, "She wouldn't ! Okay, she would. Maybe I should ask Jeanist instead."

"I can put in an order for your usual, if you want to." Ryoto said with a soft smile. Hawks' wings ruffled in happiness, "But you'll have to wait until this is over. The court doesn't allow food or drink while court is in session."

Hawks' wings drooped, and he sighed dramatically, "That figures."

"What's with the heavy folder, Ryukyu?" Tsukauchi asked with a subdued chuckle.

Gang Orca straightened up and Ryukyu's smile tensed. "I want to bring up the villain program that Gang Orca and I want to start. I figured we could mention it when we get Nezu's vigilante program approved."

Not if. When. Nezu wasn't the only one confident that they'd be successful today.

"I don't see why not." Ryoto said softly.

Hawks raised a brow, "You wouldn't have any objections? The rest of the Commission won't try to stop you?"

"Not personally." Ryoto sighed as he leaned against the table, "I want the Commission to be better. Citizens deserve a unified hero system that will support them, no matter what their background is. Having solid vigilante and villain programs openly available is one step towards that."

"I agree. It is important, now more than ever, to have them." Gang Orca grumbled as his expression fell, "At the exam, when Toga Himiko was right in front of me and I didn't know... she was practically screaming for help, but I let her go."

"Orca..." Ryukyu placed a hand on his arm. "You didn't know. Her guise as a student was flawless."

He snorted, "Maybe so, but it doesn't excuse my failure. If Ryukyu and I can be Councilors towards these wayward souls, then maybe I can make it up to her. Perhaps others who are misguided as well."

"That's a good goal to have, Orca." Hawks said, smiling softly. His eyes trailed over to Ryoto, "I still don't trust the rest of the Commission though. It doesn't have a new president yet, does it?"

"Not yet." Ryoto chuckled, "I might be younger than the remaining board members, but I have the experience and the drive to get what needs to be done. It's only a matter of time before I take the mantle."

Nezu grinned, "A fresh perspective and a new face may be what people need after Kunikazu's downfall."

Hawks wasn't the only one to shiver at their wide smiles.

Anybody would be better than Kunikazu, but maybe Ryoto as Commission President wouldn't be so bad.

Momo wrung her fingers together.

She was out in the hall now, moving around helped clear her mind. She grabbed a drink from the fountain and chose to sit at a bench near the courtroom. Her parents were right past those doors. She hadn't seen them since that night. It wasn't the thought of standing against them that terrified her now, but the agonizing wait made her heart pound and her blood run cold as the nerves slowly ebbed away her resolve.

Momo watched countless former servants and her parents' old cohorts come and go from the courtroom, but they barely gave her a glance before they turned tail and fled elsewhere. She took another short walk up and down the hall as time passed by, but the incessant pit in her stomach didn't allow her to relax. It was her fifth time down the hall when the doors opened and an unfamiliar woman marched out.

A fiery rain of rose colored hair fell down her back in thick braids, making her pale eyes stand out like a crystal blue river. She wore a dark, crumpled suit and slacks, but the leather gloves on her hands were brand new. The deep crease in her brow eased as she locked eyes with Momo.

The woman leaned in, "You're... the Yaoyorozu heiress, aren't ya?"

Momo stiffened, "Y-yes? And you are...?"

"Ah," The woman grinned and stuck her hand out, "I'm Hatsume Ichinose! Nice to meet ya!"

Ice flowed through Momo's heart as she shook the woman's hand. The leather hid it, but she didn't feel flesh underneath, rather it was hard and a steely coldness permeated into Momo's palm.

Hatsume pulled back and rolled her wrist. "I wish we could meet in better circumstances, young lady." Hatsume sat down at the same bench Momo used earlier, “Why don’t we sit and chat for a while? Unless you’ve other things to do while you wait your turn through the wringer. Just got done with that myself.”

Momo bit her lip. The detectives asked her the same questions over and over. What her home life was like before and after her parents had money. The very first memory she had was her mother holding her on a beaten up couch, old cobwebs and cracks lining the ceiling. Then they asked if she ever suspected anything strange with the sudden change in their lives, and most importantly, that night with her encounter with Joker and of the calling card for her parents.

Hatsume raised a brow at the prolonged silence.

Momo decided to bite the bullet and sit on the edge of the bench, a good few feet from Hatsume. Maybe Hatsume felt the guilt radiating off of Momo, because she scooted closer and put on her warmest smile.

“I’m sorry.” Momo blurted.

“What are you sorry for?” Hatsume’s smile fell. “Are you the one that destroyed countless other businesses?”

“Wh-what?” Momo blinked rapidly, “No.”

“Are ya responsible for your parents’ actions?”

“N-no.”

Hatsume slipped off her right glove and showcased a sleek, golden hand, and Momo picked up the sound of ticking gears without the glove to dampen them. The metal was decked with swirling designs of ivy and bountiful leaves, with a dragonfly on the back of her hand. It moved as fluidly as a real hand, a masterwork so beyond Momo’s comprehension.

“Did you sic a wild contraption in the labs at I-Island, the same one that made me lose an arm and my spot there?”

Momo's eyes fell to the ground. “... No.”

“Then you have nothin’ to apologize for, darling.” Hatsume replaced her glove. “I’m not one to blame kids for their parents’ mistakes, and it’s clear as day that ya don’t support what they did either.”

“No, I don’t.” Momo hugged herself. “I’m testifying against them.”

Hatsume hummed. “They might be saving you for last. Keep your chin up, kiddo. You got this.”

Momo turned to her, eyes wide. “Thank you.”

Hatsume smiled, but that faded into another expression that Momo couldn’t decipher. The woman’s eyes peered into her own, and those lines in her forehead returned.

“Are you alright?” Momo asked.

“Right as rain, mostly. It feels so good to get all of that garbage off my chest, you know? But...” Hatsume blinked, and she stared down at her clenched hands with uncertainty. “You wouldn’t happen to remember an old pocket watch decorated with your family crest, would ya? It was a true work of art, the type of clockwork I haven’t seen in years.”

“An old pocket watch?” Momo scanned through her memory, “I remember my grandfather having something like that, but it was lost. Why?”

“I know where it is. Well, at least who has it now.”

Momo gaped as the woman retold her story. To fall into the hands of Joker was a brittle irony she had to swallow.

“I sold him all the parts he needed to fix it,” Hatsume said, “I wouldn’t be surprised if it worked like a charm now. Maybe you can ask for it once Joker gets to U.A.”

“How do you know about that?” Momo asked.

Hatsume grinned, “I have my fingers in a lot of pies, darling. My own Mei listens when most people think she’s too busy tinkering. It’s not hard to put the pieces together.”

“Do you think he’d really give it to me? Clearly it wasn’t being taken care of before.”

“Joker is a gentleman.” Hatsume chuckled, “I’ve only met him once before I knew who he really was, but it was clear as day that he treated his friends with respect. I think he’d treat you the same, darling.”

Whatever Momo was about to say cut off as Hatsume’s front pocket bulged, and Momo witnessed a sleek shape crawl out and skitter down Hatsume’s sleeve.

“Flit!” The woman slapped her other hand on her arm. “I said you needed to stay in my pocket! Geez.”

“Um...”

“This one always gets excitable! Not as much as Whistler, but she’s still a feisty darling sometimes.” Hatsume cackled as she opened her hand.

A mechanical dragonfly rested on Hatsume’s palm, a beautiful shade of teal metal embellished with dancing silver, similar to the engravings on Hatsume’s mechanical arm. Its gossamer wings were made of translucent glass, its legs and chest showcased tiny ticking gears like the beat of a heart, and bejeweled sapphire eyes. Hatsume poked Flit’s back, and the dragonfly transformed with fluid grace. It tucked its legs and wings in and rolled lazily in her palm.

“Is that... a pen ?”

“Sure is! That’s only one of her forms! She can be a pen, or a decorative brooch, a lock-pick, a screwdriver, among a few other handy little things.” Hatsume smirked as she twirled the dragonfly pen(?) in her hands. “I was bored one night after writing down a bunch of new invention ideas, and the idea just came to me as I was holding a pen. My quirk lets me give life to anything mechanical I create.” Hatsume held out her palm. “You want her?”

Momo flinched. “Why would you give it- her to me?”

“Why not? I have a workshop full of them!”

Momo nodded as Flit shifted back into a dragonfly. Flit took off, her wings singing like pleasant wind chimes on a summer’s day as she darted around Momo’s head. Momo smiled as Hatsume gestured for her to hold out her hand. Flit landed on the tip of her pointer finger, the metal felt like tiny, cold pinpricks. Flit’s wings fluttered, the light made them akin to liquid gems.

Momo chuckled as she pet Flit with her other hand, “I’m going to start over after this. I will make up for what my parents did.”

Hatsume beamed, “Then take Flit as a sign of my goodwill! She likes you a lot. Hell, maybe we could work out a deal after you graduate, given my Mei agrees with it. I’m sure she won’t mind too much if she knows one of my darlings is with you. They’re a good judge of character.”

Momo smiled. “That would be nice.” She ran a finger down Flits back, and the mechanical wonder crawled into Momo’s palm and transformed into a pen.

“Ah, making friends, are we?” Nezu approached from down the hall, beaming. “Wonderful.”

“Yo, Principal Nezu!” Hatsume waved, “I hope my Mei isn’t racking up damage costs?”

“None that we can’t handle, though Power Loader loses his mind occasionally.” Nezu said.

Momo looked down the hall and saw Tsukauchi and a familiar group of heroes behind him. They stayed back, talking among themselves. Ryukyu and Gang Orca couldn’t hide their smiles. Hawks and Miruko playfully poked at one another, laughing. Best Jeanist watched them with a faint smile. Momo would recognize Iida’s older brother anywhere.

“Did everything go alright?” Momo asked.

“Indeed! My Vigilante Program is officially approved!” Nezu tapped the folder under his arm. “It was quite a simple procedure with certain roadblocks out of the way, and we managed to get a good word in about other programs.”

The courtroom doors opened and people streamed out. Hatsume stood and grabbed the sleeve of the closest reporter.

“What’s going on?”

The man with mismatched pupils stared at her, before his gaze lingered towards Momo. Nezu cleared his throat, and the man jumped.

“They’re taking a lunch break. They’ll reconvene in an hour.”

“Perfect timing, I’m famished!” Nezu turned towards Momo, “Shall we step out for a bite to eat? You can bring your new friend with you, of course!”

Momo nodded. Flit shifted and took off, hovering musically by her ear. As she got to her feet, familiar voices froze her to her core.

“Momo?” Her mother gaped from the courtroom door, her father right behind her, blinking wildly. “Momo, we haven’t seen you in months!”

Momo stiffened. She looked at her parents head to toe. They had always been perfectly dressed, perfectly groomed, not a single hair out of place. But now, they looked harried, and mother’s make-up wasn’t flawless as it usually was. Father had no color in his face and heavy bags wore under his eyes.

Her mother stepped closer, and Momo took a step back. The ball of ice hardened over her heart as her mother gave her a pained look. Momo placed her hands over her stomach and raised her chin, her heart pounding.

“Mother, the next time I see you will be when I testify. Goodbye.”

“Momo?” Her mother flinched, and tears welled up in her eyes, “How can you say that? Momo!”

Momo turned on her heel and walked down the hallway, her footsteps echoing across the dead silent hallway. Flit landed on her shoulder, facing Momo’s parents as her wings rattled and she gave off a shrill metallic hiss. Joker’s heroes let Momo pass and formed a wall behind her.

Momo never witnessed the cold, calculating glare Nezu gave them that stopped her parents dead in their tracks, nor of the too-quiet words that struck them like a whip. Endeavor, who had come out behind them, put a deceitfully gentle hand on her mother’s shoulder, and she sagged under the number one hero’s grip.

Thankfully, the lawyers separated them before any blood was shed.

Ryoto was swamped in stray papers and files, of reports and documents galore. He’s been filtering through the Commission’s library since the hearing with Nezu’s program, with only a few breaks to eat and cat nap. But it was clear that everything dealing with Kunikazu had been... tampered with.

Dates, names, entire pages of certain files, all missing or blacked out, and with no backups to boot.

It couldn't be recent, as some of these files were many years old, old enough to predate Kunikazu Hiroto's time as Commission President. Confusion swirled in Ryoto's mind as he opened another bundle of folders, his other hand rubbing at his temple. Something within him buzzed with deep seated dread, and maybe small hints of betrayal. He had been Kunikazu's right hand for years, so how had he never looked through these files? Kunikazu kept him busy with other affairs, and perhaps the man pulled the strings behind everyone's back while they were preoccupied.

Ryoto cursed when these reports didn't reveal anything significant.

"Kunikazu, what the hell are you hiding?"

He looked up, trying to blink the strain from his eyes. He still had mountains of paperwork to rifle through. Joy.

Cracking this puzzle would take much longer than he thought.

In truth, Momo barely remembered the rest of that day. She vaguely recalls exchanging a few words with her classmates, their eyes full of questions she couldn't answer or unspoken concerns she had no energy for. Word of the successful Vigilante Program spread around Japan like wildfire, not that she gave it much thought. She collapsed face first in her bed and was out like a light, unaware of how Flit explored her new surroundings before going dormant on the nightstand.

Now, finally walking into that courtroom after days of stillness, her own footsteps matched the pounding of her heart. The glare of heavy camera lenses prickled against her skin like cold waves, leeching the heat from her clammy hands. For some reason, she felt as if she were a foreign viewer and somebody else controlled her body. The rest of the world was showered with a strange fuzziness. She remembers swearing that she would tell the truth out loud to the judge, sitting down in the hard chair, of Flit's glittering body as she clung to Momo's sweater as an unassuming brooch.

Her parents and their lawyers were blurred figures in the corner of her eye, her main focus was upon Shoto's mismatched gaze from the back of the room. Fuyumi smiled at her, and Natsuo threw her a bright grin and a thumb's up. Endeavor, as stoic as rock, sat tall with his arms crossed. Nezu was a tiny white smudge beside him, but the raw power and confidence they all exuded bolstered her own strength of will.

She smiled, sat up straight and held her head high as the examination began.

Ectoplasm finished writing the equation on the board, a string of numbers and variables he knew by heart. He turned to Class 1-A expectantly.

"Who would like to come up and solve this example?" He asked.

Ectoplasm waited in dismal silence. The students were downcast and unfocused. Their books were open, but some lamely scribbled in their notebooks or fidgeted quietly in their seats. Even Iida, as studious as he was, stared off into space with pensive eyes. Ectoplasm glanced between the empty seats, the cause of such behavior.

"How about we save this lesson for later." Ectoplasm capped the marker and sighed, drawing curious gazes. "It's clear that you'd have trouble absorbing the lesson with other things going on."

Iida flinched out of his stupor. "I apologize, sensei!"

“You have nothing to apologize for,” Ectoplasm waved his hand and took a seat at his desk, “You’re all concerned for Yaoyorozu, especially with the verdict looming. Why don’t we spend the rest of class as free time?”

Books closed as murmurs bounced around the room. Phones were whipped out and it was obvious what they searched up, Ectoplasm decided to check in on the trial. It was the final day, and he rewatched Yaoyorozu testify against her parents twice. They couldn’t show her face, but he could imagine her expressions as they questioned her. Funny, how her parents’ lawyers obviously expected a shy, sheltered girl who’s words could easily be twisted in their favor. Instead, she stated the truth with merciless efficiency, and gave those lawyers a real run for their money.

He wondered how proud Nezu was of her.

Ectoplasm went to a familiar news site, the words ‘BREAKING: VERDICT REACHED FOR YAOYORZU TRIAL!’ were at the top of the page. That... didn’t take as long as he thought it would.

Ashido slammed her hand on her desk, “Everyone!! The verdict! It’s-”

“Guilty for all charges.” Iida’s voice became heavy. “I knew it would probably be that with Japan’s legal system, but still...”

“They must own up to their acts of injustice.” Tokoyami whispered, “There’s no escape from their evil deeds.”

“Poor Momo,” Asui said, “I can’t even imagine how she’s feeling right now.”

“Hey, Todoroki and Nezu are with her!” Kirishima’s grin was shaky at best, “She’ll be okay!”

“I hope you’re right,” Kaminari scrolled through his phone, “But I wonder what it’s like to have criminals as parents- YEOWCH!”

“Idiot.” Jiro’s ear jacks stabbed repeatedly into the boy’s arm and shoulder. Ectoplasm made no move to stop her. “Do you have any tact in that static you call a brain?”

“I’m sorry!!”

“You should be.” Jiro snapped. “Don’t you dare say something like that in front of Momo, or I swear to whatever gods are out there that I’ll do worse than this .”

lida facepalmed as their voices steadily grew in volume.

Momo didn’t feel her footsteps over concrete as they stepped into U.A. Seeing her parents, now convicted criminals, being handcuffed and led away from the courtroom, their eyes dug into her as they called her name...

She shook her head.

After the trial, Endeavor had pressed a card into Fuyumi’s hand and disappeared, much to Natsuo and Shoto’s relief. They went to dinner at a hotel buffet in Tokyo, driving rather than taking a busy train, to do so. The place was high end, full of crystal chandeliers and divine food, and an actual orchestra played somewhere in the lobby. She didn’t want to imagine Endeavor’s face when the bill came through.

Natsuo especially piled on the most delectable food.

She nodded along and took small bites, the ever curious Flit moving around in her pocket. Shoto gave her a strange look when he noticed, not that she was really coherent to explain. Now, back within U.A.’s walls, she walked as if she were in a dream, leaving everything else in a muted fog.

“You can find your way from here?” Nezu said.

“Yes, sir.” Shoto stared at her for a moment, “I’ll make sure we get back.”

Momo blinked. She could’ve sworn they were at the entrance to the school a second ago, now there were only a few turns in the cobblestone pathway to reach their dorm building.

“Very well.” Nezu folded his paws together and smiled at her, “I’m proud of you, Yaoyorozu. Not many would shoulder something like this so well, but I am simply one phone call away if you ever need to talk! I’m sure your classmates would love to help you, too.”

“Thank you, Nezu.”

He squeezed her hand, before he turned down the fork in the road towards the teacher’s dorms.

Shoto walked a few steps the other way, but stopped, frowning, as she simply stood there and watched Nezu disappear out of sight.

“Momo?” She jerked, “Are you okay?”

“Y-yes.” She hugged herself and stared at the ground. “I’m alright.”

Shoto approached her. Warmth seeped into her hands as he gently grabbed both of her palms and placed them together. She jumped when he sharply clapped his hands over hers, the light pain and sudden shock jolting her from her daze.

“Does that feel better?” He asked.

“Yes,” She blinked rapidly and pinched the bridge of her nose.

“Natsuo told me to do that since you were...” He tilted his head, “Well, pretty out of it. I should’ve done it earlier.”

“Thank you.” She smiled as her surrounding turned sharper, and she could focus on the rising trees and pale moonlight around them. “I’m still in shock over everything.”

“That’s natural. It’s going to take a while to accept it.”

She nodded, and they continued down the path.

“Maybe we could have some cold soba for dinner tomorrow.” Momo smiled at him, “We still need to celebrate passing our exam.”

“We could wait until the picnic for that.”

She blinked. “Picnic?”

“Yeah, the others wanted to do something to cheer everyone up. If I remember right, it’ll be after our last class on Saturday.”

“Oh.” She smiled, “A picnic with everyone sounds nice.”

They walked inside and just took off their shoes before a thunder of footsteps echoed from the common area.

“Momo!!” Ashido tackled her into a hug, “You’re finally hooome! Are you okay!?”

“Mina...” Momo smiled as she wrapped her arms around the girl, bright pink hair tickling her chin, “I’m alright, I promise.”

Ashido pulled back, sniffing, “A-are you sure?”

“Yes, I’m sure.”

At that moment, Flit squirmed out of her pocket and buzzed around them.

Ashido gasped as Flit landed on the top of Momo’s head, “What is that!?”

“Ashido!!” Iida puffed his chest and chopped both of his arms, “Let her have some breathing room!”

“Fiiiine.” Ashido pulled back, but gently grabbed her wrist and pulled her into the common area, the others making way. “Do you need anything? A snack, a pillow, maybe a foot rub?”

Momo chuckled as Mina made her sit on the couch, then plopped down next to her. The other girls surrounded them. Flit’s head swiveled to get a good look at all of them. Iida sighed, but he hung back as Shoto sat on the couch arm.

“I’m just a little tired.” Momo smiled as they all stared at her, “It’ll take some time to come to terms about what happened with my parents, but I’ll pull through. I’m glad it’s over. In all honesty... I barely remember what I said when I testified. It all went by in a blur.”

“Bravery courses through you,” Tokoyami nodded from the other side of the room, “As expected from our Vice Representative.”

Asui sat at the coffee table and placed a hand on Momo’s knee, “But don’t take it all on by yourself, kero.”

“Yeah!” Uraraka nodded, “We’re totally here for you!”

Kaminari nearly blurted something, but a pointed glare from Jiro made him clam up.

“Hey, I have a cake in the kitchen!” Sato said, “Did you want some?”

“No, but thank you.” She said, “I think I’ll call it a night soon. I’m going to classes with you all tomorrow.”

Iida flinched, “You don’t have to force yourself. Nobody will bat an eye about you taking an extra day to recover!”

“Thank you, I’ll think about it.”

“Now, can you tell us what this is!?” Ashido pointed at Flit, “It looks sooooo cool!”

“I thought I saw something move in your pocket at times. I thought it looked like that dragonfly brooch you wore earlier.” Shoto blinked, “Did you have it the whole time?”

Momo laughed as she explained how Flit came to be in her possession. She reached up and pet Flit, then the metallic dragonfly darted around her classmates as Momo introduced her to everyone. But as the conversation went on, the more she found herself yawning and rubbing her eyes.

“I think you should call it a night, kero.” Asui smiled, “We can talk more later. Flit is always welcome too, of course.”

Flit buzzed in appreciation as she landed on Momo’s shoulder.

“I think I will,” Momo said as she got to her feet and bowed her head, “Good night, everyone.”

“Night!” Ashido waved.

They all breathed a collective sigh of relief after Momo went upstairs.

“Man!” Ashido fell over the couch and sighed dramatically, “I don’t know how Momo is so strong.”

“No kidding.” Kirishima crossed his arms, “I’d be totally wrecked if my parents did something like that!”

“She was terrified when she walked into the courtroom to testify.” Shoto said, “But once she got to the stand it was like something clicked in place for her. They questioned her about her encounter with Joker and then his calling card to her parents, but it was the final nail in the coffin.”

Tokoyami cleared his throat, “We do not know what we are truly capable of until we experience something that harrowing. The USJ, Summer Camp, and Kamino were harsh battles in their own right, but standing your ground in a court of law, against the ones who raised you, is a whole other ordeal.”

Iida firmly nodded. “Now that Yaoyorozu is back, its time for everyone to get to bed. It’s getting late!”

“Nooo!” Ashido splayed her arms, “I’m not even tired yet!”

“Come on, Mina,” Asui croaked, “You don’t want to be tired during class tomorrow.”

“I can never pay attention whether I’m tired or not!”

Shoto shook his head and stood from the couch arm, when his phone went off in his pocket. Curiously, they heard trills and rings all across the common area from everyone’s phones, too.

“What, did someone send a text to the group chat?” Hagakure asked.

“Maybe Bakugo or Midoriya forgot somebody’s trash?” Kaminari said.

“No, they took everything out hours ago.” Jiro stated as she got out her phone, “It must be something else.”

“You guys!” Kaminari shouted, “It’s-”

“This... this is...” Kirishima couldn’t find words, his eyes went wide as his mouth dropped.

“Uh... I’m gonna go check on Momo in case she sees this.” Uraraka bolted from the room with Asui on her heels.

Shoto couldn’t tear his eyes away from the Spotlight notification. His stomach turned as he tapped it, and it opened to a brand new update from Joker. It was a simple photo, just Kurusu in casual clothes with Mona on his shoulder, right under the shadow of the grand Kamino Memorial statue. He refreshed the page, and already it had hundreds of reactions and comments.

Texts from his siblings flooded to his phone next.

“Everyone,” Iida’s expression sobered as he clutched his phone, “I’m serious when I say we should all go to bed now. I think... we all need some time to digest everything that’s happened this week.”

“Y-yeah,” Ashido shut off her phone and got up from the couch, “Night everyone!”

They split from there, everyone bearing a variety of expressions. It wasn’t until he and Iida were alone on their floor that they spoke in hushed whispers.

“First Bakugo and Midoriya, then Yaoyorozu and her parents’ trial, and now this...” Iida sighed, “I remember what we talked about, Todoroki. I thought about it all the time, and now I feel nothing but relief.”

He nodded, “We finally get confirmation that Joker is alive, and everyone from our class is in one piece. That’s all we can ask for.”

“Right...” Iida shook his head and turned away, “Good night, Todoroki.”

“Night.”

Shoto sighed when he shut his door behind him. Headlines already sprouted across several news sites, and the class chatroom blew up. A few people were absent, like Bakugo and Midoriya. Momo, too. He sent a text to Midoriya asking if he was alright, but he never got an answer.

Shoto didn’t sleep well that night.

Hawks splayed his wings to slow his descent, ignoring the excited cries and flashes of cameras as he landed beside the Kamino Memorial statue.

Miruko bolted to his side, "Anything?"

"Nothing from the air." Hawks' lips formed a thin line. "How about you?"

"Nope," She gestured towards the statue, "Not a note, or a calling card, or even a lick of evidence to where he went off to after the picture was taken."

"So he posts the picture and disappears," Hawks hummed. His eyes went to the police tape surrounding the square. It was hardly 7 in the morning and the crowd was enormous. Did these people have nothing better to do? "What was his aim? There's no caption or anything on the photo."

"I dunno." Miruko's snow white hair bounced as she shook her head. She leaned closer and whispered, "Have you noticed anything with the Yaoyorozu trial? Barely a day after the verdict and people are already forgetting about it."

Hawks blinked. He double checked his phone, and she was right. Any articles and malicious gossip about that family went out the window, and now there was nothing except news of Joker's first Spotlight update in months. The tabloids were literally on fire.

"Maybe covering for the Yaoyorozu heiress was part of his goal, but its clear he doesn't want to be found yet." They turned to Ryukyu, who had finished her half dozen turns around the statue.

"Why couldn't he reach out to us?" Miruko growled under her breath, wary of the cameras pointed at their backs. "He knows we'd have his back!"

"I don't know." Ryukyu dragged her hand down her face. "I'll make the report and say we found nothing significant at the statue. You two update the others."

"R-right." Miruko said as Ryukyu walked away. She muttered to Hawks. "I'll text Orca and Jeanist."

"I already updated Iida." Hawks said as his wing feathers twitched in agitation. "He's keeping a close eye on Joker's Spotlight, too. It already broke record numbers, even compared to top hero posts."

Miruko grumbled and typed on her phone with more force than necessary. She was worried. That much was obvious. But she wasn't the only one, Hawks thought as he walked towards the base of the statue. He stopped in the same spot where the kid posed for the picture, the shadow of the overbearing statue smothering him like a heavy storm cloud.

He shuddered at an unknowable weight in his chest, and ran his fingers down the square dais lifting the statue into the sunlight. Hawks cast a glance at statue Joker's smirking expression, and frowned.

He stepped away before the lump in his throat strangled him.

"He did what ?" Nighteye asked as he facepalmed.

"Yeah! It spread around the school before morning classes that day, and we all saw the smoke from the training ground! I was curious, so I decided to get a look at Midoriya for myself." Mirio, his pride and joy, chuckled, "I think I scared him though, because he dropped the trash everywhere. I kinda felt bad!"

"I can't believe Yagi asked us to take him on." Nighteye sighed as he leaned back in his chair, his eyes occasionally scanning his office full of All Might memorabilia, "How can we trust him to follow orders if he can't even follow school rules?"

Nighteye felt the smile leave Mirio's face when his voice became somber, "I think you should give him a chance, Sir."

"Why? We shouldn't waste our time with someone who won't listen."

"It's not that. He's someone All Might himself recommended! Shouldn't that be worth something, Sir? I would be excited to have a kohai, and you know Bubble Girl and Centipeder would say the same! Come on, Sir! Pretty please?"

Nighteye pinched the bridge of his nose. He couldn't say no to Mirio, he just couldn't. After a moment, his hand fell and he sighed, although a reluctant smile formed on his face.

"Fine, I'll give him one chance." Nighteye said, "But I am going to test him. If he can't pass, then he has no business working at my agency."

"Yes! Oh! Aizawa-sensei wanted us to talk to the first years about work studies. I know Nejire and Tamaki wanted to get a good look at the other students too, even if they don't say it out loud. I know Tamaki would never admit it!"

"Alright, let me know how it goes."

"Yes, Sir!!"

Mirio hung up, and Nighteye set his phone on his desk with a long sigh. He stared at his computer monitor, the current tab open to Joker's latest update on Spotlight. The Yaoyorozu case had been all but forgotten on the sidelines, and the number of people flooding to Joker's page nearly caused the site to crash more than once. More rumors broke out about U.A.'s program, and the lack of a renewed arrest warrant for the teenage vigilante since.

Those fools.

“U.A.’s program, Joker, All Might...” Nighteye clasped his fingers together and rested his chin on them, “And now Midoriya. Will I get answers I’m looking for if I take Midoriya on? Joker interacted with Class 1-A, perhaps that bond is where the truth hides. Is it truly just Joker who’s able to change the future, or can he be a catalyst for other unforeseen changes?”

He shut off his monitor, though Joker’s dagger sharp grin half hidden in shadow was seared into his mind.

Perhaps Mirio was right. He would never find answers if he stayed stagnant and unmovable, but Midoriya would have to earn his place if he wanted to work at Nighteye’s agency.

In the future, he’d look back on this moment and curse everyone’s blessed ignorance to the truth. He’d wonder why he never saw how that small, unsuspecting rabbit hole opened up into an endless, all-devouring chasm.

“Cheer up, Tamaki!” Nejire fondly elbowed her friend as they walked down the hallway towards a certain classroom, “It won’t be that bad!”

Tamaki paled, and stared at the ground as if he wished it would swallow him, “Easy for you to say. You love being in front of a crowd. I don’t.”

Mirio grinned, “Don’t worry! Just let me and Nejire do most of the talking! You don’t have to say two words past introducing yourself!”

Tamaki withered, but didn’t say anything as they reached the door and Mirio knocked.

“Come in,” A familiar tired voice said. Mirio opened the door and they marched in. Class 1-A gaped as Aizawa gestured to them. “The three third years at U.A. who stand at the top of all current U.A. students- also known as The Big Three.”

Nejire smiled as the younger heroes in training whispered excitedly. Midoriya gaped at Mirio, and she wondered if he pulled off the same trick he did with Shinsou.

“Quiet down,” Aizawa sighed, then he stared at them, “Why don’t we do a quick introduction, starting with Amajiki.”

Sweat broke out on Tamaki’s forehead, and the look in his eyes turned rabid. The air changed in the classroom, and many in 1-A flinched back by the sudden intensity.

“I can’t do this,” Tamaki turned his back on the class and bowed his head, “No matter what I do, even if I imagine them as potatoes, I can’t see them as anything other than human. What should I do? I just want to go home...”

Nejire lightly sighed as the first year with the tail spoke up.

“Um, I thought you were supposed to be at the top of U.A.’s hero course?” He said.

“Oh, don’t mind him!” Nejire smiled bright as she waved her hand, “Amajiki is really strong, but he has a weak heart when it comes to talking to people. This poor little flea is Amajiki Tamaki!” She put a hand to her chest, “And I’m Nejire Hado! As your sensei said, we’re going to talk more in depth with you about work studies. But wait...” Nejire bounced to someone in the first row, a big softie with 6 arms and a face mask, “Why do you wear that mask? Are you sick?” She blinked, and jumped to another, “Oooh, you have cute horns! Can you actually feel something from them, or are they just for decoration? If they break, do new ones grow in!?”

Ashido cackled as Nejire felt them, “They’re a bit ticklish, so please be careful!”

“Todoroki, how did you get that scar on your face!?”

Todoroki frowned, “That’s-”

“Oh, Asui-chan! You’re so cute!!”

“Please call me Tsuyu, kero.”

“Tsuyu! What an adorable name!”

“Yaoyorozu!” The girl flinched as Nejire bounced on her heels in front of her desk. “How did it feel to meet Joker!? I haven’t met him face to face yet, but Ryukyu has and I’m soooo jealous!!” Nejire whipped around to Iida, “Oh, and your brother too! How lucky!”

Aizawa glowered as Yaoyorozu and Iida’s faces went pale. His eyes turned red and his hair floated around his face. “Hado, knock it off.”

“Sorry sensei!” She beamed and hopped to the front of the room.

Mirio beamed, “Don’t worry, Eraserhead! I’m going last to speed things up, right?” Mirio stepped up to the podium and put his hands on his hips, “I’m Togata Mirio! Aizawa-sensei originally wanted us to explain more about work studies, even though they aren’t required in U.A.’s curriculum. You guys just got your provisional licenses as first years, right? I can see it in your expressions. Tamaki, Hado and I didn’t place very high in this year’s Sports Festival, and you all think we’re pretty weird, right?”

“Gee, how did he know?” Sero stage whispered to Kaminari, who chuckled.

Mirio raised his fist into the air, “Why don’t you all fight me at once!?”

“Wh-what!?”

Panicked clamors rang around the room as Mirio looked at Aizawa, smiling.

“It would be the most rational way to show how much more experience I have. Right, Sensei?”

Hado blinked as Aizawa stared blankly at them. Did Mirio not tell him the idea before hand? Silly Mirio. Even Tamaki pulled his face away from the wall and studied Aizawa's expression.

"Do what you want." Aizawa glanced at the class, "Everyone, change into your gym clothes and follow him."

"Y-yes, Sensei!" Iida was the first out of his seat, his other classmates following tentatively.

Mirio gave Tamaki a pat on the back as they followed the students, but she stayed behind.

"What?" Aizawa droned.

"I want Shinsou to watch the fight!"

Aizawa scrunched his brow, "Why?"

She giggled, "Because he's going to be a hero in training! Don't you think he should observe it, too?"

"He's in the general class."

"But not for long, right?" She bounced between her heels, "You're training him up to move into the hero course, right? C'mon, it'll be fun! Pleeeeease, sensei?"

Aizawa sighed, "Fine, just stop smiling at me like that. I'll shoot Cementoss a text, but if he says no then that's the end of it. Capiche?"

"Kay!"

Aizawa grumbled to himself as he whipped out his phone.

Hitoshi idly twirled his pen around his fingers. Akira showed him how to do it ages ago, but he was only just getting the hang of it now. The class was nearing its end and he had his homework done already, now he was staring at the phone in his other hand.

He couldn't tear his eyes away from Akira's sharp smile. Morgana tried to look regal on his shoulders, but his fur had been ruffled in strange places, almost as if he was stressed out. Akira looked...

Hitoshi frowned as he put his pen down and zoomed in on the picture. The slight graininess of the picture made it hard to tell, but Akira had a pale, almost sickly complexion, all too similar to when Emiyo-san had dragged him into their cafe after the Musutafu Raid. His stomach sank. Akira pushed himself too hard during Kamino, had he only just recovered from it?

Hundreds of comments were buried just as fast as they were posted, but one of the top comment threads left him with mixed feelings.

Japaneasy27: Wow, after all of this time and we don't even get a caption or anything? How lame.

Anon28577: @Japaneasy27 - Bruh it's not like he owes anybody anything?? We should be thankful we even got this much.

Perororo: @Anon28577 - Eh, maybe, but my soul craves more Joker content. This isn't enough! I NEED MOAR

Ubukk: @Japaneasy27 - Oh, I know! How about 'I saved everyone's asses at Kamino and all I got was this shitty statue with All Might'?

Hitoshi's lip curled. After everything Joker did, after all of what he went through, people think they can just joke about it? He couldn't bare checking in on his Herocord server, either. The number of members in it blown up recently, but he just didn't have the energy to manage it like he once did.

"Shinsou."

Hitoshi jumped as Cementoss' shadow draped his desk. "Y-yes?"

"Come with me, and bring your things too."

"O-okay?"

His classmates all stared and whispered as he hastily threw his things into his bag and followed Cementoss out the door.

"Am I in trouble?" He asked.

"No." Cementoss closed the door, "I wanted to ask if you wanted to observe a duel between a third year hero student and class 1-A. You don't have to, but I thought I would ask... away from prying ears."

"Uh... sure?" He hugged his bag to his chest. It was better than staying in that classroom and being stared at after the bell rang.

"Cementoss-senei!" Nejire skipped towards them, her periwinkle hair bobbing to and fro, "Did he agree?"

"Yeah, I did." Hitoshi sighed, "Was this your idea?"

"Yep!"

Cementoss nodded, "Run along, then."

Nejire grabbed Hitoshi's elbow and whisked him down the hallway.

Nezu's words replayed in the back of his mind. Why bother protecting him from other students? Why go through so much trouble for him ? Ah hell, he was falling back to old habits now that Akira... wasn't around at the moment.

Nejire must've sensed something was off.

"You okay, Shinsou?" She asked when they stepped outside. "You've been quiet!"

“Just peachy,” He deadpanned, “Why did you drag me into this?”

“Aizawa-sensei wanted us to explain what it means to be in a long term work study, but Mirio thought it was better to show the skills he earned instead!” She hummed, “Real world experience makes you learn a lot faster than simple training exercises, and I thought you should watch too! You know, since you’re going to be a hero one day!”

His stomach fell to the ground. “But I’m not ready to fight anybody.”

“You’ll just be observing! Besides, Mirio will wipe the floor with them in no time.”

Hitoshi swallowed. “The whole class?”

Nejire grinned as they arrived at the gym. She opened the door and swept him inside. He internally winced as Togata Mirio stood in front of Class 1-A, wearing that same sunny expression as when he scared the crap out of Hitoshi in that closet.

Class 1-A didn’t notice their entrance, too entranced in whatever Mirio was saying to them. Except for one. Nejire waved him towards the wall, where Todoroki Shoto waited. She walked away towards Amajiki a couple of meters down the wall.

Todoroki blinked at him, “What are you doing here?”

“Observing, apparently.” Hitoshi said, “Why are you standing over here instead of with your classmates?”

Todoroki tilted his head, “I want to observe, too. I’m not dumb enough to think that we could take someone like Togata on.”

“Oh?” Hitoshi turned to stare at Class 1-A, but Todoroki’s eyes never left him. After another few tense moments, he relented, “What are you staring at?”

Todoroki squinted, as if trying to see something Hitoshi couldn't, "You're the Moon."

"What ?" Hitoshi whipped his head towards Todoroki, "Did Midoriya have to tell your whole damn class about that?"

"No, Uraraka mentioned it by accident a couple days ago... during lunch." Hitoshi scoffed, and was about to walk away when Todoroki spoke again, "I'm the Hanged Man."

Hitoshi stopped. He looked over his shoulder as Todoroki's eyes fell to the ground. "... What?"

"Momo is the Empress, and Bakugo is the Tower." Todoroki stared at his classmates as Togata was almost finished talking, "Tokoyami guessed others, like Midoriya being the Chariot or Kirishima being the Sun. We've guessed that All Might is Judgement, given what happened in Kamino. I've been doing research and trying to guess who is what Arcana, but I've had no luck." Todoroki blinked at Hitoshi. "I still don't even know what this all means, and how it ties to Joker."

Hitoshi scowled. "You can ask him when he gets here."

"Right," Todoroki's expression turned thoughtful, "When Joker gets here, to U.A..."

Hitoshi ignored him and turned back to Togata.

"All right!" Togata beamed and held his hands up, "Who wants to come at me first?"

"I'll go first!"

"Midoriya!!" Kirishima cried as Midoriya stepped to the front of the group, "Be careful, dude!"

"Oh, the Problem Child!" Togata said, "That's good! You're really energetic, huh?"

The hairs on the back of Hitoshi's neck stood on end. Midoriya fell into a low stance. Snakes of green lightning danced around his body. That never happened during the Sport's Festival.

"Everyone, be careful!" Yaoyorozu called from the back, "Any close combatants should assist Midoriya in a frontal assault! The rest stay back and provide support!"

"Got it!"

Kirishima, Ojio, and Sato fell into a line behind Midoriya. All others in Class 1-A got into familiar stances, their quirks hovering at their finger tips. Midoriya shot forward first like a bolt of green lightning.

Hitoshi held his breath when Togata didn't move. He simply stood there with that stupid smile on his face, but all confidence drained away into horror as Togata's clothes... fell off. The girls screamed as Togata noticed his birthday suit.

Midoriya wasn't phased as Togata picked up his pants, and reared back for a kick-

That just went through Togata's head as if he wasn't there at all.

Togata turned as Midoriya skid to a stop. "Wow, you really went right for the face, huh?"

"They already lost." Hitoshi heard Amajiki say, his forehead against the wall. "It's all over for them..."

Hitoshi frowned as other quirks went through Togata's head and shoulders. Midoriya leapt out of the way before the attacks hit him, sending a choking dust cloud through the gym.

"S-stop!!" Iida shouted, "Our attacks aren't working!"

"Wait, where did he go!?" Uraraka said.

The cloud cleared, but Togata was nowhere in sight. He shot out of the floor behind the long ranged attackers in a blur, and took them all out with a punch to the gut. Midoriya leapt into the air as Togata disappeared into the ground again, but the experienced third year took him out as easily as the others, despite Midoriya predicting where he would come out next.

It wasn't long before the rest of Class 1-A were all on the ground, clutching their stomachs. A few looked green in the face. Hitoshi didn't feel sorry for them as Togata struck a pose in the center of the downed students.

"Power!!"

"Told you..." Amajiki muttered.

Nejire chuckled. "I think he's even stronger than before. What do you think, Tamaki?"

"He was always strong since we were kids," Tamaki muttered, "But he should really learn to hold back."

Togata redressed as 1-A scraped themselves off the floor, unbothered. "What did you think of my quirk?"

"It's way too strong!" Sero screamed, "We didn't know what the heck was going on!"

"It's not fair!" Hagakure waved her invisible arms.

"You can just slip through things and warp around!?" Ashido cried with tears in her eyes, "Are you a hybrid like Todoroki!?"

Hitoshi stared at Todoroki, who scoffed.

"Nope, I've only got just the one!" Togata placed his hands on his hips, still beaming that insufferable smile, "But it took years of hard work and practice to get where I am now-"

“Oh, I know what his quirk is!!” Nejire flew to Togata’s side. “It’s Permeation!”

“Hado, let him explain his own quirk.” Amajiki whispered.

“That’s right! My quirk is Permeation! What you called a warp is just an application of that.”

Midoriya’s hands twitched oddly, “How do you warp?”

“If I activate my quirk through my entire body, then my body can go through everything . Then, if I release my quirk while I’m underground, something really strange happens. Apparently, things that have mass can’t overlap, so I get repelled to the surface in an instant.” Togata nodded, “I can change directions based on the angle my body is in when I deactivate my quirk.”

“That’s a really powerful quirk, kero.” Asui said.

“That’s not true.” Togata’s smile turned... sad, “I made it into the powerful quirk it is today. It’s not invincible. While my quirk is active, my lungs can’t take in oxygen, and no light can go into my retinas to see. It’s the same with sound vibrations and my eardrums. Do you see what I’m saying?”

Hitoshi frowned, his eyes going to Aizawa. Todoroki didn’t say anything as Hitoshi walked over to Aizawa, the man regarded him with a slow blink.

“Can I talk to you for a second?”

Aizawa shrugged. “Sure.” The man led him outside the gym, and the cool breeze flowed over them, “What did you think of Togata’s little demonstration? It was Nejire’s idea to bring you here.”

“Yeah, I know.” Hitoshi sighed, “He really kicked ass, didn’t he?”

“Language,” Aizawa hummed, though a smirk was hidden beneath his scarf. “What did you want to talk about?”

“Something occurred to me after Togata was done fighting.” Hitoshi looked Aizawa in the eye with a raised brow, “We’ve just been doing physical training, but what about my quirk? Togata said it took years to get his quirk to where it is now, but we haven’t practiced at all with mine.”

Aizawa nodded, “Not yet, but we will. You’re still behind when it comes to physical training. Be patient, Shinsou, and we’ll work on your quirk in due time. I promise.”

Hitoshi stared at him, looking for the lie, but he found none. “... Okay. I’ll trust you.”

“Sensei!” Nejire popped her head out the door. “We’re almost done in here!”

“Alright, give me a minute.” Aizawa sighed, then he glanced at Hitoshi, “Do you want to call it quits here? School is almost out for today anyway. Or... would you rather go back in and face my class? I don’t think they even noticed you were there, aside from Todoroki. I’ll have to get on them about situational awareness.”

“I’ll call it quits.” Hitoshi muttered, “I’d rather not get put under the microscope right now.”

Aizawa gave him a strange look, but Hitoshi walked away before anything else could be said. He debated on whether he should head towards the support lab or just go to his dorm to relax.

Mei would be disappointed if he didn’t show up today since they were close on a breakthrough with one of her inventions (he refuses to call them babies) yesterday...

With a sigh, he headed towards the main building. He was almost to the entrance when prickles trailed down his spine. Hitoshi paused by the door and glanced over his shoulder, eyes narrowed. Nothing was there. And yet, as the wind rustled the nearby trees and washed over him, something deep within him shuddered at its touch.

He put a hand over his chest and shivered.

“I wonder if its supposed to rain soon.” He muttered as he looked up to the crystal clear sky.

With a shake of his head, he shoved the feeling away and ducked inside.

“What did you guys think of Togata?” Kaminari asked as he smoothed down one of the blankets in the dorm gardens. “He was totally crazy, right!?”

They recovered from their last class and would spend the afternoon eating and chatting. They might as well enjoy the blue sky and fresh sunlight while they had the chance. The breeze was cool and pleasant, but it would only get colder as autumn fast approached.

“We totally got our asses kicked!” Ashido yelled from another blanket, “How can somebody be that powerful and not even graduate high school yet!?”

“Time and practice,” Tokoyami sat cross legged in the shadow of a tree, “Dutiful study under a pro and real experience are the best teachers one could have.”

“Speaking of which,” Sero looked across the yard, where most of 1-A prepared blankets and baskets of food that didn’t need to be cooked beforehand, “What do you guys think about the work studies?”

“I don’t know, honestly.” Ojiro frowned as his tail swished back and forth, “It would take a lot of work, and Aizawa-sensei even said we could miss whole days here at school for them.”

“But it’d be worth it, kero.” Asui said from another blanket, “Actually. Uraraka and I got approached by Nejire.”

Uraraka clapped her hands together, “We’re going to work under Ryukyu! Isn’t that exciting?”

“Really!?” Kirishima grinned, “Amajiki offered to introduce me to Fat Gum! I’d totally be down for real work experience with him!”

Tokoyami crossed his arms and looked at the sun rays filtering through the branches above him, “Dark Shadow and I have asked Hawks to take us under his wing, and he agreed.”

“Man,” Kaminari splayed himself out on the blanket, “Ryukyu, Hawks, Fat Gum. Those are all awesome pros!”

“I heard Midoriya is going on one, too.” Iida said.

Midoriya looked up, turning red, “Y-yeah! Togata offered to introduce me to Nighteye.”

“All Might’s previous sidekick?” Kirishima whistled, “That’s wild, man!”

Asui opened her mouth, but closed it and fidgeted with the corner of their blanket.

“Tsuyu?” Uraraka put a hand on her shoulder, “What’s wrong?”

“Nothing, kero.” Asui blinked, “You know how I always state what’s on my mind, but maybe I should keep this to myself. I don’t want to ruin the mood.”

“You can say whatever you need too!” Iida stated.

“Okay...” Asui scanned her classmates scattered around the garden. They all stopped when they sensed her unusual hesitation, and stared at her. “I just think that maybe this could be one of the last times our class is fully together like this for a while. Those of us who are going to work studies won’t be here all the time anymore, so the class will feel smaller.”

“Oh.” Uraraka mumbled.

The others fell silent, exchanging concerned expressions with one another.

“That may be so, but we still have a powerful bond as a class.” Tokoyami bowed his head, “Even if some of us are away on work studies, that will never go away.”

“Yeah!” Uraraka cheered up, “Plus, we’re still only first years! We have two and a half years left, and we can still work together when we are pros!”

“I suppose you’re right.” Asui said, “Sorry if I dragged down the mood with that.”

“Not at all!” Kirishima beamed. “It’s totally understandable!”

“We’re all growing into our own.” Iida pushed up his glasses, “It’s only natural that you would feel that way, Asui.”

“Call me Tsuyu.”

“R-right!”

“BE MORE CAREFUL MORON!!” Bakugo’s voice boomed from the open door leading into the dorm kitchen, “YOU’LL CUT YOURSELF IF YOU HOLD A KNIFE LIKE THAT, ICYHOT!”

Kaminari snickered, “Well, at least we know Bakugo’s temperament will never change.”

“Yeah, Kacchan seems to be a lot better since...” Midoriya trailed off, and his eyes wouldn’t meet any of theirs.

“Since Joker’s Spotlight update?” Iida asked, frowning.

“Yeah...” Something replayed in Midoriya’s eyes, perhaps a certain memory of the night of their fight. Midoriya shook it off. “A-anyway, the food should be done soon and we can all relax!”

“Everyone!” Yaomomo popped her head out from the door. Flit followed, her metallic body gleaming in the sunlight. “The rest of the food is almost finished on our end, but we could use a couple more hands to carry everything out.”

“Right!” Iida stood ramrod straight and chopped his arm, “Midoriya, Kaminari, Kirishima, and myself will help!!”

“Eh, why me!?” Kaminari whined.

“Just do it!” Ashido said as she jabbed him with her elbow, “The sooner we put the food out the sooner we can all eat!”

“Well, when you put it that way...”

Tokoyami watched as the other boys went inside, and the rest of his classmates finished their picnic duties. The hot food was brought out and divided evenly between the blankets splayed out like bright flower petals.

He stood and went to join Ojiro, Koda, and Shoji’s blanket, a light breeze gracing the garden. Tokoyami normally would have enjoyed the wind caressing his feathers, but Dark Shadow recoiled.

“Dark Shadow?”

“Fumi! Something is wrong with the wind!!”

“What are you talking about?”

“Tokoyami?” Shoji said, “Is something wrong?”

Tokoyami blinked. Over half of his classmates already started devouring their food.

“Does anybody feel something strange?” Tokoyami asked. “Dark Shadow says there’s something on the wind.”

“I don’t feel anything.” Todoroki said as he held a bowl of cold soba.

“Me neither?” Kaminari sheepishly grinned. “Boy, you must be hungry if Dark Shadow doesn’t feel well! Is it supposed to storm soon?”

“I looked at the weather report this morning!” Ashido said with a half eaten bun in her hand, “It’s supposed to be clear skies all the way up until tomorrow night!”

“I see.” Tokoyami shook his head, “It must be my imagination, then.”

Tokoyami sat down between Koda and Shoji, the former smiling at him.

The food was delicious and bountiful, at least by student standards. Bowls of soba and rice, diced fruits and vegetables, tempura, fish, and staple favorites like Midoriya and his katsudon, were splayed around the collection of blankets. Cups of tea and carbonated beverages were passed around by the dozen. Sweet and savory buns were laid out alongside other pastries and delicacies baked fresh by Sato.

His classmates laughed and chatted away without a care in the world, and the mood of the whole garden lightened as the afternoon wore on into early evening.

Tokoyami could only take small bites as his stomach churned, earning concerned looks from his friends.

Dark Shadow refused to come out at all, despite the fact that their blanket was placed in the shade. He grabbed an apple pastry when Yaoyorozu passed them around with Flit at her side. Tokoyami tried to tempt him to come out with it, but Dark Shadow wasn’t paying attention.

It wasn’t until most of the food was finished off that Dark Shadow screamed .

Tokoyami bolted to his feet, barely hearing Koda shriek as his haste knocked over a bowl of fruit.

“Dark Shadow, what’s wrong!?”

All motion stopped in the garden and everyone looked at him with wide eyes.

“Fumi, it’s coming...”

“Explain yourself! What is coming?”

“Tokoyami,” Iida approached with obvious concern on his face, “Are you alright? Is there something wrong?”

Tokoyami opened his mouth to respond, when the sunlight became blotted by heavy clouds and the garden was draped in shadow.

“Oh come on!” Ashido screeched, “I swear the weather people are never right!”

“It looks like it’s gonna rain, kero.” Asui poked her cheek, “Should we put everything away?”

Tokoyami flinched when the first drop plopped on his beak, burning strangely like winter ice on bare skin. He shook his head and wiped his face as the pitter patter of rain fell onto U.A. Startled cries echoed across the garden as everyone rushed to gather everything.

Tokoyami felt a chill as a sharp gale cut across the garden, feeling foul and wronged.

“G-guys!?” Kaminari shrieked.

Others paused to stare at him, and followed his slackjawed gaze into the heavens. It was like a horror movie. The end of the world as everything gained a crimson shade; the swirling clouds, the bleeding light shed on every surface, the rain puddling under their feet like freshly spilled blood.

Bakugo dropped the bowl he carried, glass shattering at his feet.

“S-something is...” Midoriya whispered. “L-look over there!”

The eye of the storm swirled on the other side of the school grounds, in the direction of the USJ. Then, a voice, or something of the like. It wasn't the wind whistling or the tree leaves scraping together, it was a sound that Tokoyami didn't know how to describe. Ethereal and mystical in the ways of deep whale song, yet the metallic and bone-chilling timbre ground against their very souls. A song that no mere human should ever hear. It sang across U.A. mercilessly, as if announcing its divine presence to the poor mortals caught in this bloody rain.

Dark Shadow cowered in the furthest reaches of his mind as Tokoyami's whole body trembled.

Then, as fast as it came, the rain stopped and the clouds parted. Sunlight draped the garden once more, and the redness faded away to natural colors, but nobody felt the sun's warmth as they were all locked in a stone cold terror. Tokoyami couldn't put a finger on it. The world around them suddenly felt perverse in a way, the same, yet different after everything had been coated in a hellish red.

Bakugo was the first to move, bolting from the garden and into the dorm. Tokoyami had never seen such fear in his expression before.

Iida's phone chimed, and he looked at it as if he wasn't fully there. He blinked several times before he read it. “E-everyone,” Iida's voice shook, “Aizawa-sensei wants all of us in the dorm ASAP. Let's clean up and meet in the common room!”

Everyone moved at once, through in a silence born from urgency, confusion, and terror.

“Fumi...” Dark Shadow whispered as Tokoyami held a bundle of damp blankets. The water was clear now, and yet he still pictured it as blood. "I still feel it on the wind. It's only gone dormant... for now. This is only the beginning."

Tokoyami frowned as he looked over his frightened classmates, "We'll get through this, no matter what foolish villain stamped their unnatural presence on U.A. It will not go unpunished."

"I'm scared, Fumi."

"Me too, Dark Shadow." Tokoyami admitted as he stepped into the dorm with his load, "Me too ."

See you again next week ;)

Also DTESH's second anniversary was earlier this week! I did a Tycoon stream for it, and you can check out that stream and my others where I play through P5R (Up until Yaldy) with DTESH only Personas!

<https://www.youtube.com/playlist?list=PLlhgzsrNwArRNB12y01IMm5YcZiplmxFC>

So Happy World(s)

Chapter 71: So Happy World(s)

Oh, why hello there ;3

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

Makoto jolted awake when someone grabbed her shoulder.

“I figured you would be here.”

Makoto rubbed her eyes, “Hawkeye...? Where am I?”

The woman smiled, “You don’t remember falling asleep in the Grand Central Library?”

Makoto blinked. She sat at a table, surrounded by piles of old books and scrolls, with scrap pieces of parchment where she wrote notes. Drawings of transmutation circles littered the pages of the book she fell asleep on.

“Right.” She closed the book and sighed, “What time is it?”

“The library was about to close, if that’s any indication.”

“Oh.” Makoto fixed her hair and packed everything away, but paused when Hawkeye gave her an odd look. “What?”

“Are you alright, Makoto?” Hawkeye had a worried crease in her forehead, “The only other people I’ve seen go this hard in a library are the Elric brothers. It didn’t end up well for them. I don’t want you going through something similar.”

"I'm alright." Makoto looked at the book on the table and slowly ran her fingers down the cover, "I'm just... trying to find some answers to something. That's all."

Hawkeye stared at her a moment, "Alright, but you should go home and get some rest, okay? I've seen what obsessive study does to certain people." She leaned in with a soft smile, "Why do you think Edward is so short?"

Makoto chuckled, "Don't let him hear you say that."

Amusement shown in the woman's eye, "Wouldn't dream of it. Come on, before they kick us out."

Makoto nodded. She grabbed her bag full of books and they walked together towards the entrance. A familiar, cool voice echoed in her mind.

"You see her as a replacement for your sister."

"What!?" Makoto staggered, but caught herself before she fell and made a fool of herself in front of Hawkeye. If the woman noticed, which she undoubtedly did, she didn't say anything, "I do not. I just-"

"Just miss our world. I know, you've thought so a hundred times. But you've also started to give up hope of ever going home. Never lose sight of our goal, Makoto. I did not choose you just so you could waver on the path."

"I won't." Makoto raised her chin. "I promise."

Her Persona hummed, then went silent. Hawkeye studied her from the corner of her eye, but as usual she kept her thoughts to herself. It was always a fine line with anybody in this world, and Hawkeye was one of the most perceptive people she's ever met. If it wasn't for a few close calls, then Makoto doubted she would be walking free right now.

Even after everything she's been through and the people she's befriended, they could not divulge their secret. No matter the cost. They learned the hard way that a corrupt government was the least of this world's problems.

They made it outside, the sky dark and air heavy with the scent of rain. Makoto turned to Hawkeye.

"I can make it from here. Thanks for checking up on me, Hawkeye. I didn't disturb you from your duties, did I?"

"No. It's not a problem, but be more careful, alright?" Hawkeye was giving her that look again, the one that stated she knew something Makoto couldn't place, "I just don't want you getting hurt."

"I'll be careful, I promise." Makoto looked up at the black sky, Hawkeye followed her gaze.

"I better get back to Mustang before it storms. After all, he's-"

"Useless in the rain." They said in unison.

Makoto chuckled. She waved her goodbye and they parted ways. Thunder lazily rolled across the city. Makoto frowned as the first drops of rain pattered on the sidewalk. Something uneasy stirred in the wind, and Makoto shivered as a chill overcame her. She hurried towards the apartment on the other side of town, and was nearly halfway there when it started down pouring. She cursed as she quickened her pace, the puddles under her feet rippling under her footsteps. The pavement became painted with streaks of light from the lamps. She ducked into the usual alleyway and-

"STOP!"

Makoto froze. "What's wrong?"

"The rain... this is..."

“The rain?” Makoto glanced at the puddle behind her, her stomach dropping to the ground. “The rain is red. Yusuke!”

She broke out into a sprint, the rest of the way became a blur. Makoto burst into the apartment, her soaked clothes dripping water onto the floor. Relief flooded her when she saw Yusuke, who’s chair screeched as he bolted to his feet.

“Makoto, what’s wrong!?” He went to her and put his hands on her shoulders, “Susanoo says he senses something strange, and yet... familiar.”

“Yusuke, the rain is red .”

His eyes widened. “We need to investigate the source as soon as possible. Shall we?”

“We have no choice.” Makoto shook her head and let her back fall in the floor with a heavy thud . “Let’s just hope Fullmetal won’t get in the way again. This will no doubt draw attention.”

“I can always encase him in another block of ice. He cannot do anything as long as his hands aren’t together.”

Makoto snorted, “The last time you did that he ranted about it in headquarters for three days straight.”

At that moment, the sky sang, not with thunder, but a familiar heavenly call. Makoto and Yusuke both flinched as the metallic sound echoed all across the city. To her, Yaldabaoth’s cry sounded... triumphant. Then, as quick as it began, Yaldabaoth’s victorious howl faded like a roll of thunder.

Yusuke stepped outside the door, “The rain is stopping. What does this mean?”

“I don’t know, but let’s not wait around to find out. This could be our chance to finally gain more information about how to get home.”

Every twist and turn so far led to nothing but dead ends. Makoto hands balled into fists and a determined gleam entered her eyes, "Let's go."

"Right. And if we encounter any Shadows..." Yusuke's hand went to his hip, where his katana was sheathed on his Metaverse costume.

Makoto made sure the apartment was locked and they ventured further into the maze of alleyways before donning their costumes with brilliant flames. Their Personas hummed in agitation as they leapt towards familiar rooftops.

Mephisto swirled his tea around in his ivory cup, taking a delicate sip to tame his wicked smile. The girl in front of him had the same taste in decor. Their afternoon tea together became a staple in his daily schedule, he always lavished they way she outmaneuvered others with a natural grace he doesn't often see in regular humans. But she and her partner weren't regular humans. To think, they both could summon such powerful demons without an incantation or binding spells.

And the blue flames, their unusual costumes that appear under it...

He took another sip. Mephisto set the cup down and grabbed a tiny sandwich from the platter on his desk, "Tell me, how is Rin fairing under Panther's guidance?"

Noir smiled, pretty as a rose with poisoned thorns, "Oh, you know how he is." She giggled, "He was frustrated at first, but Panther is more patient than people give her credit for. I believe he will do just fine."

"His control over the blue flames isn't as good as I would like," Mephisto sighed dramatically, "But you two seem to have a good handle on the power, for humans. I wonder why that is?"

Noir tilted her head, her smile saccharine, "I wonder."

He blinked when she said no more. She took a delicate sip and didn't seem to care how he stared at her, waiting. The tip of his tail, so delicately curled under his clothes, twitched. He opened his mouth to make more 'light conversation', when his door slammed open. He jumped, dropping the delicious sandwich onto the floor. A pity. These were his favorite!

"Noir!" Panther had sweat on her brow, and panted as if she had sprinted here. Rin was behind her, looking equally unsettled. "It's... It's..."

"Panther?" Noir put her cup down and stood, "What's wrong?"

"Oi!" Rin glared daggers at Mephisto, "Open your damn window and see for yourself!"

Mephisto blinked. He twirled his chair around and threw open his lavish curtains, a thrill of excitement shooting up his spine. The lost sandwich was forgotten as he leapt to his feet, a grin sprouting on his face.

"Ooh? What's this?"

His office was one of the highest points in True Cross Academy, so they got a good look at the swirling crimson sky and the rain dripping down the window like freshly spilled blood. He looked over his shoulder. This was one of the few times he's seen Noir's facade break completely, an expression of pure terror worth savoring.

An odd sound rang in their ears. A resonant tune that plucked fibre of their beings, a battle cry belonging to no demon he knew. In fact, he didn't think this was demonic at all, by the way it soured his blood in insult. This was... something different altogether.

He turned back to the window and put a hand over his face to hide his joyous expression.

Finally, things got far more interesting.

"I told you a hundred times!" Futaba griped from within the safety of Prometheus, "You can't come in!"

"But why, Futaba-chan?" Urahara whined. "If I could get a look at the inside of your... friend, then I might see something that you don't!"

Yoruichi, who floated in cat form beside Futaba, chuckled, "You're just jealous that Prometheus actually likes me, Kisuke."

"I am not!"

"Are too." Yoruichi stuck her nose up, her fur alight from the plethora of monitors and glowing symbols within Prometheus, "Now, stop being a child and get back to work. Futaba can't do all of it for you."

"I probably could," Futaba said, snickering, "But it would take a lot longer."

"Ugh, would you guys stop fighting!" Ryuji called from the foot of the stairs. "You're giving me a headache."

"If you're that bothered, Skull," Urahara grinned at him, "You could always help Ururu open the store."

"No thanks." Ryuji muttered.

Futaba sighed.

They were in the strange basement of Urahara's store, a wide open space that somehow had its own blue sky and warm sunlight. It was dusty and rocky and plain, perfect for training battles or testing out new abilities. She couldn't even tell that the sun was just rising now. Did they really spend another long night here? She and Urahara were running calculations with Prometheus' help, and hours felt like minutes with Urahara and Yoruichi's banter.

Two white pillars rose into the fake sky in front of them, connected with bits and bobs and thick wires. No matter how much they tried, or how much data Prometheus provided, they could not open a portal back home. But Futaba and Ryuji's phones worked just fine despite this world's human technology being a decade or so older. They could text and call each other, but whenever they tried to contact the other Phantom Thieves or someone else from their world, all they got was an error.

It didn't make any sense!

"Calm yourself." Prometheus' soft, child-like voice echoed in her mind, "We'll figure this out."

"I know," She pursed her lips as she reached over and pet Yoruichi, her mind trailing to another feline, "But I'm just frustrated! We still don't know what Yaldabaoth did, or how he even managed to do something like this! What kind of power lets him mess with whole other worlds!? I miss the others so much it hurts, Prometheus."

Prometheus sent a wave of comforting warmth, "I know how deeply you care for your family, but we will see them again. Have faith in our abilities, and of the man who has risked much to help you and Numbskull."

Futaba chuckled, "It's just Skull."

"Hmmm, I'm not so sure anymore. You've seen what happens when he and Kurosaki band together." Prometheus teased, "Oh, the not-Mona is looking at you again."

Futaba glanced at Yoruichi, sharp golden eyes peering into her instead of a glacial blue. Futaba pulled her hand away and stared at the myriad of screens around them, streams of data flowing steadily. A sudden stab of panic flowed from Prometheus when the screens turned red and alarms blared.

Ryuji shot to his feet when Futaba screamed. "What's wrong!?"

Yoruichi's ears twitched as Futaba frantically typed on the holographic keyboard, "Skull! Go outside and check something for me!"

"What? Why?"

"Just do it!"

He flinched, but ran up the stairs despite his bad leg.

"What's wrong, Futaba?" Futaba glanced at the screen showing Urahara, who had lost all playfulness in his voice. The shadow of his striped hat covered his eyes, "Is something happening outside?"

Ryuji suddenly shouted over Prometheus' comms, "Oracle! I-its raining red! This is-"

"The Metaverse!" Futaba's voice shook, "But how? Why does it show up now!? Wait, these readings..."

Another screen gave an alert as a strange sound leaked in from above. Futaba gasped and shoved her hands over her ears at the familiar call. It was worse than the screams of the Hollows in this world, far more terrifying and soul piercing. Yoruichi's fur stood on end and Urahara grasped the sword at his waist.

"What is this?" Yoruichi growled as the cursed sound ebbed away, "It doesn't feel like any Hollow I've ever encountered."

"I-it's not a Hollow." Futaba whispered, "It's... It's..."

"Yaldabaoth?" Urahara asked.

"Y-yeah."

"Hey, the rain is stopping." Fear laced Ryuji's voice too, "How does it look on your end, Oracle?"

“Um...” Her hands fell away from her ears and she looked at the screens, “It I-looks like its going back to normal, mostly, but small traces from the Metaverse are still there.”

“Maybe Yaldabaoth gave up?” Yoruichi said, her eyes blazing gold from the light of the screens, “But from what you’ve told us, he wouldn’t stop so easily.”

Urahara clutched his chin, frowning in thought.

“I-I dunno.” Futaba took a deep breath at Prometheus’ behest, “From what I understand, Metaverse signatures are now layered over this world. It weakened significantly since the rain stopped, b-but its still there.”

“Not strong enough to mess with our reality for an extended time?” Yoruichi asked.

“No, the rain must’ve just triggered the change.” She said.

“I see.” Urahara walked in small circles, “So Yaldabaoth was most likely preparing for this from the start.”

“Uh... meaning?” Ryuji asked.

“Meaning that this was just the beginning.” Futaba’s eyes widened, “I-it’s gonna keep happening until-”

“Until the natural boundaries erode away,” Urahara stopped in his tracks. His back was turned to Prometheus, but the power readings from him shot up significantly. Futaba’s skin crawled, “And he has control over all of the worlds he sent you and the rest of your squad to. But why now? Something must have changed on the other side if he’s suddenly confident in his success. Oracle, what would it take to make Yaldabaoth certain he would win? What are the victory conditions?”

“W-well...” Futaba swallowed, but her mouth was still bone dry, “J-Joker was our l-leader, and he was the s-strongest out of all of us. H-he alone could probably stop Yaldabaoth, s-so if something bad happened to him... th-then maybe Yaldabaoth could win.”

Her chest tightened and it became harder to breathe. N-no, nothing could happen to Ren! He was their fearless Leader! He was strong and always came out on top! If... if something happened to him-

‘I guess the drugs were too strong. Wake him up.’

Ren, tied to chair, bruised and bleeding with the glint of several needles on the floor around him, was doused with a bucket of ice cold water. She had to cover her eyes after they kicked the chair and that one detective stomped on Ren's leg-

Yoruichi gently kicked her legs and floated in front of Futaba, blocking some of the screens. The black cat gently head-bumped her on the forehead. Yoruichi's silky fur snapped her out of it.

“Take deep breaths like we practiced, Futaba-chan.” Yoruichi said softly, “Everything is alright. We will get this figured out, and Kisuke, myself, and everyone else is on your side.”

“R-right. You're right.” Futaba took a few more breaths under Prometheus and Yoruichi's guidance. “We need to focus.”

“Would it be possible for him to invade with an army of his own?” Urahara asked.

“Possibly, he had these metal angel things guarding the path we had to go up to confront him.” Futaba said, “Shadows are a lot different than Hollows, and I don't know if you guys would be able to fight them off.”

“Well,” Yoruichi flicked her tail in an elegant motion, “Zanpakuto Spirits and your Personas have quite a lot in common. This Yaldabaoth might be surprised if he thinks he can trample all over different worlds with no consequences to himself. What a foolish god.”

“Hey, it looks like Ichigo and the others are coming!” Ryuji said.

“Yeah, they just showed up on my radar.” Futaba frowned.

She still remembers the complete disaster that was her and Ichigo’s first meeting. Urahara and Yoruichi mercilessly teased him about it. Rukia was cool though, and she was glad she came to the shop with Ichigo. Maybe she could drag Rukia into drawing more cute pictures with her.

“They’re a rowdy bunch.” Yoruichi sighed, “I better go and meet them with Kisuke. What do you want to do, Futaba?”

“I’ll stay down here and continue running diagnostics. M-Maybe we could use all of this new data somehow. I’ll let you know if anything else pops up.”

Yoruichi nodded, then gracefully pounced downwards. Prometheus let her out with a faint glow. Urahara resumed his usual antics and complained about it as Yoruichi dragged him upstairs.

Futaba turned the rest of the comms off on her end. She interlaced her hands in front of her hurting heart and curled into herself, her hair splaying out like a fan behind her. Prometheus whispered small comforts to her as she floated there in silent agony.

“Ren... Sojiro... everyone...”

Sojiro sneezed.

He grumbled as he placed the box of recyclables at the front of his store. Sojiro should have been used to trudging through the waist high water, pretend that the redness of it and the constant rain didn’t send his brain into panic mode every time he jolted awake in the empty attic. He glanced up to the swirling red sky, with the occasional giant bones and spikes jutting from the buildings and roads. People resumed their daily routines as if nothing was amiss, and Sojiro and the others had to act like everything was fine, too, lest they be thrown in the loony bin... or worse.

As far as they knew, time didn't move. No more day or night cycles, just endless rain, and endless red. And the occasional monstrosities they had to pretend not to see, unless they wanted a one way ticket to the afterlife.

"Sojiro."

He blinked and looked down the street. Sae Niiijima approached, as studious as ever. Though their situation was beginning to wear on her too. Bags were under her eyes, and her silver gray hair was never neatly done since this nightmare started. She clutched her bag like a lifeline. He knew it was one of Makoto's.

She stopped in front of him, "Am I late?"

"No," He rubbed the back of his neck with a long sigh, "Some of the others can't make it today, but you're just in time."

"Good, I-"

Sojiro should've known better than to look at the black pool forming behind Sae. It pulsed and bubbled until it burst like a diseased boil, revealing one of those angelic eyesores. A humanoid shape all crafted from gleaming silver metal, it's face was a blank, smooth mask. It's appendages ended with impaling spikes. The small blades of metal jutting out of its back were a sorry excuse for wings.

It whipped around to him with a screeching hiss.

Sae noticed the fear blatant in Sojiro's face, her own eyes going wide as she went rigid. Sojiro forced himself to relax. The angel floated soundlessly towards them. It's metal limbs grinding together as it knelt next to Sojiro, its face inches from his. He cleared his throat, "Nice day today, isn't it?"

"Yes, it is." Sae had nerves of steel. The angel lurched towards her when she spoke, making strange noises in its throat, and she didn't even bat an eye. "I was just stopping by to have my usual cup of coffee after work. Has the cafe been busy today?"

"My regulars stopped by earlier, but it's pretty much empty now. You know how it is. Come on inside and I'll get your usual straightened out."

That's it. The angel tilted its head and slowly floated backwards, as if doubting itself. They turned and walked side by side to the door. He reached for the handle, his heart pounding as they were close to home base, when the door burst open, the bell clanging loudly.

"Guys!" Mishima was panicked, "Something is happening!"

Mishima looked right at the angel, the color draining from his face.

The angel shook in rage, and reared up to skewer Mishima with its sword. Sojiro pushed Mishima back into the cafe, and Sae cried out as the angel became a silver blur. Sojiro scrunched his eyes shut, expecting the inevitable, but nothing happened. Slowly, he peeled his eyes open.

The angel was frozen, the tip of its blade prodding into his apron.

A bone-chilling call rippled through Tokyo. The angel shuddered as it pulled away and leapt into the sky.

Sojiro collapsed on the door frame, gasping for breath.

Sae rushed to his side and steadied him, "Are you alright!?"

"Y-yeah," Sojiro straightened his glasses and fixed his apron. There was a small hole in the middle of his apron now, but at least he was alive. "I'm alright."

Sae nodded, and looked to the sky as hundreds of silver angels zoomed over Tokyo, all headed towards Shibuya.

“Let’s get inside before anything else happens.” She said as she pulled them inside. Mishima leaned against the counter, looking horrified. “What were you thinking? You know how we must act whenever we’re outside. Sojiro almost died!”

Mishima flinched, “I-I’m sorry! I just...”

“Go easy on the kid.” Iwai grumbled from one of the booths, “You’re alive, ain’t ya?”

“No external injuries from what I can see.” Tae Takemi slowly blinked from her spot on the counter. She leaned back and crossed her legs, throwing Sojiro a smirk, “Unless you need a more thorough examination?”

Sojiro facepalmed, “It’s fine.” He dragged his hand down his face and looked at Mishima, “Just be more careful, okay?”

“R-right.” Mishima sunk into himself, head lowered, “I won’t make that mistake again.”

Sojiro nodded, “What got you in such a panic, anyway?”

“O-oh, right!” Mishima brightened up, turned on his heel and bolted up the stairs.

Takemi sighed as she pulled herself from the stool, “I take it he wants us to follow.”

Iwai muttered under his breath as they all went upstairs. Thankfully, that red water didn’t reach the attic. Sojiro wasn’t the only one to show relief as they set foot on dry wood. Sojiro glanced at the Phantom Thief banner hanging on the wall, before his eyes trailed over to the various decorations. Glowing stars, a string of lights, a plant and posters, tiny figurines lining the top of his work desk and bigger things lining the shelves by the bed. They were all pieces of Ren. It bruised Sojiro's heart just looking at them.

Others lingered around the attic.

The kid with a strange hat sat at the end of Ren's bed, and the shogi prodigy sat primly on the old couch. Everyone who Ren had a bond with could see the truth, resisted the strange brainwashing or whatever the hell infected their world. They did whatever they could to keep in touch with one another, and visited Leblanc in small groups every single day. Or the equivalent of a day. It was hard to keep track.

Mishima had a laptop on Ren's desk, typing frantically. Familiar books about hacking and other computer nonsense towered around him. Sojiro hoped Futaba would forgive him for lending them out... if she got back.

No, when she and the rest of the the Phantom Thieves came back.

"What do you have?" Sojiro asked as he looked at the computer screen.

"I got footage of Shibuya," Mishima said, "Those angel things are gathering there, but it looks like they're waiting for something to happen. The ones that arrived first are just... floating there."

"We all heard it." Shinya muttered, "That big guy must've called them, right?"

"That's what I'm guessing. We're lucky that he summoned them when he did, otherwise Sojiro would be-" Mishima cut himself off.

"I don't understand." Togo said with a frown.

"What don't you get?" Iwai asked.

Togo shook her head, "That... thing has to know about us. We were all connected so tightly with Ren." She stared at the hole in Sojiro's apron, "So why hasn't he ended us? Surely, after all of our support for the Phantom Thieves, he would have taken us out."

"It's because we aren't a threat." Shinya said as he scuffed his shoe into the wooden floor. "We're like maggots to him. The big bad evil guy doesn't pay much attention to the useless npc's."

"We're not even pieces on the board?" Togo said sourly.

"Maybe he's just toying with us," Takemi scoffed, "He's throwing our failure back at us every time we look outside or step into that red water. But I've noticed those angel things watching my clinic every once in a while. If we're not a threat, then certainly we're guinea pigs to be poked and prodded for his entertainment."

"It's no use speculating," Sae said, not unkindly as she stared at the computer screen, "What do you make of this?"

"He's preparing for the endgame, but I'm not sure it's checkmate." Togo wrung her hands together, "I've run through countless strategies and that's the conclusion I come up with."

"They're still gathering." Mishima said, "We might have some time before he does anything."

Iwai scowled, "We can wait around all we want, but we can't do anything about it! We can't fight them like the Phantom Thieves could!"

"They'll come back." Sae turned towards the Phantom Thief banner, the others' eyes followed. "We have to believe in them. Mishima."

"Y-yes, ma'am?"

"Contact the others and tell them to avoid going to Shibuya as much as they can. We can't risk losing anyone. We've come this far without casualties."

Mishima frowned, "But-"

“I can’t abandon my son.” Iwai shook his head, “Or my shop. I have to get back there.”

“Iwai...” Sae whispered, “It’s too dangerous.”

Iwai scoffed. He turned around and marched down the stairs. Sae made to chase after him, but Sojiro grabbed her arm.

“Let him go. He knows what to do to avoid getting hurt. I would do the same thing if I were in his position.”

“I guess you’re right, but it doesn’t make me feel better knowing he’s surrounded by those things .” Sae said.

“I’ll keep tabs on him as much as I can.” Mishima’s smile was tense. “In the mean time, we should keep doing what we normally do.”

“He’s right.” Takemi sighed, “I should head back to my clinic before I’m missed. Keep me updated?”

“We will!” Mishima said with forced cheer.

Takemi’s eyes lingered on the banner. She left without another word. Shinya hopped off the edge of the bed and did much the same thing. The kid was never one to mince words.

“I’ll stay and help Mishima.” Togo said, nodding gracefully. “Perhaps we can figure out their plan or find clues to where the Phantom Thieves disappeared to.”

“Don’t wear yourselves out too much,” Sojiro said with a sigh, “I’ll be downstairs if you need anything.”

Sae hesitated. She watched Mishima’s screen for a few moments before she followed Sojiro down the stairs. She scoffed when she stepped back into the crimson water.

“Your usual?” Sojiro said to fill in the silence.

“Please.” She sat on the closest stool and pinched the bridge of her nose. “Sometimes I think we won’t make it through this. Other times I think this is just a nightmare that’ll go away if I just wake up, but it never does. I’m worried sick for my sister.”

Sojiro didn’t say anything as he prepared the coffee. Thankfully the red water didn’t ruin any of his appliances or spoil any ingredients. How did this stuff work, anyway? He shook away that thought and placed the hot cup of coffee in front of Sae. He made one for himself, too.

“I know. I’m worried too, but those kids will find their way back, and when they do that giant thing lording over Japan won’t last a minute against them.”

Sae raised her cup. “To the Phantom Thieves.”

“To the Phantom Thieves.”

They downed their coffee in one gulp. He was half tempted to go for something a lot stronger just to take the edge off, but getting drunk wouldn’t help anybody, especially as the others treated him as a leader of sorts. Deep down Sojiro knew that the kids were alive and fighting to get back home. He only hoped that they returned soon, otherwise there wouldn’t be anything left to fight for.

That tiny hole in his apron was proof enough.

Yes, there will still be another chapter on Saturday!

IMPORTANT EDIT: Also yes, once this main part of DTESH is over, I will be writing the other stories from the PT's POV. So you will see all the full scenes that are heavily hinted at in their smaller parts in this chapter!

Anti-HERO

Chapter 72: Anti-HERO

“Aizawa, sit down.” Nezu said coolly, though the slight edge in his voice skittered across their skin, “I’m not treating you like children, although you are currently acting like one. If anything, I’m doing you a favor.”

(See the end of the chapter for notes.)

Fanart!

Aria on Twitter!

Aizawa watched Nezu sip his tea with a wavering sense of calm, the conference room abuzz with grave or slightly frantic voices.

“What are we supposed to tell parents?” Midnight said, “We can’t just ignore this.”

“There are no reports of the red rain outside of U.A.’s boundaries.” Vlad King countered, “It only happened within the walls of our school. Nobody even saw it from the outside.”

“But why?” She frowned, “This doesn’t make any sense!”

“Everyone, calm down,” Yagi held up his hands, “I’m sure there is an explanation. I’m more worried about the children. Recovery Girl, did this red rain affect any students’ health?”

Recovery Girl pursed her lips, “I got an unusual amount of headaches the following day, but nothing severe or life threatening.”

“It’s not like any rain I’ve ever smelled,” Hound Dog growled, “It smelled... wrong. Like metal and blood, and I got the distinct scent of bones, too.”

“I didn’t even know what happened until after .” Power Loader said as he facepalmed, “I was too busy in the lab.”

“Don’t beat yourself up, Power Loader.” Thirteen said, “I didn’t see it first hand either.”

Aizawa’s piercing gaze drilled into Nezu’s skull.

Nezu’s ears twitched, “It’s lucky that almost all students were indoors, that most didn’t even know something strange occurred. Some students thought that eerie voice was thunder.”

“‘Almost all students were indoors’!?” Aizawa slammed his fist on the table. The other teachers jumped when teacups and mugs clattered on the table, “My whole class was outside when it happened! They were scared to death when I met them in their dorm, and I couldn’t even answer any of their questions as to what the hell was going on!”

“I agree with Eraser. Nezu, you must know something we don’t.” Ectoplasm’s ghostly white eyes peered into Nezu’s glossy black. “Why wait nearly two full days after the red rain came to have this meeting? Why in the world did you invite that journalist here, instead of having an emergency meeting right away?”

“Ah, Taneo.” Nezu took another sip, ignoring the teachers’ jittery nerves. “Juzo News wanted to do an article on the aspiring hero students! Interviewing 1-A, the sole witnesses to the red rain, was a good distraction for them. They are our future after all!”

“Get to the point!” Aizawa snapped, “What was the real reason he came here?”

“Why, to send a secret message as T-san! I invited him to my office and told him about the red rain, and of the strange voice we heard over the grounds. As per our agreement, he won’t be able to share the information with just anybody.”

Aizawa raised a brow, “A message to who?”

“Who else? Joker!”

The room went silent. Most of the staff gaped at him, others look at him as if he has lost his mind. Maybe he has. He had long discarded it in Aizawa’s book.

“Wait, now hang on a second...” Snipe muttered.

“Y-you’re saying that-” Present Mic was cut off.

“Nezu,” Aizawa leaned forward, his expression grave, “Are you implying that the red rain is somehow connected to Joker?”

“I know it is connected to Joker.” Nezu set up cup down and folded his paws on the table, “In fact, I believe the red rain is integral to Joker’s first appearance at the USJ!”

“... You’ve officially lost me.” Vlad King said.

Yagi, however, went bone white as sweat broke out on his forehead, “Nezu, you’re not seriously suggesting -”

Nezu held up a paw and Yagi clamped his mouth shut. “I have known that something was off with the USJ since Joker’s first appearance. There have been strange readings ever since the incident with the League of Villains, and I have confirmation that it was the center of the storm.”

“And you neglected to inform us because...?” Cementoss asked calmly.

“Because you are not ready for the full truth of Joker and Mona’s origins.”

“What ?” Aizawa’s expression turned dangerously sour, “That’s bullshit! If you figured something out, then we need to know!”

Present Mic put a hand on Aizawa’s shoulder, “Shouta, calm down!”

“No.” Aizawa stood, glaring at Nezu. “I’m done with you acting like this is just a game when the rest of our students could be endangered. Stop treating us like children and trust in us for once!”

The atmosphere became icy. The other teachers stiffened as they stared between Aizawa and Nezu, who had lost that playful gleam to his eyes.

“Aizawa, sit down.” Nezu said coolly, though the slight edge in his voice skittered across their skin, “I’m not treating you like children, although you are currently acting like one. If anything, I’m doing you a favor.”

Aizawa’s scowl deepened. “Explain, now .”

Nezu sighed, “You will know the truth, the full truth, in time. Believe me when I say we need Joker and Mona to be present before we continue this conversation.” Nezu picked up his teacup and swirled it, idly watching the dregs on the bottom, “I will not debate on this.”

Aizawa ground his teeth, but sank back in his chair and crossed his arms, glaring at nothing.

“So...” Thirteen said after a tense silence, “What’s the plan now?”

“The USJ will remain on lock-down, and I will assign more robot and teacher patrols around that general area.” Nezu said, “As for the rest of the school, we will retain normalcy as much as possible. Like with the initial USJ attack, we must show that we will not be felled by any threat. If any students have questions, then tell them that we teachers have it handled. I will immediately inform you if the readings spike like they did when the red rain came.”

“What about work studies?” Ectoplasm asked.

“Everything will proceed as planned.” Nezu said.

“But what if T-san can’t contact Joker?” Midnight tapped her fingers on the table, “What if Joker doesn’t come here before the next red rain?”

“Then I will make a public announcement asking for Joker to come to U.A.” Nezu looked across the table, absorbing a myriad of mixed emotions, “I won’t splurge all of the details publicly of course, just enough for Joker to put two and two together.”

“Why not do it now?” Cementoss asked. “It would save time.”

“... He might not trust us after what happened in the Kamino aftermath.” Nezu said, frowning. “It’s imperative that he hear it from T-san and make the decision for himself. If ever you put stock in my leadership at U.A., then trust me on this.”

“Alright,” Thirteen spoke first after a long, stilted silence, “I’ll trust you, Nezu.”

Cementoss nodded. Ectoplasm copied, albeit a bit hesitantly.

Midnight sighed, “Okay, as long as the students are okay and we get the full details eventually.”

The other teachers slowly came around. Aizawa was the last, barely a nod as he refused to look at Nezu.

“Good! Everyone is dismissed.”

Nezu hopped down from his chair and left the room.

“Dear, are you okay?” Recovery Girl asked Yagi, “You look like you’re about to be sick.”

“Yeah!” Present Mic yelled, “You totally know something, don’t you!?”

“W-well, that’s...” Yagi stood from his chair, his eyes not meeting any of theirs. “I’m sorry, I can’t.”

Yagi practically ran out of the room, leaving the rest of them with more questions than answers.

Snipe collapsed face first onto the table, “Just what in the hell did we get ourselves into?”

Aizawa dug out his phone and pulled up a familiar Spotlight post. He grimaced at Akira’s razor sharp smirk, the pang in his chest sharpening until he could barely breathe. “I don’t know.” Aizawa growled as he stood and pocketed his phone, “We must remain alert. I don’t know what the hell Nezu is thinking, but the students will be our first priority if something else happens.”

That, at least, was something the teachers agreed on.

Nighteye stared Midoriya down.

Despite Midoriya’s failure to make him laugh, his knowledge of All Might was nearly pristine. Mirio and Bubble Girl, one of his sidekicks, exchanged glances with one another as Midoriya stood tall before Nighteye’s desk.

The boy... he had fire in his eyes. That quirkless middle schooler had grown, honed a quirk that should never have been his, and had numerous victories under his belt. Even if a few weren’t legal. His arms were littered in scars, the most notable was hidden on a compression sleeve on his right arm.

“Mirio. Bubble Girl.”

“Y-yes?” Bubble Girl said.

“Leave the room. I’m going to test Midoriya now.”

“What!? But you-”

Mirio put a hand on Bubble Girl’s shoulder. “Okay, Sir! We’ll just be right outside!”

Midoriya paled when Mirio gave him a shining smile and a thumbs up.

“So, in order for this to work, you brought the contract from the school-”

“O-Oh, right!!” Midoriya reached into the bright yellow backpack he brought with him, “I-it’s in here!”

“Don’t interrupt me when I’m speaking with you.”

Midoriya clamped his mouth shut and produced the contract.

It was a standard contract, all the terms and protocols the school laid out for the work study. All it needed was his stamp for approval. Midoriya held his breath as Nighteye reached into his desk for it, pressed it into the ink pad, and hovered it a few inches from the blank space.

“You know, I can’t believe All Might chose you to be the next wielder of One For All. Given the circumstances, you may very well be the last seeing as how you allowed somebody else to finish your fight for you. It doesn’t matter to me how many times All Might talked about you, or how your feats always passed expectation.” The boy’s face went white as a sheet as Nighteye stood and rounded his desk, spinning the stamp between his fingers. He stopped a few feet away from Midoriya, not looking at him, “And now you think you deserve to work under me? Why? Surely you know that I only allowed you inside because All Might asked me to, right?”

Midoriya squared his shoulders. “At first, I studied directly under All Might. Those 9 months before the U.A. exam were some of the toughest in my life. Then, I-I got into U.A., and made friends, survived the USJ, and-”

“I didn’t ask for a grocery list of your meager accomplishments.”

“I know, Sir.” Midoriya took a breath, his expression softening. “But when I studied under Gran Torino, he taught me things about this quirk that I never would have otherwise. I made this power my own and passed the licensing exam because of it.” Midoriya looked at his clenched hands, “But I still have a lot to learn! And I believe that you would be the perfect person to help me reach the next step. Togata looks up to you, and he told me how much he’s learned since he started here.” Midoriya’s eyes sharpened as Nighteye finally turned to face him, “I will get stronger here, Sir!”

“I see.” Nighteye tilted his head and held out the stamp. “Here’s your test: Get this stamp from me, if you can. If you cannot get it within three minutes, you fail and will never take another step in my agency.”

“Fight!?” Midoriya looked around the office splurging with rare All Might merch. Posters, statues, things that die-hard fanboys would kill for. “Here!?”

“We begin....” Nighteye dangled the stamp between his thumb and pointer finger. Midoriya tensed. “Now .”

Nighteye dropped the stamp.

Green lightning sparked around Midoriya. What a fool. It was a diversion, a distraction. Nighteye saw Midoriya’s next move from a hundred miles away.

Nighteye got in position to throw him off, while at the same time it would be an opportunity to use his quirk-

Something in the back of his mind screamed at him to stop. In his anger and impatience about Midoriya and One For All, he had forgotten the other key factor as to why he invited Midoriya here.

But it was already too late.

Midoriya leapt for the stamp as it dropped, and Nighteye naturally fell into position. He tapped Midoriya's shoulder at the same moment he met eye contact.

The world went white.

"Shigaraki Tomura."

Shigaraki huffed as Kurogiri materialized beside him. "What do you want? Is that crybaby ready to talk more?"

Kurogiri huffed, "Not yet, but Gigantomachia seems to have calmed some after your... conversation with him."

Shigaraki rolled his eyes. Some 'conversation'.

"Hey... this has got to be some joke..." Shigaraki scratched his neck as the giant's wailing howls pierced his eardrums. The towering trees did nothing to help dampen the noise. He looked back at Kurogiri, who urged him forward. "Hey..."

"M-master, why!?" Fat tears dropped from the giant's chin, "Why did you leave me behind!?"

Shigaraki's finger's twitched, "I'm talking to you-"

"WHY!?"

"Shut up!!"

Shigaraki put his hand on the nearest tree. The bark grayed and cracked until the whole tree turned into a twisted, withered husk.

Decay leeches through the roots and into other trees in the area. Birdsong was brutally silenced, and any avians nesting in the trees fell to the ground, dead and crumbling. The soil under his feet turned ashy as he glared up at the giant, who finally stopped crying to look at him in stupefied shock. Vibrant green was replaced with gray as the air became speckled with ash and dust. It almost looked like snow.

“You’re supposed to be one of Sensei’s most treasured assets?” Shigaraki growled as death rained around them. “Don’t make me laugh! Would Sensei want you to sit around here and cry all day!? No! He’d want you to stand up and destroy the one who did it! Joker’s still out there you know, skulking in the shadows like a coward.” Shigaraki turned his back on the silent forest, “I don’t need a weak party member who can’t even do that much. We’re leaving, Kurogiri!”

“Shigaraki Tomura?”

“What ?”

“I asked you where the others ran off too... but you seem preoccupied.”

Shigaraki scoffed. “They went out to get food.”

“Ah, I see.” Kurogiri looked around the abandoned shack, and straightened his uniform. “Have you eaten today, Shigaraki Tomura?”

“What does it matter?”

“You need to have a balanced diet in order to-”

“Just get on with it! What do you want?”

Kurogiri sighed and produced a card. “I managed to get in touch with the Shie Hassaikai. They said they would be willing to meet you.”

“When?”

“They... did not say. They will contact us when the time is right.”

“That’s bullshit.” Shigaraki dusted the card, “They can’t even give us the decency of choosing the time or place? We don’t need them.”

“Shigaraki Tomura,” Kurogiri narrowed his yellow eyes, “This may not be an ideal situation, but the Shie Hassaikai have extremely powerful quirks in their midst. This could be a blessing in disguise.”

He glared, “What do you mean?”

“The doctor is almost done with the first High End Nomu. You may have not swayed Gigantomachia yet, but he has made progress. We must use their power to bolster our own forces before we meet with this Yakuza group, as to not look weak. If we ever have a hope of getting revenge for our master, we must form a... party with them.”

Shigaraki paced the filthy room.

Kurogiri had enough tact to stay silent as everything stewed over in Shigaraki’s mind. Finally, after several minutes of going in circles, Shigaraki’s shoulders relaxed.

“Fine. Fine .” He glared at Kurogiri, “Tell the doctor to hurry the hell up. We’ll show those bastards that we aren’t to be trampled on!”

Kurogiri bowed his head and disappeared.

Nighteye gasped as he shot up.

“Sir!” Bubble Girl waved her hands, “You’re awake!”

Nighteye blinked. He was still in his agency, on a couch piled with blankets and pillows.

“Ugh.” He massaged his temples as his head threatened to split open. It felt like he got hit with a sledge hammer. “What happened?”

“Uh... that’s what I was going to ask you, Sir.” She wouldn’t look him in the eye. “Mirio and I waited outside, I-like you wanted us to.”

“And?”

“W-well, that’s... you see...” She fidgeted in her chair.

“What is it?”

“Mirio and I were only outside for a minute before we heard you screaming-”

“Screaming ?” He cast the blankets off and swung his legs over the couch, “What are you talking about?”

“Uh...” Bubble Girl sighed, then looked him in the eye. “We ran in as soon as we heard you screaming, y-you were on the floor, convulsing . We didn’t know how to help you and Midoriya was freaking out! And then you just... stopped. Mirio is in another room trying to calm the kid, a-and I waited here to make sure you were okay! We didn’t know if we should call an ambulance or-”

Nighteye pinched the bridge of his nose. “How long was I out?”

“A-about an hour.”

“Bring Mirio and Midoriya here.”

“A-are you sure? You don’t look so-”

“Yes.”

Bubble Girl hesitated, giving him a pitiful look, before she dashed out of the room.

Nighteye shook his head and forced himself to stand on shaking legs. At least he should have the decency to talk to Midoriya while he was seated at his desk. He stumbled towards it and sank down in his chair. The stamp and the form were both on his desk. The contract still had the empty space.

Midoriya didn't even use that golden opportunity to get what he wanted.

Nighteye sighed as his head throbbed, and he barely heard the door open.

"Sir?" Mirio walked in first, his face paler than Nighteye had ever seen it. "Are you alright?"

"Yes." Nighteye looked at Midoriya, who flinched. He waited until they were lined in front of his desk, before asking Midoriya. "Do you know what my quirk is?"

Midoriya opened his mouth, then closed it.

Nighteye sighed. He pushed away a sudden bout of nausea as he explained. "When I touch someone and look into their eyes, I can see their future. To me, it's like watching a movie reel. I used my quirk at the start of our fight. Normally, I would've seen your future, and what moves you would've pulled off before you even thought about them."

"Sir," Mirio frowned, something Nighteye never wanted to see on his boy's face, "It was a lot worse than the other time it happened."

Midoriya gaped at Mirio, "It happened more than once? Is something wrong with your quirk?"

"No... at least, that's what I would've said before all of this happened." Nighteye clasped his hands together, "The only other time was right before the Sapporo Lab Incident. You know the one, Midoriya?"

"Y-yes."

"Can you happen a guess at who was present during that raid?"

“What do you-” Midoriya’s eyes went as wide, his pupils shrinking, “Are you talking about... Joker?”

“So you knew.” Nighteye leaned back in his chair, “My quirk has never reacted like that before then. At first, I thought it was jumping the gun by assuming Joker was the cause of it. Until recently.” Mirio and Midoriya leaned closer, their expressions turning serious, “Long ago, right after All Might fought All For One the first time, I begged All Might to give up his title and retire in peace because I looked into his future and saw how he would die. No matter what I did, what different methods I tried, the future always happened in the exact same way.”

“What are you getting at, Sir?” Mirio asked softly.

“I never saw Joker in All Might’s future. Not once. Not in the USJ, that Musutafu Raid never happened, and Kamino...” Nighteye frowned, “It was never supposed to be like that. It was only supposed to be All Might versus All For One. Alone. No Joker, no Satanael, and All For One was meant to survive and be taken to Tartarus.” Nighteye looked up at Midoriya, his eye critical, “What would you make of this?”

“W-well,” Midoriya clutched his chin, “I might think it’s a flaw with your quirk, or that Joker somehow has a power to avoid being seen in quirks like that. But...”

Nighteye raised a brow, “But?”

Midoriya hesitated.

Mirio playfully nudged Midoriya’s shoulder, “You can share anything with us, Midoriya!”

“W-well... there’s a lot about Joker we don’t know.” Midoriya said, “Something weird happened at U.A., and Aizawa-sensei told us that it had something to do with Joker. He wouldn’t explain how or why, but he and the other teachers refuse to talk about it any more.”

“Oh, the rumor about the red rain?” Mirio asked.

“The... red rain?” Nighteye said.

“Yeah! There was a strange rumor going around the school! Apparently we had a freak storm and the rain looked red? Myself and my other classmates never saw it, though.” Mirio blinked at Midoriya, “We were only told that your class went through something again, and to not bother you about it. The teachers were really strict on that.”

“Y-yeah. I’m not sure what’s going on myself. My class was outside, and it was sunny, and then it just... rained out of nowhere. But it was red, and then we heard this strange voice.” Midoriya shook his head, “If that’s related to Joker, and your quirk is acting weird because of him...” Midoriya hesitated, and was looking strangely at Nighteye, “Either something is wrong with your quirk, or something is wrong with Joker. Maybe your quirk considers him an anomaly or something?”

“An anomaly?” Nighteye’s frown deepened, “Maybe he is. My hypothesis is that Joker may have changed the very strings of fate that binds us all. Since my quirk reacted worse than the last time, we can guess that he’ll do something drastic to enact a future that never should have existed. And soon .”

The blood drained from Midoriya’s face.

Nighteye sighed. He grabbed the stamp and firmly planted it on the contract’s blank space. Midoriya sputtered as Nighteye handed it to him.

“Return tomorrow morning with Mirio.”

“Sir!” Mirio looked as if Nighteye had hung the stars, “Does this mean...?”

“Yes, it does. Congratulations. And Midoriya.” The boy looked at him, almost dazed. “What happened in this agency, and what we just discussed, will stay within these walls unless I give the green light. Understood?”

Midoriya frantically nodded.

“Good.” Nighteye waved his hand, “Mirio will make sure you get back safely. You have a lot to think about.”

Midoriya rushed out of the room. Mirio hesitated, concern clear on his face, but Nighteye waved him away.

He sighed when he was alone. “The only other person to witness that reaction was Hawks.”

Nighteye reached into a drawer for his phone.

“I admit, this isn’t what I thought we’d be doing on our first outing.” Tokoyami said as they walked through the too-white halls.

“A lot of heroes skip out on this part.” Hawks smiled, “But it’s just as important! Visiting the people you’ve rescued can go a long way in their recovery.”

“Ah, I see. Soothing the spirit by seeing your savior would be an incredible boost.”

“That’s one way to put it!” Hawks stopped in front of a set of double doors, turning to Tokoyami, “Follow my lead. You don’t have to talk to anyone if you don’t want to, but learning how to interact with them is a valuable skill. You follow?”

Tokoyami nodded, and Hawks opened the door. The visiting room was spacious, with plenty of windows to allow bountiful sunlight. Plush couches and coffee tables were scattered around, and shelves full of books and board games lined the rest of the walls. The walls were a calming shade of blue, and carpet on the floor instead of cold, hard linoleum. Hawks felt Tokoyami tense as the small group of people noticed their entrance, and they were surrounded in an instant.

Tokoyami stayed back, watching aptly. Hawks hugged and chatted and joked around with patients from the organ harvesting ring. Some were able to go home by now, but others needed a little extra time and care.

“Mr. Hawks!” Yumi, the small girl that madman used as a hostage, tugged on his sleeve. “I have something for you!”

“Oh?” Hawks beamed as he knelt in front of her. She had something behind her back, her doe eyes melting his heart. She had made so much progress in her time here, and it might not be much longer before she could go home, “What do you have there?”

She smiled and held up a piece of paper. It was a drawing. Of him . His wings were vibrant shades of orange and red, contrasting the clear blue sky around him. At the bottom, in wobbly hiragana, read ‘My #1 Hero!’. Hawks felt a surge of warmth in his chest, but underneath lied an old twist of disappointment that had no right being there any more.

Anything his fans gave him previously was disposed of by Kunikazu. A ‘waste of energy on useless trinkets’ the man had said. His smile widened as that twinge of disappointment burned away with Kunikazu’s words.

“You know, I have just the perfect place on my fridge.”

Her eyes lit up like stars, “Really?”

“Of course!” He booped her nose, earning an adorable giggle, “It’ll hang in a place of pride, and I promise to look at it every single day!”

Hawks enjoyed a few more minutes of talking with them, Tokoyami gained an unimaginably soft look in his eyes, before they were interrupted by a knock on the door. One of the doctors looked at Hawks expectantly.

Hawks smiled at everyone, "I'll be back in a moment."

Tokoyami was at his heels as they went back into the hall with the doctor.

"What's up?" Hawks asked.

"I wanted to double check something," The doctor said as he waved a hand towards the door, "We received an email from your agency, explaining that you wanted to take care of their medical bills?"

"Oh, right!" Hawks clapped his hands together, careful not to damage the drawing, "Yes, I did have my assistant whip up something like that."

His assistant! Someone he chose to work at his own agency, rather than just another HC goon working behind his back. Hawks was slowly weeding those out those soulless husks and hiring people he wanted, people who he could bond with that didn't have ulterior motives.

"I see," The doctor frowned, "That will be very expensive."

"I can handle it." Hawks turned to stare at the door, frowning, "These people have been through enough. They should focus on recovering without medical debt hanging over their heads. Yumi's parents are especially struggling to stay afloat even without them."

The doctor nodded. "Very well, I'll get the paper work in order and contact you when everything is done."

Hawks nodded, and the doctor went down the hall.

"That is very generous of you." Tokoyami whispered.

Hawks threw on a grin, "It's the least I could do, really. Not everyone is saved after the villain is taken down, if you catch my drift."

"Saving their hearts after the villains are gone..." Tokoyami looked at the ground in thought, though there was something troubling by the way his feathers drooped. "That's something Joker would do."

Hawks chuckled, "Probably. Hey, have you been feeling okay? You've been... off since you started working with me. I didn't do something to make you uncomfortable, did I?"

"What? No." Tokoyami blinked. "I admit I have been pondering many troubling things as of late."

"If you need to get something off your chest, I'm all ears!"

Tokoyami stared at Hawks strangely and shifted on his feet. "I just... You've flown through any number of storms, correct?"

"Yeah?"

"Have you ever... experienced red rain before?"

"Red rain?" Hawks raised a brow. "I've been through some freaky lightning storms, but nothing about red rain. Why?"

"It's... it's nothing." Tokoyami turned away. "Forget I said anything."

At that moment, his phone rang. He frowned at Tokoyami, but he answered with a forced grin, "Kagome-chan! What's up?"

Oh, did he mention that his assistant was one of the quirkless people Joker rescued? Hawks might not have been as vocal as Gang Orca, Ryukyu, or Nezu about their various programs, but they were all still sorely lacking in a specific area: Quirkless people.

They deserved protections against discrimination, to be able to live their lives despite their lack of a quirk. To not be treated as second hand citizens. An afterthought or statistic. If he could take the first step in setting up laws to protect them, then he would. After all, who could say no to a few choice words from the number 2 hero?

Besides, quirk or no, Kagome was one of the most scarily efficient people he's ever seen. He was happy to have her on board.

"Sir, I got a call from the Nighteye Agency."

"First, we talked about this," Hawks said. "You don't need to keep calling me 'sir'. Second, what does Nighteye want?"

Tokoyami perked up.

"Well...."

"What's wrong?"

"Nighteye didn't give many details, but it sounded urgent. The only hint he would give me was something about his quirk, and... something about Joker. He said he wanted to invite you to his agency and asked if you could come as soon as possible."

Hawks sobered, "Call him back and tell him we'll be there tomorrow."

"Yes sir- er, Hawks."

Kagome hung up.

Tokoyami glanced between Hawks and his phone warily, "What's going on?"

"I don't know yet." Hawks shoved his phone back in his pocket and sighed, "But it looks like our hospital visit will be cut short. We'll find out more when we get to the Nighteye Agency."

Tokoyami nodded and remained silent from there on out.

Hawks carefully folded Yumi's drawing and tucked it away. He hoped she wouldn't be too upset with him for leaving so soon.

"I think father is sick."

"Eh? What do you mean?" Fuyumi asked.

"Yes! Hey, maybe we could get him admitted and-"

"Natsuo, hush!" Fuyumi chastised, "Go on, Shoto."

"Well," Shoto looked around the empty hallway nestled within Endeavor's agency. "We trained today, and it wasn't... it wasn't like the training we did when I was little. He was calm as he instructed me to copy what he could do so we could grasp the limits on my fire side. And then he talked about how we could practice with my fire and ice together to do something new."

"Okay?" Fuyumi whispered, "I thought it was bad idea to do a work study at our father's agency but I wasn't expecting this."

"Yeah, little bro! What the heck were you thinking? There are loads of other hero agencies that have fire quirks!! Why go with that bastard?"

"I know, but he's the best option to hone my fire side. Besides... there's more."

"He didn't hurt you, did he!?" Natsuo snapped.

"No. Actually," Shoto grabbed his right shoulder with his free hand, "He's been... smiling, or trying to. At first I thought he was constipated or in pain, honestly. Before we trained he cracked a joke with one of his sidekicks, who looked confused at first. Then after we went to his office, I was expecting to be told how our training session was a complete failure."

"What did he do?" Fuyumi asked softly.

“He...” Shoto’s throat tightened, so he cleared it before answering, a strange knot of emotions tangled in his chest. He didn’t know what to make of them. “He patted my shoulder and told me how proud he was of me.”

“Yep, sounds like he needs to be admitted to psyche ward, stat. All of these are clearly signs of a mental break.”

“Natsuo, knock it off!”

“What? Do you honestly think he’s had a change of heart? I don’t!”

“Well, he’s been acting differently for a long time now. He’s not... he’s not the same person anymore.” Fuyumi sighed, “He told me he was proud of me too, for what we did with that petition for Joker.”

“Wait, really? Why hasn’t he told me he’s proud of me!?”

“Would you have accepted it?”

“No, but-”

“It’s because you won’t give him the time of day. He gave us space after the Yaoyorozu trial because you kept throwing glares at him. Maybe we should give him a chance.”

The siblings didn’t speak for several moments.

“I’ll see how the rest of this week goes.” Shoto said, frowning, “I’m still on the fence, he needs to prove he’s genuine first.”

“Shoto...” Fuyumi said.

“I’ll be watching in case he goes back to old habits. Don’t wait up for me if I have to say ‘I told you so!’”

Natsuo hung up first.

Fuyumi sighed, “Chin up, okay Shoto? Call me if you need anything?”

“Of course, Fuyumi. Talk to you later?”

“Yeah, later.”

Shoto hung up. He looked at his phone when another text came from his father, asking if he’s ‘ready to go on patrol with his old man’.

Shoto groaned.

“I’m still having nightmares about it, man!” Kaminari cried, “Why are the teachers being so... sooo...”

“Evasive? Mysterious? Secretive!?” Ashido wagged her fingers at Kaminari, “What are they hiding!?”

“Maybe they have good reasons to keep their traps shut.” Bakugo snapped. “And you should too!”

Ashido and Kaminari whipped around to him, and others in the common area pretended not to eavesdrop. They were terrible at it.

“What do you mean?” Kaminari frowned, “You’d think this would be a pretty big deal! I haven’t seen a single article on it either! Nobody is talking about it!”

“Especially since it’s somehow related to Joker!?” Ashido threw her hands up, “I mean, come on! They can’t just leave us on that !”

Bakugo looked at his clenched hands, scowling, “I saw it before.”

“Huh?” Kaminari asked.

“That red sky over U.A. I’ve seen it a few times, just for a second or two, and had some weird dreams about it since. I thought I was just seeing things.” Bakugo glanced around the room, “Nobody else saw it before the picnic?”

“N-no, dude.”

Ashido shook her head.

Great, now the extras were looking at him in concern.

“Why only me?” He muttered to himself.

“Joker...”

They looked up to Deku, who had just walked in.

“Oh, you’re back!” Kaminari grinned, “How did it go? Kirishima and the others got in with their agencies!”

“Apparently Hawks and Endeavor approved Tokoyami and Todoroki’s paperwork early, so they’re already with those agencies!” Ashido draped her arms over the back of the couch, “What about you, Midoriya?”

“Ah, yeah! I’m starting tomorrow!”

“Nice!” Kaminari’s grin faltered, “But why do you look so spooked, dude? Did something happen?”

Deku flinched, his eyes darting around. “No?”

Bakugo narrowed his eyes as Deku inched towards the elevator.

“I-I’m going to hit the hay. Good night!”

“Midoriya!” Ashido yelled, “It’s not even 5 pm yet! What about your dinner!?”

“Aaaaand, he’s gone.” Kaminari said with a shrug, “I wonder what’s gotten into him?”

Bakugo stood and stomped towards the elevator.

"You too, Bakugo?" Ashido asked.

"I just need some time alone. Piss off."

"Somebody's cranky." Kaminari stage whispered to Ashido.

Bakugo ignored them as the elevator doors closed. When he got off, he stomped towards his room and locked his door. Bakugo stared at the Seth statue sitting proudly on his headboard, frozen on Seth's billowing wings and mouth open to a silent roar. He snorted as he went to his bed and fell face first onto it.

His only thoughts were how the bastards got the wrong number of horns on Seth's head.

Ren paced back and forth around the attic, the others watching him in concern.

"Are you sure you want to contact him?" Manami asked.

"Yeah." Ren stopped and raised a brow at her, "He posted a new blog with a picture of a bird. He knew our code word for the heroes, so I doubt it's a coincidence."

"I wonder if something happened." Atsuhiro said, "Maybe he has some information to share?"

"It can't hurt checking in with him," Morgana said as his tail swished back and forth, "It's been a while."

"Okay." Manami handed Ren a burner, "I added additional protections just in case."

Ren nodded, and called the only number set in the burner phone. It only rang once before somebody picked up.

"Hello?"

Ren smirked, "Greetings, T-san."

"Kid!?" There were loud crashing noises in the background, the sound of things falling and Taneo muttering a string of colorful curses.

"Are you okay?"

"Am I okay!?" Taneo huffed as another tower of something crashed onto the floor. "You know, when someone you care about disappears without a trace and suddenly calls you and one jammed toe into a table sends a bunch of paperwork onto the floor-I'm just peachy."

"Sorry, I should've contacted you sooner."

"Ah, don't be. I literally asked you to call me in a round about way, I just didn't expect you to get in touch so soon." Taneo sighed as if all his strength left him, "You had me worried sick, and I'm not the only one. You had no idea how many people really felt relief when you posted that picture on Spotlight."

"I know." Ren sat down in the middle of the attic. Morgana pranced over to him to listen in, so Ren pulled the phone away from his ear and put it on speaker so everyone could hear. "Anyway, why did you want to get into contact with me?"

"Oh, right..." Taneo seemed to brace himself, "Look, I'm not one to mince words, so I'll get straight to the point. Something freaky happened at U.A."

Ren's heartbeat picked up as the others leaned in.

"Something that they don't want many people to know about, but Nezu thought it would be important to you personally." Taneo let those words hang in the air for a moment, before his voice turned grave, "Would you happen to be familiar with red rain?"

Ren flinched. Morgana shivered as a similar icy cold fear stabbed into Ren's chest. Atsuhiro mouthed 'red rain?' to Shuichi, who shrugged. Tobita exchanged glances with Manami.

Kaito remained silent, but he crossed his arms with a deepened frown.

"Kid?"

"When did it happen?" Ren asked, unable to keep his voice steady.

"Last Saturday. There's something else. Nezu also said that along with the red rain, there was a strange voice or something that echoed through the grounds. Something enormous. The cameras around the school malfunctioned when it happened, so he doesn't have any recordings of the event, but it's clear that whatever it was had him pretty spooked."

Ren and Morgana stared at each other, mutual dread filtering through their eyes.

"What happened after? Did Shadows attack the students?"

"Huh? Shadows? I don't think anything attacked the students. The red rain only lasted a minute or so, and the storm ended shortly after that voice faded away. Nezu thinks it'll happen again, though he doesn't know when. You... you know what's going on, don't you?"

"Yeah. I do." The phone creaked under Ren's tightened grip. "Listen, it could be dangerous."

"Huh?"

"Stay away from the school if you can."

"Wait-"

Ren hung up and jumped to his feet, leaving the burner on the floor.

“What are you doing?” Morgana asked when Ren went to his bags, his hackles still raised.

“You heard him, Morgana.” Ren rifled through his bag and grabbed his phone from home. He had kept it off since he shared his real name with the others, so he turned it on. “I’m checking to see if the Metaverse app is on my phone. If the Metaverse is appearing at U.A., then we have to be there.”

“W-wait a second!” Morgana shouted.

“Merp!” Stubbs announced.

Shuichi frantically waved his arms, “What!? You can’t just-”

“I feel like you’re skipping a few steps.” Atsuhiro went to Ren’s side, “What is this ‘Metaverse’? What has the two of you spooked so badly?”

“We should talk about this before you make such a bold decision.” Tobita said calmly. “Please.”

Ren froze as his phone lit up. And began to vibrate. Ren stared in shock as his phone screen glitched and a high pitched whine screeched from the speakers. A familiar eye shaped icon appeared in the center of the screen, wavering with the warped prismatic colors. Ren hissed and dropped the phone as it burned his palm, the others jumped away as it sparked and exploded.

The screen went black, and small trails of smoke leaked from it.

“No way...” Ren whispered in the dreaded silence. He fell to his knees and stared at it, “It can’t be...”

“Th-that was...” Morgana’s eyes went wide, and he shivered. “I saw it before the screen went dark, i-it really is-”

“Morgana, we can’t waste any time.” Ren snatched his bag and warily picked up his phone. It was still hot, but he tossed it in his bag.

He slipped on his shoes and a warm hoodie, and made for the stairs, "Are you coming or not?"

"Wait!" Morgana and the others were on his heel, "Please, take a minute and think about this, Ren! Ren!!"

They made it to the bottom of the stairs and Kaito rounded on Ren, blocking his way to the storage room.

"Kaito, move." Ren growled. "I have to go."

"You're being rash." Kaito held up his hands, his voice steady, "I don't fully understand what happened at U.A., but you have to calm down and think about the consequences. You're not the only one affected here."

"Yeah, you're our leader! We're a team !" Shuichi cried. "We'll support you no matter what, but you gotta talk to us, man!"

Manami tugged on his sleeve, "Let's go back upstairs and take a breather, okay?"

Ren scoffed, "Morgana, tell them we have to go."

"I..."

Ren frowned as he looked over his shoulder at Morgana, who stared at him strangely. "... Morgana?"

"They're right."

"What?"

"I get it, I'm scared too." Morgana sat on the bottom stair and curled his tail around his legs. "But we can't just jump into this like we have before! Especially since you... since you're..."

Ren scowled. "Since I'm what ?"

Morgana's ears drooped, "Since you still don't have your powers. It's too dangerous. I-I can't fight all the Shadows by myself, I-let alone be able to do anything if Yaldabaoth really shows up! If I fail, a-and there's no way to save the others, then who will protect you?"

"So I'm useless, is that it?"

"What!?" Morgana jumped on all fours, "I never said that!"

"But I might as well be!" Ren snapped. "I can't summon my costume or my Personas. I'm tired of just sitting here doing nothing! And now we lost our one tie to our home! If I can help U.A., if I can reunite us with the others, then I will! This is our chance, Morgana!"

"We're not saying we won't help with whatever is going on," Tobita stepped next to Ren, his eyes full of warmth that made Ren's chest hurt. "We're just asking you to calm down so we can all come up with a plan together."

Ren's heart pounded and his skin prickled. He felt too hot. The walls closed in and it was suddenly hard to breathe. They were all looking at him as if he were an injured animal ready to lash out.

"Ren." Ren looked into Kaito's eyes, so full with knowledge and understanding that it instantly reminded Ren of Kohryu. Kaito gently put both hands on Ren's shoulders, gripping firmly, "It's okay. Everything will be okay. You're like family to me and I don't want to lose you. We'll figure something out, but you need to work with us, okay?"

Ren swallowed. The fight slowly drained out of him, and he let his bag drop to the floor with a dull thud. For some reason, his eyes burned. His heart pounded against his ribcage, a stab of hurt and pain accompanied each frantic beat.

"That's it." Kaito smiled softly, "Now, let's-"

“No.” Ren shrugged of Kaito, “I just... “ His face fell in his hands as he tried and failed to make the frustrated tears go away, “I need some air. I need to think... away from this bar. I’ve been cooped up here too long.”

“But-” Manami started.

“I won’t go far.” Ren’s hands fell to his sides, “Unless I can’t even do that, either. I’ve only been out of this place once .”

Kaito opened and closed his mouth. He looked at the others, and with a sigh, he stepped out of Ren’s way. Morgana made to follow, but Ren stopped him with a sharp glare.

“Alone .”

Morgana froze as the back door closed silently, but it might as well have been as loud as a bomb going off.

Manami sniffled, “I-I’ve never seen him so upset with us before...”

“I-I...” They looked at Morgana, who trembled. He choked down a sob as tears dripped onto the floor, “I-I miss them too, Ren!” He yowled at the door, “I-I’ve been burying my feelings because I was so worried about you ! Why can’t you see that I’m hurting, too!? I just don’t want to lose you again, you jerk !”

“Morgana...” Kaito said softly.

Morgana shuddered with another sob, and Manami wrapped the feline in her arms.

Atsuhiro pinched the bridge of his nose, “It seems we haven’t been taking in their feelings as much as we should have.” He lowered his hand and looked in between their group, “We’ll give Ren the space he wants, but we should go after him if he doesn’t return within 20 minutes.”

“He has the penchant to get into trouble on his own.” Tobita said.

“But what choice did we have?” Shuichi threw his hands up, “He was so upset, and forcing him to stay here would’ve made it way worse!”

“Merp!” Lady Stubbs huffed.

Kaito picked up Ren’s bag from the floor, then looked at Atsuhiko, “Who should go?”

Atsuhiko blinked, “You’re asking me ?”

Kaito shrugged, “You might be the newest member, but you’ve grown really close to Ren and the rest of us. You have the power to make sure he comes back okay.”

“Well, I suppose...” Atsuhiko frowned, “Spinner, Morgana, and I should go. Manami, see if you can do anything to repair that phone.”

Manami pulled away from Morgana and nodded.

“What should I do?” Tobita asked.

“Stay here, maybe prepare some tea and food for when we get back. I think Ren will need it.”

Tobita frowned, his other hand tapping the cuff around his wrist, “Oh. Alright.”

“Merp?”

Atsuhiko snorted at Stubbs’ soul devouring stare, “You and Kaito stay down here in case he returns without us. Does that sound like a plan, everyone?”

After a round of agreements, they split into their respective duties.

Morgana did his best to calm down and wipe away his tears with his tiny paws, then jumped onto Atsuhiko’s shoulder.

After 20 minutes and no sign of Ren, they delved deep into the labyrinth sprawling from the back of the bar.

Eri dashed through the darkness.

She slipped in a puddle and fell on her face, but the stinging on her hands and knees was nothing compared to the terror washing through her whole body.

“Eri...”

She looked behind her. Overhaul was in the shadows somewhere, stalking her like prey. His voice echoed around the stone cold walls, his presence everywhere and nowhere all at once. Her heart skipped and her veins flooded with another layer of ice.

She pulled herself onto shaking legs, and ran .

“I’m a bit nervous.” Midoriya said to Mirio.

Civilians pointed and smiled at them as they walked down the busy sidewalk. The morning was bright and sunny, and yet Midoriya’s stomach held nothing but a tangled ball of nerves.

Mirio beamed, “You must’ve gone on patrol at your last internship, right?”

“Well... not really. My internship was a bit unorthodox.”

“I see.” Mirio nodded, “Stick with me and I’ll show you the ropes! There’s nothing to be worried about as long as you’re with Lemillion!”

“Lemillion?” Midoriya’s eyes widened as he stared at the blazing gold 1000000 on Mirio’s chest, “Oh, that’s your hero name?”

“Yep!” Mirio posed his with hands on his hips, a couple girls behind them blushed, “It’s because I want to save a million people! I never got your hero name, though.”

“It’s Deku.”

“Deku ?” Mirio looked at him as if he sprouted another head, “Are you sure you’re okay with something like that?”

Midoriya nodded, “It’s not as bad as it sounds! It used to be an insult, but a close friend of mine said it reminded them of that saying ‘You can do it!’.”

“That’s a good friend.” Mirio said, smiling. “I’m glad you could turn it into something positive!”

“Yeah, I don’t know what I would do without them. Oh, speaking of, I heard that Hawks will be at the Nighteye Agency sometime today?”

“Right! Bubble Girl did say something like that before we left! Why?”

“One of my classmates is interning with Hawks! It’ll be exciting working with him and one of the top heroes in Japan!”

“That’s the spirit, Deku!”

Midoriya didn’t noticed a tiny mouth of an alley until something small bowled into his legs. He staggered and Mirio steadied him with a hand on the shoulder.

“Woah! Are you okay?”

“Um...”

Midoriya stared at a tiny girl looking up at him from the ground. Long white hair flowed down her back, and her gleaming ruby eyes were wide in fear. She wore a tattered, dirty dress, and her arms and legs were wrapped in filthy bandages. His eye caught the tiny horn poking out the top of her forehead.

He knelt down with a warm smile, "I'm sorry, I didn't see you there. Are you lost?"

Mirio exchanged a worried look with him when she didn't answer.

Midoriya didn't see her freeze when he lifted a hand and gently set it on her head. "Don't be scared! Everything is okay now that we're here to help you! What's your name?"

The girl's eyes filled with tears, and Midoriya heart leapt to his throat when she suddenly tackled him in a hug. Her tiny hands gripped the back of his hero costume as if it was the last thing on this earth.

"Eri." She whispered, her voice as soft as a puff of cotton dancing on a breeze.

Midoriya wrapped his arms around her, his heart twisting as he felt skin and bone under her dress, "Well, Eri, why don't we get you looked at and then we can figure out where your parents are?"

"Eri, you're really making trouble for these young heroes?" A steely voice came from the dark alley.

The girl gasped and clung tighter to him. Midoriya squinted to see the figure stalking towards them, close enough for the shadows to recede. Mirio tensed, and he grabbed Midoriya's hood and pulled it over the top of his head.

Midoriya blinked in confusion until the man stopped a few paces away.

He was tall and slender, with shaggy auburn hair. Midoriya barely registered the rest of his clothes, too enamoured with the strange, beak-like mask over his mouth and nose. And his eyes . They were small and a gilded golden color, but they were cold. Calculating. Emotionless. They roamed over Midoriya as if he were a disgusting thing found at the bottom of a shoe.

“Thank you for finding my daughter.” The man droned, “She has a bad habit of wandering where she’s not supposed to.”

“H-he’s not my daddy.” Eri’s voice broke and she was on the verge of tears.

Midoriya tightened his grip on her, “Sir, she’s dirty and injured. I think we should go to the hospital and get her looked at properly.”

The man tilted his head, his eyes sharpening, “She’s clumsy and falls down all the time. She’ll feel better once she’s back home . Now Eri, stop throwing a tantrum and come along.”

“But-” Midoriya clamped his mouth shut when Mirio grasped his shoulder, his grip like iron.

“Oh, I know you!” Mirio said as he threw on a sunny grin, “You’re Overhaul, leader of the Shie Hassaikai, aren’t you?”

Overhaul narrowed his eyes at Mirio. “So you know me. What did you say your hero names were?”

“Oh, we’re nobody special!” Mirio chuckled as he rubbed the back of his head with his free hand, “We’re barely considered sidekicks!”

“I see.” Overhaul’s eyes flicked to Eri, and she flinched as if she had been stabbed, “Eri, let’s go. Unless you want to cause more trouble for these young heroes.”

He pulled at his glove.

Eri silently gasped, and she thrashed in Midoriya’s arms. She slipped from his grasp and ran to Overhaul’s side, her head ducked.

“Oh? Finally done throwing a tantrum?” The man patted her head, and her tiny hands curled into shaking fists. “Good girl. Now come along, you missed a lot while you were away from home.”

They walked back into the shadows. Midoriya shot to his feet and was about to run after them, but Mirio yanked him back.

“Lemillion, we can’t just-!”

“You didn’t feel it, did you.” Mirio’s sunny grin disappeared into a twisted grimace as the pair disappeared into the shadows, “That man had murderous intent written all over him. If we didn’t return his daughter, then he would have tried to kill us.”

“So that make it right to throw her away!?” He yelled. Mirio gave him a pained glance, and Midoriya’s throat tightened, “She was just a little girl. How can we turn away from someone who needed help?”

“Deku...” Mirio sighed as he let go of Midoriya’s arm, “I know how you feel, but as we are now we wouldn’t be of any help. The Shie Hassaikai are a small group, but they have really powerful quirks. Their leader has the worst one of all.”

“So...?”

“So,” Mirio smiled, although it was weaker than before, “We might not be able to help her now, but one of Sir’s specialties is dealing with people like that. We’ll make a report when we get back, and once we have enough information to save that girl, we will. I promise, we won’t abandon her next time.”

“But...”

Midoriya looked down at his hands, a recent memory taunting him.

“Would you still reach your hand to him even when he broke the law?” That girl, who he knew now as a disguised Toga Himiko, leered at him, “Aren’t heroes supposed to bring criminals to ‘justice’?”

“I would save him, no matter what.”

He would save Akira, no matter what . That's what he said. He stated it like a promise forged in steel. But why should that only apply to Akira? He knew it wasn't realistic to be able to save everyone, but she was right in front of him, in his arms ! Why couldn't he reach his hand out to a scared little girl at the end of her wits?

"Hey, Deku, snap out of it!"

Midoriya winced as Mirio snapped his fingers in front of his face. "Sorry."

"It's alright. That situation was... stressful." Mirio patted his shoulder, "Why don't we return to the agency?"

"Yeah, sure."

Midoriya glanced back into the shadowy alleyway, dread tugging at his heart, before following Mirio. He felt strange as they stepped back into the sunlight. His footsteps slowed as something buzzed under his skin. One For All fluttered along with another feeling in his chest, a familiar sensation he hadn't felt since before the Summer Camp. A rock sank into his stomach, these feelings intensifying as they walked down the street, getting further and further away from that alleyway.

An unknowable energy rippled through the world.

Midoriya suddenly felt dizzy as he was struck by the weird sensation, his steps slowing to a stop. The energy of One For All tangled with the growing pressure in his chest. He took a shaky breath and clutched at his heart as it continued to grow, thrashing against his ribcage like a wild animal trying to escape its cage.

Mirio looked over his shoulder, "Deku? Are you okay?"

"I..." Midoriya pulled his hood down. A sudden breeze picked up and flowed through his hair, "I don't feel right all of a sudden."

Mirio stepped closer, "Do you feel sick?"

"I don't know. I-"

"Ah, we have found you at last!"

Midoriya frantically looked around at the sudden voice in his head.

"What's wrong?" Mirio asked.

"Did you hear that voice? It sounded like a girl, n-not Eri's, but someone different."

Mirio frowned, "I didn't hear anything?"

A flash of sparkling blue came into the corner of his eye. Midoriya bolted after it, but Mirio stopped him before he could lose himself in another alleyway.

"Deku," Mirio kept his voice low as he clutched Midoriya's shoulder, "You're really starting to worry me. Let's get back to the agency so you can take a break. You must be exhausted by such an exciting patrol!"

Midoriya tried to pull away, but Mirio's grip tightened. "N-no, that's not-"

People screamed as the earth ruptured under their feet, cars screeched to a stop as windows shattered when a blinding white light blotted out their vision and took over the sky.

Mirio tackled Midoriya and covered him until the rumbling stopped.

"Are you hurt?" Mirio asked.

"N-no!"

"Get to safety, I'll-"

“No, I’ll go with you!”

“But you said-”

“I’m alright!” Midoriya yelled, “Besides, we’re the closest heroes! That direction is where Overhaul and Eri went!”

Mirio’s stiffened, then nodded, “Okay. Let’s go!”

One For All crackled over Midoriya’s skin as he leapt for the rooftops, Mirio followed. Midoriya felt his breath hitch when he saw chunks of some buildings missing in the distance, all concentrated in a perfect circle a few blocks away. As they got closer, something flew through the air over the disaster.

A massive blood red serpent with a dark purple underbelly. It gracefully glided on several bat-like wings attached to its head and body, and it whipped towards them as they approached. Five eyes, the deepest amethyst color Midoriya had ever seen, pierced into them. It flared its wings and charged. As it got closer, Midoriya realized that the partially transparent body was wreathed in blue flames.

Midoriya... just froze.

The shadow of the serpent was upon him.

“Deku!”

Mirio burst out of the rooftop, delivering a walloping blow to the flying serpent’s jaw. The snake’s wings picked up a great gust as it veered away. It twisted and turned into the air to face them. Then, like Midoriya, it suddenly stopped.

It hovered above them with splayed wings, peering at Midoriya. It’s tongue flicked out and tasted the air, almost curiously.

“Chariot...?” It hissed before it faded away into cerulean ash.

“What... what was that ?” Mirio asked.

“Th-that was- I-it can’t be.” Midoriya muttered as he stared at the destruction.

Mirio walked to the edge of the broken building they stood on.

Thankfully, most of the damage had been contained underground. But some of the surrounding buildings, the sidewalk, anything in between had been eradicated. The open sides of buildings revealed their framework skeletons, and the sewers underneath the ground lay exposed, the cleanly cut pipes bursting with water.

The surrounding cement and walls were twisted into layers of sharp spikes, and...

A large pool of blood trickled over the edge of the hole, dripping steadily into the water below. The wind blew ash and the scent of copper over them.

Midoriya barely heard the approaching sirens over the ringing in his own ears.

Next updates: May 28th and June 11th

Awakening

Chapter 73: Awakening

(:

(See the end of the chapter for notes.)

FANART!

aidan on Twitter

Aria on Twitter

Ren kicked a dented can across the alleyway, head lowered and shoulders hunched. His lone steps crunched over the filthy ground as the sickly sweet scent of garbage filled his nose. He kicked the can again, the aluminum scraping across the concrete, the grating sound too loud in the cramped alley.

He understood the others' intentions on some level. They just wanted him to be safe, but nobody in these worlds would be safe if Yaldabaoth got his way. Did Morgana forget that? What happened at Kamino was terrible, but he was working through it, just like he worked through the aftermath of their plan in the interrogation room back home, all on his own. Sure, the Thieves were relieved he was 'okay'. Nobody but Futaba saw what really happened, and Ren didn't want to worry them.

Sojiro promised he wouldn't tell them what state Ren came back home in, delirious from the drugs and the beatings, so close to breaking like cracked porcelain.

Futaba hugged him a little harder that night. Morgana pieced things together after the nightmares started, and Ren made him promise not to tell the others, too.

Ren scowled and kicked the can with more force than necessary, the memories of his real teammates clogging his throat. The alleyway opened up a little, and Ren glanced between several branching pathways. He looked back, the thin alleyway silent. The rooftops didn't reveal any tailing shadows, either. At least they respected him enough to give him some real privacy.

With a scoff, he turned and walked in a random direction. This alleyway widened a little more, allowing some sunlight to brighten the stones closer to the rooftops while deeper shadowy pools swam on the ground. He didn't know how long he waded through the contrasting darkness of these alleys, twisting and turning in random directions as his mind stewed over Taneo's words.

He wasn't brought out of it until the hairs on the back of his neck raised. Ren stopped, listening. Then, he heard them. Footsteps. Two pairs, but the first was slow and predatory, almost leisurely in a way. The second, cowed and quiet, and too close together.

Ren pulled his hood tighter as two shadows emerged from an adjacent alleyway. The first was a man, tall and slender, with shaggy brown hair. He wore dark dress pants and a shirt, with a pale gray tie. A green bomber jacket with a purple furred collar was over them.

Ren grimaced at the strange beak-like mask the man had over his face, like a bird of prey colored with magenta and gold. The second tiny figure stopped behind him. Ren's heart froze at the little girl covered head to toe in bandages, her feet bare and scraped. The girl's hair was like flowing moonlight, matted and as dirty as the rest of her.

The man turned to Ren, and stopped. Ren bristled as golden eyes were upon him, brittle yet calculating, as cold and malicious as a Shadow's. The girl made to follow the man, but froze, her crimson eyes peering into Ren's gray. Eyes so full of desperation and pain -

"Why are you looking at her like that?" The man's voice was as sharp as a scalpel despite the beak mask's hollowness, "Who do you think you are?"

Ren couldn't look away from the girl. Her expression morphed into terror when the man's hands twitched. Ren felt it, that change in the air, as cold as a winter wind sucking the life from dying embers.

"Didn't you hear me?" The man tilted his head, pulling his glove tight, "Do you intend to play hero, boy?"

Ren tore his eyes away from the girl, the shadow of his hood falling over his face as he looked at his shoes instead. What could he do? Shame curled in his chest and burned through his blood.

"I'm no hero." Ren said with a scoff. "I don't even have any powers to try."

The man blinked, "Are you quirkless?"

"You could say that."

The sharpness in the air dissipated. He studied Ren with an intensity that made his skin crawl, as if Ren himself was a shiny new toy ready for dissection. There was reverence behind the man's gaze that Ren couldn't make heads or tails of.

"You are luckier than most," The man said as the tension left his body, "Be thankful that you are one of the pure ones in a world of sickness. Come along now, Eri. We have important work to do."

The man walked past Ren, but the girl, Eri, didn't move. She was frozen to the spot. He dared to look her in the eye again. A foreign yet strangely familiar feeling trickled through Ren as their eyes met, time slowed around them, each ebb and flow of their heartbeats rising and falling with the sun.

He shivered as his veins flooded with a torrent of ice and fire. By now, the man had stopped several paces away and looked over his shoulder.

“Eri.” He warned, but neither of the children heard him.

Pain flickered into Ren’s temple when a flood of memories hit him.

“Get in the car!”

“No! Please, somebody help me!”

The gavel hitting wood boomed in the silent courtroom, his fate was sealed with voices singing ‘guilty.’

“If you make trouble for me, that’s it. I’ll cast you out-”

“Oh, I’m in the way, aren’t I?” Shiho looked at him with no light in her eyes, a bruise darkening her face -

“Just go!” Ryuji yelled in the tiny cell crowded by Shadows, “Get out of here-”

“I am the Pillager of Twilight, Arsene!”

“You took everything from Shiho,” Ann stood with her Persona behind her, bathed in a wall of blue fire, “Now, I’ll take everything from you!”

“The children who adored you as ‘father’, the prospects of your pupils... How many did you trample upon? How many dreams did you exchange for riches? No more! No matter what it takes, I will bring you to justice!”

“I will go full-speed, nonstop! Right, Johanna!?”

"Please help me!" Futaba yelled as her monstrous Shadow of a mother screamed overhead, "That thing's gotta go!"

"Farewell, dear father. I'm no longer your subservient puppet!"

"I'll kill you... you're all going to die-"

"The sin of rebelling against a god is severe-"

"What if we were sent to a different world?"

The look of pure hatred in Silver Falcon's eyes was burned forever in his memory-

"Why did you help me?" Hitoshi asked, desperate and bewildered, "Nobody's ever helped before."

"Joker?" Stain peered at him, the stout wall between he and the heroic children, "You're the one that took down Silver Falcon."

"Trickster, quickly!" Kohryu whispered, "Get up to the-"

"Are you insane, Iida!? Do you expect us to work alongside him!?"

"Can I ruffle your hair?"

"Heh, straight to business. That's what I always liked about you-"

"Joker, I might be similar to this person, but don't think for a second that I'm some replacement for them-"

All For One nodded cordially, "I would like to make a deal with you-"

The scent of smoke and ash peppered the ruined bones of a city, of Bakugo's terrified expression that made Joker break his chains once and for all-

Then... darkness and pain, up until Akechi smirked in amusement, "What's wrong? You looked liked you've seen a ghost-"

"This isn't a game."

"Then why are you treating it like one?"

" - ther they lived or died, to either be saved or continue their suffering, that is something you never should have messed with. "

But isn't this how it all started? Ren sealed his fate the moment he saw that woman struggling against Shido. He didn't stand around to watch, or turn away and pretend nothing happened.

"Get in the car!"

"Eri."

"No! Please, somebody-!"

Ren peered into the ruby red eyes of a child that screamed-

HELP ME!

Chisaki huffed.

Of course Eri would find another person to taint with her curse. But this stranger was quirkless, pure. Untouched from the illness that plagued the rest of society.

"Eri." He said, but it was as if she and the other boy were in a separate world.

He pulled at his glove; his final warning. She still didn't move. Chisaki growled low in his throat and stalked towards them.

~ A few minutes before...

“You said he headed this way, right?” Spinner asked as they crouched over a rooftop.

“Yeah, I’m positive!” Morgana flicked his tail over Mr. Compress’ shoulder. “He went in this direction.”

“He couldn’t have gotten too far, but there are many twists and turns in this city. It’s like a maze.” Mr. Compress’ frown was hidden by his blank white mask as he looked into the dark alley. His prized Arsene mask was left at the bar. “I hope we find him soon though. Being in costume, on a rooftop in broad daylight, is making me nervous.”

“Don’t worry about it so much.” Spinner said, his golden scarf glinting faintly in the sun, “Daylight heroes hardly bother looking up.”

“We shouldn’t have let him out.” Morgana interrupted with a glower, “What if something bad happened and he’s hurt!?”

“Come on, Morgana, lighten up!” Spinner cried, “We’d be crappy friends to keep him locked up against his will. Besides,” Spinner tapped on the sheathed scimitar at his hip, “If anybody does bother Ren, we’ll take care of them!”

Mr. Compress snorted, “I’m glad we came prepared, but let’s not get ahead of ourselves.”

Morgana sighed. He took a long breath and concentrated, pushing his winds through the maze, filling in all of the nooks and crannies. Finally, his wind brushed against moving bodies.

“Oh, I found him! But... wait... there are people with him?” Morgana’s fur bristled when Mercurius sprang to the front of his mind.

“You feel that?” Mercurius said, “I sense malevolent intent!”

“Morgana?” Mr. Compress stared at him, “What’s wrong?”

“We need to get to Ren!” Morgana leapt off Atsuhiro’s shoulder,
“Now!”

“H-hey!” Spinner sputtered as Morgana took off with a blast of wind,
“W-wait for us!!”

Mr. Compress cursed as they scrambled to catch up.

Ren saw the shadow approaching Eri, threatening to drag her away and drown her in unrestrained horrors.

Ren moved .

He snatched the girl’s wrist and pulled her behind him, her small gasp dripping with fear. The masked man’s eyes snapped to Ren.

“What are you doing?” He asked, deceptive calm undermining the threat in his voice, “Give her back, or even your Quirkless status won’t save you. Unless...” His golden eyes met Eri’s, and she curled into herself, “You want a new babysitter? Your other one proved his uselessness, but I’ll deal with him when we get back.”

“No.” Ren stated, “You’re not taking her anywhere.”

The man’s mask hid the curl to his lip, “You insolent little-”

A green tornado turned the alley into a whipping wind tunnel. Blue marbles rained down on the alley when the masked man was blown away. With a snap, large chunks of concrete and other detritus blocked off the path, cutting off the masked man from view.

Three familiar figures jumped down, their landing softened by another gust.

“Ren!” Morgana jumped on Ren’s shoulder and rubbed against his hair, “There you are!”

“What-” Ren stared between Mr. Compress and Spinner, “What are you guys doing here?”

“Saving you from a total creep!” Spinner grinned.

“Ren, my dear boy,” Mr. Compress tilted his head at the girl, “Who is that?”

Eri frantically tried to pull away from Ren, her eyes lighting up in liquid terror.

“Please, I-let me go!” She whispered, her voice cracking, “I-I don’t want to hurt you, I-I don’t want him to kill you! Please !”

Spinner raised a scaly brow, “What are you-”

“Eri .”

The concrete barrier exploded into sharp whistling shards. Ren covered Eri and Morgana in his arms, his back getting painfully peppered. Mr. Compress and Spinner weren’t so lucky. Horrible screams and a wet squelch pierced Ren’s ears. He whirled around, still holding Eri and Morgana as horror seized him. The barrier was nothing more than a melted amalgamation of concrete shaped into razor sharp spikes, like a demonic maw leading to hell.

Mr. Compress’ chest was under the mask’s man’s shoe, a sizable pool of crimson pooling around them. Mr. Compress’ right hand clamped down over the short stump that had been his left arm, blood rushing between his fingers.

Spinner had drawn the glittering scimitar, his clothes dripping with crimson from the impaling shards in his body. He had protected Ren and the others from the worst of it.

“How dare you!?” Spinner snarled.

“How dare / ?” The beaked man ground his heel in Mr. Compress’ sternum, “If anybody is to blame, it is Eri. You see what happens when you run away? I should have killed those young heroes to show you the error of your ways. You get people hurt. You get people killed, Eri.”

Eri shuddered in Ren’s arms.

“D-don’t... listen to him.” Mr. Compress hissed through clenched teeth, “Spinner, get them to-”

The man stomped on Mr. Compress’ face with a visceral crunch . His blank mask splintered and fell away. Revulsion coursed through them when Mr. Compress went still, another crimson pool leaking from his head.

“Mr. Compress!!” Spinner screamed.

The masked man scanned the group. “Give Eri back, or I’ll end this man’s life. It’s a fair trade, isn’t it? One insignificant brat for the life of your cohort?”

Spinner snarled as he got into a battle stance, his weapon tinged with red reflecting from the ground.

“Please,” Tears streamed down Eri’s face as she clutched Ren’s shirt, “Please let me go! I d-don’t want your friend to get hurt anymore, please, this is all my fault!”

“No, it’s not!” Spinner spat as a feral grin split his face, his eyes glinting dangerously, “It’s this scumbag’s fault! I won’t ever forgive you for hurting Mr. Compress and threatening this little girl!”

The beaked man scoffed, “Fine. If you want to play hero-”

“What’s this about heroes !?” Spinner’s hands quivered as splotches of blood dripped at his feet, “We aren’t heroes! We’re the Phantom Thieves! We protect the innocent, steal from those who don’t deserve their wealth, and deal with heinous criminals like you! If we can't save one little girl, then it would spit in the face of everything I believe in!!”

“Spinner...” Morgana whispered.

“So be it.” The man reached down to Mr. Compress’ face.

Spinner howled a battle cry as he threw a knife, the metal glinting as it impaled the man’s hand. He growled and yanked the knife out as Spinner charged, the metal clattering against the wall.

“We have to do something!” Morgana jumped in front of Ren and Eri, his hackles raised as a breeze swirled around him. “We’ll distract him, you get home and tell the others!”

Eri was frozen in Ren’s arms. Her tiny hands trembled as they bunched the fabric of his shirt, her eyes leaking crystalline tears. He gently patted her head with his free hand. His heart lurched as she flinched at the touch, looking at him with a mix of horror and awe.

Ren stared into those terrified ruby eyes, his soul bursting as the final straw snapped .

Satanael reached for the final star as it suddenly exploded into a white hot blaze. He curled his wings around himself as the fire consumed him, the darkness of the endless black sea shifting into something different, something familiar.

Satanael studied the expanse of the Trickster’s shattered soul in horror, his silent call rousing the others sleeping within his World Arcana. A stream of familiar voices flowed through Satanael’s mind as roaring blue stars appeared around him, bearing darkened forms within. Satanael extended his wings, their united power banishing the darkness. Flowing flames filled the cracks and mended the shattered bits back together, the chorus growing as one until the desolate soul overflowed in an unending blaze.

The World Arcana sang until the soul was full to nearly bursting.

Yet, it wasn't enough. The Trickster could not hear them!

But now, the power of a bond not yet forged plucked the Trickster's soul, small yet mighty. A tiny butterfly's wing beat that would eventually spawn a hurricane. A new power that never existed in their world.

It fanned the flames ever higher.

"No." Ren set Eri down, she collapsed under her wobbly legs.

"Wh-what?" Morgana looked at Ren as Spinner weaved around the man's swipes, "What are you- Hey!"

Ren stepped around Morgana and Mr. Compress as his soul immolated him from the inside. He picked up the bloody dagger from the ground, "Watch over Eri and Compress, Mona. That's an order."

Morgana spluttered, "B-but-"

Ren let the fire take over, bowling over as his eyes burned. His shoulder hit the wall as a violent wind swirled around him, all in the alleyway froze as he clutched his head in his free hand, the pain threatening to split open his skull.

"Trickster!" Satanael boomed with a cacophony of familiar voices, "We have found you at last!"

Tears laced Ren's eyes as the vast hollowness within filled with familiar presences, but there was still a brick wall between he and them. The sheer, dizzying relief nearly made him fall to his knees, only the pain wracking his body kept him aware and on his feet. His fingers clawed into his hair as he breathed through clenched teeth.

"It appears we must forge a new contract. You are not the same as you were before, and we too have changed since our parting."

Satanael chuckled warmly, "Ah, but isn't this a familiar scenario, Ren? Your friends are struggling against a higher power that could easily slay them. Should you do nothing, you will all be slaughtered by this stranger, an innocent life will be lost, and Yaldabaoth will be one step closer to true victory. Will you save them in spite of the horrors you've experienced in this world, or leave everything to the merciless onslaught?"

"Is that a trick question!?" Ren snarled through the agonizing pain, "Come to me! Now!"

Satanael boomed with laughter, "Very well! "

Ren's heart pounded as the agony intensified, cutting through his body like razor blades, twisting and coursing through every fiber of his being. Immolating flames blazed through his veins, soldering his soul back together with star fire. That wall between them was coming down with broken nails and bloody fingers tips.

"Vow to us." The voices whispered as one, a spellbinding ensemble of male and female voices, of deep growls and shrill songs, "We art thou, thou art us. Thou who hast bore the pain of worlds, thou who hast suffered greatly for the sake of others, thou who hast been lost in the sea of stars at the will of a malevolent god- Renew thy resolve and make all fiends tremble under thy might!"

"You are no longer a Fool floundering through your journey!" Satanael's voice brushed against Ren's mind, practically whispering in his ear, "Graduate from that fledgling role and take your rightful place as The World!"

Ren's resolve crystallized in a veil of blue ash. His nose and the skin around his eyes burned as something materialized over his face, cold and metallic, familiar yet foreign. He heard Morgana's sharp gasp, and felt the stabbing gaze of the beaked man, the air heavy with murderous intent and the coppery scent of blood.

Ren curled his fingers under the corner of the mask, and ripped it off. Vibrant maroon splattered the wall and dripped down his face. He didn't know what sort of wild expression he wore as blood dribbled down his chin and neck in thick rivulets, only that Spinner and the stranger froze, gawking at him.

Ren didn't register their fear. The pain wracking his whole being made him feel alive. The muted colors of the world bled into intense hues as the euphoria coursed through him, until crimson gave away to cerulean flames swallowing Ren's body.

Boisterous laughter bounced off the walls as Ren's normal clothes burned away into something new, the horde of flame coming to life and rising above him.

"No way..." Morgana whispered as blue light painted them.

A figure appeared over Joker, flames fading underneath six ebony black wings. Larger than Arsene, but smaller than he was at Kamino, Satanael's majesty was second to none. His maroon eyes simmered under his golden horned mask.

"I am the Harbinger of Freedom and the Slayer of False Gods, Satanael!" His wings flared in the cramped space, sending eddies of blue flame licking the walls of the alley. He smiled at Joker. "It is good to be reunited, Trickster. We have missed you greatly."

Satanael's words were accompanied by cascading voices, calls, roars, and chatters within Joker's mind.

Joker's eyes flooded with hot tears, "I missed you all too."

"There is another gift for you." Satanael pointed to the knife in Joker's hand. "Use it against the darkness of this world!"

The fire swallowed the dagger, melting and forging it into a weapon unlike any he's ever seen. A handle of twisting black horns formed in Joker's hand, with a long blade of serrated white that could cleave angels in two. The flames curled around his hand and faded when the act was done, and just holding the new weapon sent a wave of goosebumps on his arms. It whispered its name in his mind.

Paradise Lost.

He swung Paradise lost in an arc in front of him, the blade singing with a deep harmonizing tune. Joker pointed it towards the masked man staring back in seething hatred, blue flames dancing within in the man's golden eyes. That's when Joker caught something else. A low glimmer of golden thread stitching his crimson gloves, and swirling golden trim lining his ebony black tailcoat.

"Absorb your new appearance later, Trickster." Satanael said as he looked forward, "We have company, and not the sort you'd invite for tea."

"Spinner, fall back." Joker's velvety voice left no room for debate, "Look after the others."

Spinner obeyed without a second thought, eyes as wide as dinner plates. Satanael allowed him to pass under his wings and became the barrier between Joker and their injured comrades.

"Joker . I heard you were still alive," The masked man put his uninjured hand over the wound Spinner left, his injured extremity melting and reforming in the blink of an eye, whole and bloodless, "but I hoped you'd never show your face again."

Joker smirked to cover the shock of such a quirk, "I'm not going to apologize for disappointing you."

"Disappointing? No, given the circumstance, perhaps we can work something out." The man studied Joker, his gaze cold as the last of the blue flames died out, "You left a big void when you killed All For One-" Joker stiffened as a piece of him withered and buried itself deep in the mindscape, "Villains of all walks of life are fighting to take the crown." The man looked to the dark halo of wings floating over Satanael's head, "From where I stand, the title of a Demon Lord may be within your grasp. If only just."

"What's your point?" Joker asked.

"Why bother saving people when you could've used those powerful demons to rule over them?" The man held out his hand, "Join me. Let me use your demons' powers to the best of their abilities, let's take the underworld for ourselves."

"I don't even know who you are." Joker chuckled, "I'd usually ask for your name and demand you take me to dinner first."

"Overhaul, of the Shie Hassaikai." He spat as red blotches appeared on his neck, his eyes furious, "Don't make a fool of me, Joker. You won't live long enough to enjoy it."

"Please, no! Run! "

Joker looked back as Eri cried out. Spinner held her in his arms, but she thrashed against him. Mercurius had appeared behind Morgana, his wings curling protectively around everyone.

"Eri, be quiet. I'll deal with your disobedience later." Overhaul growled, "Now Joker, your answer."

"You clearly don't know me at all, do you? I'll pass." Joker stepped forward, brilliant colors splashing under his black and gold boots, "Anyone who hurts my comrades and a defenseless child will never be a friend of mine."

"Then you are a bigger fool than I believed. I'll kill you all and take her back by force."

"That's just it, Overhaul." Joker twirled Paradise Lost, a familiar smirk appearing on his face. "I'm no longer The Fool ."

Overhaul put his palm flush on the wall.

“No!!” Eri screamed as Joker jumped to meet him.

A crack came from Satanael’s gun and red spurted from Overhaul’s arm. Joker was upon him, Paradise Lost wailing as he sliced another angry red line on Overhaul’s other arm. The villain swiped, missing Joker by a hair’s breadth as the vigilante flipped away.

Satanael and Joker moved as one, a united swing of a blade or the crack of a gun to counter a lethal swipe of Overhaul’s power. They weaved to and fro in a deadly dance, a swipe, a singing blade, another deafening boom of a gun and a whizzing bullet. Joker pirouetted and sliced in a single acrobatic move, Overhaul snarling under speckled crimson dripping from another shallow wound, as easily erased as the others.

Overhaul brushed his fingers against the ground before Joker could charge again, a wave of concrete and brick spikes spreading like a ripple in still water. Satanael waved his hand in front of him, a black serpent’s jaws crunching the spikes into dust before they could reach him. Specks of concrete and dust showered him.

One thing became clear as Joker zigzagged through the massive spikes: What good could they do when Overhaul healed himself with a single touch? Any injury, gone withing moments. Satanael could not move in these cramped walls unless they wanted the others to be left open to attack. Joker could not keep up this deadly tango forever, his energy and thriving adrenaline wouldn’t last forever.

“Let me play with him, Big Brother!” Joker’s soul bubbled with a familiar laughter. “I want to dance, too!”

Joker’s grin widened.

His mind flashed momentarily to Kamino. He pulled Alice into reality alongside Satanael, another string to add to the orchestra of battle. Alice appeared at Joker’s side in a flourish of blazing blue, her long hair wriggling. Her cold giggles sent prickles across their skin, but it was music to Joker’s ears.

We are thou, thou art us.

There was a notable drain on his energy as he anchored two Personas in reality at once, but if they could finish this quick enough- “Ready, Alice, Satanael?” Joker asked.

A throb of bloodlust and magic pulsed through them, and they attacked as one.

Satanael pointed between Joker and Overhaul, the ground bubbling with oozing black. Alice grinned as tiny bursts of Megidolaon eradicated the spikes, leaving a trail straight to the villain. Joker steeled himself and burst into a sprint alongside Satanael’s Black Viper.

Overhaul didn’t move as the inky serpent surged forward with a shrill hiss, he almost looked bored.

“Too bad.” Overhaul muttered, “I expected more from such a famed vigilante.”

The Black Viper was upon Overhaul, but a single touch ended it all. Joker skid to a stop as black sludge exploded across the alleyway, and at the same time the earth rumbled under their feet. Joker threw himself to the side when another round of deadly spikes sprouted over cracked concrete. Overhaul lunged for Joker as he dodged another spike aimed for his heart.

One touch.

Overhaul’s fingers lightly brushed Joker’s arm. Unimaginable pain writhed through Joker’s body, a thousand cuts slicing open his skin and rupturing his soul. Joker fell to his knees, crimson rivulets dripping from his clothes. Screams of rage drowned his mindscape.

Alice shuddered as the power of her Survival Trick thrummed through Joker.

“How ?” Overhaul stared in bewilderment as Joker bled before him, still whole and very much not reduced to a bloody stain. “How did you survive my quirk? What are you?”

Alice balanced perfectly on the tip of a nearby spike, her hair writhing like worms in the earth. The power of Death sapped the heat from the alley.

“How dare you.” Alice whispered sweetly, her voice carrying across dead stones, “We just got him back, and you think you can kill him? You’ll pay for that.”

‘I gave this man the benefit of the doubt and followed the Trickster’s sacred dogma. But now it is clear. I cannot allow this Symbol Of Evil to take another breath!’

‘No! Sraosha, that’s not what I-’

‘I must do what the remnants of seven souls failed to do! It is my sacred duty to strike down Evil.’

The same death magic, though curse instead of bless, coursed through the power building in Alice. Dark energy floated around her body as she grinned from ear to ear, her eyes glowing with murderous glee. Joker inhaled sharply as terror impaled him.

“Alice, NO !!” Joker called.

His sudden command snapped Alice out of it. She stuttered and gaped at him as Overhaul’s shadow fell over Joker.

“Trickster, look out!!”

Too many things happened at once. Multiple forms burst into reality in front of Joker, one bearing three legs and feathers, the other with black and red coloring, holding a familiar musical instrument. Joker's energy reserves plummeted, and the corners of his vision darkened.

Yatagarasu screeched and clawed and beat his wings against Overhaul.

Orpheus Picaro plucked his strings, swirling flames burning with Yatagarasu's wind.

Overhaul snarled as he backed away, swiping his hands at Yatagarasu as he dove for Overhaul's mask.

One touch .

Yatagarasu's string was cut with a single caress of skin on feather. The bird's final screech howled in their ears as he was reduced to a stain the pavement. The fragile glass of their freshly united soul cracked. Overhaul's skin broke out in hives as some of the blood speckled his face.

Joker nearly collapsed as his vision went black momentarily before it threw him back into reality, his shaking arms holding him up as he stared at the splotch in horror.

"Yatagarasu...?" Joker whispered.

"Trickster, it is too dangerous! Alice has used her Survival Trick and my Enduring Soul is spent!" Orpheus Picaro stared at the bloody stain in sorrow, "This villain is too powerful in cramped quarters. We must flee!"

"But-!"

"I'm tired of this..." Overhaul's eyes were shrunken pinpricks of rage. "Give her back..."

The earth and surrounding buildings disintegrated when Overhaul slapped his palms on the ground. They stumbled as everything around them became jagged spikes, with only one clear path between Overhaul and Satanael.

Satanael's howl of rage rumbled through their bones as he readied his gun.

"Enough!"

A flash of blue appeared in the wall beside Joker, the sound of thrashing chains echoing. The barred door solidified and burst open. Several figures jumped out. The first was a woman with a short bob of platinum hair, wearing a stewardess' outfit. Shock and joy radiated from Orpheus Picaro as the woman opened the hefty tome in her hands.

"Samael, cover us!" She commanded.

Overhaul jumped back as a giant winged serpent charged at him from a torrent of whipping blue flames, concentrated blasts of several Megido forcing him away.

"Come on, this way!" Another person in blue, a man this time, waved at them from the glowing door.

"Go with them," Satanael urged Joker, "Hurry!"

"What about the others!?" Joker cried.

"We'll grab them, do not worry." A third woman donned in velvet blue, with long silken hair and a beautiful, serene face, looked at Joker with a small smile.

"Who... are you?" Joker asked.

The woman's smile simply widened as another appeared behind her.

"My trickster!"

The small form bolted to him. He caught her long pale hair decorated with a blue butterfly headband, golden eyes, and a long blue dress. Joker's heart stuttered as her arms wrapped around his neck.

"...Lavenza?" Joker blinked several times, the chaos of the fight in the background fading away as he wrapped his arms around her. "Is this really you? Are you really here?"

The other woman bowed and walked away, Satanael allowed her to pass under him.

Lavenza pulled away and gently cupped her hands on his cheeks, smiling, "Yes, we have finally found you again. Your Second Awakening called to us!" Her smile faded, her golden eyes watering in sync with Joker's, "Let's escape. You all need healing, and then we can talk."

Joker nodded.

Lavenza grabbed his wrist. "The others will gather your friends. Come on!"

Joker looked at Mr. Compress, who was being gathered up in the man's arms, blood dripping from the grisly stump. The beautiful woman spoke with Morgana and Spinner. A strange sense of trust and familiarity emanated from Ishtar, Shiva, and more intensely from Orpheus Picaro, directed at the short haired woman's laughter and blood lust.

Joker caught Spinner's eye and, trusting his Personas, firmly nodded. He handed the little girl over to the beautiful woman.

"Let's go." Lavenza tugged on Joker's wrist.

Joker's remaining personas returned to his mindscape as they were all led inside the glowing blue door.

The stewardess entered last as her Persona continued its magical onslaught. She stopped in the door frame with a malicious grin.

“Megidolaon.” She whispered.

White light drowned the outside world as she stepped inside the Velvet Room, the door slamming shut before fading into oblivion.

“It was worse than last time?” Hawks frowned as Nighteye’s expression hardened. “What did you see?”

“It was...” Nighteye’s clasped his hands together, his knuckles losing their color, “I don’t understand it myself. So many different pathways, twists and turns all layered over one another. I witnessed events that were caused by different outcomes for things that already happened, things that don’t... shouldn’t exist. It was too much, everything all at once. It’s no wonder my quirk overloaded.”

“Bubble Girl told me about the seizure.” Hawks hid his worry behind a tense smile, “And you didn’t even go to the hospital?”

“No, it would have wasted time. Besides, I’m fine now.”

“You don’t look fine.”

Nighteye sighed as he steepled his fingers, “That’s beside the point.”

“Is it? Your sidekicks are worried sick about you, you know.” Hawks’ wings twitched, “Even now their bodies are radiating stress. Bubble Girl is trying to cheer herself up by talking with Tsukuyomi in the lounge. Centipeder can’t sit still and keeps walking past your door.”

Nighteye frowned. “I have it handled. Can we move on?”

Hawks shrugged, then leaned forward, his chair creaking, “So, what’s the plan now? Are you sure it was smart to send Lemillion and Deku on patrol alone?”

"I trust in Lemillion's capability should anything happen." Nighteye pushed up his glasses, his shoulders suddenly tense as an intensity came into his eyes, "Their patrol was something I would have planned in any case. It'll be a good example to compare with other events."

"What do you mean?"

Nighteye sighed again, a sudden tiredness painting his features, "Let's just say that I never saw any of Joker's achievements when I looked into a certain Pro Hero's future. The Kamino Disaster ended differently, and things like the Musutafu and Sapporo Lab Raids were never supposed to happen."

"Your quirk could've been wrong."

"No, you don't understand." Nighteye's stare pierced into Hawks, "In all my years, my quirk has never been wrong. Not once. No matter what actions I took to try and change things, the outcomes were always written in stone. Until Joker appeared. That's when things changed so drastically."

"What exactly are you getting at?" Hawks whispered, his own eyes widening.

"I don't think Joker should have ever been here. And I mean that literally. My original visions would have come true if Joker never interfered. History... would have been written entirely different."

Those words hung in the air. Hawks suppressed a shiver, but the quivering in his wings must've given it away as Nighteye gained an understanding gleam to his eye. Without Joker - his mouth went dry at the mere thought of a world without his kid - he would still be in Kunikazu's grasp. People like Yumi-chan, the quirkless, all the victims of those smuggling rings, might still be captives or worse. All For One may have lived. The public's trust in heroes, without Joker's support, would have plummeted to critical levels. It may have led to a massive spike in villain activity.

Not to mention every person he's healed.

Iida never would have walked again, and the rest of Stain's victims would have been crippled for life, too.

A world without Joker would be grim beyond measure.

"We should bring Nezu on board." Hawks said with certainty, "He's smarter than the both of us combined, so he'd probably come up with something. Plus he would have custody of Joker since his Vigilante Program is finally a reality. If there's any possibility that Joker is nearby, then he should know about this."

"Yes, that was my next move." Nighteye nodded, "I wanted to inform you first, since you witnessed how my quirk reacted previously when Joker was involved."

"Well, that and I am one of the fastest heroes in the skies." Hawks smirked, "If something does happen, like say, Lemillion and Deku somehow encountering Joker on patrol, then I can be there as quick as lightning."

He meant it as a joke. The universe looked upon him at that moment and decided to dump a truck load of karma and irony on him. The lights flickered violently as a thunderous BOOM reverberated through the walls, the building shook and dust trickled down from the ceiling.

Hawks and Nighteye were out of their seats. He took one look at Nighteye's expression before he was out the door, his surroundings blurring under the flap of fiery wings.

"Hawks!" Tokoyami called for him, but there was no time to stop.

Now, the streets below were a blur of motion as he sped through the air, pushing himself to his limit with another powerful wing beat. A scarlet smudge moved over the center of the destruction. Wind screamed in his ears as he descended sharply towards it. He was less than a block away when he witnessed the winged serpent disappear into ash over Deku and Lemillion.

Blue ash...

He shook himself out of it as sirens screamed in the distance.

"Deku! Lemillion!" Hawks dropped onto the rooftop, "Are you alright?"

"Y-yes, sir!" Lemillion turned towards him, eyes wild and bright, "We're not injured!"

Hawks looked at Deku, who nodded with a shaky smile.

"What happened?" Hawks asked as he went to the edge of the rooftop to survey the damage, several of his feathers darting around to check for potential casualties.

Deku and Lemillion exchanged a glance.

"We don't know for certain," Lemillion said, "But there's a strong possibility that Overhaul, the leader of a local Yakuza group, was involved. We encountered him on our patrol, and this is in the general direction of where he headed off to."

"And the flying snake?" Hawks stared where the serpent had been not a minute ago, "It was covered in blue flames! If it means what I think it means..."

"I-I think so too." Deku clutched at his chest, his breathing heavy, "Its possible that Joker encountered Overhaul, a-and that they fought each other."

Hawks barely kept himself from scowling at the ominous blood stain near the gaping hole. "We have no time to spare," He donned his professionalism like a mask to keep his nerves at bay. "Lemillion, check around these buildings and evacuate the surrounding area. I've taken a few people away so far, but it never hurts to have an extra set of hands."

“Yes, sir!” Lemillion said, and then he disappeared into the ground with a flash of his cape.

“What should I do?” Deku asked, his eyes hardening.

“Help me secure the perimeter until reinforcements arrive. I’ll be guiding them to us with my feathers.” Hawks jumped and hovered over the giant hole, “I’ll send more feathers into the sewers. With any luck, we might find some clues as to where Joker or Overhaul went to.”

Deku nodded, and he was off in a crack of green lightning.

Joker, please be alright. Hawks thought as they got to work, trying not to imagine the kid’s bloody and broken corpse laying in sewage.

In the end, after hours of searching the surrounding city blocks and deep into the sewers, they came up empty.

“More ferocity, Uravity! Gunhead didn’t teach you those martial arts for nothing!” Ryukyu’s voice echoed across the training gym in her agency, “Froppy, you’re doing great, but find better ways to adapt your natural flexibility when you’re out of your element!”

“Roger, Ryukyu!”

“Got it, kero!”

Ryukyu smiled as she watched them dodge around Nejire. Her oldest intern giggled as she seamlessly floated around the gym, weaving around her kohai’s attacks as easy as breathing. Ryukyu sighed when her phone went off. She would normally ignore it, but it was the ringtone she set to the chatroom with Hawks and the others. And it kept going off.

She froze at the messages.

[Raptor]

EMERGENCY! EVERYONE GET TO NIGHTEYE'S AGENCY ASAP.

[Miruko]

HUH??? What the heck is going on??

[Ingenium Sr.]

Are you alright, Hawks?

[Jeanist]

I heard there was an explosion close by Nighteye's agency. Is that what you're talking about, Hawks?

[Raptor]

Yeah... We'll explain more once you get here but...

It might have something to do with our kid.

PLEASE be subtle and come here as quietly as you can, it's really important that you don't draw attention to yourselves. I've been seen in town and we don't need more attention than necessary with everyone else in our group.

[Miruko]

SAY NO MORE I'M ON MY WAY ADNJA!!!

[Gang Orca]

Understood. I am leaving my agency now!

Ryukyu shoved her phone in her belt pouch, “Everyone!”

Nejire and the younger students stopped, staring at her with wide eyes.

“What’s up, Ryukyu?” Nejire asked.

“Change of plans. We’re needed elsewhere. Pack your things, we’re leaving in twenty!”

“But what about training?” Uraraka said, “And I thought we were going on patrol tonight?”

Ryukyu nodded, “Yes, but our plans have changed due to an emergency. As heroes, you need to be able to adjust your schedule in a moment’s notice.”

Uraraka and Asui exchanged glances, but bolted to the locker rooms.

Nejire was rooted to the spot, “What’s wrong, Ryukyu? You don’t look well!”

Ryukyu steeled herself as she looked her intern in the eye. “It’s Joker. I don’t know the full situation yet, but he might be in trouble.”

Nejire’s face lit up with determination, and with a sharp nod, she joined the other girls in the locker room.

“Hang in there, kid.” Ryukyu growled. There would be hell to pay if anything happened to him. “We’re coming.”

Joker doesn’t remember falling asleep. Awareness returned to him in waves, he wanted to drift off again when a familiar tune sang across the unknown space, lulling him back to-

Wait, this song wasn't just familiar.

Joker's eyes flew open and he shot up with a start. The wooden cot he'd been laying on did no favors for his back, but the soft blue swathes of fabric draping the walls made him forget his exhaustion and how his joints creaked. He got to his feet and studied the tiny cell. The uncomfortable bed and the toilet(which was never used, no thanks) were in the same places they always were.

He looked down at his unchained hands with wide eyes. Joker still wore his costume. His... new costume. Everything was familiar, yet different, like a cross between his old Phantom Thief attire and the grandeur of Satanael's Heavenly General outfit. He ran his blood red glove, now woven with glittering golden thread, down his sleeve.

His tailcoat was as black as a starless night sky, a deeper shade than his previous tailcoat, dark enough where the light couldn't touch it. Decorative golden lines accented the end of his sleeves and ran up his arms and around his shoulders. His vest was the same silvery gray, though like Satanael, lined with golden buttons decorated with horned skulls. His pants were the same shade of black as his tailcoat, and his steel-toed boots were emblazoned with golden threading and studded with gilded buckles. He grabbed his right coattail to inspect it, the tapered fabric cut identical to Satanael's leathery wings.

Thankfully, Paradise Lost was still sheathed at his hip.

He dropped his coattail when he felt eyes on him.

"Ah, you're awake!" Lavenza stood next to the open door frame, eyes full of fondness and loving warmth, "How are you feeling?"

Joker resisted the overwhelming urge to hug her and never let go.

"Stiff, but alive." Joker smiled at Lavenza, before looking down at himself. "And a bit surprised at my new costume."

“Yes, your new attire comes as quite a shock. We were so worried about you after...” A flash of pain crossed Lavenza’s delicate expression, gone just as fast as it came. “In any case, I am glad you’re okay, Trickster.”

“As am I.” Another familiar voice said.

Joker looked to the center of the Velvet Room. With a start he recognized Igor, the real Igor, sitting at an elaborate wooden desk encircled with a deep velvet blue rug. The iconic ‘V’ symbol was stamped in the center, the outer rim trimmed in gold.

A circle of open cells surrounded them, the velvet song entwining with the groans of metal and clinking chains. The strangers dressed in blue attire stood in a line behind Igor, expressions impassive, yet they studied Joker with keen interest.

Joker’s chest surged with warmth as Igor’s unblinking eyes softened.

“It is good to finally see you again, Trickster.” Igor held his hand out towards Joker. “Welcome to the Velvet Room.”

Next update is June 11th

Hymn Of The Soul

Chapter 74: Hymn Of The Soul

“It wasn’t important information at the time.” The beautiful woman stepped forward and politely bowed. “But where are my manners? I am Margaret, the Velvet Room Attendant before Lavenza.”

“I am Theodore.” The man put a hand on his chest and copied Margaret, “Also another Velvet Room Attendant of a previous Wild Card.”

The last woman simply smirked, “I’m Elizabeth. Theo’s better half.”

Theodore frowned, “Hey...”

ALSO NOTE there is a Trigger Warning in the final scene for some blood and gore because a certain somebody doesn't take loss very well

Wow, first off this story is very close to surpassing a significant milestone!! Almost 500k hits??? What???? How? I never thought for a second that it would ever be possible. Thank you guys! <3

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

FANART!

MissNoir17 on Twitter!

The Velvet Room's music soothed Joker as Igor and the others stared at him. but his trepidation must've been obvious to Lavenza. Justine and Caroline were always perceptive, with Lavenza even more so.

"Please don't be wary, Trickster." Lavenza said with a small, comforting smile, "You must have questions. We will do the best we can to answer them."

"Where are my teammates? Are they alright?"

"Yes, they are resting deeper within the Velvet Room." Lavenza ran a delicate finger down the spine of the Compendium, her brow raised, "Though something has peaked our interest with them."

"Ah, how curious to have Arcanas in another world, new bonds from which you draw immense strength. And not only those from your original deck, but new ones as well." Igor said, his gentle voice as cool as running water. "The Magician has tended to the Faith, Apostle, and the budding Aeon."

Faith and Apostle? The Aeon ?

"You'll be reunited with them soon, Trickster." Lavenza smiled at him, "In the meantime, what other questions did you have?"

Joker took a breath, "How did you find me? Why did it take you so long to get here?"

He tried to keep the betrayal and hurt out of his voice. Judging by Lavenza's pained wince, he didn't do a good enough job.

Lavenza curtsied. "Our sincerest apologies, Trickster. We tried to reach you sooner, but..."

"The Velvet Room is a place between dream and reality, mind and matter," Igor waved his hand around the Velvet Room, "However, it was deeply twisted by Yaldabaoth's machinations. Lavenza and myself were greatly weakened by his actions as well, thus we could not traverse into the realm between worlds to reach you.”

“But your Second Awakening changed that.” Lavenza said, her expression lighting like the first rays of morning sunlight, “It blazed a pathway through the darkness, and with the aid of my siblings, we were able to break through and reunite with you. Although, the trip seems to have been one way.”

“Siblings ?” Joker’s eyes snapped between Lavenza and the other strangers standing behind Igor. “You never told me you had siblings.”

“It wasn’t important information at the time.” The beautiful woman stepped forward and politely bowed. “But where are my manners? I am Margaret, the Velvet Room Attendant before Lavenza.”

“I am Theodore.” The man put a hand on his chest and copied Margaret, “Also another Velvet Room Attendant of a previous Wild Card.”

The last woman simply smirked, “I’m Elizabeth. Theo’s better half.”

Theodore frowned, “Hey...”

“There, there, Theo.” Margaret chuckled, her laugh as velvety as the room around them, “Yes, Lavenza did summon us in her time of need. With our strengths combined and the calling of your Second Awakening, we were able to break away from Yaldabaoth’s control and come here.”

“Thank you.” Joker bowed his head. “If you didn’t come when you did...”

He would have failed as a leader. Again. Gotten his friends injured or worse. Again . But now Eri, Mona, and the others were safe, and that’s all that mattered right now. He tried to rationalize it that way, but a heavy weight in his chest made it a hard pill to swallow.

“The boy has manners.” Elizabeth purred, “I like him already.”

Lavenza cleared her throat. For some reason, her face reddened as she gave Elizabeth a stern look. “Trickster, why don’t you step out of your cell? The Velvet Room has changed due to your Second Awakening and our arrival here, and I sense your Personas would like a moment with you.”

Joker blinked, his heart pounding, and stepped out of his cell.

His eyes were drawn upwards as soft light bathed the Velvet Room in a shower of silver. The first floor of the Velvet Room was still molded after a stone-cold prison, but the walls were less solid the more his eyes traveled upwards, until they vanished into the great expanse replacing what had been a dark and ominous ceiling. Millions of stars twinkled in vast colorful pools intermingling at the center of a galaxy.

Reds, greens, purples, brilliant stripes of silver from clusters of twinkling diamonds. The sight reminded him of when he snuck out to the mountains to get a view of the stars back home. He felt small as he stared at the brightest stars, a familiar arrangement of seven.

A leathery brush of wings and a spark of blue flames appeared in the corner of his eye, drawing him away from the breath-taking sight. Satanael hovered in front of Joker, sending a wave of warmth to his other self. A gentle smile crossed Satanael’s lips as other flames appeared before Joker could even open his mouth.

“Master!!”

Joker was tackled by the several-ton body of Cerberus.

“Cerberus... buddy,” Joker laughed as the Persona nuzzled his face, snow white fur sticking out from between Joker’s fingers, “I missed you too, but could you let me breathe?”

Cerberus whined, his eyes going large and dark like a guilty puppy, but he got up. Joker smiled when he got to his feet, patting Cerberus' mane and scratching his favorite spot behind his ears. Others crowded around him.

Alice tackled him and wouldn't let go, her arms locked around his waist.

Titania ruffled his hair while Pixie buzzed around their heads, cackling.

Vasuki and Kohryu, the latter pressing himself against the half-solid wall of the Velvet Room, comforted him with the tips of their tails.

Shiva, Black Frost, Cu Chulainn, and Byakko kept their distance, but they reveled in the Trickster's presence and the others' joy... save for a sudden and terrifying swathe of rage.

"Amamiya Ren !"

The other Personas flinched at Ishtar's wrath. They backed away as she floated to him, her usual serene calm etched with undying fury.

Joker blinked. "Uh... me?"

"Yes, you ." She opened her eyes, the heat of her aquamarine glare could sear muscle off of bone. Joker opened his mouth, but her hand was quicker. He backpedaled as his cheek stung, putting a hand to the reddening spot.

He blinked rapidly, stupefied. "What was that for?"

Ishtar lunged forward. Joker's breath hitched when she wrapped her arms around him and tucked his head into the crook of her neck. Her embrace was as strong as steel, but her warmth and her soft scent brought him back to that starry night on the cliff during the Summer Camp. His heart thundered as she tightened her grasp, her rage dissipating with a wash of overwhelming affection.

“How dare you.” She whispered, her voice trembling. “How dare you value your life so little, that you thought dying was a suitable plan to escape that hospital.”

The air in the Velvet Room changed on her words, and unknowingly Elizabeth stared at Joker with eyes of liquid gold shielding many emotions. Theodore did much the same, but he chose to stare at the ground with a troubled expression instead.

Joker’s throat tightened as tears gathered in his eyes. “I-”

“I’m not finished.” Joker shut his mouth as Ishtar’s fingers ran through his hair. “It doesn’t matter if you thought there wasn’t any other way. Putting such responsibility onto the Magician was cruel beyond words.” She pulled back and locked her hands on his shoulders. Her eyes peered deeply into his. “Promise us you will never resort to such idiotically desperate measures again.”

“But I-”

“No.” She hissed, and the other Personas all stared at him in equal expectation. “Promise. Us. Now .”

Joker paled, “I... I promise I’ll never do that again.”

Ishtar stared at him for several tense moments, her gaze searching for any lies. Finally, her expression softened and she lightly sighed.

“Good.” She kissed him on the forehead. “If you even think about doing it ever again, then I swear I’ll ground you for the rest of eternity.”

“I second that.” Satanael said, unabashed.

“O-okay. I get it...” Joker said as he felt his face heat up. “I’m sorry.”

Exasperated sighs circled the Velvet Room, but Joker noticed that some Personas were still missing.

“Where’s Orpheus and Sraosha?” The Personas stiffened at Joker’s jolt of panic, “Yatagarasu!?”

“Sraosha is... unwell.” Titania frowned and looked at one of the open cells. The Isolation Cell, specifically.

Joker sensed Sraosha within, but he refused to come out even though the door was open. A heavy sense of dread and guilt filtered through him.

“He doesn’t want to talk to us yet.” Alice pouted as she tugged at Joker’s sleeve.

“As for Orpheus...” Elizabeth tilted her head, her expression pinched in a strange way, “Or shall we call him Orpheus Picaro, now?”

Orpheus Picaro appeared in front of her. Elizabeth looked him up and down, the harshness of her face softening as she put a hand to the Persona’s cheek.

“I wondered where you ran off to,” She said, “You found another Wild Card in need. I don’t blame you, but give a lady a little warning next time, alright? I was so worried about you.”

Joker furrowed his brows as Orpheus Picaro nodded, and gracefully floated away to join the other Personas. Elizabeth’s conflicted expression smoothed out as Lavenza walked up to Joker.

Lavenza opened the Compendium, “Yatagarasu is right here. I will... forgo the usual payment method just this once.”

The Compendium glowed softly, and Yatagarasu burst from its pages with a howl of wind. Yatagarasu’s bond, a glowing string, reattached itself to that starlit web in Joker’s soul that connected them all to one another. Yatagarasu circled the Velvet Room and landed on Joker’s shoulder.

“You’re okay!” Joker ran his hands down Yatagarasu’s feathers.

“My deepest apologies for worrying you,” Yatagarasu shuffled his wings as he leaned in to Joker’s touch, “It was painful being separated from you again, but I found myself somewhere dark and peaceful. I slept until I was summoned once more.”

“The Compendium saved him.” Lavenza said, “But it too has changed.”

“It changed?” Joker’s eyes widened, “Wait, is Seth there!?”

That hope shining in their hearts withered away when Lavenza frowned deeply, regret glimmering in her eyes.

“... No, he is not.” She flipped through other pages, “When we initially lost you, some of the pages turned an insidious black. We didn’t know what to make of it at first.”

“The black pages were the Personas sent away with you to another world,” Igor said, “Now, it is other pages which are missing. All others, aside from the ones gathered here, have vanished.”

“Can I see it?” Joker asked.

“Of course,” Lavenza’s smile turned sad when she handed it over. “These are your Personas.”

Most of his Personas returned to his mindscape to give him room. Joker took the heavy book in his hands, though they watched on curiously from his mind. Yatagarasu and Ishtar stayed, scanning through the pages with him. Satanael floated at Joker’s side in all of his majesty. Kohryu pressed himself against the upper walls, a layer of gold swimming in silver and velvet.

Joker opened the book to the first page, where Satanael replaced Arsene. He flipped through Titania’s and Cerberus’ pages, before stopping, his mouth dropping open. The next few after that were pages of pure darkness. He turned the next few pages rapidly until they turned blank. Out of the 192 or so Personas he had back home, only 15 were filled, counting the ominous black pages.

“The black pages-” Ishtar started.

“Yes, I see the pattern as well.” Yatagarasu nodded sagely, “The pages in which the Trickster mastered our bonds are all clear as day, while the black pages are ones he has not yet mastered.”

Joker double checked. It was true. He cast out within his mindscape and touched each and every bond. Confusion swirled when Sraosha yanked his bond away in fear. Joker frowned when Sraosha buried himself away. Instead, he focused on another.

“There is one way to test it.” Joker said. “Pixie.”

Pixie giggled as she appeared from a blue spark, “Yes, Trickster?”

He closed the Compendium and tucked it under his arm, then held out his other hand. Pixie landed on his palm, her tiny form almost weightless. They stared into one another’s eyes as he focused on her bond.

Pixie’s bond was a warm summer’s wind on his face, speckled with the fresh scent of a forest brimming with life. Joker closed his eyes and took in everything, the very essence of Pixie herself, what made her different from the other Shadows lost in the Sea. He fully accepted her, and she him. His longest companion other than Arsene, one who stuck through with him from the start.

He opened his eyes when the bond clicked in place, his soul humming pleasantly as Pixie’s power thrummed through them.

The Compendium’s pages shimmered. Pixie fluttered above Joker when he flipped it open, one black page burning away with a trail of blue flame, it reminded Joker of how an old film would burn on a projector. Pixie’s page swirled with fine golden ink, which listed her strengths and weaknesses, and of the spells she could cast.

Igor hummed, and the other Velvet Room siblings exchanged glances.

Lavenza gasped, "Oh my, how intriguing! I wonder why your powers are so different here."

"From the beginning, my Personas sensed that this world was... different." Joker stated, "A different energy from the Sea Of Souls back home. Could that have something to do with it?"

"Perhaps. A bigger part may be consequences from Yaldabaoth's tampering." Igor said with a nod.

"What do you mean?" Joker asked.

"If we were to put it succinctly," Margaret said, "Think of each of these worlds as a different tapestry, which are carefully woven with strings of all colors and given all forms of life, rules, magic, and the like."

"Then some moronic god comes along and tears a giant hole in them, draining the life and individuality from them just because he can." Elizabeth's eyes narrowed dangerously, "He plucks away each string from these other tapestries, one by one."

"He replaces the strings with his own." Theodore frowned, "And he will not stop until-"

"Until each tapestry is nothing but red ." Lavenza finished, her expression falling. "It is likely that some 'information' melded between worlds due to these foreign threads, thereby changing the rules of these realities."

"But Yaldabaoth really screwed up, didn't he?" Elizabeth chuckled, hard and cold, "He cheated the game, so there was nothing to stop our dear Lavenza from doing a bit of cheating, too. He can't stop my other siblings and I from aiding another Wild Card on our own terms."

“You said that before.” Joker glanced in between them, “About other Wild Cards?”

“Did you think you were the first Wild Card?” Elizabeth asked with a tilt to her head.

“I thought about the possibility of other Persona users, but I didn’t know if there were others like me until... Akechi. I didn’t like thinking about it after what happened in Shido’s Palace.”

Elizabeth stared at him, her eyes simmering, “Orpheus didn’t tell you about his Wild Card?”

“He gave us hints,” Satanael said with a light shrug. “And the other Personas have faint memories of other Wild Cards, but the full story of your specific Wild Card eludes us still.”

“The other Wild Cards went through similar adventures.” Igor nodded, “They rose to the call when the world needed their power. They fought their battles and won. Time passes and new Wild Cards arise to the call when needed.”

“But we are not here to talk about past Wild Cards.” Elizabeth said sourly.

The other Attendants gave her worried glances. Joker wondered if something had happened to Elizabeth’s Wild Card. Given how the siblings’ mood dampened, and by the sharp pang of sorrow from Orpheus Picaro, he could only guess. He wasn’t about to pry. If Joker and his team barely scraped by Justine and Caroline’s battle, then he didn’t want to get on Elizabeth’s bad side.

“For the topic at hand.” Igor interrupted the stilted silence, his unwavering gaze landing on the Compendium. “The changes you’ve experienced with your powers, particularly with your Personas.”

Joker looked at the Compendium with dawning horror, “I never mastered Seth’s bond.”

“His page is not in there anymore.” Lavenza said. “It’s possible that... that he may be gone for good.”

“What ?”

Lavenza gently took the Compendium from Joker, “You never mastered his bond, correct?”

“... Yeah.” Joker whispered in the too quiet Velvet Room. Even the mournful song dimmed at his words, “He was killed like Yatagarasu, but Yatagarasu came back!”

“You mastered my bond ages ago, Trickster. The first, in fact.” Yatagarasu warbled. “We never worked on Seth’s.”

“I see.” Lavenza hugged the Compendium to her chest, “If the Persona itself was erased and there’s no mastered bond to forge its new page... then it seems impossible to get Seth back. I am sorry, Trickster.”

Joker felt dizzy.

Ishtar put a stabilizing hand on his shoulder.

“But that begs another question.” Margaret drew his attention, her eyes warm and kind, “What other changes have you experienced during your time in this new world? The changes to your Compendium cannot be the only thing.”

“Cognition...” Joker steadied himself with a deep breath, Ishtar’s tightened grip kept him focused, “My Personas not only grew in power the more the people of this world knew about them, but they slowly gained their individuality. Arcanas appeared after a good couple of months. There are some bad things too.”

“The Hierophant of this world, a pro hero by the name of Eraserhead...” Kohryu’s voice rolled through the Velvet Room like distant thunder, “He could erase us from reality and send us back to the Trickster’s mindscape.”

Lavenza and the other Velvet Attendant’s eyes went wide.

“What ?” Elizabeth spat the word in vitriol, her posture going rigid, “How?”

“In this world, humans have powers called Quirks.” Joker explained, “But there are other quirks and technology that can erase powers. It works on my Personas, too.”

“But that makes no sense,” Theodore clutched his chin, eyes narrowing in thought, “You should not be completely bound by the laws of this world. Personas are not these... ‘quirks.’”

“Igor,” Elizabeth turned to the long nosed man, “We implied that new rules were made due to Yaldabaoth’s tampering. Could the rules overlap one another? Could they... combine, in a sense?”

“Possibly.” Igor tapped his chin, eyes unblinking, “In fact, it must be so.”

“What are you talking about?” Joker asked.

Theodore frowned, “Wait, Elizabeth, are you implying-”

Elizabeth walked towards Joker, and Theodore cut himself off with a sigh.

“Did you have lasting symptoms of this ‘erasure’?” Elizabeth stopped in front of Joker, her citrine eyes as hard as steel.

“Unimaginable pain for the Personas in reality.” Kohryu flicked his whiskers, “And we are... not ourselves for a short time after. I grew insane and nearly devastated the Trickster’s mindscape when it happened to me. I injured Arsene in my madness before he snapped me out of it, and I was weakened greatly afterwards.”

“Yes,” Satanael’s wings rattled together in anger, “When Eraserhead suppressed our power in that alley months ago, we were nearly consumed with rage when he returned us. I wanted nothing more than to end Eraserhead’s existence at great cost to the Trickster himself.”

Joker frowned as he put a hand over his heart, “It felt like I was being torn apart from the inside. I suffered severe backlash, and was unconscious for a few days when Kohryu was erased.”

“I see.” Elizabeth’s expression soured as if she had bit a particularly nasty lemon, “If anybody does that to you again, I’ll kill them myself.”

It was a quiet declaration, but one laced with such a powerful resolve that it made the hairs on the back of Joker’s neck stand on end.

“Elizabeth!” Margaret called.

“I understand your feelings, sister,” Theodore’s gloved hands balled into fists, “But that’s taking it too far. What happened to our Wild Cards’ friend is no excuse for such behavior.”

Our Wild Card’s ? Joker thought with a frown. Did these two share a Wild Card like Justine and Caroline shared him ? He buried that question when Elizabeth crossed her arms and scowled, her eyes glinting with a promise of murder.

“You act like you’ve experienced this before.” Joker glanced between Elizabeth and Theodore. “There’s no way there’s something that can suppress Personas like that back home, right?” Igor and the Velvet Room Attendants stared at him. Dread clawed up his spine. “... Right?”

“No.” Elizabeth huffed, “There is a medicine that humans can take to keep their Personas locked away.”

Joker’s eyes went wide.

“But doing so greatly hurts both the user and the Persona.” Theodore looked to the ground, unknown memories replaying within his eyes, “One of our Wild Cards’ most trusted friends did that to himself... and he experienced some of same symptoms you described when your Personas were ‘erased.’”

Elizabeth shook her head, “So thanks to Yaldabaoth’s bullshit, instead of a ‘quirk’ getting erased, it acts like a Persona Suppressor. How barbaric.”

“That’s not all.” Joker said gravely as the sentiment settled on him, “It’s not only my Personas that are changing, but my body, too.” Joker frowned as hazy memories surfaced, of that mad doctor and of the files he burned, “My physiology is changing. A brain scan revealed that my body is trying to compensate for a quirk that’s not there.”

“Fascinating,” Igor held up both hands, fingers splayed, “One, a world of Distortions, Shadows, and Persona users, and the other of heroes and super powers. Yaldabaoth rips the veils between worlds, and when the ‘tapestries’ combine unnaturally, inhabitants from both of them...” Igor clasped his fingers together, his grin widening, “eventually become something in between . These new Arcanas, your Personas gathering strength and individuality through Cognition, your changing physiology, and Personas being affected by these quirks, may be proof of this. The longer you are here, Trickster, the more changes we may see. These changes will continue until Yaldabaoth secures his true victory.”

Joker grimaced. The possibility of the Metaverse leaking into U.A. was bad enough, but the last thing they needed was for this world to be overcome with Distortions and Shadows.

“Master,” Lavenza faced Igor, “If the Trickster were to defeat Yaldabaoth and restore balance, would everything return to normal for all worlds?”

“I believe so.” Igor said, “Should Yaldabaoth’s tampering cease, it may allow the worlds to heal and go back to their original state. But it must be done before he succeeds at merging these worlds fully with the Metaverse.”

Joker sighed. “We almost defeated Yaldabaoth the first time before he threw us into other worlds. What’s to stop him from doing it again?”

“Well, you didn’t have our support last time, and your Second Awakening seems stronger than your first.” Elizabeth smirked, “This pansy god won’t know what hit him the second time around. He should’ve just accepted his fate the first time.”

“Agreed.” Lavenza smiled at Joker, “If we are to continue our battle through this world, then you need all of the strength you can muster. Now that the Velvet Room is restored to you, feel free to use our services as normal.”

Ice filled Joker’s veins. Concern trickled from his other selves as his heart pounded in his ears.

“It may be wise to do fusions now and-”

“No !”

The Velvet Room rung with his voice. The Attendants gaped at him, and Igor’s expression didn’t change much, but he stared with such sadness that Joker had to look away.

Joker cleared his throat and gathered the fractures remains of his composure, “I’m not ready for any fusions just yet.”

Yatagarasu nuzzled Joker’s hair with his beak, while Pixie fondly patted his cheek. Ishtar gave his hand a soft squeeze.

“I... I see.” Lavenza bowed deeply, her long hair flowing with the movement, “I apologize for bringing it up. I didn’t mean to cause you any distress.”

Joker shook his head, “It’s fine. I didn’t mean to yell like that.”

“Your Second Awakening took much from you, and we have discussed many heavy topics.” Igor said softly, “Why don’t we stop here? Besides, your other teammates have been waiting patiently. Lavenza?”

Lavenza bowed to them before she ran off down the hall leading to an outer ring of cells. Despite the mournful song throughout the Velvet Room, it was so quiet. Too quiet. Elizabeth silently returned to her spot next to her other siblings. Margaret and Theodore studied Joker with a blend of intricate, yet carefully concealed, emotions.

Igor didn’t seem to mind awkwardness at all, humming along with the song.

“Joker!!”

Ishtar, Yatagarasu, and Pixie vanished as another body crashed into him. The green scales and vibrant pink hair tickling his face told him that it was Spinner.

“My guy!” Spinner let go, took Joker by the shoulders, and shook him wildly, “You’re okay!! What the heck is going on!?”

“What he means is-” Mr. Compress pulled Spinner away with a hand on his shoulder, “We heard everything you talked about with these fine people, but we are just a tad confused. Particularly the bit where you spoke of multiple worlds ?”

“Atsuhiro...” Joker looked the man up and down. Mr. Compress had his bloody coat draped over one arm, the rest of his shirt splotched with red, but his coat absorbed most of it. The other arm was intact, whole . He had lost his hat and mask, and his hair was messed up in an oddly similar way to Joker’s. “Are you okay?”

“We are fine, my boy. Mercurius and Mona healed us up quite nicely, though something strange has happened to Mona too...” Mr. Compress smirked and gently prodded Joker in the chest, “But I swear I am billing you for my dry cleaning! This is the second coat that’s been ruined by blood! Let’s not make it a habit and do it a third time, yes?”

“Y-yes.” Joker rubbed the back of his neck, grinning sheepishly. “Speaking of, where is Mona?”

“Right here!”

Mona walked in, holding hands with Eri. He wasn’t in his normal cat form, but his chibi-like, bipedal Metaverse form, complete with his yellow bandanna and the belt around his waist.

Joker gasped, “Mona, your form!”

“I know!! Aren’t I awesome!?” Mona grinned from ear to ear, his sapphire eyes twinkling. “It feels so good to have this form back! Oh, I can’t wait to finally shoot my slingshot again!”

“So... this is normal for Mona?” Mr. Compress asked, slack jawed.

“Yep! I couldn’t access this form for some reason, until now.” Mona looked down at himself, then his large eyes scanned the Velvet Room, “I wonder if it has something to do with being here again? I was born here, after all.”

Mr. Compress and Spinner gaped at each other. Mr. Compress shrugged with an exaggerated sigh.

“But I’m not the only that changed.” Mona narrowed his eyes as he looked Joker up and down, “What’s with your new costume!?”

Joker looked at his black and gold attire. Speaking of, he hasn’t seen his new mask yet. He reached up and took it off. Satanael’s pride warmed Joker’s soul as he stared at a likeness to Satanael’s own mask, though deep black with gold rimming the sharp, wing-like edges. It was only a little larger than his other domino mask.

“Not a bad upgrade,” Mr. Compress chuckled as he walked a slow circle around Joker, “Gold trimming is always in style. It’s far fancier than your previous attire! Quite fitting for a Phantom Thief.”

“Phantom thief?” Spinner cackled, “I say he looks more like a Phantom Prince now! Look at all that gold!”

“But why did your costume change?” Mona asked, “I knew our Personas could grow stronger and evolve, but I never thought your Metaverse costume could do that too!”

Their mutual thought of Akechi’s attire went unsaid, as he was a... unique example.

“He no longer has the role of the Fool.” Lavenza stood at the back of the group, “The Trickster went through many trials and tribulations in this other world, enough to where his power has evolved from the Fool to The World. Satanael himself now bears the World Arcana as well.”

Igor chuckled, his toothy grin growing larger, “Something I doubt even Yaldabaoth could have predicted.”

“Er, you lost me again.” Spinner stated.

“I’ll explain later.” Joker rubbed his eyes and replaced his new mask. It fit perfectly, “Right now, we have more important things to worry about.”

Eri grasped Mona’s paw with white knuckles as they stared at her. Her breathing picked up as she scanned the whole of the Velvet Room, her crimson eyes drowning in fear. Joker approached slowly, and her eyes fell to the puddles of color under his feet.

He crouched down in front of her, smiling. "I'm sorry if we scared you, but you're safe now. We won't let that man harm you anymore."

Eri opened her mouth, but couldn't seem to form any words. She trembled like a leaf in the wind, making herself as small as possible.

Mona's expression softened.

"This child doesn't trust us yet," Ishtar whispered, "her Arcana is not fully formed."

"She has been through much pain and suffering." Shiva said, "It may take time."

Joker held out his hand to her, "How about we go home so you can meet our other friends? They're really nice, I promise."

Eri stared at his gloved hand, her lips wobbling. Slowly, she reached out. Her hand was so tiny compared to his.

Her touch electrified him. She must have felt something too, as her trepidation melted away with awe. A small light came into her eyes as she stared at Joker. Just then, he could sense his bond with her.

The Aeon .

Not yet solidified, but gracing the edge of his soul with its whisper soft touch.

"So... how do we get back?" Spinner whispered, breaking Joker and Eri out of their trance.

Joker looked over his shoulder to Mr. Compress, the Faith, and Spinner, the Apostle, respectively.

"There is an entrance nearby." Lavenza faced the long hallway leading to the outer cells, "This way."

Joker stood, hand in hand with Eri, her other hand latched onto Mona, and they followed. Spinner and Mr. Compress trailed behind them at a more sedate pace, their eyes wandering over the Velvet Room and its inhabitants before they turned their backs on it.

"Don't worry, Trickster." Satanael whispered, "We will be with you as you exit. Always."

"Yeah! We won't leave Master's side ever again!" Cerberus declared with a howl.

"I can't wait to play with Big Brother again! Although... I've always wanted a little sister, too!"

"Alice, darling, don't get any ideas." Titania said, "We shouldn't scare the Aeon."

"We can at least play games with her, right!?" Pixie said, giggling.

"I suppose, but harm one hair on her head and I'll eat you whole." Byakko warned.

"I just want to give the sweetheart a proper bath," Ishtar said with sorrow, "And to see what lies under all of those dirty bandages."

Hearing their voices again filled Joker with a soft, buzzing warmth. It eradicated his previous hopelessness and lifted his spirits. His heart was so full... he finally felt complete .

"Mister..." Eri tugged on his hand. Mona's ears twitched to listen, "Why are you crying? Are you sad?"

"What?" Joker wiped away the tears with his other hand. He didn't even notice. "No, I'm not sad. I'm... happy."

Eri blinked, her blank expression unchanging, "People can cry when they're happy?"

Joker nodded. "Crying isn't only for when you're sad."

“Oh.”

Joker and Mona exchanged subtle glances at Eri’s closed off expression, though maybe she was still in shock. Her whole world just turned upside down in a matter of hours. Joker didn’t know how long she was trapped with Overhaul, he dearly hoped it wasn’t her whole short life.

“Here we are.” Lavenza stopped in front of a set of stairs leading up into a doorway of bright white light. “Some time has passed since we took you into the Velvet Room, but the new location should be safe.”

“Are you coming with, Lady Lavenza?” Mona asked.

“Yes. I’ll escort you to your safe house, but I’ll give the Trickster something before we depart.” Lavenza opened the back cover of the Compendium. A small key was pressed in a hidden pocket. “Here is your Velvet Key, Trickster. It... should have been yours from the start of your journey.”

Joker held the tiny silver key in his palm. It was an intricate little thing, the iconic Velvet Room symbol was carved into the handle. He carefully placed it in his hidden breast pocket as Lavenza went up the stairs first.

There were dozens of steep steps. Mona wouldn’t have any trouble in his Metaverse form, but Eri was barely on her feet as is. He knelt down next to Eri, smiling.

“I can give you a piggy back ride, if you want. That way you won’t have to walk and we can get home faster. Is that okay with you?”

“It’s not gonna hurt, is it?” She asked. Then she winced and hunched her shoulders, her hands covering her face as if she expected a punch.

“No, it doesn’t.” Joker said softly as he settled his other hand on her hair. She looked up to him again, her eyes like liquid jewels,

“Actually, it’s pretty fun. I think you would like it.”

Eri blinked several times. “... Okay.”

Joker frowned when he situated Eri on his back. She was so light, barely a feather, compared to him. Her little arms wrapped around his neck and her chin rested on his shoulder, her eyes wide as she ogled her surroundings at this new height.

“How much do you want to bet that the others will kill us when we get back? Kaito specifically.” Spinner whispered to Mr. Compress as the others went on ahead.

“Perhaps they won’t go as hard this time.” Mr. Compress sighed as he stared at the tiny girl on Joker’s back, “Considering we’re bringing home not one, but two, traumatized children. And maybe... a third traumatized child? That butterfly girl is the real mystery, here.”

“Don’t forget two traumatized adults!” Spinner stared pointedly at Mr. Compress’ bloody coat, then up and around the cold stone walls resonating with haunting music. “What the heck are we supposed to make of all this?”

Mr. Compress folded the coat so the bloody splotches were hidden. He rolled his healed shoulder and wrist, flexed his bare fingers. He looked over his shoulder to find Igor’s unblinking gaze fixed on them. The man’s eerie smile widened.

“Joker said he would explain, and I’ll trust his word on... whatever this is. Giving him our trust and support is the least we can do after everything he’s done for us.” Mr. Compress turned away, staring at the light spilling on the stairs, “Otherworldly origins or no, both my arms appreciate being attached to my body.”

Mr. Compress followed Joker and the others. Spinner took a moment, gawking at the Velvet Room, before he followed. They all reached the top and stepped through the white light together.

Kirishima paced around the waiting room.

The adrenaline from his late night patrol with Fat Gum and Suneater still coursed through his veins. Soon enough footage of his fight was posted online, and he only saw it because the small TV in the waiting room had played it on the local news. It was so strange seeing himself from another point of view. Standing in that dark alley, using himself as an unbreakable wall between an insane blade villain and terrified civilians, refusing to back down until he knew the people were safe. He looked so manly!

He even got his first dedicated fans!

But... Suneater...

He perked up when he heard approaching footsteps, turning to see a familiar face. Fat Gum's bright yellow hero costume would stand out anywhere, it made him iconic in this town. He was such a softie too, both in personality and his quirk! Kirishima found it weird that their quirks were nearly the exact opposite, but they worked so well together.

"Suneater got his quirk back." Fat Gum's smile widened, "Thankfully, that drug doesn't appear to be permanent. Oh, and that bullet you saved was full of the same drug that hit Suneater, so they're running tests on it."

Kirishima breathed a sigh of relief. "So he's okay?"

"Yep! He'll be let out soon." Fat Gum's expression softened, "Are you up for some grub after he gets discharged?"

Kirishima beamed, "Sure, I'm starving!"

Fat Gum chuckled and ruffled Kirishima's hair, "That's the spirit! My favorite takoyaki restaurant is close by. The owner and I are close friends, so I get a discount. Eat as much as you like. My treat for doin' such a great job tonight!"

“Thank you, sir!”

Fat Gum snickered, “No need to call me sir, Kirishima.”

A doctor emerged from the hall, “Fat Gum, we just need to finalize some paperwork before we discharge Suneater. If you would...?”

“Ah, right!” Fat Gum ruffled Kirishima’s hair once more, “Wait here, okay sport? Suneater and I will come get ya once we’re done!”

“Okay!”

Kirishima plopped down on one of the chairs as Fat Gum was led away by the doctor. Curious, he got out his phone to check in with everyone. He had hundreds of messages from the class chatroom.

[Red Riot]

Hey guys! Did I miss something in class today?

[Pinkie]

OMG KIRI!!

WE SAW YOU ON THE NEWS YOU WERE AWESOME!!

[Red Riot]

Oh, thanks!!

But uh... why was everyone freaking out earlier?

My phone can't load that many messages!

[Invisibility]

You haven't seen the news yet???

[Red Riot]

Not really, had a really busy night!

[Charge Bolt]

MANNN I'm so jealous!

Both Deku and Red Riot got to be on the news!!

[Pinkie]

Deku was spotted working with Hawks!!

[Red Riot]

WAIT WHAT

I thought Tokoyami was working with Hawks? What's Midoriya doing with him?

[Pinkie]

That's what I wanna know!! We haven't heard from Tokoyami, or even Tsu-chan and Ochako! This radio silence is KILLING me!!

[Ingenium 2.0]

We do not have the full picture yet.

Do not spread any unnecessary rumors until we hear from either Tokoyami or Midoriya! DO NOT pester them with texts either! They may be busy with their agencies!

But to answer your question, Kirishima, there was an explosion near Nighteye's agency earlier today, and there are certain rumors going around the internet.

[Red Riot]

Okay

And????

[Charge Bolt]

If you won't tell him Class Rep, I will!!

[Ingenium 2.0]

Fine. There are rumors that one of Joker's mythological companions was spotted in the area, but we have nothing concrete.

Please don't go spreading this around! The last thing we need is to be the cause of unscrupulous rumors!!

[Cellophane]

We get it! We heard you the first 50 times after Aizawa's lecture on 'secrecy' or whatever after the red rain!

[Tsukuyomi]

Apologies for the extended silence. I don't know how much we are allowed to say, but know that we are fine and have been busy working with our respective agencies. I'm sure Midoriya and the others will update you as soon as they can.

It has been a mad banquet indeed.

[Invisibility]

That's it??

[Pinkie]

UGH MORE MYSTERIES!?

I'm at my wits end here!

[KingExplosionMurder]

WOULD YOU ALL SHUT UP

I'M TRYING TO SLEEP

Kirishima exited the conversation there, his previous energy soured with concern. Whatever happened, wherever his Aniki is right now, Kirishima hoped that he and the rest of Kirishima's classmates were okay.

"No hostiles." Lavenza craned her neck around the alley as Joker and his teammates exited the Velvet Room. "How curious. This world really harbors different energy from back home. Different.... threads, you could say."

Joker suppressed a shiver. It was as if they passed through a wall of icy water when stepping through the barred door, the strange magic of the Velvet Room shifting around them as they trekked into reality. His other teammates shared similar reactions. Weird. It was never that way back home.

“We can talk about it once we get back.” Joker said. “Eri, how are you doing?....Eri?”

Mr. Compress smiled, “It seems the little princess has fallen asleep already. Spinner, that means no shouting.”

“Aye aye.” Spinner said sarcastically, then he stiffened. “Wait, do you hear that? It’s coming from above.”

They looked up to the sliver of black sky between the buildings. A humming noise droned overhead, and a helicopter's blinking lights appeared far in the distance.

“That explosion must’ve drawn the humans’ attention.” Lavenza said.

Joker blinked. “What explosion?”

Lavenza turned to him, her brow heavy, “I must apologize for Elizabeth’s behaviour. Megidolaon is one of her favorite spells, and she cast it before the door to the Velvet Room closed. I presume it was to cover our tracks.”

Joker paled, “That spell is seriously powerful here!” He bit his lip when Eri shifted in her sleep, but thankfully didn’t wake.

Mr. Compress scanned the alley, “We should go while we have the chance. I recognize these alleys. It’s quite a walk from here to the bar, but we should be fine as long as we don’t venture on the rooftops.”

“I’ll keep an eye on our surroundings.” Mona jumped and waved his little arms around. Now his footsteps splashed with intense colors, too. “I can’t explain why, but my wind feels... sharper in this form. Stronger. Mercurius and I can probably extend my range and power in this form... I think.”

“Fantastic.” Mr. Compress walked past them, “We should call La Brava, too. Several hours have passed and they must be worried sick. It would help to have additional ears on the heroes' movements."

"Go ahead," Joker said softly, "Mona and Spinner will keep watch."

Spinner did the two finger salute as Mr. Compress dug through his tattered coat pockets.

Joker turned towards the Velvet Room door as it vanished, the wash of ice cold magic fading along with it. "Is it supposed to do that?"

Lavenza hummed, "I suppose it's a new safety measure. Now that the Velvet Room is... visible to normal humans, thanks to the new rules, we do not want interlopers finding it."

Joker snorted. "Would any intruders even survive long enough to get a good look inside?"

"No... I suppose not." Lavenza chuckled, sending chills down Joker's spine, "Then perhaps it's not a safety measure for the Velvet Room itself, but for the inhabitants of this world. However, with your Velvet Key, it would not be a burden for you to summon it whenever you wish. You need not venture all the way out here for it."

Joker nodded, and they fell to silence.

He passed the minutes studying his new attire that was like a second skin to him, something that felt like safety. Although his guns were left back at the bar (a mistake he's never making again), Paradise Lost was at his hip like a faithful companion. His soul whispered with familiar chatter and the solid camaraderie of his other selves, and in the darkness of these alleyways, it almost felt like home.

Joker smiled when Satanael's wings brushed against his mind, but that fell once a sense of deep-seated uneasiness emanated from Kohryu. Sraosha burrowed himself away from the others, too. Even Orpheus Picaro no longer hesitated at the edge of the mindscape, he finally joined the others in full.

So what was wrong with Sraosha?

"Focus on regrouping with your comrades first." Kohryu whispered, "But then you and I will have a talk."

The dragon's voice faded on that ominous note. Mona saw Joker's expression fall and sent his partner a look, but Joker shook his head.

Lavenza hugged the Compendium to her chest as she watched the exchange.

If Joker could not bare to do fusions, then she feared it would only harm him in the long run.

"Anything?" Kaito asked as he finished another uneasy lap around the attic.

"I'm sure they're alright." Tobita said, though it sounded as if he were trying to convince himself. Lady Stubbs was flopped over by his lap, staring unblinkingly at the window, "It's not the first time Ren's pulled a stunt like this and returned home, safe and sound. Besides, the others are probably with him."

Kaito scoffed, "Define 'safe and sound.' I don't think that's in Ren's dictionary."

"Like the other hundred times you've asked, Kaito," Manami sighed as she looked up from her screen, "No, there hasn't been anything-"

A blessed ping echoed through the attic. A moment later her phone rang. The others crowded around her as she answered it.

"Hello?"

"La Brava!" Mr. Compress greeted happily, "I'm glad you picked up on the first ring-"

"Is everyone okay!?" She blurted, "Is Ren..."

"Oh. Everyone's... fine. For the most part."

"Why doesn't he sound certain?" Tobita asked.

"What happened?" Manami patted Tobita's arm, "The news channels are all going haywire! First that explosion, then Hawks was spotted investigating the disaster site, and then there are rumors going around that one of Joker's summons was spotted in town!"

"Er... Technically that one wasn't Ren's... I think?" Mr. Compress cleared his throat, "But Ren got his powers back and may have angered a Yakuza group in the process?... By accident?"

Kaito and Tobita stiffened. Lady Stubbs tilted her head at an unnatural angle as Manami's heart pounded.

"H-he... what ?" Manami stuttered.

"But there have been some... other unexpected developments. I wanted to call and warn you ahead of time that we have some additional guests, and to prepare yourselves for certain changes. You'll see for yourself once we get home, but I wanted to make sure we don't encounter any surprises. Villain or otherwise."

Manami breathed deeply through her nose. She tucked her phone into the crook of her neck and started typing.

"Okay, I'll send you a safe route back to the bar. But when you get here we better get an explanation! Got it, mister?"

"Y-yes, ma'am. Ciao!"

He hung up, and Manami let her phone tumble into her lap. She ran her hands down her face as a headache knocked in her skull.

"This impending conversation sounds like it will need tea." Tobita said gravely as he stood. "A lot of tea."

“Agreed.” Kaito crossed his arms and sagged against the wall, “This is going to be a long night, isn't it?”

“Merp...”

At that, everyone in the attic agreed.

~~~*TW Scene~

Chisaki stormed back into his stronghold. His subordinates took one look at his murderous expression and opened the gate for him, and bolted to the other side of the complex. Fear spread like a plague as the rats scattered and whispers broke out about his return.

Chisaki threw open the front door and stepped into sterile white walls and cold, hard floors. The sharp scent of cleaning supplies and the metallic groans of medical equipment nearby centered him, but this rage consumed his whole body with the heat of a volcano.

“Chisaki?” A familiar voice called to him, sharp footsteps coming closer. “Chisaki!”

He whirled around to the voice, breathing hard. His eyes focused on the black and gold mask approaching him, of that vigilante's smirking face and mocking words. Chisaki moved. The man froze like a deer in the headlights when Chisaki grabbed his throat and slammed him against the wall, his other hand unmaking the black and gold bird-like mask from existence.

“Chisaki, calm down!”

Kurono's white hood fell around his shoulders, his shocked expression visible. Pale, shoulder length hair pointed like clock hands, not messy black. Dark gray eyes, not blazing gold tinged with cerulean. Chisaki sensed people watching from the doors and around the corners, but he didn't care.

“What happened ?” Kurono asked softly as Chisaki let him go, “The search parties came up empty and it’s already past dark. I was worried... why do you smell like a sewer?”

“Where is he?” Chisaki’s voice was low and full of gravel, his skin itched and blemished with hives. His eyes burned with the fury of a thousand stars. “Where ?”

“Boss!”

Another sorry dreg of human existence rushed towards them, unremarkable in every way in Chisaki’s eyes.

“I-I’m sorry! I-I only looked away for one second and she was gone-”

Chisaki became a blur. One moment the man was there, whole and intact, the next Chisaki was standing over a veritable sea of blood. The floor, the walls, a few specs dribbled down from the ceiling.

“... Kai?” Kurono whispered.

Chisaki didn’t hear him over his own laboured breathing. He swiped his fingers through the crimson pool, his skin bubbling with hives. The man was remade in a blink of an eye, gasping.

He saw Chisaki’s shadow standing over him, hand reaching for his face.

“B-Boss! I-I said I-I’m sorry!”

It didn’t matter. Kurono remained deathly still as Chisaki made and remade the man over and over and over . They were used to Chisaki throwing people away on a whim, but this...

Chisaki was deaf to the man’s desperate pleas, growing more frantic than an animal trapped in a cage. The crimson pool contained no organs or even bones, everything about his person being reduced to sickening crimson that steadily grew in size, painting Chisaki with a red wave.

Finally, after an eternity of repeated horror and death, Chisaki stopped, breathing hard. Silence, the type of terrifying disquiet where you held your breath or else you might be the monster's next victim.

"Eri is gone." Chisaki's voice felt as loud as an explosive, the shadows hiding around the corners flinching, "Stolen, by Joker ."

"What ?" It took everything in Kurono to not stare at the stain that had once been a person, "How? I didn't- The explosion and rumors of a flying red serpent have been on the news. Your involvement wasn't mentioned of course, so I didn't think-"

"I was going to end him, but somehow he resisted my quirk." Chisaki reached into his coat pocket for pieces of a broken mask and a crumpled, bloody top hat, "Then other people appeared out of thin air and they all escaped."

"What ? How is that possible?"

"I don't understand it yet." Chisaki looked at Kurono, his eyes mad and feral, "But we're getting Eri back, and I will eradicate Joker's sickness from this world. I know just the pawns to use to do so."

Chisaki turned away and walked through the bloody pool. He was halfway down the hall, followed by grisly footsteps, before he turned back to his right hand man.

"Oh, and Kurono?"

"Y-yes?"

Chisaki looked at the gore in disgust. "Get this mess cleaned up."

Chisaki walked away, uncaring of the frantic screams forged in his subordinates' minds.

Well, some long standing questions finally got answered, huh?

There is one last important note for the update schedule. In other words, please be patient with me if I have to delay any updates by a week or so, the summer months, and September specifically, are extremely hard on both my physical and mental health. I've been really struggling with my health lately as is. I would like to upkeep the quality of this story without rushing through it, and I can't exactly do that when I can't even think straight most days anymore.

Anywho, plans are finally in place to get this story moving again... and I honestly can't wait. I may or may not be expecting for next chapter's title alone to cause some form of chaos ;))

Next scheduled chapter is June 25th unless otherwise specified.

Edit: Chapter 8 of the Thieves Den will be updated with the new Arcanas!

Price(Another Version)

Chapter 75: Price(Another Version)

“You-” Manami’s eyes twitched, “Is that what you were doing the last time you went grocery shopping?”

“Yes?”

“I really shouldn’t be surprised at this point.” Manami deadpanned, “I really shouldn’t.”

(See the end of the chapter for notes.)

“What the hell happened ?”

Kaito asked a legitimate question, Joker thought. For what else could he say when Joker and the others crept through the attic window like a group of teenagers sneaking in after a night of debauchery?

Between Joker’s upgraded costume and the sleeping girl on his back, Mona’s Metaverse form, how Shuichi and Atsuhiro’s clothes were tattered and bloodstained, and the other child sized not-human thriving with unknown power, they didn’t know where to start.

Manami, Stubbs, and Tobita openly gaped as Joker’s face turned red. He shifted his weight between his feet, careful not to wake Eri.

“Can we talk after I tuck Eri in?” Joker asked, “She’s exhausted.”

Tobita helped Joker set out an extra futon, a million questions dancing in his barely concealed shock.

“This attic is... quaint.” Lavenza looked around, “Not unlike the attic back home, Trickster.”

“We were in an internet cafe before this.” Mona said.

Lavenza blinked and tilted her head, as innocent as a doe, “What is an ‘internet cafe?’”

Kaito and Manami gawked at Joker in desperation.

Joker pulled the comforter up to Eri’s chin, and then rested his hand on her head. Even in her sleep, she leaned into the soft, caring contact. Joker smiled sadly and pulled away.

Stubbs rounded on Mona, her fur puffed out, “Merp!”

“What do you mean ‘who are you!?’ It’s me, Morgana!”

“Maybe it’s better if you change back.” Joker said as he turned to the rest of the team, frowning. “You can change back, right?”

“Let me try.” Mona posed with his little arms waving through the air, whisper-shouting. “Morgana, transfoooorm!”

A spurt of flame engulfed Mona’s body and faded just as quickly, revealing his normal cat form.

Morgana stretched and wove his tail back and forth, cackling with a bright grin, “I can change back into a car and my Metaverse form? Oh, this will be handy!”

Kaito’s eye twitched, “Please, just tell us what’s going on before we collectively lose our minds.”

“You actually have minds to lose?” Joker asked with a smirk, “I thought we’d lost them ages ago. Shouldn’t you be used to this by now?”

Kaito and Manami locked him with unimpressed glares.

“Okay, okay.” Joker put his hands up in surrender, “Everyone, get comfortable. This isn’t going to be an easy pill to swallow.”

Tobita passed around cups of tea. Shuichi and Atsuhiro took turns changing clothes in the bathroom before everyone gathered in the attic.

"I believe I should introduce myself," Lavenza said as she tucked the Compendium under one arm and performed a perfect curtsy, "I am Lavenza, a Ruler of Power and Velvet Room Attendant to the Trickster."

Manami blinked at her, "Nice to meet you?"

"Do you need to go back to the Velvet Room, Lavenza?" Joker asked.

"No, not yet." Lavenza sat primly next to him, close enough to almost touch, "I can provide extra context and support, if necessary."

"We'll need every detail," Atsuhiro downed his tea and Tobita poured him another cup, now wearing a spare coat over unspoiled clothes, "Depending on what you share, I might need something a little stronger than tea."

"You're not the only one." Kaito muttered. His bright blue eyes flicked in between Lavenza, Joker, and Morgana, his finger tapping on the silvery wrist band, "Don't hold anything back."

"Okay." Joker swallowed, "I wandered around for a while after I left the bar. Eventually I encountered Overhaul, a member of the Shie Hassaikai, in one of the alleyways."

"The 8 Precepts of Death." Manami's eyes went wide.

"You've heard of them?" Joker asked.

"They were a smaller Yakuza group until recently. I heard they were a main distributor for Trigger."

"Trigger? What's that?" Morgana asked.

“It’s a horrible drug.” Tobita said, frowning as he elegantly swirled his tea, “It makes someone’s quirk immeasurably more powerful for a limited time, but the side effects are rather disastrous.”

“Including, but not limited to,” Atsuhiro lifted a finger, “Losing control of your quirk, degraded mental capability, and a black tongue.”

“But what does the Yakuza have to do with that little girl?” Kaito said as he looked over at Eri, “Who is she?”

“She was with Overhaul. Her name is Eri, but that’s about all we have.” Joker glanced at Eri too, his heart twisting, “Overhaul said that quirks were an illness, and that he and Eri were going to ‘work together’ to do something about it. As far as I could tell, she wasn’t with him voluntarily.”

The sentiment settled sourly on the group.

Joker glanced at Shuichi and Atsuhiro, “It was around that time when you showed up.”

“I’m glad we interrupted when we did.” Atsuhiro stared into Joker’s eyes, shoulders tense, “I don’t want to imagine what Overhaul would have done to you had we not intervened.”

“What are you talking about?” Kaito asked with narrowed eyes.

“Given Eri’s situation, I wouldn’t put kidnapping Ren past him.” Atsuhiro said, “I cut Overhaul’s line of sight with some spare debris stored in my marbles, but...”

“He broke through!” Shuichi stated, “His quirk can take anything apart with a single touch! And Compress-”

Atsuhiro slapped a hand on Shuichi’s mouth, “I am fine now, obviously. Mona’s magic is a step above every other healing quirk in existence.”

Shuichi and Joker gave him a horrified look. Morgana shuddered.

“Well, Overhaul injured Atsuhiro, so Shuichi took over to protect us, but then...” Joker looked down at his gloves. He glanced in between Lavenza, Morgana, and Eri, “That’s when I heard my personas again for the first time since Kamino, and I reawakened to my powers.”

“Yeah!” Shuichi playfully batted Atsuhiro’s hand away, “He ripped this mask off and FWOOSH!” He threw his arms up in the air, “Satanael was there, and there was so much blood and fire everywhere! OH, and his new costume a-and then all of those people in blue-”

“Shuichi .” Kaito chastised when they heard Eri stir.

Thankfully, the girl rolled over and fell back into a deep slumber.

“Sorry.” Shuichi whispered.

Lavenza bore a tiny smile, “We came to the Trickster when his Second Awakening broke through the barriers between worlds, and we were able to rescue all of you.”

“And that’s the part I want to hear,” Atsuhiro smirked, practically vibrating with excitement, “Adventures across time and space? It must be an interesting story.”

“Oh, right.” Manami gripped the hem of her shirt, her eyes falling to the floor, “You two didn’t know.”

Joker’s sigh drew everyone’s attention. He and Morgana shared a long look, a silent conversation flowing in between them. Morgana firmly nodded.

For the second time, they shared their experiences back home. This time, Lavenza corroborated with them, explaining some of the deeper intricacies of the Velvet Room, as well as sharing what Yaldabaoth did to her and Igor. Atsuhiro and Shuichi’s expressions darkened considerably when Joker got to the interrogation room and the following events with Yaldabaoth and the Qliphoth World.

A terrible silence settled in the attic when they were done.

Tobita made another batch of tea and opened a large pack of jam-filled shortbread cookies before they continued. Joker took a handful of the cookies, suddenly realizing how hungry he was.

He passed one to Lavenza, who stared at it as if it were a strange trinket. Her eyes lit up when she took a delicate bite, crumbs falling into her lap.

“I thought you looked familiar,” Kaito said as Lavenza finished her cookie and blinked at him, “I saw you, and Justine and Caroline before you, when I relived Ren’s memories.”

“Wait, that’s your quirk?” Atsuhiro gaped at Kaito, “Reliving people’s memories?”

“Not just memories, I relive their whole lives as if I’ve lived them myself.” Kaito blinked slowly as Atsuhiro paled, “For other people, only seconds pass, but for me it could be several years.”

“So that time we played chess and you happened to know someone who played it before?”

“Yeah, she was a chess prodigy.”

“That’s cheating!”

“She was only seven years old at the time, if that makes it any better.”

“No, that makes it worse! ”

Morgana groaned, “Can we get back on track?”

Kaito crossed his arms and looked at Joker and Morgana. “When Ren entered the Raven’s Nest for the very first time and my quirk activated... everything was hazy, except for bits and pieces of the Metaverse and those ‘Palaces’. Some portions had these weird psychedelic patterns around the edge of my vision. I saw Justine and Caroline through your eyes, Ren, among... other things in the Velvet Room. My quirk makes me relive everything with crystal clarity, so when Ren and Morgana first told us the truth, I believed them right away.”

“... What do you mean ‘believed them right away?’” Shuichi blinked rapidly, “I know the truth is a little out there, but I believe in my buddy after what we just went through!”

Atsuhiro nodded. “I knew there was something about Joker and Mona’s powers that were different to any quirk I’ve seen. What we witnessed in the Velvet Room and hearing their explanations... it just makes sense to me, as strange as it is.”

Joker felt an intense rush of warmth and appreciation for Atsuhiro and Shuichi. He didn’t know how he would cope if it turned out like the first time they tried to explain their past. It must’ve shown on his face, as Manami and Tobita withered under Joker’s bright expression.

Atsuhiro quirked a brow at them, “Did you two not believe him?”

“That... would be correct.” Tobita’s expression crumpled with sadness and regret, “We thought a villain tampered with their memories. We tried to convince them that they must’ve been confused or lost. It caused a great rift between us for a while.”

“But we believe you now!” Manami said with a start, her eyes watering.

“I know you do.” Joker gave her a soft smile, “Hitoshi said he did too.”

Joker wondered what Hitoshi was doing now, and how he was faring at U.A.

“U.A. and the Metaverse...”

Morgana's tail swept back and forth, "Joker?"

"That's why I got so angry and frustrated about going to U.A. I was scared that Yaldabaoth would invade the school and hurt the students." Joker's hands balled into fists before he stared at Morgana, "Morgana, I'm sorry."

Morgana blinked rapidly, "Huh?"

"For rushing through things, for not thinking clearly. For upsetting you so badly, not just today, but after Kamino too."

"Hey, i-it's not your fault." Morgana hopped on Joker's lap and bumped his head against Joker's chin, "I reacted badly too! I was so scared of losing you again that I wasn't thinking clearly either. You're my partner, and I would do anything to make sure you were okay!"

Joker hugged Morgana close, and Morgana's purr gently rumbled through the attic.

"Having such a sudden shock like that did a number on you both." Tobita said softly, "It's understandable, but let us know if we can do anything to help. You both carry incredible weight on your shoulders, and it pains us to see you be crushed under them."

"About that..." Joker slackened his grip on Morgana as the not-cat curled on his lap, "You guys have to understand something. Once Morgana and I go to U.A., that's it."

"What are you getting at?" Atsuhiro asked, frowning.

Morgana's ears drooped. "That school might be our last stop. Who knows what we'll encounter when we get there. Now that Joker has his powers back, with Lady Lavenza and the others, a-and my Metaverse form too... it could be dangerous for the rest of you."

"It's not just that." Joker said as he ran a hand down Morgana's back, "Nezu has that program, but what'll happen once Morgana and I go home? How will they treat you? Especially you, Atsuhiro, since you were with the League for a while. I don't... I wouldn't want you to suffer or be trapped there because of us."

"My dear boy," Atsuhiro chuckled as he locked a hand on Joker's shoulder, "Do you really have so little faith in us? My background with U.A. is rocky at best, but I can weather whatever they dish out as long as I can help you get home. Besides, I have a few juicy bargaining chips to ensure my own safety. I can handle it."

Joker felt his eyes burn, and he blinked rapidly. "You really mean that?"

"Of course I do." Atsuhiro put his other hand over his heart, "As a descendant of Arsene Lupin, I'd never leave a fellow Phantom Thief high and dry! And... I'd never force my family to fend for themselves to cover my own skin."

"Me too!" Shuichi beamed as bright as the sun, "Me and Lady Stubbs will be with you until the end!"

"Merp!"

"You can't dissuade us that easily, Ren." Manami bore a soft smile, "We're in this together!"

Tobita raised his teacup at Joker.

"Wherever you go, I'll follow until I know you get home safe." Kaito's expression softened, "But what about Eri? We can't leave her like this."

"We'll take her with us." Joker said, "I don't feel comfortable dropping her off at a random police station, or leaving her with just any hero while Overhaul is on the prowl. She would be safest there."

"Agreed, but before we do anything," Atsuhiro playfully glared at Joker, "We'll all come up with a plan of action together. We'll scrounge up what gear we can, make proper preparations as a team, and come up with counter measures should something go wrong, which with this group is a guarantee . I won't hear any nonsense of you and Morgana gallivanting off to U.A. all on your own. Got it?"

"Yeah, I get it." Joker rubbed the back of his neck, his face heating up once more. "... Thank you."

"You're welcome." Atsuhiro said with no small amount of amusement, the others smiling or releasing their own quiet laughter.

"I'm glad you have teammates like these to support you, Trickster." Lavenza turned to Joker, eyes sharp and bright, "But there is one other matter you need to discuss with your Personas. You know what I'm talking about."

Joker paled. "Right. That ."

Morgana hopped off as Joker stood up, Lavenza following suit as she swept cookie crumbs from her dress.

"Can you guys watch Eri?" Joker asked as he shoved his hands into his pockets. "There's something I need to do."

Kaito shot up and walked to Joker, careful of the teacups and cookies on the floor, "What is it? You just got back from another harrowing experience, and you want to go do something again so soon?"

"It's Kohryu." Joker frowned when the dragon came to the front of his mind. They shared the sudden urge to be free, "He wants to talk about something, but it needs to be private. It's something I have to work with my Personas on my own."

"Not in the Velvet Room?" Lavenza asked, eyes wide.

"No. He doesn't want to go there to do it."

“Then where?” Morgana asked.

“Kohryu is rather large.” Tobita clutched his chin in thought, “Wouldn’t he attract unwanted attention?”

Morgana winced, “Yeah, I-I don’t want a repeat of the Musutafu Raid.”

“Actually, I may have a solution.” Atsuhiro elegantly rose to his feet, grinning, “I’ve heard rumors that an abandoned harbor was purchased recently at the edge of town, practically for pennies. It’s right by the sea, enough room for Kohryu to go over the open water without being spotted.”

Manami raised a brow, “Where did you hear this?”

Atsuhiro’s playful smirk was all too familiar, “Myself. I bought it. Under an alias, of course. Completely untraceable to us!”

“You-” Manami’s eyes twitched, “Is that what you were doing the last time you went grocery shopping?”

“Yes?”

“I really shouldn’t be surprised at this point.” Manami deadpanned, “I really shouldn’t.”

“But why go through that trouble,” Shuichi said, “And not tell us right away?”

“Where did you even get the funds ?” Morgana asked skeptically.

“What kind of Legacy Gentleman Thief would I be if my family didn’t have some measure of wealth gathered over the centuries? This bar isn’t the only little nest egg I’ve collected, in fact I own a good number of locations all across the globe.” Atsuhiro shrugged, “I wanted it to be a surprise! The isolated location is useful for any number of things!”

“That’d be perfect.” Joker said, “The open air and the lack of interruptions is what I need.”

“The next question is how you’re going to get there without attracting attention.” Kaito said.

Atsuhiro waved his hand around, “My quirk plus a suitable disguise will work. It’s safer that way, if you don’t mind traveling in my pocket. Given what happened, the Yakuza will need time to recuperate, and the heroes are so focused looking for Joker that they’ll pass over another random face in the crowd.”

Joker looked around. The others obviously weren’t happy, but Kohryu was being strangely adamant. He stared back at Manami as she studied him intensely.

“Okay.” Manami sighed as she grabbed her laptop, “I don’t like this, not one bit. I hope you know that.”

“I know.” Joker chuckled dryly. “I have so much apology curry to make, don’t I?”

“Yes, you do.” She stated. “I’ll intercept any police and hero communications, and keep an eye out while you’re doing... whatever it is you’re going to do.”

“I’ll be with you.” Morgana said to Manami. “I want to test out my new limits, too!”

“Shuichi should stay here with me.” Kaito said as he crossed his arms, “In case Eri wakes up.”

“Not good with children, are we?” Atsuhiro teased.

Kaito rolled his eyes, “I’ve had - No, I’ve lived several lives where people had multiple children, but it’s better if she doesn’t wake up in a weird place with a complete stranger. She might get scared if Joker and Morgana are gone.”

“Oh, I get it!” Shuichi said. “Leave it to me!”

Joker turned to Lavenza, “What do you want to do?”

“I shall return to the Velvet Room for the time being. If you would, Trickster?”

Joker retrieved his Velvet Key and approached an empty space of wall. He touched the tiny key to the wall, and the Velvet Room door materialized around it, a soft blue glow painting the attic. The others’ muffled noises of surprise barely covered his own.

“That’s that.” Lavenza smiled softly at Joker, “I’ll be waiting.”

Joker nodded.

Lavenza hesitated. She stared longingly at the packages of shortbread cookies, before swiping them and disappearing into the Velvet Room, the cold iron bars closing behind her. It vanished the same way it did back in the alley.

“Did she just steal all of our cookies?” Atsuhiro asked with an amused expression.

Joker snorted, and then stared at the tiny key in his palm. Summoning the Velvet Room wherever he wanted was unimaginably useful... but also dangerous. He’d have to test whether it was just him who could open it, or if anyone else could summon it. A thought for later. He tucked the key carefully in his costume, then turned to face the others.

“Let’s go.”

With hesitant goodbyes, the team split up.

The aroma of salt and rusted iron flowed on the cold breeze. Long abandoned boats lined the forgotten pier and warehouses rising up around them. Joker stood on the edge of the seawall as icy sprays of water hounded him, the wind ruffling his hair and winged coattails around his ankles. The sea stretched out beyond the horizon, the waning moon just bright enough to speckle the sea with silver.

“Please be careful.” Morgana whispered as he clung to Gentle’s shoulder.

“I will, promise.” Joker smirked, “Kohryu won’t let anything happen.”

“Says the one who attracts trouble on a daily basis.” La Brava deadpanned.

“Hey, I don’t find trouble! Trouble finds me!”

“Uh huh, sure.”

“I’m on La Brava’s side here,” Mr. Compress said, chuckling, “Even I have not been in as much trouble since encountering you.”

Joker sighed, turning towards the water when Kohryu materialized. Most of Kohryu’s glittering gold body appeared under the water, the orbs in his claws making the water dance with multicolored lights. Kohryu’s bulk caused the water to swell, the rusty old boats in the distance creaking like ghosts as they rocked back and forth.

Kohryu raised his head out of the water, his whiskers floating lazily as salty waterfalls fell from the dragon’s head, his ruby eyes blazing bright, “Shall we go, Trickster?”

Joker stepped onto the bridge of Kohryu’s nose and sat cross legged at the base of Kohryu’s horns. Joker waved at the others when Kohryu turned away, and soon they were out of sight.

A companionable silence floated between them as Kohryu swam, pushing against the rocky bottom before the sea opened up below. It wasn’t long before the strip of land turned into a smudge on the horizon and Kohryu lifted himself from the water. Water fell from Kohryu's scales as they travelled skywards, the sparse moonlight sprouting faint rainbows of color.

Joker's stomach flipped as they rose higher and higher into the clouds, until the salty water dried from the dragon's scales and there was nothing but open water in all directions. The moon and a carpet of stars rose above like silent vigils. A cloud passed underneath them, Kohryu's immense shadow draping it in darkness before it passed.

Joker didn't want to have the conversation skirting his mind.

He wanted to be lost here in the middle of the ocean, just he and his Personas. After being separated for so long, he wanted to bask in their presence. No dire situations, no gods to fight or worlds to save. He wanted to be allowed to exist, as one and at peace with his other selves. If only for a moment.

Kohryu allowed it for a time as they floated aimlessly. Joker fell in tune to the bobbing movements and gentle whooshes of Kohryu's breathing, matching it with his own as he finally relaxed. It wasn't until the moon was over their heads, casting Kohryu's serpentine shadow down on the silvery waves, that the dragon broke the silence.

"Trickster, there is nothing to be afraid of. The nature of fusions and the Velvet Room itself is integral to your journey."

Joker's heart leapt to his throat. "But Seth-"

"What happened to Seth is unfortunate and we all miss him dearly." Kohryu's whiskers gently brushed Joker's shoulders, "But your fear is misplaced."

"Misplaced?" Joker shook his head, "We almost lost Yatagarasu too! How is it misplaced?"

“We art thou, thou art us.” Kohryu chuckled as a fountain of warmth flowed over the icy fear in Joker’s chest. “As long as you master our bonds and preserve us in the Compendium, then we will never be lost. This world has seen us, all of us, during the Kamino Crisis. This world knows what to expect should you stay stagnant, opening you to weakness. But if you were to forge new powers from the ashes of the old....”

“We’ll catch any enemies off guard, giving us the advantage.” Joker’s face fell into his hands, “We can’t afford to lose, especially if Yaldabaoth is planning to invade soon. That’s what you’re trying to tell me, right?”

“Exactly, Trickster. You must do fusions if we are to be victorious. Our first step is mastering bonds.” Kohryu hummed, the deep sound thrumming through Joker’s bones, “Now, focus on my bond. You have grown much since we last tried on that fateful morning, and I believe you have the strength to master it now as The World.”

Joker took a deep breath and closed his eyes, shutting away the moonlit sea. Kohryu’s sacred Shimenawa appeared within. The threads exuded holy power, of Kohryu’s heavenly brilliance and dominion over the earth and seasonal changes. If he listened closely, he could hear whale songs, see faint glimmers of a palace deep under the ocean. A wisp of Byakko’s bond entwined the Shimenawa in a breath of cold wind.

It nearly crushed him last time. He had felt tiny, insignificant, next to the veritable universe Kohryu kept within himself. Now, Joker took in small pieces, fully accepting everything that made Kohryu. It was like taking spoonfuls of the sea below, one at a time, to fill a different reservoir.

Kohryu felt the strain on the Trickster’s body, but he pushed onward. The moon, their sole witness, made her journey across the horizon. Then, something in their souls clicked. A snap as an icy cold rush flowed through their bodies, striking their inner most core.

Kohryu howled with joy over the open water, "Well done, Trickster!"

Joker opened his eyes and wiped the sweat from his brow. "That was the hardest one to master yet."

"Indeed. My Compendium page has been forged, but the night is not yet over, neither is this lesson."

Joker frowned, "You're not saying...?"

"Yes." Kohryu's happiness sharpened into a steely resolve. "I want you to fuse me in the Velvet Room with another Persona. Harness our power and gain new strengths, Trickster. If you yet have need of me, then summon me from the Compendium afterwards."

Panic stabbed through Joker's heart, twisting into a bitter sourness. The other Personas bubbled within his mind.

"Kohryu, isn't that cruel?" Satanael said.

"Maybe so," Kohryu's brow softened, "But it is the inevitable truth. The Trickster needs to face it head on if we are to survive what this world has in store, Metaverse or otherwise."

"As harsh as it is, I agree with Kohryu." Titania bunched her shimmering emerald dress in her hands, "I also volunteer for a fusion. I will give everything that I am to make the Trickster stronger!"

"Titania..." Ishtar whispered.

"Me-he too, ho!" Black Frost cackled, "Master my bond next, Trickster! Let my next self be stronger than before!!"

"Don't be sad, Master! Let us help you!"

"How rare for Cerberus and I to share the same opinion." Byakko languidly bobbed his tail back and forth, "This is what we were made for, some of us quite literally."

"C'mon, big brother! You can do it!"

Cu Chulainn raised his spear, "Be not afraid, Trickster! I will go gladly in the face of those guillotines if it secured Yaldabaoth's demise!"

Vasuki hissed in agreement, and the others sent their assent.

All except for one.

"Wait." Sraosha rose above the others in the mindscape, his wings glimmering like the moonstruck waves below, "I wish to be used as fusion fodder, but I will not allow the Trickster to master my bond."

"What!?" Ishtar yelled.

"Sraosha," Joker's eyes went wide, "What are you saying?"

"I'll go to my death willingly as punishment for what I did in Kamino."

Kohryu reared his head up, nostrils flaring.

Joker steadied himself as Kohryu thrashed like a ribbon snapping in the wind.

"What madness is this, Sraosha?" Kohryu growled, "The Trickster relies on all of us! Your Compendium page must be forged!"

"No, listen to me!" A wave of sadness turned into frustration as Sraosha sharply flapped his wings, "It's my fault that the Trickster's resolve was broken! I fractured his soul so deeply that we could no longer reach him until his Second Awakening. I killed All For One against the Trickster's orders, as it is in my nature to eradicate all evil beings! I buried myself within the Trickster's soul for fear that I would do the same to Overhaul, thus repeating the cycle. If we see that monster again, I will kill him. Nothing will stop me next time."

Joker's heart thundered in his ears, but Sraosha continued.

"I am too dangerous, Trickster. I fear I will do irreparable damage to your soul by going against your wishes again. Your hands should not be stained red simply because I must follow my creed."

"Valued friend," Yatagarasu flew up to Sraosha and landed on his shoulder, resting the tip of his beak on Sraosha's forehead, "Please calm yourself. You are jumping to conclusions. You controlled yourself up until Kamino, why not do so again?"

"You're asking me to go against what I am, indefinitely. I held back before simply because we were shadows of ourselves in the beginning, then my true calling slowly awakened through the Trickster's travels in this world. All For One's crimes against the Trickster... broke that final straw. I no longer have the strength..." Sraosha brushed Yatagarasu off of his shoulder and turned his back to the other Personas. "This is my ultimatum, Trickster: Either fuse me without mastering my bond, or lock me away in the Isolation Cell in the Velvet Room."

"You are set on this?" Satanael's heavy voice lay a blanket of dread on Joker's soul, "There's no way to convince you?"

"No. My decision is set in stone."

No matter how the others tried to convince him, no matter what Joker said, Sraosha would not budge. Joker reached out to Sraosha's bond; A long sacred scroll scrawled with a dead language, but it was brutally ripped from his grasp. The action caused a ripple through the mindscape, and a wave of dizziness slammed against Joker.

Kohryu blinked rapidly to stay afloat.

"Trickster, please." Sraosha's voice trembled, "Let me atone. My next self won't disobey you."

Joker's hands curled so tight his gloves creaked. His heart hammered in his chest. Sraosha was nothing but sincere in this.

Throwing him in the Isolation Cell would be cruel, but forcing Sraosha to remain as is was a punishment worse than death in the Persona's eyes. Only through sacrifice and redemption would he feel at peace.

"Okay." Joker leaned against Kohryu's horn with a weary sigh. "Let's go, then. We'll meet up with the others and get home, then... then we'll go into the Velvet Room."

Kohryu veered towards land.

Manami stayed back by the far wall, watching as Gentle and Mona(his 'chibi' form was so cute!! She wanted to squish his adorable face.) bounced around the warehouse. Mr. Compress sat up in the rafters, gently kicking his legs back and forth.

Mona laughed as the stretchy concrete vaulted him upwards, where he whipped out his golden slingshot and fired at a marble Mr. Compress threw. The empty can, appearing with a snap of Mr. Compress' fingers, was hit dead-on, clattering at the other end of the room.

"I still got it!" Mona cackled as he landed, bouncing in place.

"Well done!" Gentle was grinning, too. They had established his new range, a wide circle several meters all around him, and the both of them were having fun experimenting. "Now, if only I knew how to turn off my own quirk. I can feel it. It's so close..."

"Hey, we'll get there!" Mona said, beaming, "We'll just have to work with what we got and take it from here! What else can you do? You could form stretchy air barriers before, right?"

"Stretchy barriers, huh?" Mr. Compress tilted his head, "Let's try that next and see if there are any changes, too."

Manami smiled.

Mona and Mr. Compress could help Gentle better than she could. They continued experimenting for a while, a knot in her gut slowly growing as the hours went by. Then, a salty wind flowed through the warehouse. They looked up to the open skylight as Mercurius stuck his head in.

“The Trickster returns!”

Manami released a sigh of relief, the knot untangling.

Gentle wiped his brow, then he reached into his back pocket and clicked the suppressor cuff on his wrist. Mona turned back into his feline form with a whisper of blue flame, then climbed on Gentle's shoulder. Although heavy bags came under Gentle's eyes, he approached her with his usual smile, full of warmth and comfort.

“Let's not keep him waiting. Shall we, my dear?”

“Right!” She tucked her laptop away in her bag, then bounced over to them. “This area is pretty desolate, so I don't think anybody will find this.”

“We can hope. It'll wear off.... eventually.” Gentle's smile widened, despite his own hesitance, “But whether it is discovered or not, I don't see how we have much of a choice but to do this. I feel like I failed Ren by holding back my quirk. I will learn how to control it, no matter what it takes.”

“Gentle...”

He held out his hand. She grabbed it with a smile, and with practiced motions, they jumped up to the skylight. Morgana hopped down when their feet landed on the roof. Manami chuckled as she straightened her hair.

She missed doing that.

“Hey, don’t leave without me!” Mr. Compress jumped out the window next, wagging a finger at them, “How rude!”

Morgana snickered at him.

“There he is.” Mercurius pointed his staff towards the golden smudge on the horizon, rapidly getting closer. He bowed to Morgana and vanished.

The stars were fading and the waning moon had set. Greens and blues lightened the sky as the sun began to rise.

“Come on!” Morgana jumped from the roof with the natural grace of a feline.

The others climbed down the old fashioned way via a pile of rusty crates. Joker’s golden dragon had submerged it’s body beneath the water by the time they rushed to the edge of the harbor. Joker stood on the only half of Kohryu’s head sticking out of the water like a crocodile’s. The dragon raised it’s head from the sea when they were close enough, water soaking the concrete.

Manami’s breath caught.

Joker elegantly stepped down, his movements flowing like a choreographed dance as he landed on the concrete, sending ripples of color throughout it. He turned and faced Kohryu as the dragon’s throat rumbled with a sorrowful song.

At that moment, she realized how much Ren had grown. She remembers the terrified kid she first saw in the Raven’s Nest, to the valiant and powerful vigilante evening the odds against a world that wanted to smother him, and now, to the man he became after weathering so much suffering and pain.

Manami’s heart sank as the dragon nuzzled Joker, who in turn rested his forehead on the tip of Kohryu’s snout. They shared a moment together, bathing in the pale light of the sunrise.

Manami thought it looked like a scene from a fairy tale, a courageous king and his benevolent dragon bearing the weight of worlds on their shoulders. Kohryu vanished in a shower of blue ashes raining down over Joker, then he turned to them, smiling. It wasn't a happy smile.

"... Are you okay?" Morgana asked as he rubbed against Joker's legs, despite the seawater soaking his paws.

"Yeah, mostly." Joker said as Morgana climbed to his shoulder, "I'm going to do some fusions in the Velvet Room once we get back."

"Oh." Morgana's eyes widened. "Which ones are you going to fuse?"

"Sraosha and Kohryu, a couple others who volunteered, too." Joker pinched the bridge of his masked nose, "Sraosha doesn't want to be saved in the Compendium though, he wants to be sacrificed for good."

Manami paled. She exchanged a quick glance with Gentle.

"What does it mean for them not to be saved in the Compendium?" Mr. Compress asked.

"It's a permanent death for the Persona, in a sense. Like what happened with Seth." Joker grimaced, "Sraosha will be reborn into a new one, but it won't be the same."

Morgana's fur puffed. Joker staggered suddenly, but caught himself.

"Are you alright?" Gentle asked as he put a hand to Joker's shoulder, "You've been out all night. You're exhausted."

"I'll be okay until we get back." Joker shook his head.

"You haven't slept in almost two days and you haven't even dispelled your Metaverse costume once since your Second Awakening!" Morgana flicked his tail on the back of Joker's head, "You will sleep once you're done in the Velvet Room, okay?"

“I get it already. Fusions first, then I’ll pass out.” Joker smirked.
“Promise.”

Morgana squinted at him, “Fine. Let’s just get out of here before somebody sees us.”

“I’ll give Compress the safe route.” Manami said, “The heroes should be changing shifts right around now, so there are plenty of openings to slip through!”

Mr. Compress pulled on his gloves, “Leave everything to me.”

Joker nodded, “Let’s get this over with.”

He spent another hour meditating in the Velvet Room to master the remaining bonds- Black Frost’s ripple of beautiful, swirling frost on a window, Cu Chulainn’s ancient tapestry, and Vasuki’s caustic Sea of Milk. Their bonds were a breeze to master compared to Kohryu, and now Cu Chulainn and Black Frost stood alongside the others who wished to be fused.

The Velvet Room’s melody matched Joker’s dour mood as he stared at the glinting guillotine blades. He could practically feel their uncanny sharpness from across the room, phantom memories from previous fusions sprang to the forefront of his mind.

“Who will I tease now?” Ishtar hovered in front of Titania with her arms crossed.

“Oh please,” Titania smirked and waved her hand at Ishtar, “Tease my next self, if you must.”

Ishtar stared at Titania, frowning. Then, she wrapped her arms around Titania before vanishing into Joker’s mindscape.

Titania blinked a few times, but smiled softly.

“Are you ready, Trickster?” Lavenza asked Joker as he leaned against the door frame of his cell.

“Yeah.” Joker stared at the Compendium she held, he had already chosen the next Personas and which skills they would inherit, “Let’s do it before I change my mind.”

Lavenza bowed. Igor and the other Attendants watched from the sidelines as Sraosha and Cu Chulainn stepped towards the guillotines first. Joker watched Sraosha, and the last time he saw the Persona was with his head bowed deeply in gratitude. Lavenza threw the velvet blue shroud over them, and dragged them forward so their necks were positioned just right for the guillotine.

Joker’s held his breath before the blades fell, that moment felt like an eternity stretched within a single heartbeat. The blades came down with a violent SLAM . Ice water flowed over Joker’s soul when Cu Cuchulain and Sraosha vanished in tendrils of black and bright blue, converging together in front of the guillotines in a writhing ball of magic. A new Persona was born with a bright flash.

“Oh my,” Margaret whispered as she put a hand over her heart, “Our Wild Cards’ fusions were never so... violent.”

“Absolutely brutal. I love it.” Elizabeth smirked.

“Oh course you do.” Theodore said with a sigh.

“Shut it, you.”

Joker was too enamored by the being in front of him to pay attention to the other Attendants.

A graceful woman hovered on soft green wings, her skin the same color and her long black hair swept away from her face. Her golden eyes were as breathtaking as the golden breastplate and flowing silk robes she wore, and in her hands were a sword and a bouquet of white lilies.

“Ah, Trickster.” Her ethereal voice held motherly notes, of the comfort of a hug on a cool, rainy day, “I am Gabriel. As your mask, I now declare the birth of your newfound power.”

Her body converged into a black and gold mask, which flowed into Joker with a shower of bright blue flames. The act birthed a new connection within his mindscape. The other Personas welcomed Gabriel into the fold, as easily as if she were always there. Pieces of Sraosha’s guilt and Cu Chulainn’s blood-lust lay within her bond of heavenly light splashing on a sea of white lilies.

Joker blinked. Gabriel was no longer a Temperance Persona as she was back home. The Faith Arcana replaced it.

“Shall we go next, Shiva?” Titania asked as she tucked her hair behind her ear.

“Yes, lets.” Shiva nodded, his snakes flicking their tongues in excitement.

“Sure, hee ho!!” Black Frost raised his fists, “Saving the best for last, right Kohryu!?”

Kohryu flicked a whisker in acknowledgement, but said nothing as Titania and Shiva followed in Cu Cuchulain and Sraosha’s footsteps. The shrouds were donned, and the blades came down. At least Joker didn’t flinch this time, though his body shivered as if he were thrown in the Arctic sea.

A man with tawny skin appeared from the bright light, with pale hair sweeping down from his fantastically horned headdress. Joker thought it looked rather like a copper fish with massive fins fanning outwards, complete with a long body and a tail going down the Persona’s back. His clothes were ancient and exotic, full of bright mosaics and sweeping transparent fabric.

“I am Baal.” The Persona lifted a goblet encrusted with golden flowers, “I grant to thee, oh master of souls, this mask which brings bountiful rain and fertility to the earth.”

Like Gabriel, Baal changed into a mask and flowed into Joker, forging another new branch in the connection they all shared. His bond felt like the first spring rain on a parched river bed. Joker took a breath as the rush of energy faded, then he looked between Kohryu and Black Frost.

“Last pair.” Joker forced a smile.

Black Frost skipped towards the guillotines, cackling.

Kohryu brushed one of his whiskers against Joker, “I shall see you soon, no?”

“Right...”

Kohryu crawled down next to Black Frost.

Joker would never know how the shrouds reduced a Persona the size of Kohryu into something so small. Then again, the beings wriggling in the suffocating veil were his other selves, and shrank down to a humanoid figure about his size...

He rubbed his neck as the guillotines came down for the third time-

The blades screeched to a stop halfway through, the noise like claws down a chalkboard. Lavenza stared at the still blades, then sighed.

“How troublesome.” She said.

Lavenza turned away and grabbed something leaning against the wall, the familiar, horrible roar of a chainsaw drowned out the Velvet Song. With a malicious smirk, Lavenza sprinted towards the guillotines and mercilessly swung her weapon.

Elizabeth beamed and clapped as the chainsaw severed the Personas’ heads.

Margaret looked away and covered Theodore's eyes.

Kohryu and Black Frost's bodies exploded into a mass of energy, larger than the others, and with a stream of glittering gold within the black and blue. An ear-splitting roar hounded the Velvet Room before the mass burst like rotting fruit hitting the ground. Another dragon, different from Kohryu and even Seth, emerged, still dripping with black.

A long sinuous body gleamed with plated scales that shifted in color, from steely gray, sterling silver, and pitch black at the darkest parts. Opalescent metal swooped around its shoulders and out its back in a fan of spines, looking not unlike hollowed out wings. It's metallic, mask-like face revealed fangs and deep, black holes where its eyes should be, and curved, pointed horns as sharp as razor blades. Its beating heart, visible from within a clear glass window lodged in its chest, pounded rapidly.

It crawled towards Joker on all fours, the scythe-like claws scratching the stone floor. Joker stared up at the towering dragon over three times his height, blinking rapidly.

"I am Fafnir." His voice was like stones grinding together, his breath a hiss of hot steam. "As long as you wield my mask, the gold and all the treasures of this world will be ours for the taking!"

Fafnir reared up on his hind legs and howled into the starry galaxy above. He morphed into a mask with a wicked flash of black and gold, and crashed into Joker at lightning speed. Joker shivered at this new bond, a tangled length of silvery metal with jagged barbs, it reminded him of barbed wire. It was so untamed compared to the rest.

"That..." Joker cleared his throat as Lavenza approached, thankfully leaving the chainsaw behind. "That's not a Persona I've ever had before?"

“Oho,” Igor chuckled, “I’ve not seen Fafnir in quite some time! He had quite a different form back then.”

“I like him!” Elizabeth said.

“Enough, Elizabeth.” Margaret chastised. “Be quiet, now.”

Elizabeth stuck her tongue out at Margaret, but she was promptly ignored.

Lavenza sighed, “It’s no surprise, Trickster. This is not our world, so new Personas may linger within the Sea of Human Souls. In any case, the guillotines need repairs, so fusions are currently unavailable. Is there anything else you need, Trickster?”

Joker shoved his hands in his pockets, the new bonds fluttering like freshly hatched birds, “Could I get Kohryu and a few others back?”

“Of course. You have three slots open in your stock.” She opened the Compendium, “Oh, but it appears you don’t have the necessary funds.”

“How much does Kohryu cost?”

“With all of the discounts, Kohryu would be 120,000 yen.”

“You can’t make him free like you did with Yatagarasu?”

“No... given the circumstances, Yatagarasu was an exception, not the rule. I am sorry, Trickster.”

Joker blinked. It was as if the weight of the universe pressed down on him all at once, laughing at his misfortunes.

“Alright.” He grumbled, “I’ll figure something out later.”

Lavenza looked sad at his sudden departure from the Velvet Room. The others were all sprawled out on their futons around the attic, save for Kaito. The man's eyes latched onto him as the Velvet Room door vanished.

Kaito looked him up and down, eyes settling on his sour expression, "Are you alright?"

"Yeah, just peachy."

Kaito rolled his eyes, "You forget that I experienced Alice's fusion first hand, so I know what you went through."

Joker grimaced, "Yeah, but there's a new Persona I've never seen before. He's... different from anything I had back home. I'll explain later."

Joker finally let his costume disappear. His exhaustion doubled and it felt like a mountain pressed down on him. He yawned and rubbed his eyes.

Kaito nudged him towards the futon next to Eri's. Morgana slept on his back, his paws in the air, between the two futons.

"Go to sleep, Ren." Kaito said as Ren collapsed face first into the pillows, "I'll wake everyone up if something happens, okay?"

Ren's groan was lost into the soft pillow smooshing his face. He was out like a light.

Kaito ruffled Ren's hair and draped the blanket over him. Kaito stared at Eri and Morgana, both sleeping soundly, then to the others snoring in their respective futons. Lady Stubbs was flopped over Shuichi's face like a furry mask. Manami and Tobita's fingers were intertwined between their futons. Atsuhiro's back was turned to him, he was probably the most elegant sleeper of the bunch.

Kaito got comfortable and prepared to watch over his sleeping family.

Tokoyami looked around the small waiting room nestled within the Nighteye Agency. Mostly consisting of a pair of couches, a few chairs, a table with untouched magazines, and a fake plant sitting in the corner, perhaps forever pondering the purpose of its existence as early morning light seeped in from the window.

The silence, even within his own mind, was becoming unbearable.

Midoriya's eyes never left the floor, his face pale and eyebrows tense. Asui and Uraraka shared a pair of headphones connected to Asui's phone, probably listening to music. Kirishima paced in circles.

They all looked to the door when a familiar face walked in.

"Todoroki!?" Kirishima gasped, "You're in on this too!?"

"Apparently." Todoroki blinked and looked around, "Endeavor got the call early this morning. I take it everyone is here for the same thing?"

"Probably!" Uraraka beamed as she looked at Asui, who rolled up the earbuds and put them away, "Isn't this exciting!? I can't believe we're all working together!"

"It is a bit unexpected, kero." Asui tilted her head, "I wonder what has the heroes so on edge? Ryukyu's whole demeanor changed with one text."

"Th-that's probably why they're holding a debriefing. I-it's not surprising, given what happened a-and the rumors going around." Midoriya clasped his hands together, his brow furrowing, "Endeavor and Fat Gum were the last on Nighteye's list."

"This is our first big venture as interns." Tokoyami folded his arms and eyed the rest of them with grave seriousness, "The public's fears about that explosion replays on every news station, and the rumor of Joker's real return has put them in a frenzy. We must make the most of this experience if we are to grow into proper heroes."

The mention of Joker set tension in everyone's shoulders.

"Don't take this the wrong way," Todoroki turned to Kirishima, "But why did they invite Fat Gum? From what I can tell, it's mostly the group of heroes that Joker worked with, plus my father and Nezu."

"Oh." Kirishima blinked, "I uh, I don't know, actually. Maybe it has something to do with what happened to us last night?"

"Your fight was on the news!" Uraraka smiled at him, "It was so cool!"

Kirishima blushed, "Thanks! But..." The excitement in Kirishima's eyes faded, "The villains shot Amajiki with something, and he couldn't use his quirk for a while. He got it back after a few hours, but it was pretty scary. They tried to shoot me, too. My quirk protected me though!"

"A bullet that can erase quirks?" Midoriya asked, eyes widening.

Kirishima nodded, "They took the bullets and rushed them into some lab for tests. The one that hit me was full of the stuff that made Amajiki unable to use his quirk. Maybe that's why Fat Gum was called here?"

"Okay, but... how does that tie in with Joker?" Tokoyami asked, "If Nezu is here, then it only solidifies my own suspicions." Tokoyami blinked when they all stared at him. His feathers puffed out in embarrassment, "Does no one else ponder the mystery of the Red Rain and its supposed connection to Joker? How the air within U.A. grows heavier each day, and why students outside of our class don't seem to notice? Why Nezu and the other teachers seem to be so frazzled as of late?"

"W-well, now that you say it..." Uraraka whispered.

"I try not to think about it." Kirishima put on a watery smile, "I mean, Aniki will come back to us, right? We'll find out more by then?"

“I’ve been trying to connect the dots myself, but I agree with Kirishima.” Todoroki said, his voice as smooth as ever, “We’re still missing a large piece of the puzzle. I don’t think we’ll get anywhere until Joker makes his next move, whatever that will be.”

Another bout of silence suffocated the waiting room.

“POWER!!” The door was thrown open and Lemillion burst in, his crimson cape flaring behind him.

“Lemillion!” Midoriya put a hand to his chest, “Er, a-a little warning next time?”

Lemillion put his hands on his hips and laughed, “No way! It’s good to get the nerves out! Loosen up! That said-” Lemillion scanned the young heroes in training, “We’re almost ready to start.”

Uraraka put a hand over her heart, “Oh, this is kinda scary!”

“It won’t be that bad!” Kirishima said, “... Right?”

“Imagine being in a meeting with Endeavor .” Todoroki deadpanned.

Kirishima blanched.

“There’s nothing to be afraid of!” Lemillion said, “Relax and take a breather if you have to. Don’t be scared to ask questions, and if you notice something that the pros haven’t, then speak up. You never know how much it could help the case! If you need a break, then you are free to leave the room. Everything is being recorded for later. Any other questions?”

When no questions were asked, Lemillion motioned them to follow.

Tokoyami hesitated as the others slowly filtered out of the room. He reached into his back pouch for a tarot card. He had taken to carrying a deck around with him at all times ever since the Room King Fiasco. He pulled a card out and stared at it with a frown. It was of a woman bearing a sword and a set of scales, but it was upside down.

“Reverse Justice?” He muttered to himself. “What portents lurk on the horizon?”

“Fumi, you’re falling behind!!” Dark Shadow screamed for the first time that morning.

Tokoyami sighed. He shoved the card back in the deck and rushed out of the room, though the tarot stayed cemented in his mind.

Why is it so hard choosing Personas for this story? I love them all too much. Which ones do you think, aside from Kohryu, should rejoin the stock?

Chapter 8 of the Thieves Den has been updated with the new Persona builds.

Next chapter should be on July 9th unless otherwise specified.

Days Of Sisters

Chapter 76: Days Of Sisters

“Wait, they asked you what your daughter liked?” Kaito asked as a hint of a smirk appeared. “And you didn’t specify otherwise?”

SOFT SUGARY FLUFF?? IN MY DTESH!?

It's more likely than you think.

Also, I put up a video with the new Personas and their builds! Might do more videos or streams like this in the future, let me know your thoughts!

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=PbSK9uZ2sKc>

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

The table was laden with criminal files, pitchers of water and coffee, and surrounded with enough chairs to seat their entire class.

Nighteye was at the head of the table, tall and imposing, with the light of a projector behind him casting his face in deep shadow. To his immediate left sat Nezu, then next to him-

“Aizawa-sensei? You’re here too!?” Uraraka asked.

“Obviously.” Their teacher stared back, unimpressed, “You’re wasting time, Uravity. Get seated so we can begin.”

“Y-yes, sensei!” She said.

“Don’t call me sensei. Refer to me only as Eraserhead when we’re on the job. That goes for all of you, understand?”

“Yes, Eraserhead!” Kirishima said as he sat down between Fat Gum and Suneater.

Todoroki hardly looked at Endeavor, despite the other man attempting a curt smile that didn’t quite fit his face. Hawks nodded in greeting for Tokoyami. Hado grinned as Tsuyu and Uraraka sat beside her, Ryukyu looked up from her file to give them a reassuring smile, too.

Midoriya gulped when Lemillion sat to Nighteye’s right hand side, and rushed to take the seat next to Lemillion. Bubble Girl and Centipeder stood on either side of the projector screen with heavy folders in their arms.

Iida Tensei, who had a laptop and a swarm of papers all around him, was right beside him.

Gang Orca, Best Jeanist, and even Miruko were here too! So many powerful heroes! Midoriya wondered if he could get their autograph later.

“And... we’re recording.” Iida gave the thumbs up to Nighteye.

Nighteye rose from his chair, his shadow pooling onto the projector. “This meeting will be short, as there is a lot of work to do and not much time to do it. Lemillion, if you would start?”

“Yes, Sir!” Lemillion shot up as Nighteye sat down, “Yesterday, Deku and I were on a routine patrol when we encountered Overhaul and a little girl in an alley.”

The projector changed, showcasing the villain’s profile, alongside his quirk, approximate age, and other such information.

“He’s the leader of the Shie Hassaikai?” Miruko scoffed, “I thought the Yakuza were all dyin’ off.”

“They are not as brazen as other villains. Their type has quieted down since All Might’s reign as number 1, but that’s made them crafty and clever.” Endeavor said as he glared at Overhaul’s profile, “In some cases, that makes them even more dangerous.”

“I agree.” Ryukyu frowned, “I can’t believe he had a little girl with him.”

“Eri.” Midoriya didn’t realize he spoke out loud until over a dozen pairs of eyes landed on him, “T-that’s her name. She was dirty and covered in bandages, I-I could feel her bones underneath her dress, too.”

Gang Orca’s growl reverberated across the table.

“I hate to say it, but we couldn’t rescue her at that time.” Lemillion’s expression turned grim, “We didn’t have enough information and there were too many civilians he could’ve used as hostages.”

“Is his quirk that dangerous?” Best Jeanist asked.

“His quirk, aptly named Overhaul, can disassemble and reassemble anything he touches down to the molecular level.” Nighteye frowned, “That includes organic matter. So yes, it is incredibly dangerous.”

A sharp tang struck the room as the seasoned pros sobered.

Nighteye nodded for Lemillion to continue.

“It wasn’t long after Overhaul took Eri back and disappeared that the explosion hit.” Lemillion cleared his throat as the projector changed. Midoriya had ingrained every detail into his mind. Buildings decimated, the ground torn open and water pipes bursting. How ironic that the sprays of water made a rainbow over the destruction.

“Deku and I were the first on the scene. That’s when we encountered this .”

The projector changed to the drawing of a scarlet winged serpent. The underbelly, multiple eyes, and the under side of the wings were deep amethyst in color.

“There’s a note that says it may be one of Joker’s summons.” Endeavor looked down to the copy within the files, “How are you so sure?”

“Joker’s summons are usually accompanied by bright blue flames! As the report states, both Lemillion and Deku reported such flames around this serpent.” Nezu tilted his head, “But we have not seen this one before. I wonder who this is?”

“I don’t know, but something wasn’t right with it.” Midoriya said.

Nezu blinked at him, “Care to explain?”

“It was transparent.” Midoriya frowned, his eyes falling in thought, “The last time I remember one of Joker’s summons being transparent was at the USJ... where he first appeared.”

Nezu’s ears flicked, and he jotted something down in a notebook.

“I concur with Deku.” Tokoyami’s voice was surprisingly stable as he spoke to the pros, “Another classmate and I were the first to encounter him at the USJ. Joker used none other than Arsene himself to cover his escape from the Squal Zone, and I distinctly remember that he was transparent because I could see the door through Arsene.”

“Interesting.” Nezu said as he wrote another note.

“I only remember the blue flames when he summoned Cu Chulainn.” Best Jeanist glanced between Miruko, Iida Tensei, and the others who were with him that night. “He was not transparent.”

"I've watched and re-watched the Kamino footage countless times," Hawks said as his eyes sharpened, "All of Joker's summons were solid. So what does it mean if they're transparent? A change in power level or something?"

Nighteye waved it off, "What's important is what the serpent did when it encountered Deku and Lemillion."

"Well, it was hostile... at first." Lemillion said, "But it stopped when I fended off its first attack against Deku."

Midoriya nodded, "Maybe it knew who I was? I don't think it meant to cause any harm!" Midoriya stared directly into Tokoyami's eyes, "It called me the Chariot. I-It only said that single word before it vanished."

Tokoyami's feathers bristled.

"The Chariot?" Miruko muttered.

"Principal Nezu, if I may add something? We of Class 1-A may have pieced something together about Joker." Tokoyami rose from his chair when Nezu nodded, Lemillion sat down, "When we first moved into the dorms, several classmates remembered that Joker or his summons called them by certain Arcanas."

Hawks and Miruko exchanged a look, with Miruko shrugging.

Nezu's ears perked up as he twirled his pen in his paws, "Can you list examples?"

"Yes." Todoroki raised his hand, "Bakugo Katsuki and I encountered Seth during the Summer Camp, and he blatantly stated that Bakugo is the Tower and I'm the Hanged Man."

Endeavor stared at his son with slightly widened eyes.

"Joker called Yaoyorozu Momo the Empress!" Uraraka said, "Oh, and Shinsou Hitoshi is the Moon!"

Eraserhead stiffened at that.

“So Midoriya is the ‘Chariot’?” Gang Orca asked. “What does this even mean?”

Nezu hummed, “Perhaps Joker assigns Arcanas to the people with whom he’s forged a strong bond with. This serpent calling Deku the Chariot, alongside these other instances, could confirm that. How fascinating!”

“But we don’t know why he supposedly assigns Arcanas.” Ryukyu gained a concerned expression, “Could it tie to how Joker’s powers work, I wonder?”

“I can add something to this.” Eraserhead droned, the room went still as they waited for him to speak, “Whenever I had an encounter with Joker, good or bad, there was always a strange feeling in my chest. I really noticed it after one particular encounter, where I met with him on a rooftop to...” Eraserhead cleared his throat, his voice straining, “We both made a truce towards each other. That warm feeling was the strongest it had ever been after that night. Has anyone else experienced this?”

“Oho!” Nezu beamed, “I’ve had that feeling when I met with him in the Blue Lotus!”

“Me too.” Midoriya put a hand over his heart.

“Well, now that you mention it...” Hawks whispered.

“Huh, and here I thought it was just heartburn!” Miruko cried.

“Tsukuyomi, you seem to be the expert on this stuff.” Hawks said with a glint of pride. “Could you guess which Arcanas we are? Or if everyone in this room even has one?”

“W-well, that... may be difficult.” Tokoyami clasped his hands on the table, “There is one Arcana I can think of that would fit one person in this room. This certain Arcana describes a person of authority and education, a teacher who is quite wise and... logical.”

Eraserhead sat straighter as his student looked him in the eye.

“Eraserhead, you would fit the Hierophant Arcana. As for the rest of you...” Tokoyami’s eyes swept through the room, “Aside from the examples we know already... I do not know you well enough to guess, and I don’t dare draw any conclusions without confirmation from Joker himself. I’m sorry.”

“It’s alright, Tsukuyomi.” Nighteye held up a hand, “Besides, as interesting as this revelation is, we are getting off topic.” When everyone was seated, he continued, “The next point is the quirk erasing bullets Fat Gum and his interns encountered last night.”

“Thankfully the bullet was only temporary.” Fat Gum nudged his intern, “Suneater here got his quirk back after a couple of hours. Right, Suneater?”

“Y-yeah...” Suneater hunched his shoulders and sank down into his chair.

“Yes, well, the results came back.” Nighteye’s scowl sent shivers through the room, “And the drug is composed mostly of human DNA.”

“Word has it that the Shie Hassaikai are the only group who distribute these quirk canceling bullets.” Eraserhead said after he collected himself, “Given the girl’s bandages and how Overhaul was eager to get her back...”

“You don’t think-” Miruko started.

“That child with Overhaul...” Ryukyu’s lip curled.

“Who’s to say they aren’t working on a more... permanent version?” Nighteye steepled his fingers as everyone looked at him in horror,

“So far, the picture painted for us is this; Overhaul and the Shie Hassaikai are creating quirk erasing bullets containing human DNA, perhaps the girl’s DNA. Then, after Deku and Lemillion, Overhaul takes Eri and encounters Joker. It’s clear that they had an altercation, judging by the disfiguration of the buildings iconic to Overhaul’s quirk, and the fact that one of Joker’s summons could be clearly identified. The next question is what happened to Joker and Eri?”

“I arrived right after the serpent disappeared.” Hawks said as he glanced between Midoriya and Lemillion, “I immediately sent my feathers into the surrounding sewers and alleyways. No dice.”

“No sign of Joker or Eri?” Gang Orca growled.

“Nope. Nothing of Overhaul either.” Hawks said. “Though with Overhaul’s quirk it’d be easy to redo the underground networks to cover his tracks.”

“The nearby bloodstain was inconclusive as well.” Nighteye sighed. “We’re at square one.”

“My, my, we really do have a conundrum here!” Nezu hopped on the table with his signature grin.

“Er, Nezu.” Sweat beaded on Fat Gum’s forehead, “You’re awfully... chipper. Shouldn’t you be more concerned about this poor little girl and Joker? The boy would fall under your jurisdiction, right?”

“I agree.” Nighteye quirked a brow at Nezu, “The crime scene leads me to believe that Joker may be injured or worse, perhaps he and Eri were captured by Overhaul. Need I remind you that human experimentation is only one of the Shie Hassaikai’s crimes?”

“So we’re talking about another Sapporo Lab incident?” Ryukyu asked, the folders crinkling under her grip.

Miruko crackled her knuckles with a malicious scowl.

“People often forget that Joker is part of a larger team.” Nezu’s tail flicked. “There are multiple ways this encounter could have gone: First, Joker awakened some sort of new power to combat Overhaul, hence the flying serpent we have no knowledge of, he may have rescued Eri and escaped. Second, the same scenario, but Joker fails to save Eri and Overhaul takes her back. And the third, and probably the most likely, Joker’s teammates interrupted the encounter and a fight ensued. Now, scenarios vary greatly from here-”

“I hate to interrupt, Nezu.” Gang Orca’s chair groaned as he shifted his massive weight, his crimson eyes blazing, “We can sit here and debate about this all we want, but I’ve had enough of conjecture and talking in circles. What are we going to do to ensure Joker and Eri’s safety? If they escaped, chances are they are being hunted as we speak. If they have been captured, then who knows what tortures they are being put through! Time is of the essence in either case!”

“Calm yourself, Gang Orca.” Best Jeanist put a hand on his comrade’s arm, “We’ll get to the bottom of this.”

Gang Orca snorted sharply.

Nighteye rose from his chair, “My Agency is dedicated to taking down crime syndicates like these.”

“But, Nighteye...” Hawks grimaced. “Are you sure you want to keep pushing yourself after...?”

Nighteye sighed as he understood. “Yes, as you read in the reports, we cannot use my quirk without serious consequences to myself. However, you are all competent heroes, and having everyone gather information will expedite the process, with or without it.” Nighteye glanced at his sidekicks and they began handing out their loads, “I will assign tasks to each hero here. Mark my words, the Shie Hassaikai’s days are numbered.”

A powerful wave of resolve hit Midoriya, and as he met his classmates’ brightened eyes, he knew they felt the same.

Midoriya wouldn't let Eri or Akira slip through his fingers ever again.

Eri opened her eyes. She slowly took in the wooden ceiling glowing with golden sunlight. Not sterile white walls. She wiggled her fingers and toes. Her sore body was wrapped in softness instead of scratchy blankets.

It wasn't just a dream?

She rolled over and froze, a gasp locked in her throat. Joker-san slept in a pile of his own blankets next to her. His whole face was visible without the mask-that-isn't-scary. Joker-san was pretty. Not as pretty as a princess, but maybe a prince? He didn't have any scars, his fluffy black hair all tussled over his face. One of his hands lay on the wooden floor between them.

Eri's vision blurred, both hands going to the top of her head.

Deku-san... Joker-san...

Their touch was so soft. It left a weird, warm feeling in her chest. Not the cold heart-stopping pain from Overhaul's touch. Eri held her breath as she slowly reached over to touch Joker-san's hand.

Warm .

Was she bad for wanting more warm ? Would Overhaul break in during the night and steal Joker-san's warmth away to teach her a lesson? Her tears burned and her chest was stuffed full of needle pains. She didn't want to be the reason that Joker-san lost his warmth!

Joker-san's smile and a soft-sad song replayed in her mind.

"I'm sorry if we scared you, but you're safe now. We won't let that man harm you anymore."

Safe?

But Overhaul would never let her be safe!

Her thoughts were drawn away when Joker-san twitched in his sleep. She wiped her eyes as Joker-san shifted, almost curling into himself. Did Joker-san have bad dreams too?

She looked at her hand on his, her other hand going to her head.

Safe?

Warm.

Would Joker-san feel safe and warm if she...?

Eri held her breath as she pulled her hand away from his, and gently put it on the soft-fluff on Joker-san's head. Black curls spilled from between her small fingers as she copied what Deku-san and Joker-san had done to her, to make her feel safe(?) and warm. How was his hair so soft and fluffy? She wondered if this was what a rabbit felt like.

Joker-san's eyes opened.

They weren't the deep-sunlight that chased away shadows. They were silver, but a different silver from Overhaul's needles, silver as in the stars she once saw before the white walls trapped her. Specks of deep-sunlight splintered the pretty starlight.

"Eri?" Joker-san frowned at her. Did she do something wrong?

Her heart iced over and wrenched her hand away from his hair, squeezing her eyes shut as she expected to be punished for touching him. There was a shift of blankets, and a safe(?) - warm hand rested on her head.

But there was something else, stirring deep within her. It happened in that alley, and again in that strange place with the soft-sad song. It flared at Joker-san's touch once more, chasing away the cold dread prickling in her chest. It was closer than the other times, she could almost touch it.

Eri opened her eyes as Joker-san ruffled her hair, a sad smile on his lips.

"Are you okay?" Joker-san asked.

"Y-yeah."

"Then why are you crying?"

Eri blinked. She touched her tear stained cheeks. "O-Oh..."

She had been so good at not crying, but her heart had been so full that she couldn't hold it all in. She blinked and scrubbed her eyes to make it stop. It wasn't working .

Why couldn't she stop?

Joker-san gave her another strange look when she tried holding back the sniffles. He looked sad again. She didn't like the sadness on Joker-san's face. He pulled his hand away and stood, the sunlight painting him like an angel in the clouds.

His footsteps were light as he walked over to a pile of bags in the corner. It was the same type of quiet walk she taught herself when Overhaul got angry at her for being too noisy once. He dug around in one of the bags and pulled out a black and red cloth, then came back and sat cross legged in front of her. He gently lifted her chin towards him and wiped away her tears with the cloth.

"Eri, I want you to promise me something." Joker-san said when she finally forced her tears to dry.

"What?" She said, her voice scratchy.

“Promise me you won’t be afraid to cry anymore. You remember what I said last night? Crying isn’t only when you’re happy or sad, sometimes we need to cry as a release.” He smiled when she didn’t understand. “You feel better after crying, right?”

“I guess...” She bit her lip as her hands balled on the front of her dirty dress, “I... won’t get in trouble for crying?”

Joker-san’s face went through many tiny changes, as fast as when she flipped through the pages of her picture books before they were taken away, her last punishment for running away.

“You won’t get in trouble. You can cry whenever you want around me or the others, and we won’t get mad. Or if you need something - anything, you let us know.” Joker-san held out his pinkie, “It’ll be a promise between all of us, alright?”

“O-okay.” Eri blinked at Joker-san’s pinky.

Eri relaxed her balled hands as Joker-san took them, entwining one of her pinkies in his.

“This is a pinky promise. We can’t break this promise, okay?”

“O-okay. I-I promise.”

Joker-san nodded and pulled his pinky away.

She thought she was done crying. But like a magic spell, the dam over her heart cracked with such force that it sent a shiver down her spine. That warm-safe feeling finally burst through like a blazing phoenix, and at that moment she felt connected to Joker-san in a way she never felt connected to anyone else before.

Joker-san froze, his eyes flooding with sunlight.

But she couldn’t see him when the tears came in an overwhelming flood, her whole body trembling. All of the pain, all of the hurt buried deep within her heart, broke free when her new connection with Joker-san finally shattered the dam. Eri couldn't hold it back anymore.

She burst into unrestrained cries.

Joker-san held his arms open, and she crashed into him and buried her face in his chest. He held her long after her tears dried and she went silent, his calm heartbeat lulling her back to sleep.

Ren trailed down the stairs without a sound. He stopped at the landing, listening to the silence in the hallway.

"Damn it all." He muttered as his face fell in his hands.

"It's a lot worse than we thought." Satanael said. "Perhaps the Arcana fully forming allowed her to release some of her pain."

"Just what did that monster do to her?" Ishtar snarled, "If I ever see that man again-"

"Relinquish your anger, Ishtar." Baal's voice soothed them like gentle rainfall, "Anger by itself will not solve this."

"I am a goddess of love and war, and this child has been hurt so deeply that she passed out from crying!"

Fafnir cackled and snapped his metallic jaws, his tail cracking like a whip. Pixie and Yatagarasu nimbly dodged around the dragon as he almost struck them without hesitation.

"Enough." Gabriel's wings softly rustled, "Overhaul's retribution has to be put on hold, but you can count on my sword if that time comes."

"What do you wish to do, Trickster?" Satanael asked.

"We'll let Eri sleep for now." Ren said as he tried to stem the burning anger thundering in his chest. His shirt was still damp from Eri's tears. "Let's find the others."

Byakko's ears twitched, "Perhaps they are in the front of this establishment?"

"Yes, we would like to see where you have lived since we parted." Satanael added.

Ren's hands fell to his side and he walked into the empty kitchen. Familiar voices echoed in from the other side of the door leading to the front. It was day time, so the bar would be closed. He steeled himself and went through it.

It opened up into a rustic style American bar, the walls lined with booths and a large number of antique photos and knickknacks. Small round tables were scattered between the booths and the full bar. Glass lights hung down from the ceiling by chains, lighting up each table in a low spotlight. He expected it to smell like alcohol or cigarettes, instead a nice, lemony scent graced his nose. Maybe somebody just finished cleaning?

"Ren!" Shuichi waved at him from the bar, the lighting made the wall of glass bottles behind him shine like jewels, "You're awake!"

"I was about to check up on you." Morgana said as he sat on the bar top. "Did you sleep well?"

Kaito, Manami, and Tobita were seated along the bar, too.

"Yeah, I suppose." He sat down on the stool next to Kaito. They were more comfortable than they looked, for being all leather and wood. "What time is it?"

"Just after eleven." Kaito said as he studied Ren, "We didn't want to disturb you or Eri, so we came down here."

"How is she?" Morgana asked, staring at the wet spot on Ren's shirt in concern.

“She’s...” Ren sighed and propped his elbow on the wooden bar, holding his chin in the palm of his hand. “I woke up right after her. She was never allowed to cry before, so when I reassured her she just... lost it. It might be the first time she cried in a long time. She fell back asleep right after.”

“That poor girl.” Tobita said as his eyes softened.

“She must’ve been so scared.” Manami whispered.

“I can’t even imagine what must be under those bandages.” Morgana shook his head. “... Or how she got them.”

“I’ll ask her if I can look at her injuries later.” Ren frowned, “She trusts me so far, but we can’t move too fast with her.”

“Smart.” Kaito said with a firm nod. “It’ll take some time for her to acclimate to the rest of us, not to mention she’ll need that rock when we take her to U.A. with us.”

“Right...” Ren looked around with an arched brow. “Where’s Atsuhiro and Lady Stubbs? Magne?”

“Atsuhiro is getting stuff for Eri!” Shuichi stated. “Lady Stubbs is watching the back door.”

“I gave him a list of what Eri needs for the foreseeable future. Clothes, drawing supplies, brushes, her own toiletries, stuff like that.” Kaito said with a huff, “He was more than happy to go shopping again.”

“As long as he doesn’t buy another suspicious piece of land.” Manami rolled her eyes, “Once was enough.”

“Magne comes in an hour or so before the bar opens.” Shuichi said.

Morgana cleared his throat and stared at Manami.

“Oh, right.” Manami retrieved something from her pocket, then leaned over the bar and handed a phone to Ren. “I’m sorry. I tried to fix it while you were sleeping, but...”

Ren’s mouth went dry as he took his phone. It seemed... heavier than before. He stared back at his reflection in the dark screen, the golden flecks in his eyes intensifying with a wave of emotions. Their one tie to home, to their family, was gone. He had memorized the Phantom Thief chatroom, but not being able to scroll back through it, to see his teammates’ final messages anymore...

He grit his teeth as a lump formed in his throat.

He shoved it in his pocket. It hung there, heavy as a boulder. The others’ worried glances prickled at his skin, and Satanael and the others sent waves of soothing comfort. It helped him keep calm.

“Thanks for trying.” He said, forcing his voice to stay even, “What’s the plan for today?”

“That’s what we were waiting on you for.” Morgana locked eyes with Ren, “You’re our Leader after all.”

Ren frowned, “What about Atsuhiro?”

“He’ll be back soon!” Manami said.

“I suggest we make lunch while we wait for him.” Tobita stood up and gestured towards the kitchen. “Besides, I’m sure everyone is famished. What do you think Eri would like?”

“Try something simple until we know what she likes.” Kaito nodded, “Maybe apple slices or toast.”

“Apples, huh?” Ren smiled softly, “I have an idea that could cheer her up.”

“I’ll never understand how you turned an apple into a swan.” Manami said as they headed down the hall.

“You can learn anything on the internet, it just takes a bit of practice and finesse.” Ren said as he held a plate of apples. The seeds were the eyes, and the wings were fanned out from carefully carved slices. Two small cups joined the apple swans, one with peanut butter and the other with caramel sauce, “It was a slow day at Leblanc once, and I was bored.”

Morgana chuckled from Ren’s shoulder, “You sliced two of your fingers the first time, remember? You tried to hide it from Boss, but he noticed and bandaged them for you.”

“Morgana.” Ren said, scandalized. “How could you share my secrets like that?”

“Apparently quite easily.” Morgana deadpanned.

“I wonder if I could cut apples into swans?” Kaito asked as he clutched his chin, “I wouldn’t be anywhere near a stove and- why are you all looking at me like that?”

“It’s best not to chance it.” Manami said.

Ren smirked, “With your luck, the apples would take revenge on you.”

“They’d probably come to life and start a fire themselves.” Morgana said, grinning.

Kaito crossed his arms and scowled, “Ha ha, very funny.”

“Shuichi and Tobita are still making the rest of our food...” They all stopped by the stairs, and Manami looked at Ren with uncertainty, “Should we wait down here or go with you?”

“Eri will have to get used to everyone.” Kaito said softly, “We don’t want her to regress by moving too fast, but at the same time we shouldn't baby her too much."

Ren nodded, "She'll be fine as long as we don't make any sudden movements."

Ren went up first. He ducked under the beam and poked his head into the attic. Eri was awake, rubbing her puffy eyes as the blanket swam around her. The handkerchief he used earlier was on her pillows. She jumped when the stairs creaked, but relaxed when she saw Ren.

"We brought you something to eat." Ren said as he stepped fully into the attic, "And there are some people who would like to meet you. Are you up for it?"

She pursed her lips, and nodded.

Manami and Kaito followed Ren and they sat around on the futons. Ren put the plate of apple swans in front of Eri, who blinked down at them. Ren smiled as he grabbed the small slice at the tip of one of the wings, dipping it in the caramel sauce and popping it in his mouth. Eri watched his every move.

She took the tip of the other wing and dipped in the sauce, glancing between Ren and the bit of fruit, before copying him. Immediately, her eyes brightened in wonder.

"Have you ever had apples before, Eri?" Manami asked.

Eri shook her head as she reached for another slice and dipped it in peanut butter, much to the same result.

There was something Ren noticed when Kaito and Manami introduced themselves and the swans slowly disappeared off the plate: Eri's expressions. They were muted for a child her age. He wasn't surprised, given her circumstances, but she had not smiled. Not once. She had broken down in his arms after the Arcana formed. Aside from that, her emotions were concentrated within the creases around her eyes and forehead as soft as a butterfly's kiss. The rest of her face was like a porcelain mask.

He didn't know what to make of it.

"You finished those fast!" Morgana chirped.

Eri gawked at Morgana, "Who are you?"

"What?" Morgana hopped down from Ren's shoulder and puffed his chest. "Oh, I suppose you don't know this form! Watch this, Eri-chan!" Morgana stood on his hind legs, nearly losing his balance, "Morganaaaaaa trasnfoooooorm!"

A lick of blue flame transformed the not-cat into his Metaverse form.

"Oh, I remember now." Eri said as she leaned forward and pet him.

"Ack! You're getting apple juice and caramel on-" Mona blinked when Eri froze, "Er... never mind! Isn't my fur so soft!?"

Eri nodded and continued to pet him. She even pinched his cheeks, and Ren was impressed when Mona didn't protest, though Mona gave him a subtle glare when he and the others chuckled.

"Are you still hungry, Eri?" Ren asked, "We can get you something else."

Eri pulled her sticky hands away from Mona's ears, "More apples?"

"You can eat more than apples." Manami said, smiling. "There are a whole bunch of tasty fruits you can try!"

"You might like oranges or pears." Kaito raised a brow at Ren, "Could you cut other fruits into different animals, Ren?"

"I could try making them into flowers?" Ren shrugged, "I'm sure we could come up with something."

“Ren?” Eri stared at him, “I thought your name was Joker-san.”

Ren chuckled. “You can call me Joker whenever I have my costume on, but my real name is Ren. Amamiya Ren.”

“Ren.” Eri said, testing the name, “Ren . I got it.”

A sudden thump and hastily muttered curses came from downstairs. Mysterious yowls and growling noises too.

“Lady Stubbs, it’s just me! You know, Mr. Compress! Sako Atsuhiro!! You saw me leave like this earlier! Down girl!!”

“Atsuhiro’s back.” Kaito stated dryly.

Mona snickered as he turned back into his normal cat form. Eri watched him in subtle amazement, then turned her eyes to the stairs as the disguised man in question came up, rubbing his head. Lady Stubbs clung to his jacket sleeve like a starving piranha, still yowling.

It didn’t look like Atsuhiro. He wore make-up to change the general shape of his face, a dark wig that looked natural, and contacts to change his eye color to a startling emerald green.

“How is it that every time that cursed beam-” Atsuhiro stopped when he saw them, his irritation melting with a grin as he waved a heavy bag towards them. He completely ignored the attack cat latched on his arm, “Oh, you’re up! Good. I got everything the princess needed. Clothes, shampoo, a bunch of drawing supplies -”

He put the bag on the ground with a solid thunk .

Kaito blinked at it, “How much did you get?”

“Er... I didn’t know how much she needed! So I may have gotten a little more than necessary.” Atsuhiro shrugged, Lady Stubbs’ growls kicked up in volume as he went to his bags and stored the wig away, “Some nice ladies figured out what I was trying to do, and asked what my daughter liked so they could point out some suggestions!

But I couldn't answer that and we spent half an hour talking about unicorns and cats -"

"Wait, they asked you what your daughter liked?" Kaito asked as a hint of a smirk appeared. "And you didn't specify otherwise?"

"What else was I supposed to say without drawing suspicion?" The make-up didn't hide the cherry redness sprouting on Atsuhiro's face, and he jabbed a finger at their growing smirks, "Hush, all of you! I got the princess what she needed, so I don't need lip from you."

Atsuhiro turned and dug out a contact case and supplies for removing make-up.

"Hey, we didn't say anything." Morgana said as humor glimmered in his eyes.

"... Princess?" Eri's eyes widened, through the rest of her face was set in stone, "You think I'm... a princess?"

"Of course!" Atsuhiro's expression softened as he looked at Eri, carefully gauging her bandages. He put a hand over his heart and did a showman's bow, "You are the princess, and we're your valiant knights! As your loyal knight, princess, I come bearing gifts! Why don't you look in that bag and choose something to wear? I'm afraid your current dress is too dirty for such a beautiful princess."

Eri's eyes turned to liquid jewels as she stared at Atsuhiro, her cheeks turning red.

"Why don't we get you cleaned up first?" Ren asked as he and Eri stood up, "You still have apple juice on you."

"Oh." Eri looked down at her sticky hands, "Okay."

Ren held out his hand. She stared at it for a moment before grabbing it, the smallness of her hand squeezed Ren's heart. Kaito went with them, lifting the heavy bag on his shoulder. Morgana and Manami's teasing voices followed them down the stairs, and Ren bit back laughter at Atsuhiro's snarky tone. Lady Stubbs still didn't let go, either.

Eri studied her surroundings as they made it down the stairs and into the bathroom. With her permission, Ren set her on the counter and grabbed a washcloth for her to clean her face and hands.

He exchanged a knowing glance with Kaito as she finished.

"Eri." Ren's heart sank when she stiffened and looked at him strangely. Maybe his sudden shift in tone scared her. He put on a soft smile. "I'm going to ask you something, and you can say no if you're not comfortable."

"What?" She whispered, specks of fear shining in her eyes.

Ren looked at her bandages, "Could we have a look at what's underneath your bandages?"

"You'll need to take a bath, too." Kaito added, not unkindly, "It's important that you stay clean... especially if you're injured."

Eri blinked. She looked down at her arms, then robotically held them out towards Ren, her expression scarily blank. He worked as gently as he could, and told her which ones he would take off next. It wasn't long before the bandages fell in long streams to the floor, revealing her marred skin.

Ren wasn't the only one to feel waves of rage and nausea as they stared at the patchwork of scars on her arms and legs. These weren't normal scars. Not old scars from fighting or other ghastly injuries, at least. No, these were meticulous cuts. Medical, in a way.

"Short, thin scars, repeating in rows." Satanael murmured.

"Injuries made with a blade of some sort." Gabriel said as she stared at the weapon in her hand.

"A scalpel, then?" Ren asked.

"... Most likely." Yatagarasu murmured.

"Did that man do this to you?" Kaito asked, snapping Ren out of his staring.

Eri's gaze went to the floor as tears laced her eyes, but she nodded.

Ren had another question on his tongue, but Ishtar stopped him.

"Asking why may be too painful at the moment. Let's move her focus to the bath, shall we?" Ishtar chuckled at his hesitation, "I can do it."

"Eri, do you want to meet one of my other friends?" Ren asked.
"She's really nice, and she likes you a lot. You two might have something in common, too."

Eri blinked up at him.

Strange. Now that he was looking, her horn was bigger than last night. He pushed the thought aside as she nodded, ignoring Kaito's odd look. Ren stepped aside and allowed Ishtar to manifest.

Eri gasped as she stared at Ishtar's long, twisting horns.

"I am Ishtar." The Persona said with a serene smile, "It's nice to meet you, Eri."

"N-nice to meet you too." Eri twisted her fingers together, "You're... like me?"

Ishtar patted Eri's head, "I am."

Eri's expression held fear as her eyes went to the ground. "You're cursed too...?"

Shock rippled through Ren and Kaito.

“Cursed?” Ishtar kept calm, minutely tilting her head, her long hair spilling to one side, “What do you mean by that, my dear?”

Eri's mouth clamped shut. The curtains of her hair shielded her expression from Ren and Kaito, her hands gripping her scarred arms with white knuckles. Ren opened his mouth, but Ishtar looked at him and shook her head.

“My child, please look at me.” Ishtar gently grabbed Eri's hands. The girl's arms were marked with small red welts, Ishtar massaged them with her thumbs as Eri's eyes locked onto Ishtar's. “Whoever said you were cursed is dreadfully wrong. You are a beautiful girl, Eri, and its been a blessing for Ren and the others to have you.”

“... A blessing?” Eri stared at her scars, eyes watering, “But...”

Ishtar tilted the girls chin back up to her, then cupped Eri's cheek, “Your scars are proof that you survived great ordeals, but they also bring you pain. If you wish, I can use my powers to heal them.”

Eri's eyes flooded with unshed tears, “I-I.... I...”

“You don't need to decide right now.” Ishtar wrapped the girl in her arms, and Eri wrapped her little arms around Ishtar's neck. Ishtar turned to the stupefied men. “I'll handle this. I will bathe her once she's feeling better. Judging by the smell coming from the kitchen, your comrades have finished your meal. The both of you must eat.”

Ren shuffled on his feet, hesitant. He sighed when Ishtar sent a powerful surge of comfort and reassurance. Ren grabbed the bag and slid it further into the bathroom.

“We have some planning to do.” Ren said softly, “Let's go, Kaito.”

Ishtar waved them away with one arm and closed the bathroom door.

“That was...” Ren facepalmed, “I don't even have the words for it.”

“What little girl thinks they’re ‘cursed’?” Kaito scowled. They looked at the bathroom door when they heard running water, “Are you sure Ishtar’s the right one for this?”

“Tell him that if he questions me again I’ll have Pixie mix itching powder in his shampoo.” Ishtar said.

Pixie cackled and rubbed her hands together.

Ren nodded, “Trust me, she knows what she’s doing.”

A few minutes later, the rest of the team situated themselves upstairs with bowls of food being passed around. At least Lady Stubbs let Atsuhiro go now that he looked like himself, though she was still giving him the stink eye.

“We might as well talk about the elephant in the room.” Kaito stated.

Shuichi sputtered, nearly choking on his miso soup, “Already!? Can’t we eat first!?”

“No.” Ren didn’t touch his food yet, “It’s better for us to talk where Eri can’t hear.”

Atsuhiro blinked at Ren, “About that. I’ve learned some interesting things while I was in town.”

“Like what?” Morgana asked.

“We’re stuck between a rock and a hard place.” Atsuhiro said as he poured himself a cup of tea, “There’s been rumors of multiple heroes in town, not just Hawks. You could probably guess which ones.”

“Ryukyu, Gang Orca, Best Jeanist, and the former Ingenium?” Ren said.

“You got it to a T. I’ve seen Ingenium’s sidekicks roaming the town with local heroes. There’s a chance that Endeavor is here, as well.” Atsuhiro chuckled, but his smile faded into a deep frown, “With rumors of your 'summon' being spotted in town, those heroes flocked here, probably to search for you .”

Ren flinched, but Atsuhiro continued.

“On the other side of the coin is the Shie Hassaikai. We messed with their leader and took something precious from them; The Princess. Rumors have been going around that there’s been a significant uptick in Yakuza activity, with several cited incidents between the heroes and Yakuza. The freshest conflict was half an hour ago.”

Ren scowled, “Eri let me look under her bandages. Her arms and legs are covered in scars, injuries most likely caused by a scalpel. If the Shie Hassaikai had her against her will, we can guess what for.”

“And she called herself cursed.” Kaito glared into his untouched teacup, “As if it wasn’t enough to physically torture her, they’ve convinced her that she’s nothing but a curse.”

Everyone blanched.

“So, if she’s some sort of important experiment...” Shuichi ground through clenched teeth. I was a wonder his bowl didn’t shatter in his grip.

“They’re searching high and low for her.” Atsuhiro said, “A group of powerful heroes possibly looking for us, while another power hungry group is looking for their lost princess. We have many targets on our backs.”

“I don’t think Hawks and the other heroes want to hurt us. Maybe what happened with Overhaul and Samael just scared them.” Ren said, “Given the circumstances... maybe we should make ourselves known to them, see if they can offer any help.”

“That is what we’re ultimately going for,” Tobita stared down into his bowl, brows tense, “But I find myself hesitant.”

“That’s why we’re coming up with a plan.” Morgana said.

“Even the best laid plans don’t survive contact with the enemy. I’m agreeing to go to U.A. to get you two home, but I still don’t trust heroes as fast as I can trap them in a marble and dump them in a sewer.” Atsuhiro sighed, “What are your thoughts, Ren?”

They all stared at him. He sat up straighter, face set with determination.

“First, we’ll gather as much information about the situation as we can. Manami, can you cover that front?”

“Yep!” She nodded happily, “Leave that to me!”

“Right.” Ren’s eyes went to the pile of bags in the corner, “Next, I want to get a final count on our remaining items and gear. After that-”

“If I may?” Tobita interrupted.

“What’s up?” Ren asked.

“It’s my quirk. I understand we’ll be on a tight schedule, but could I practice with it more at the warehouse, just enough to control it properly? I’d rather not show such a weakness around the heroes.”

“I mean, he has a point.” Morgana said.

“But with all the heroes and the Shie Hassaikai, it might be dangerous.” Manami said.

“Indeed.” Atsuhiro bore a thoughtful frown, “We could get out that first night because the incident just happened, but by now all sides have had time to plan their counter attacks. Even with my abilities, it may be too dangerous for us to go out so frequently with this many eyes searching for us.”

Morgana sighed, “It won’t hurt to give him more practice before we’re behind U.A.’s walls. The less information they have on you guys, the better.”

Tobita turned towards Ren, his eyes simmering, “I won’t be the weak point on our team.”

“Tobita, you’re not a weak point.” Ren sighed as he scratched the back of his head, “But... I understand where you’re coming from. There’s ample space in the Velvet Room. I don’t think they’d mind.”

“Are... you sure?” Shuichi’s scales seemed to lose their brightness, “I won’t lie, Elizabeth absolutely terrifies me. The others are scary too!”

“The Velvet Room’s purpose is to help me on my journey,” Ren said, “It won’t be hard to convince them to help us get stronger before we go to U.A. It’d be a good time to update them with our plans, too.”

Atsuhiro glanced at Tobita, “I can help you like we did in the warehouse.”

The other man smiled, his eyes crinkling. “It would be appreciated.”

“Now that that’s sorted, there’s one other thing.” Ren stated.

“What is it?” Morgana asked as he studied his partner.

“It’s my Personas. I have 4 open slots but no way to fill them.” Ren said, “Then I fused... a new one, he wasn’t like anything we had back home, Morgana.”

“Who is it?” Morgana asked, his eyes wide.

“Fafnir.”

“A dragon from Norse mythology?” Kaito asked as his eyebrows shot up.

Fafnir purred at Kaito’s words. Ren held back a snort. Both Fafnir and Kaito bore the Hermit Arcana. It’s no wonder the metal dragon liked him so much.

“That’s the one.” Ren said. “He’s a bit chaotic, but he has powerful resistances and spells. The other ones I fused are Baal and Gabriel.”

Shuichi whistled. “Those sound pretty powerful!”

“And why can’t you fill your remaining slots?” Atsuhiko asked.

“Back home, I’d pay money to get the Personas I saved in the Compendium.” Ren crossed his arms, “But the more powerful they are, the more expensive they’ll be.”

Atsuhiko beamed, “If that’s the case, I can pay for them!”

“Wha-” Morgana started.

“It could be a lot of money!” Shuichi yelled.

“Oh please.” Atsuhiko waved his hand. He stared at Ren with a frown, “We’re preparing to turn ourselves over to U.A. to get you and Morgana get back home. Our Leader needs to be at his full strength to combat whatever chaos lingers on the horizon, whether the threats come from another world or this one.”

“... Are you sure?” Ren’s eyes went wide, “Kohryu is 120,000 yen by himself, not to mention how expensive it will be to fill the other slots... or what it could cost for other fusions I do in the future.”

Atsuhiko was quiet for a moment. The others grew worried the longer Atsuhiko seemed to be lost in thought. With a long sigh, he studied everyone with an intensity that wasn’t there moments ago.

“Yes, I will help pay for them. I’ve said this before and I’ll say it as many times as it takes,” Atsuhiko said, his voice heavy, “I owe you my life, Ren. You are the first ones I’ve considered real family in a very long time, so let me repay you before it’s too late.”

Ren stared into Atsuhiro's eyes. There was a resoluteness set in his expression that wouldn't take no for an answer. Ren felt that in himself often enough.

"Alright, if that's what you want to do." Ren nodded, "I'll think about the other Personas and let you know the final price."

The mood suddenly plummeted after a moment of silence.

"I still can't believe we'll be saying goodbye." Tobita said, grimacing into his cold teacup. "It's... difficult to fathom, after everything we've been through together. Is it cruel to wish you'd stay?"

Shuichi's eyes watered and he wiped them harshly. Lady Stubbs flopped onto Shuichi's lap, torn ears going flat on her head.

Kaito sulked, but he glanced between Ren and Morgana with understanding.

"Guys," Ren's smile turned shaky, "We're still here, and we need to get to U.A. before we even get to that point, and who knows what else we'll have to do there. Let's not say goodbye until then, okay?"

Morgana puffed out his chest, "Yeah! You better appreciate us before its too late!"

Manami button mashed Morgana's head with tears in her eyes. Nobody stopped her as Morgana yowled.

"You're right." Atsuhiro brightened, "Lets make the most of it while we can. Besides, we still have the Princess to look after! Let's not make her sad, alright?"

"He has a point." Morgana said as he recovered, the fur on his head sticking up in places. Manami looked proud of herself. "But what will you guys do after? Are you sticking with U.A.?"

"Absolutely not." Atsuhiro glowered into his tea as if it personally insulted him, "I'll take my leave after we get you two home. Covertly, of course.”

“Yeah...” Shuichi scratched the back of his head, “I-I’m honestly not too fond of heroes myself. Don’t get me wrong, I’ll still go and help you guys get home no matter what! Right, Stubbs!?”

“Merp!!”

Manami and Tobita exchanged long glances, Manami spoke first, “Well, I still have that virus I started ages ago. I could continue working on it, and then launch it when Ren and Morgana go home to make our escape?”

“Being in U.A. itself may help in that regard.” Tobita said with a small smile. “If we could study their security system so she can make her virus more effective...”

Atsuhiro smirked, “Oh, I do like that plan. A final parting gift!”

“Same!” Shuichi added. “But don’t you think they’ll search us when we get there?”

“Oh,” Manami frowned, “Maybe.”

“We could hide it in one of our costumes.” Ren said as he looked at Morgana, “Our equipped weapons and items disappear with our Metaverse gear. I’m sure it’ll be no different for a USB drive.”

“Oh! That’s smart!” Manami beamed, “I’ll work on it right away!”

“What about you, Kaito?” Morgana asked.

“I... don’t know. I’m not like you guys. I can’t run across rooftops at night, let alone be anything like a Phantom Thief.” Kaito drummed his fingers on his silvery band, “The Raven’s Nest would be too lonely without all of you. Right now, I’m more concerned about Eri. If we gain her trust and then abandon her so suddenly... it may do more damage in the long run. We’ll have to explain the truth to her eventually.”

“Are you going to stay with her at U.A.?” Ren asked.

“Maybe, I just want her to be safe.” Kaito crossed his arms, his suppressant peeking out from his sleeve. “I’ll... think about it.”

Ren looked over the rest of the team, “Once we’re ready, we should contact Taneo to let Nezu know. I wouldn’t want to startle them by showing up suddenly. But if something happens and worse comes to worst, we’ll contact the heroes directly.”

Manami nodded, “Taneo did post another blog with a bird picture. He seemed... a bit more desperate this time.”

“That’s probably my fault for scaring him.” Ren ran a hand down his face, “For now, he can wait while we prepare for our departure to U.A. Does everyone agree?”

“I believe we have all bases covered.” Atsuhiro nodded.

Manami stood up, eyes blazing, “I’ll get started right away!”

“My dear, you barely touched your food.” Tobita said, frowning. “It’s gone cold.”

“I’ll eat later!” She patted Tobita on the shoulder, “The sooner we get started the better!”

As she rushed to get her laptop, Shuichi gained a troubled expression, “Er, we should probably let Magne know about all this. I’d hate to disappear on her without telling her ahead of time.”

“Leave that to me.” Atsuhiro said with a tired sigh, “I’ll break it to her tonight. We knew this wasn’t a permanent living situation anyway.”

“Trickster, I’ve finished Eri’s bath and have dressed her. She looks quite adorable if I do say so myself.” Ishtar said, “Is it alright to come up?”

Ren looked towards the stairs, “Yes, we just finished.”

Ishtar floated up the stairs with an air of grace. Eri was secured on her hip, adorned in a long sleeved white and red dress similar to the color of the apples she ate earlier. Ishtar smiled as she set Eri down, the girl glancing at them before staring at the floor, her fingers fidgeting with her sleeves.

“You look very pretty in that dress.” Ren said.

“Thank you...” Eri whispered.

Ren put a hand to her damp hair, “Would you like your hair done?”

“My hair?”

“Yeah!” Ren faced her fully, grinning from ear to ear, “We could put it in a braid, or a bun. Or we could even-”

He was silenced by a loud growling noise. Eri put her hands on her stomach, her stoic face turning red.

“Or we could get her more food.” Kaito said. “A growing girl needs more than apple slices.”

“And the Princess looks a bit underweight.” Atsuhiro added.

“We’ll have to make something fresh.” Tobita glanced around the scattered dishes, “I don’t think she should have cold left overs.”

“I could go for seconds!” Shuichi said.

Ren snapped his fingers, “How about a fresh batch of curry? It’s been a while since I made any.”

Eri blinked at him, “What’s.... curry?”

Ren’s heart stopped.

“Hoo boy...” Satanael whispered sarcastically.

The others stared at Ren as he took a deep breath.

“It is the most delicious food you’ll ever taste.” Ren stated with a serious face. Eri copied him the best she could with her porcelain-like expressions, “There are so many different ways to make it, and we can even use apples! Would you like to help make it?”

Eri bit her lip. She stared between Ishtar and Ren, and nodded. Eri took his hand and they trailed downstairs together with Ishtar floating at their heels.

Atsuhiro chuckled, “If that girl isn’t hooked on curry by the end of the day, I’ll eat my hat.”

“Do you even have a hat to eat?” Morgana stated with a grin.

“How dare you. I have another spare... somewhere.” Atsuhiro playfully rolled his eyes, “Rubbing salt in the wound of my lost mask and hat! Have you no shame, Morgana?”

“Nope. Absolutely none.”

“You still have your Arsene mask!” Shuichi said as he waved a hand, “The other one was blank, wasn’t it?”

“You might have a point, but still!” Atsuhiro pouted. “Ren would understand the value of every mask, now wouldn’t he?”

“Boys...” Manami huffed affectionately.

It wasn’t much longer before the familiar aroma of curry wafted into the attic.

“I never thought such a little person could eat so much curry...” Morgana said as Ren tucked a dozing Eri in her futon.

“She practically put herself in a food coma.” Atsuhiro smiled softly, “Poor thing.”

Tobita piled the mountain of dishes together, "I doubt Overhaul and his cohorts fed her properly."

Ren frowned when he patted Eri's head, her horn poking out of the top of her forehead, "She won't have to worry about that anymore." He said as he stood up, "At least she had fun helping me make it."

Morgana squinted at Ren, "I'm sure she enjoyed you sneaking the apple pieces to her too."

"Even a little girl is a better cook than me." Kaito crossed his arms.

"Oh, don't be sour!" Atsuhiro teased, "Hey, maybe she could teach you to cook when she's old enough!"

"No way." Ren, Morgana, Tobita, and Manami stated in unison.

"Definitely too dangerous for Eri." Ren said with a nod.

"Poking more fun at my misfortunes, are we?" Kaito shook his head, though he couldn't hide the slight smile on his face.

Ren wanted to tease him some more, when a blue flash came into the attic. They all stared as the Velvet Room door manifested in the corner, and Lavenza walked out.

"Lavenza? Is something wrong?" Ren asked as he stopped in front of her.

"No, nothing is wrong, Trickster." She smiled at him, "Actually, there's a new function in the Velvet Room that my siblings and I set up. We wanted to show you as soon as it was finished."

"A new function?"

"Yes." Her smile widened, crinkling her eyes, "A training room, of sorts. I discussed what happened with everyone after you mastered Kohryu's bond, and we decided that it would be safer for you to have a training room readily available... away from any possible dangers of this new world.”

“Oh, that’s perfect!” Atsuhiro shot to his feet, “We were actually discussing something like this earlier.”

“Can the others use it too?” Ren asked as the others looked at him with hopeful expressions, “It would really help all of us.”

“Of course.” She turned towards the open door, “If you would all follow me.”

She vanished into the Velvet Room.

Ren gave Kaito a look.

“I’ll take care of Eri,” Kaito stated as a smirk grew on his lips, “Don’t get your butts kicked too hard.”

“They won’t be too difficult on us, right?” Tobita asked.

“Oh, you don’t know the half of it.” Ren chuckled as he stepped into the Velvet Room, his teammates following.

Lavenza waited at the bottom of the stairs, and she led them into a new hallway set into the outer ring of cells leading to the new room. The hairs on the back of Ren’s neck stood on end when he and his teammates stepped through a translucent wall of velvety blue mist, finding themselves within a huge circular arena.

This place didn’t feel like the rest of the Velvet Room, and the Velvet Song didn’t follow them. Rather the calm tune echoed through the room, having to pass through the veil as if they were underwater. It was far more haunting than Ren liked.

Thick iron bars lined the walls of the arena, with the Velvet Room logo stamped into the middle of the floor. The air tasted of bloodlust that made Ren’s teeth itch. His Personas buzzed when they saw the other Attendants standing in front of a massive guillotine.

Lavenza nodded to Margaret, who stepped forward first.

“Welcome.” Margaret politely bowed, “As Lavenza explained, we created this room to test you in battle. With proper dedication and training, it should help you expand your powers.”

“Is that why this place feel different from the rest of the Velvet Room?” Ren asked with a raised brow.

“Yep.” Elizabeth’s smirk sent shivers down his teammates’ spines, “We messed with the new rules to create this new space. You better appreciate our hard work. I demand more of those cookies, Theodore ate the last of them.”

Theodore cleared his throat, “What Elizabeth means is that this room was created with how your powers work in this world. This space borders the edge of reality in a way the rest of the Velvet Room doesn’t.”

“So unlike the heart of the Velvet Room,” Lavenza said, “You and your Personas will be as limited as they are in the real world. You cannot summon them all at once in reality, correct?”

“No.” Ren frowned, “They were all able to come out in Kamino, but it was difficult to keep a few Personas out when we encountered Overhaul.”

“You had the power of the masses actively behind you in Kamino.” Morgana said as he stared at his partner with unease. “But you don’t have that anymore.”

“It’s any wonder that you can summon more than one at once.” Theodore said as his expression turned troubled, “The only ones able to do that before were-”

Elizabeth gently punched him on the shoulder, her eyes gleaming dangerously, “Come back here whenever you’re ready to train with us. Don’t expect us to go easy on you.”

“Elizabeth is correct.” Margaret said with a disarmingly soft smile, “The heat of an intense battle will temper your powers better than if we held back. You’d best be prepared to the best of your ability.”

“We take it you need time before the first battle, Trickster?” Lavenza asked.

Ren nodded, “We’ll come back soon, I promise.”

Lavenza curtsied, “Of course. We look forward to your return.”

Ren led the team out of the bone-chilling arena and back into the heart of the Velvet Room, the song fully gracing their ears once more. Ren nodded towards Igor once they reached the stairs, the man’s eerie smile widening in turn.

“Uh... we’re totally going to get our asses handed to us, aren’t we?” Shuichi asked when they trekked up the stairs.

“Absolutely.” Ren deadpanned as he stepped out of the Velvet Room.

“It’s too bad we can’t do curry when the bar is open.” Ren prepared some cast iron pans for frying, “Magne’s bar would explode in popularity.”

Tobita chuckled, “Perhaps you can make curry at U.A. I’m sure the faculty and students alike would love it. For now we’ll just have to serve Magne’s patrons plainer dishes.”

“I guess. The 1-A kids loved the curry and brownies from the Blue Lotus.” Ren’s smile fell, “I really miss them. I’d like to see Risumi and Ayumu one more time before... you know. Do you think they’ll come visit?”

“Of course they will.” Tobita said as he opened the fridge and dug out ingredients, “I wouldn’t be surprised if they were first in line at U.A.’s door. I doubt even Nezu could keep them away.”

“Yeah...” The creak of wood drew Ren’s gaze to Kaito, who had entered from the hall. “Is everything okay?”

“It’s Eri.” Kaito said with a frown, “She’s having trouble sleeping, and anything we try isn’t helping. Do you think you could do something?”

Ren glanced at Tobita, who chuckled softly, “Go ahead, I’ll get started here.”

Ren nodded, and grabbed a clean mug. He warmed up some milk and sweetened it with honey, and followed Kaito upstairs with the steaming mug in hand.

Shuichi was at the bar up front with Magne, so the only ones up here were Morgana, Manami, and Atsuhiko. Eri too, of course. Manami, despite her fiery expression, managed to type fast and silent as she compiled data and worked on her original virus for U.A. Morgana sat at the edge of Eri’s futon, chatting away at nothing and everything. Atsuhiko read in the corner, looking up when Ren came upstairs.

Eri’s eyes locked onto Ren, her hands clenched tight on the handkerchief.

“Kaito tells me you can’t sleep?” Ren asked as he sat crossed legged beside her futon.

Kaito sat down nearby.

Eri shook her head, her long hair swaying with the movement. “N-No.”

“Why not?”

“I-I’m scared of the shadows...” Her breathing came out strained as she stared at the dark window, “I-I’m scared th-that Overhaul w-will come and hurt you. I-I can’t-”

She shivered as Ren gently placed his hand on her head.

"It's okay, Eri." Ren said as they locked eyes, "I promised he wouldn't hurt you anymore. I intend to keep that promise no matter what."

Her eyes flooded with unshed tears, but she nodded.

Atsuhiro cleared his throat. Ren looked at him as Atsuhiro gestured to his book.

"How about I read you a bed time story?" Ren asked.

Eri blinked, "A story?"

Ren smiled as he handed her the warm mug. He nodded for her to take a sip as he retrieved the perfect book from his bag, and sat back down at her side. Eri stared at the black cover with gold writing. Every time Eri saw the book from then on, her first thought was of Ren's new mask and a promise made in a soft-sad song.

Morgana chuckled. Atsuhiro beamed with pride in the corner of Ren's eye.

"O-okay." Eri got comfortable and took another sip, "You'll read until I fall asleep?"

"Yep. The milk will help you sleep, too." Ren flipped to the first chapter and read aloud, "It was a strange ending to a voyage that commenced in a most auspicious manner. The transatlantic steamship La Provence was a swift and comfortable vessel..."

Eri, for such a young mind, was enraptured by the story until her eyes couldn't stay open anymore. She was fast asleep by the time he reached the second chapter of Arsene Lupin's adventures.

"I'll keep an eye on her through the night." Kaito whispered as Ren set the book aside and picked up the empty mug.

"Me too." Morgana curled up beside her. "I won't leave her side."

Ren nodded. With one last gentle head pat, he went downstairs to help Tobita. He promised he wouldn't ever let Eri get hurt again. Ren would extract that same promise from Nezu when it came to it.

Ren owed her that much.

"It's time." Kurogiri's voice echoed in the dreary house.

"Finally ." Shigaraki griped as he put on the final petrified hand onto his face, "They wasted enough of our time with their bullshit. We're going to show them who's really in charge."

Dabi snorted. Shigaraki bristled, but held his tongue.

Toga gripped the sheathed knives at her hip, Twice bouncing on his heels next to her.

Looking at their newest member gave Kurogiri a headache. It was the doctor's first High-End Nomu, aptly named Hood. Its purple-black skin bulged with heavily muscled limbs as it perched on the ground like a frog, its long neck jutting with thick bands of muscle fiber and vertebrae. Like its namesake, its face was shadowed by a ragged black hood.

But the eyes...

What was that saying? Stare into the void too long, and the void stares back?

Hood's eyes glowed, bright and golden, in the darkness. Much like his own. They were the same shape, even. Something deep within Kurogiri became unsettled as Hood stared back with a predatory gaze. Kurogiri felt a razor sharp grin underneath the darkness, and suppressed a shiver.

Why was he so unsettled?

Perhaps he was just tired. He had barely slept the past few days, between gathering subjects for the doctor, taking Shigaraki Tomura back and forth to Gigantomachia daily, among many other duties.

“Well?” Shigaraki snapped. “Are you going to take us to those losers or not?”

Kurogiri kept his mist from trembling, “At once, Shigaraki Tomura.”

He spread out his misty body and allowed them to walk through, though in Hood’s case, crawled through like a savage beast. Kurogiri gathered himself before he followed them to one of the Shie Hassaikai’s underground bunkers.

Kurogiri put his mounting exhaustion to the side. After all, his main directive was taking care of Shigaraki Tomura above all others.

Apparently I can write the darkest of angst with absolutely no trouble, but when it comes to writing fluff I have to stop every five minutes and roll around on the floor because my cold heart cannot handle the fuzzy warm feelings.

Joking aside, there will be a change in update schedule. My health basically tanked really hard between now and when the last chapter was updated, and that's been making it difficult to write. Next updates are as follows:

Disintegration - July 23rd

Broadcast Accident - August 13th

I do want to finish the Overhaul arc before the September break, but if it comes down to it and I'm still too sick to write then I'll hold off on finishing the Overhaul arc until after. I really do need a break to recharge and properly plan out the final leg of this story anyway. I'll know by August 13th whether or not we'll finish the Overhaul arc before the break or not, if we do, great! It'll still leave off on a fantastic place to start after the break. If not, then it'll still leave off on a good note and we'll have more time to perfect the Overhaul finale and continue after as normal. It all depends on which direction my health will take. I'd rather write when I'm feeling good so that the chapter turns out for the better, rather than forcing myself when I'm sick and having the chapter be sub par and patchy at best.

Any who, this note is long enough. See you guys next time!

Disintegration

Chapter 77: Disintegration

“I’m a little tired, but I can handle it. Any more than three is where it starts to drain me.” Ren shook his head, “Besides, Eri’s having fun and this is good practice. Right, Eri?”

Eri turned to them, her moonlight hair dressed up in a crown of flowers. Eri firmly nodded and wrapped another tuft of Byakko’s fur in a flowery pink hair tie.

“You’re too trusting for your own good, my boy.” Mr. Compress stated dryly, “I hope you know what you’re doing.”

“I just... I want to help him, too.”

(See the end of the chapter for notes.)

“Baal!” Joker yelled.

Baal sipped from his goblet as two circular blades of shearing wind soared through the Challenge Room, the whistling tempest louder than the haunting remains of the Velvet Song leaking into their ears.

Lavenza lifted her bare hands and caught the windy saw blades with ease. She squeezed them and they exploded into smaller gusts swirling around her, completely harmless.

“Is that all you have?” Lavenza asked, as calm as a still pool.

“My turn!” Gabriel lifted her sword, summoning a half dozen others in a fan behind her.

“No, ME!” Fafnir flung himself forward, his shoulder knocking Gabriel to the side.

“Fafnir, wait for my signal!” Joker cried, but it was too late.

Lavenza twirled away as Fafnir’s claws impaled the stone floor.

“You fool!” Gabriel snarled as her fan of swords vanished. “We had it, you overgrown snake!”

“That’s too bad.” Lavenza stated with a bored sigh. Joker lost all color in his face as she slowly approached, eyes glinting. “Well, if its any consolation, you lasted a few seconds longer than last time.”

Joker held up his hands, “Lavenza, wait-”

The Challenge Room was consumed with white light and Joker woke up splayed out on the floor moments later. His Personas had vanished into his mindscape. His whole body was a patchwork of bruises covered in a sheen of sweat.

He stared up at Lavenza, “Ouch. No mercy, huh?”

She smiled as she held out her hand, which he took. “It seems you have no trouble keeping three of them out at once. We are making progress.”

Joker rolled his shoulders, “Painful progress. Fafnir is so hard to control.” They turned to Joker’s other teammates and the Attendants sitting along the wall, “How long was that one?”

Mr. Compress looked at the stop watch in his hand, “A whole minute and six seconds.”

“That’s it?” Joker groaned.

“Hey, you’re getting there!” Mona said with a grin, “But you’ve been at it for a while. Why don’t we switch it up so you can take a break?”

“Indeed.” Gentle Criminal stood and straightened his tailcoat, “I’m eager to get started on my quirk!”

Elizabeth snickered. She got to her feet and wiped crumbs off of her dress, “Try saying that after I’m through with you. You’ll wish you were dead instead.”

Gentle Criminal’s steps faltered, but he followed her to the center of the room.

“Oh, and Theodore.” Elizabeth smirked, “Be a dear and actually save some of the cookies for the rest of us.”

“I’ll make sure he doesn’t eat the whole package.” Margaret chuckled.

“Why must you always pick on me?” Theodore mumbled. “I didn’t even eat any today. It was Lavenza who ate them all last time.”

“You are our brother.” Lavenza said as she took a seat beside Joker, and they shared the open package of cookies, “It’s our job to tease you.”

Theodore released a long, tired sigh. Everyone sat back and watched when Mr. Compress started the timer.

Gentle Criminal’s first match against Elizabeth didn’t last 8 seconds.

Meanwhile...

“They’re late!” Mimic shouted.

Overhaul stared at the tiny black plush bouncing in rage on the arm of his chair. Short stubby legs, long thin arms, and a stitched white plague mask completed the tiny figure, he looked soft and harmless for those that didn’t know better.

“Calm down, Mimic.” Kurono said, standing at Overhaul’s left side. He had replaced his black and gold plague mask with one that matched his hair color, with sterling silver around the eyes, “Getting angry won’t solve anything.”

“They’re wasting our time.” Nemoto Shin, one of the Eight Bullets crowded behind Overhaul, said. Like all other Eight Bullets, he wore a black plague mask, but Nemoto chose to wear a black bowler hat and a long cape draping down his shoulders. He gripped a burlap sack in his hand, “But more importantly, Overhaul’s time. That disrespect can’t-”

Overhaul rapped his fingers on the chair. Silence permeated the room. They knew they were all expendable, to be killed within a moment’s notice at their master’s whim, but recent events had shortened Overhaul’s temper more than usual.

Finally, the flicker of purple and black fog appeared behind the opposite chair, and the League Of Villains walked through.

Toga Himiko.

Dabi.

Twice.

Shigaraki Tomura, whose red eyes glimmered from behind the petrified hand attached to his face.

Overhaul eyed the animalistic abomination that crawled out next. Perhaps a new Nomu. Combining two or more beings was unsavory in Overhaul’s books. Not to mention the multiple quirks. A symbol of society’s disease. What a disgrace and an insult to bring it before him. He resisted the sudden urge to end the Nomu’s pathetic existence.

Overhaul gestured to the chair across from him. A small table separated the chairs, and Shigaraki grumbled under his breath as he sat down. The two leaders stared at one another, their subordinates' bodies lined with tension.

"Well?" Shigaraki growled as he maintained eye contact, "Are you going to say anything or are you just wasting our time?"

"Says the ones who were late!" Mimic called.

Shigaraki snarled, but Overhaul held up his hand.

"Mimic." Overhaul warned. The possessed plush crossed his arms and plopped down on the chair arm. Overhaul set his expression in boredom, "We both know why we're here."

"Yeah, to team up and take down that damn secret boss."

"No."

Shigaraki blinked, "No?"

Overhaul leaned forward, "This is what'll happen. You'll merge with the Shie Hassaikai and be put under our leadership. Only that way will we be able to take down that cursed vigilante in an efficient manner."

Shigaraki's hands twitched. "And why would we ever do that?"

"Do I really have to lay it out for you?" Overhaul sighed as he leaned back, "It's because you don't know how to lead."

"How dare you-"

"Look at you." Overhaul scanned the League's bare remnants, "You've had villains like Moonfish and Muscular, S class subordinates who were lost in a futile raid against children. An informant notified us that Mustard will soon be transferred into the care of heroes under a new program. You've struggled to stay alive since Joker killed All For One." Overhaul huffed as Shigaraki glared daggers at him, "We have proof of another of your many failures."

“And that is?” Shigaraki punctuated every word with a dry hiss.

Overhaul waved Nemoto forward. Nemoto opened the burlap sack and dumped its contents on the table. Pieces of a broken mask and a ruined top hat tumbled out, splattered with old blood.

The League members stiffened.

“We’ve heard through the grapevine that you tried to kill one of your own.” Overhaul tilted his head, “But clearly Mr. Compress is very much alive, and now he’s helping Joker.”

The tension skyrocketed. Shigaraki slowly swiveled his head to a dangerously pale Toga Himiko. Dabi and Twice made subtle movements to be between her and Shigaraki.

Overhaul sighed, dragging Shigaraki’s dark gaze back to him, “Not to mention one of Joker’s vital weaknesses has dangled in front of you for the better part of two months- ”

“Get to your point!” Shigaraki clawed at his neck, but a look from Kurogiri stilled them. “What about you? You must have some reason for wanting that damn vigilante brat yourself. I heard there was an explosion in your town and one of Joker’s monsters was seen. I doubt its a coincidence.”

Overhaul reached into his coat pocket for a small package, setting it on the table and flipping it open, “These are the permanent Quirk Erasing Bullets. There are very few of them as they are difficult to produce on a larger scale.”

Shigaraki glanced at them, “What do those have to do with Joker?”

Overhaul’s expression twisted with hatred, “Joker stole the asset I need to create these bullets. In doing so, he insulted me and all of the Shie Hassaikai. I have the perfect plan to eliminate him once and for all, while ensuring we recover our asset. Once you are under my leadership, we-”

“No.” Shigaraki stood, his shadow falling over the table.

The Eight Bullets crowded around Overhaul, and the Nomu abomination lunged to Shigaraki’s side, dark jaws snapping. The other League members tensed, but didn’t go to their leader’s side.

“It’s vital that we form a party if Joker recovered his strength. Neither of our groups are strong enough to face him alone, you know that.” Shigaraki’s voice was as stale as a layer of dust on old furniture, “But we will not be put under you like a bunch of spare NPC’s. My League of Villains will work alongside you under my orders, and that’s final.”

“Fine.” Overhaul’s eyebrow twitched. “I’m only allowing this because I agree we cannot take Joker down by ourselves.”

“Yeah! If this were any different, you’d all be blood stains on the wall!” Mimic shouted.

“You ugly little-” Shigaraki stated.

“Kurono, give them the burner.” Overhaul said as he forced his temper to cool.

Kurono threw Kurogiri an old cellphone, to which the misty man easily caught, “We’ll contact you when the time comes. Be on standby while you wait.”

Kurogiri’s smoky body curled in on itself, golden eyes narrowed.

Shigaraki scoffed, “Whatever. Kurogiri, we’re leaving.”

The League walked through Kurogiri’s portal. The Nomu paused before the dark threshold, swiveling its long neck to peer at Overhaul, who stared back with a lazily raised brow. The abomination cackled before it dove into the darkness.

“How insolent.” Nemoto sneered when the portal vanished.

“I’ll allow them to be independent, for the time being.” Overhaul tucked the Quirk Erasing Bullets in his pocket, “Kuroono, is the scout back yet?”

Kuroono nodded, “They should have returned by now to provide you with a full report.”

“Good,” Overhaul hummed, “With Kurogiri at our side, extracting Joker’s weakness will pose no problems.”

The Eight Bullets cleared the way as Overhaul stood up and stalked towards the exit.

Knives were in Toga’s hands as her instincts threw her backward, dodging Shigaraki’s lethal swipe by a hair’s breadth.

“Shigaraki Tomura!”

Kurogiri shouted as Toga backed into a wall, her knives swinging in silver arcs as Shigaraki reached for her. A swathe of blue flame bathed the room as Shigaraki’s shadow fell over her, splitting the pair.

“Don’t fight!!” Twice frantically waved his arms, “Oh! Go for the round house kick, Toga-chan!!”

“Enough!”

Kurogiri’s body exploded with misty tendrils, redirecting Shigaraki’s hands, her knives, and Dabi’s next burst of flame. The fire hit the floor, ribbons of smoke curling from a cluster of incinerated weeds growing through the cracks. Twice shrieked as he stamped it out.

“Kurogiri, what are you doing!?” Shigaraki snapped.

Kurogiri blinked, “What is it you are doing, Shigaraki Tomura?”

“She was supposed to kill Mr. Compress! She’ll pay for failing Sensei’s direct order!”

“She did not fail, Shigaraki Tomura.” Kurogiri sighed, “Toga Himiko performed admirably. I watched as she stabbed Mr. Compress and let him bleed out on the ground. However, Joker must have healed him when our attention was elsewhere. If it wasn’t for Joker’s trickery, Mr. Compress would have died within minutes. It was not her failure, but mine for not making sure the job was finished.”

Shigaraki’s gaze stabbed into Kurogiri, and he slowly extracted his hands from the void.

Dabi scowled at Shigaraki as he did the same, his hands smoking.

Toga, her eyes wide and heart pounding wildly, pulled her knives out of Kurogiri’s portal, but her white knuckled hands held onto them for dear life. Kurogiri, satisfied, pulled himself back.

Toga sprinted to her room.

She slammed the door shut and leaned against it, hearing Dabi and Shigaraki get into another shouting match. Toga slid down the door, her knives clattering on the floor as she covered her face in her hands. The shouting exploded in volume, and it wasn’t long before Dabi’s signature door slam rattled the abandoned house.

The next bout of silence was too loud.

Dark thoughts skittered through her mind. She remembered All For One’s aura of death drowning her as he ordered Mr. Compress’ fate. Either she followed his order to the letter, or she’d disappear.

She covered Mr. Compress in pretty red - No! Her nails clawed into her forehead. He didn’t deserve to be covered in red.

They got off on the wrong foot, but Mr. Compress grew to be their friend. Her friend. He told stories of his grand heists during nights when nobody could sleep, helped her when her braids were too tangled once, his hands gentle as he brushed through that terrible knot. Mr. Compress could break the tension between Dabi and Shigaraki like none of them could, including Kurogiri.

That was the start. The first crack in her loyalty to Shigaraki and the League Of Villains.

Gang Orca held an expression she couldn't dissect, "Yes. Villains, especially younger ones, should have a chance at redemption should they want it. I don't expect every villain to go along with it, but for the ones that do-" He looked down at his clenched fist, "They should at least have a chance for a new lease on life."

She turned her back to hide the conflict in her expression. She... didn't have to be a villain anymore? She could have a chance at being normal again, to really be herself? To live how she always wanted without hurting people? But she couldn't walk away from the League. Not yet. Not while it was still too dangerous for her... or others.

The tiny cracks splintered into greater crevices after the Provisional Exam. She was left floundering, with no real direction as her whole inner thoughts became a dizzying whirlpool of confusion and the feeling of being lost .

A knock startled her from her thoughts.

"Toga-chan?" Twice's voice was muffled by the door.

Toga sniffled and wiped her face with a dirty sleeve. She opened the door to let him in. Toga made sure the door was shut before Twice could say anything.

"Are you okay!?" He gripped her shoulders when he saw her expression, "That was really scary! I totally wasn't terrified out of my wits!"

“I’m okay. I’m just.... so tired.” She muttered as she could feel herself crumble, “I don’t want to do this anymore, Twice.”

Twice stiffened, “What?”

“Shigaraki and the Shie Hassaikai want to hurt Joker and Mr. Compress. I... I can’t...”

She thought of Joker’s genuine smile as they danced under the moonlight, the first person to treat her with any sort of respect and kindness. Of Mr. Compress’ boundless compassion. If Shigaraki and Overhaul got their hands on them... they wouldn’t survive. If only Joker hadn’t stolen whatever ‘asset’ to make those precious Quirk Erasing Bullets-

Her eyes brightened. Joker would be more than a match for Overhaul and Shigaraki without the threat of his powers being taken away. If they could get on the inside and mess up Overhaul’s plans even more... It... it might just work, but she couldn’t do it alone.

“Twice.”

“Y-yes, Toga-chan?”

“I need your help.” She peered into the blank whiteness where his mask hid his eyes, “Can you keep a secret? Right now, you’re the only one in the League I care about... the only one I can trust.”

Twice stilled. At first, she thought he would run off and tell Shigaraki about her doubts. Instead, her breath stuttered as he wrapped her in a tight hug.

“Of course, Toga-chan!!” He said, “I-I feel the same way! No I don’t! Warm fuzzy feelings!? Ick !”

She hugged back, a small smile forming.

The flicker of Hope strengthened.

Byakko, with Ren leaning against his soft belly, was splayed out across the attic floor. Eri, Ishtar, and Pixie crowded around Byakko's head, decorating the tiger's snowy fur with flowers, pins, and brightly colored clips.

"I want a rematch!!" Fafnir howled, "I could take those Attendants on!"

"I agree-hee with Fafnir, ho!" Black Frost threw his fists into the air. "Let there be bloodshed, heeee hooo!"

"You didn't learn from your last horrible loss?" Shiva asked.

"Losses." Gabriel begrudgingly corrected. "Several losses."

"Ugh," Pixie muttered, "I might go crazy if we have to listen to Theodore apologize one more time before he wipes the floor with us!"

"At least Margaret is a floating goddess of beauty and wrath, and executes her attacks with grace." Ishtar hummed with a pleasant smile, "Something I respect."

Ren ignored them as he tightened the last screw and placed the cover on the mechanism for his grappling hook.

"I'm surprised the Trickster doesn't have nightmares of Elizabeth and Lavenza." Baal said as he swirled his goblet, "Those two are certainly feistier than their siblings."

"Feisty, yes." Satanael sighed, "But it's thanks to their intensive training that we got so far so quickly."

"Yes, yes, anchoring three Personas in reality without tiring is a great achievement." Fafnir snapped sarcastically, "But we're wasting time with all of this other crap! Why can't we continue fighting them to get even stronger!? We could be so much more powerful, not to mention what Fusions the Trickster can do with me at his side!!"

"One thing at a time, Fafnir. All of this training would be moot without proper recuperation and self-reflection in between battles. Besides, the Trickster doesn't want to rob the Faith of his every penny."

Kohryu grumbled, "Have you truly learned nothing?"

"Shut it, old man!" Clouds of steam hissed from Fafnir's jaws, "I want to fight at the Trickster's side again! Stop denying us our rightful triumph!!"

Kohryu grumbled, "It's like talking to a child."

"Isn't Fafnir your child in a way, Kohryu?" Shiva asked with a humorous smile. "He came from you."

"He even called you 'old man'." Cu Chulainn mused.

"Oh, you find that funny, do you?" Gabriel smiled warmly, "Do not expect me to call you father, Hound Of Culann."

Cu Chulainn sputtered as his face turned cherry red, "Scathach would murder me if I had a kid and she didn't know about it."

Ren set the grappling hook aside and scooped up his notebook and pen, crossing 'repair grapple hook' from his list. Ren pulled his duffel bag closer and dug around in it, flipping to the list of Metaverse items.

"That reminds me of the time we called Arsene Bird Dad!" Alice said, clapping her hands.

"Do you have to bring it up?" Satanael groaned, "I thought we moved past that."

"Nope!" Alice chirped.

"You were awfully agreeable when Ishtar threatened to ground the Trickster. Sounds to me like you're still the father of the group, while she is the 'Mommasona'." Yatagarasu said as he puffed out his feathers, "Oh! Perhaps we need a new nickname for Satanael!"

"Please no."

Ren tapped the notebook with the pen, brow pensive as he stared at the meager list, a tiny fraction of what they came into this world with.

A small hand full of healing stones and SP items(he made a note to fill several thermoses full of Master Coffee), revival medicines, a pile of useless Metaverse items like Goho-M's that didn't do anything. Other items like Smoke Bombs, the Perma-Pick, and the Ofudas were safe within his costume.

The various armors, weapons, and accessories he gave to the rest of the team did nothing to help in their training battles, save for preventing more severe injuries that would have been healed anyway. Ren had equipped the Crystal Skull again, flooding him with inhuman strength despite how it oozed ancient and disturbing power. He made sure Eri didn't see it.

"A fatherly nickname for Satanael?" Gabriel looked the other Persona up and down, "... Bat dad?"

"Vetoed!" Alice said.

"Dark father of freedom?"

"That's even worse, Yatagarasu!!" Pixie shouted. "Definitely vetoed!"

"Why must you all do this." Satanael groaned as he facepalmed.

"We art thou, thou art us." Baal raised his goblet with an elegant smirk, "It is our duty, Bat Dad."

"I thought you were a sensible one, Baal." Satanael muttered, "And 'Bat Dad' has already been vetoed."

"Sinister Sire of Sovereignty!!" Black Frost cackled.

"What? No!" Satanael curled his wings around himself.

"Are you all so terrible at coming up with names?" Orpheus Picaro asked with a languid tilt of his head.

"Do you have any better ideas, music boy!?" Pixie asked.

"... Music boy?"

"Demon Dad of Doom!!" Cerberus roared.

"Now that has a good ring to it!" Pixie said.

"I suppose I can't veto it?" Satanael asked.

"Nope, you're stuck with it now." Ren chuckled, "We dub thee Demon Dad Of Doom."

"Betrayed by my true other self once again." Satanael put a hand over his heart, "How will I ever recover?"

"I don't think a Salvation can cure such a mortal wound." Ishtar's musical chuckles drew Ren from his work, and he smiled at her when she helped Eri with another tie.

"Even I have more dignity than you at the moment, Demon Dad Of Doom." Byakko said as his motorboat purrs rumbled through the attic.

Morgana watched everything with a raised brow.

Kaito and Manami sat up here, too. Kaito watched Eri with muted fondness, while Manami's eyes were trained on her computer screen, lines of code flowing from her fingertips.

"You look good in pink, Byakko." Ren said.

Byakko held back a huff, stating dryly, "You wound me so, Trickster. Blue is obviously the superior color."

"Oh please." Ishtar scratched Byakko's head, "Don't lie to yourself. We know you're enjoying this."

"Let's add more pink!" Pixie giggled as she buzzed around Byakko's ears.

Ishtar grinned and handed Eri a bunch of hot pink ties.

Morgana approached and looked Ren up and down, frowning.

"What?" Ren said.

"Are you holding up alright?" Morgana whispered. His eyes flicked between the three Personas, "We didn't train in the Velvet Room for you to willingly wear yourself out."

Ren eyed the Velvet Room door over in the corner, where Tobita trained with Atsuhiro and the Attendants. Like Ren, Tobita made significant progress. It was amazing what a little bit of life and death stakes could do to make them all stronger.

As for Ren, each Persona kept their individual strengths and weaknesses, but any damage they received traveled back to the source. If Ren took too much damage from multiple Personas, enough to where it went over his current HP... it didn't paint a pretty picture.

If he had too many out at once, then his energy drained at an alarming rate. He passed out by trying to summon all of his Personas the first time. Lavenza bonked him on the head with the Compendium for that scare. Elizabeth drilled her own lessons in his skull the hard way. Ren couldn't decipher her mannerisms. Serious, yet mournful and nostalgic. Small glimmers of anger were buried deep within the woman's eyes.

Theodore's too.

Margaret and Lavenza adopted a more professional demeanor, even if they were all utterly terrifying.

"I'm a little tired, but I can handle it. Any more than three is where it starts to drain me." Ren shook his head, "Besides, Eri's having fun and this is good practice. Right, Eri?"

Eri turned to them, her moonlight hair dressed up in a crown of flowers. Eri firmly nodded and wrapped another tuft of Byakko's fur in a flowery pink hair tie.

Morgana leveled Ren with a deadpanned stare.

"Lighten up, Morgana." Ren put pen and paper aside and scratched under Morgana's chin, "Let her have some fun while she can."

"I... I guess you're right."

"Hey, sorry to interrupt, but I might've found something." Manami looked up from her laptop.

"What's wrong?" Ren asked.

"The Shie Hassaikai's activity has been... strange."

Ren raised a brow, "Strange how?"

"Several reports indicated that they were all over town before, then today they all just... disappeared off the streets." Manami shivered, "I've picked up some radio chatter from the heroes, and they're desperate to figure out what's going on. I don't like it."

"Let's keep an ear to the ground." Ren grimaced. "Just in case we need to move before we get to U.A."

"What's U.A.?" Eri asked, staring at Ren.

“It’s a school for training heroes.” Ren erased his grimace with a warm smile, “We’ll be going there soon. All of us.”

“Oh...” Eri tightly gripped Byakko’s fur, “Will Deku-san be there?”

“Deku-san?” Ren recalled the long list of heroes and sidekicks Manami provided, “Midoriya is interning with Nighteye.”

“Have you met him before?” Kaito asked Eri.

“I bumped into Deku-san first when I ran away from... f-from...”

“It’s okay, dear.” Ishtar hugged Eri closer. “That man can’t hurt you.”

“What happened?” Ren asked softly.

Byakko purred louder when Eri pulled on his fur, “I-I didn’t want Deku-san to get hurt... So I made him let me go.”

“They let you go back?” Morgana asked, eyes wide.

Eri bit her lip and nodded.

“We don’t know the full situation.” Ren said to quell his own anger, “They probably didn’t have a choice. We know how dangerous Overhaul’s quirk is.”

Alice’s energy flared.

Satanael and Alice had resistances against curse and bless attacks, so they concluded that Overhaul’s quirk translated to an Almighty insta-kill. Vasuki’s Makarakarn wouldn’t work against Almighty. He had a few Homunculus items and made sure everyone else had one. They gave him strange looks, but accepted the weird little mud dolls after he explained their purpose.

Better to be safe than sorry.

“Maybe, but it doesn’t sit right with me.” Kaito crossed his arms.
“Letting a little girl go with a monster like that...”

Ren waved his hand, “What’s done is done. All that matters right now is that Eri is safe and we’ll be long gone before Overhaul finds us.”

A disquiet settled in the attic. Byakko’s purrs rumbled pleasantly, and Ishtar and Pixie managed to get Eri to put more flowers in Byakko’s fur. Pixie distracted Eri by showing her how to braid a particularly long tuft on Byakko’s chest.

Ren leaned back against Byakko and stared out the open window. The autumn sunset painted everything in fiery colors. There was a nip in the air, and he wondered if the fall trees were as gorgeous here as they were back home.

Still, he didn’t want Eri getting cold. He stood up and worked the crick out of his neck, his joints popping.

“And you call me an old man.” Kaito remarked.

“Shush,” Ren smirked, “I’m not the one with white hair.”

“And whose fault is that?”

“Not ours!” Morgana stuck his nose in the air, “Your hair was already white when we met you. Or is your memory already failing you, grandpa?”

Kaito rolled his eyes as Ren went to the window to close it.

“Trickster.”

“What is it, Yatagarasu?” Ren paused with his hand on the window sill.

“I’m nervous about the Lover’s information.” Yatagarasu warbled,
“The Yakuza must be up to something heinous. I want to patrol the skies to ensure our safety.”

"It's a sound plan." Satanael said, "But it also comes with drawbacks."

"I am invisible in the dark." Yatagarasu's nerves wriggled against Ren's own, "No normal human will be any wiser."

"Are you okay?" Manami asked, grabbing his sleeve. "You're staring off into space again."

"Yeah." Ren smiled at her, "Yatagarasu wanted to patrol around the city. The Yakuza disappearing makes him nervous."

"But the strain on you, Trickster." Ishtar said, her brow furrowing. "Three Personas is your current limit, any more and you will tire easily."

"I'll go back to the mindscape!" Pixie hovered in front of Eri and ruffled the girl's hair, "I'll play with you soon little sis, 'kay?"

Eri nodded, "Okay."

Pixie vanished in a blue flurry. Eri'd seen this before as Ren gradually introduced other Personas. Orpheus Picaro strummed on his lute when Ren read the next chapter of Arsene Lupin, Gentleman Thief to Eri last night. Lavenza and Alice had a tea party with her after an especially rigorous training session in the Velvet Room yesterday afternoon, and like Byakko, Cerberus let her run her hands through his snowy white mane, his tail thumping on the floor. Black Frost played games with her and Cu Chulainn told her other fairy tales.

For now, Personas like Fafnir and Kohryu were off limits, either due to sheer size or in Fafnir's case, unpredictability.

Ishtar pointed at Ren as he held out his arm to summon Yatagarasu, Eri watching with sparkling eyes.

Ren didn't know what happened.

Yatagarasu materialized on Ren's arm. There was a terrified cry and a flash of light, Ren's vision blinked out and he felt himself falling, a twisting, ice cold pang resonating with Ishtar and Byakko's bonds. Yatagarasu screeched when he was thrown back into the mindscape.

"Ren!?" Morgana called.

Just as fast, it stopped. Ren gasped as his eyes snapped open, his head throbbing from where he hit the floor.

"Are you okay!?" Manami gripped his shirt, her face stricken with fear.

Ren sat up, blinking rapidly as he rubbed the back of his head. "My head hurts a little. What just happened?"

Manami looked behind him, and he followed her gaze to Eri. Kaito was crouched over Eri as Ishtar held the girl in her arms.

Eri was hyperventilating, staring at Ren in a way that made his chest constrict.

"Eri, what's wrong?" Ishtar asked as she gently turned Eri's face to her, "What was that?"

"I-I'm sorry!" Eri burst into tears, "I'm sorry!!"

"What are you sorry for?" Ishtar cast a worried glance at Ren, Byakko was on his feet and pressed his nose on the girl's head. "Eri, please talk to us."

Eri shook her head and buried her face in Ishtar's chest, her cries inconsolable.

"I-I think it was her quirk?" Morgana's hackles stood on end, "That light came from her horn! I saw her flower crown go... backwards? Instead of wilting, they turned into buds and then disappeared!"

“I felt weird for a second...” Ren stood up and gave himself a once over, Manami hovering beside him. Kaito hadn’t moved. “Kaito? Are you okay?”

“Er, earth to Kaito?” Morgana propped his front legs on Kaito’s arm, “What’s wrong?”

Kaito jolted so hard he displaced Morgana, the not-cat’s paws falling to the floor. Kaito’s ashen face was covered in sweat, and Ren’s stomach plummeted as Kaito looked at them, his eyes shimmering like sunlight through water.

“Kaito’s Quirk Suppressant is on Eri!” Satanael stated.

Ren saw the glimmer of the suppressant on Eri’s upper arm. He felt another pang of fear as Kaito looked at Ren last, his skin turning nearly translucent as he bolted down the stairs.

“Kaito!”

“M-Make sure he’s okay!” Manami said, “Morgana and I will stay with Eri!”

Ren chased after Kaito. The bathroom door slammed shut, and Ren recoiled at the sound of Kaito getting violently sick. The horrible noises subsided after a long, harrowing couple of minutes. Ren heard the squeaking faucet and running water, and eventually Kaito opened the door.

The man’s damp hair fell flat over his face. He collapsed against the door frame and slid to the floor with a soft thump .

“Kaito,” Ren knelt next to him and grasped his shoulder, “Do you need me to heal you?”

Kaito could barely nod.

Ren drew from Ishtar’s power and cast Salvation, purple ribbons of light flowing around Kaito’s body.

Kaito sagged in relief, color returning to his face, "That... sucked."

"What happened ? What did Eri do?"

Kaito scrubbed his face, "Eri's quirk rewinds living things. I lived through her erasing my... no, her father from existence and then... Overhaul experimented on her. He drained every drop of her blood, and then reset her when she was at death's door... sometimes she didn't make it."

Ren's blood chilled as Kaito gripped his hair, the man's breathing turning erratic.

"Overhaul reset us over and over and over and over . He drilled into our heads that this power is nothing more than a curse." Kaito's voice cracked, "How are we still sane...?"

"Kaito, breathe." Ren rubbed circles into the man's back, "You're here with me . Don't forget where you are."

Kaito's shaking fingers went into his shirt collar, gripping his pendant.

"Right... you're right." Kaito took a few deep breaths, his hand opening to stare at his family crest. He calmed down after a few moments, letting the crest hang from his shirt. "I didn't mean to lose myself again. I haven't used my quirk in so long..."

"It's okay." Ren sat next to Kaito, their shoulders touching. "What set Eri off?"

"Yatagarasu."

"What ?"

"Overhaul and his closest advisors wear plague masks. She thought Yatagarasu was one of them . She doesn't know how to control her quirk when she panics..."

Ren cursed under his breath. "But Yatagarasu appeared when we fought Overhaul in that alley."

"My wings shielded her from the worst of the violence." Satanael murmured, "She did not see."

Ren couldn't gather his thoughts before Kaito grabbed Ren's shirt, his expression darker than Ren had ever seen it. Kaito would excel at intimidating Shadows.

"And then after Eri, I saw everything you went through since the Summer Camp," Kaito growled, "I swear, If you hadn't promised Ishtar not to do something that stupid again-"

"I-"

"I've just died a dozen times over between you and Eri. I felt Morgana's agony as he was burned and then he had to go revive you from a morgue . Manami was so terrified she made herself sick several times, she hasn't even shared that with Tobita." Kaito muttered.

Ren's throat tightened, his Personas dead silent.

"I-I'm... sorry?" Kaito's glared sharpened. He cleared his throat and looked Kaito in the eye. "I just... didn't want to worry anyone. They went through enough because of me."

The heat in Kaito's expression withered away and he let go of Ren's shirt, "We could write a whole book on the things you keep to yourself." Kaito's tone softened as he ruffled Ren's hair, "Haven't you learned you can trust us with things like that? That's what family is for, right?"

Ren scratched the back of his head, unable to meet Kaito's eyes.

Kaito sighed as he forced himself on his feet, Ren following, "Come on, the others are probably worried."

“Are you sure you’re okay?”

“I’ve been through worse.” Kaito muttered, “That healing spell works wonders on-”

Kaito looked down the hall to Shuichi and Magne staring at them with bug-eyed expressions. They winced as they were caught eavesdropping. Ren shivered when Kaito’s eyes glimmered.

Ren stepped in front of Kaito, “Were you two there the whole time?”

“Yes, we were.” Magne’s eyes flicked between Ren and Kaito, her brow heavy, “We heard a noise from upstairs and wanted to check up on you, when Kaito-”

“This is between us.” Kaito’s voice hardened into cold steel, giving Magne a sharp glare, “We’ve got it covered.”

Magne blinked several times, “O-oh, right. Y-You’re right. I’m not... actually one of you, it’s not my business.” Magne cleared her throat, “I... I need to finish my chores before the bar opens anyway.”

Magne disappeared into the bar front.

“Hey, what the heck was that about?” Shuichi asked, “That wasn’t very nice!”

Kaito scowled, “That’s between Magne and Atsuhiro. Let’s go upstairs before we make everyone else worry.”

“Uh, I still need to help Magne with the bar. We’re opening in about ten minutes and with the kitchen closed for tonight...” Shuichi poked his fingers together as he looked between Ren and Kaito, “But let me know if you need anything? You guys are okay, right?”

Kaito nodded and marched upstairs without another word.

Ren shrugged at Shuichi’s conflicted expression before following Kaito. Ishtar had put Eri to bed, the girl curling into herself with her face buried in Ren's handkerchief.

"She got a fever after the incident and fell asleep after I healed her." Ishtar said, "We should leave her for the time being."

Ren nodded, "Thanks for taking care of her."

Byakko and Ishtar bowed and returned to him.

"Trickster, are you alright?" Lavenza stood beside the Velvet Room door, Atsuhiro and Tobita had returned, too, "We felt a... disturbance within the Velvet Room. A strange ripple of time, there and gone within a moment."

"I'm alright, Lavenza." Ren forced himself to smile. "No harm done."

"Well, what happened then?" Atsuhiro frowned as Kaito stared at the floor, before studying the rest of their dour expressions, "Clearly, we missed something."

"We figured out what Eri's quirk was." Morgana said as he clambered up to Ren's shoulder. "... the hard way."

"She can rewind living things to a previous state." Kaito said as he turned towards Eri, "Ishtar got the brunt of it. Who knows what could've happened if I didn't put the Quirk Suppressant on her in time."

"Well, that's..." Tobita blinked rapidly, "Quite unexpected."

"Ishtar hummed, "I'm alright. As far as I can tell, our bond and the rest of the mindscape remains unscathed, Trickster. Perhaps being some of the oldest deities is why Byakko and I weren't affected as much?"

"Perhaps," Byakko said, "I'm glad Eri was away from the Trickster, otherwise we wouldn't have been as lucky."

"Who knows what could've happened if she rewound the Trickster directly." Satanael hummed, "It... could have been devastating in any number of ways."

"I'm sorry," Yatagarasu warbled, "I didn't mean for this to happen."

"You do not bear the blame, Yatagarasu." Gabriel said, "It is Overhaul's fault for causing her pain."

Ren snapped out of it when soft footsteps trailed to Kaito.

"Here, put this on." Tobita held out a familiar cuff.

"But don't you need-" Kaito looked up to Tobita, his eyes dancing with subdued light. He clutched his family crest, blinking, "You got control of it."

"Only just. There are many mysteries about my quirk's current state, but I figured out the off switch." Tobita chuckled as Kaito took the cuff and put it on. "Elizabeth is an effective teacher.... albeit a horrifying one."

"I do apologize for Elizabeth's behaviour... again." Lavenza sighed as she tucked a stray hair behind her ear, "I thought my chainsaw was well concealed. Margaret, Theodore, and myself could not stop her from chasing your friend with it. I'd truly fear for his safety if the disturbance didn't interrupt us."

Atsuhiro chuckled, "It was a sight to behold. If only our phones worked in the Velvet Room! I could've recorded it for prime blackmail material."

"Easy for you to say, Atsuhiro." Tobita said with a dignified pout. "You weren't the one running for your life from a madwoman wielding a chainsaw."

Atsuhiro shrugged, smirking shamelessly, "She got you to control your quirk, didn't she? That's a victory in itself."

Morgana groaned, "I'm glad you got your quirk under control Tobita, but we have more important stuff to worry about!"

Their eyes lingered over Eri's sleeping form.

Kaito sat by Eri's futon, the others choosing random spots in the attic. Lavenza sat next to Ren, curiously watching as Kaito revealed the full extent of Overhaul's crimes against a helpless little girl.

A shadow clung to the darkened city streets, idly wandering from dark alleyways to sleepy avenues, and eventually to a dingy district thriving with unsavory types. He walked past a thief taking a drunkard's wallet, the man passed out in the mouth of the alleyway with a bottle inches from his fingertips. No heroes or police dared come here this time of night.

Nobody bothered to look too hard at the patchwork of scarred flesh peeking underneath the shadow's hood, either.

"Doshn't that lizard fella look familiar?" A whispered conversation came from a pair of drunkards limping down the street, "I shwear I shaw him before..."

"Eh? You drank way too much, old man! I can barely understand you!"

"The lizard! That... that green one from the bar down the street, with the pink hair?"

The shadow stopped as the drunkards passed.

"Okay, what about him? He served some wicked drinks, I'll give him that!"

"I shwear I've seen him before...."

“W-well... now that you say it... he did look familiar. Maybe he’s famous or something?”

“A famous person, working in this shithole? Get real!”

“... Maybe we’re just confusing him for someone else. There are a lot of animal based quirks out there!”

The shadow followed as the pair fell over each other into an alley, deeper into the bowels of the most wretched part of the city.

“Which bar does this lizard work in?”

The drunkards whirled around to him. The middle aged one stood in front of the older man.

“Who are you!?”

“Just answer my question.”

“Why should we!?”

The shadow held up his hand as swirls of bright blue flame flickered to life.

“G-go back to the street and take a left, then f-follow 51st until you see a building with a wooden sign outside! I-its a western styled bar called Hole In The Wall! Th-that’s the bar with the lizard!”

The flames died as the shadow turned away, “Thanks.”

Dabi smirked as he left the two blubbering men behind.

“Are you sure you’re okay?” Shuichi asked when there was a lull in customers. The bar was extra loud tonight despite the kitchen being closed, “You’ve been acting off since Kaito-”

"I'm fine." Magne wouldn't look at him as she polished a sparkling glass mug, "Why wouldn't I be?"

He ran a hand through his hair, scaly brows furrowed, "I've never seen Kaito react that way to anyone . He's a really nice guy once you get to know him! A bit reclusive, but nice!"

"Have I offended him somehow?"

"I don't think so? Maybe he was grouchy because his quirk... well..."

Magne finally looked at him, "What about his quirk? What does it do?"

"From what I understand, he relives your whole life up until the moment his quirk activated on you. Uh... he did say it was something between you and Atsuhiro, but didn't specify." Shuichi blinked as Magne flinched, "Are you okay? You're looking a little green."

"I just... there are some things in my past that I'm not proud of."

"So? Don't we all have baggage like that?"

"This is different." Magne stared at the mug in her hands, her expression unreadable, "I'm trying to atone for something I did to a friend. Maybe Kaito thinks its not good enough?"

"... Why wouldn't it be good enough?"

Someone rapped their knuckles on the bar. They looked to see a tall figure standing there, his face shadowed by a hood. Unnatural chills crept up Shuichi's spine when the figure looked up, the painted light highlighting bright cerulean eyes and a smirk marred by purple scars.

Magne backpedaled and Shuichi reached for the knife in his belt-

“Relax.” Dabi huffed as he tossed a folded piece of paper in front of Shuichi, “Do me a favor and give this to a... mutual acquaintance.”

Magne recoiled when Dabi’s eyes flicked to her, the man’s eerie smirk widening, before pulling away from the bar. Shuichi stared in shock as Dabi disappeared into the bustling crowd.

Shuichi snatched the paper and unfolded it.

Joker - Meet me in the alley behind the bar. Alone .

If Shuichi could sweat, he’d be covered by buckets of it.

“M-Magne, could you-”

“Go.” Magne turned her back to him, “I’ll cover the bar.”

Shuichi bolted for the kitchen.

“This poor kid.” Atsuhiro whispered in the heavy silence.

“Her own mother gave her away to the Yakuza?” Morgana’s eyes were as wide as dinner plates, “I... I can’t even imagine...”

“And then Overhaul...” Ren growled, “Just what was he trying to accomplish, using her like that?”

“What a wicked human.” Lavenza kept her expression neutral, but a fire burned in her eyes. “He’s as dastardly as any Palace Ruler.”

“It’s no wonder she was scared when you said Ishtar was like her.” Kaito gave Ren a knowing glance.

“Was Overhaul trying to harness her unique power somehow?” Atsuhiro gained a thoughtful frown, rolling a few marbles between his hands, “Like a drug, or some sort of weapon?”

“Manami, has there been any recent reports about anything like that on the streets?” Ren asked. “The Shie Hassaikai would perform field tests for something like that.”

“What better way than to put it in the hands of rambunctious villains?” Atsuhiro said sourly.

“I’ll check around,” Manami said as she went straight to her computer. “What about Eri?” Morgana asked, “She was really upset.”

“Let me talk to her.” Kaito put a hand on Eri’s head. Eri’s horn had shrunk significantly. “I know how she feels. If I can help her understand that her power can be a gift, then maybe she won’t be so afraid.”

“Kaito wants to be there for Eri in a way no adult was ever there for him.” Satanael whispered. “He knows what it’s like to be trapped between white walls, to hate oneself for their own power.”

“True birds of a feather.” Shiva trilled.

“Okay,” Ren nodded, “Please take care of her.”

“I will.” Kaito threw Ren a weak smile. “Thank you.”

At that moment Shuichi rushed into the attic, panting.

“What’s wrong?” Ren asked as he got to his feet.

“As if we need more trouble.” Manami muttered.

“It seems the fates keep throwing drama our way.” Atsuhiro shook his head, “And not the fun kind.”

Shuichi shoved a piece of crumpled paper into Ren’s hands, “We have a problem.”

A few minutes of hushed planning later, Ren took a deep breath and hesitated in the storage room.

“Merp?” Lady Stubbs sat on the pile of boxes next to him.

“I’ll be fine.” Ren scratched behind her ears, “Just stay here.”

Ren threw open the bar’s back door, stepping out into the cool night air as Byakko paced at the front of his mindscape.

“How did he find us?” Byakko growled.

“I don’t know.” Ren said as his footsteps echoed down the alley, “But we’re about to find out.”

“Let’s hope the eldest Todoroki sibling doesn’t do anything he’ll regret.” Cu Chulainn said as he tightened his grip on his spear.

“My claws certainly won’t regret cleaving him in half should he dare.”

“I’ll devour him first!” Fafnir growled.

“He wouldn’t be stupid enough to come out here by himself without a good reason.” Ren stopped in the middle of the alley, Morgana’s gentle wind caressing his face, “His fire can’t hurt us with you active, Byakko, and the others are watching from the rooftops.”

Footsteps echoed within the shroud of darkness ahead. Without a second thought, he activated Third Eye. His surroundings shifted into monochromatic blue hues and the stark gold aura made the approaching figure stand out like a burning star.

Ren’s heart shot into his throat at the Arcana card above Dabi’s head.

Reverse Justice.

The card lazily spun upside down, charred around the edges.

He struggled to keep his indifferent expression as Dabi stepped into the light. His hood covered most of his face, but the purple scarring and the horrible gleam of surgical staples around his lower face were visible.

“Todoroki Touya,” Ren tilted his head, letting Third Eye and the Arcana fade away, “Or would you rather be called Dabi?”

A flare of rage shone within cerulean eyes, but the anger was covered by a dry huff.

“Just Dabi.” He deadpanned as he threw back his hood, his expression twisted with a smirk of his own. “How did you know my real name? I haven’t used it in over a decade.”

“Be careful,” Byakko warned, “He isn’t mentally stable, but he’ll see through any lie.”

“It was your quirk.”

Dabi sneered, “My quirk.”

“Cerberus knows fire better than anyone else.” Ren narrowed his eyes, “He tasted Endeavor’s fire in Hosu, and then made the connection to your flames when those fires broke out around Musutafu, I don’t forgive you for that by the way. Both of your quirks have the same soul to it. It only took some research to make the connection.”

“Of course .” Dabi threw his head back, laughing like dry cinder blowing in the breeze, “That bastard ratted me out without even realizing. Typical.” His expression fell and he stared at Ren again, his eyes piercing, “How much do you know about Endeavor?”

“Not much.” Ren shrugged, “He has a reputation for not being the nicest hero around.” Ren’s mouth went dry, remembering another face other than Dabi’s, “I know he’s your father, but-”

“Don’t you dare .” Dabi snarled, “That bastard doesn’t deserve to be called my father after what he did to me!”

Ren waited several moments under Dabi's scathing glare, his voice barely a whisper when he spoke next, "Why did you come here? What do you want with me? I doubt it was to chat about the new number one hero."

"Because I'm done with Shigaraki's bullshit, I want out." Dabi paced in tight circles, "Shigaraki's so obsessed with putting your head on a spike that the group is falling apart, he's lost his reason for being the Leader of the League. He's even teaming up with a bunch of lowlife Yakuza to try and take you down."

Panic struck Ren like ice cold water, "It wouldn't be the Shie Hassaikai, would it?"

"You hit the nail on the head." Dabi stopped, facing Ren, "You really know how to piss off the wrong people, don't you Joker? Whatever you took from the Shie Hassaikai, they want it back. They said they know how to exploit one of your weaknesses to get at you."

Ren's mind echoed with various snarls and angry threats, his own heart rate skyrocketing as the world tilted, "What weakness?"

"They didn't clarify." Dabi shrugged. "How about we make a deal?"

Ren frowned, "What kind of deal?"

"You'll help me save Toga and Twice from Shigaraki's twisted bullshit. I don't want them getting killed when League crashes and burns. In return, I'll help you out with whatever Shigaraki and Overhaul have planned for you. Throw a monkey wrench in the works, and all that."

Ren found himself stupefied. "... What?"

"Those dorks don't want to be in the League anymore, but they're too scared to leave." Dabi searched Ren's face, "The Shie Hassaikai knows that Mr. Compress is still alive, and Shigaraki almost killed Toga without thinking twice."

"This can't be a trick, can it?" Ren asked.

"I do not know, Trickster." Gabriel whispered, "He is being... sincere."

"What fool presents themselves in front of an enemy to grovel for their comrades?" Cu Chulainn's laughter turned bitter, "What a coward to be unable to do it by himself."

"Well?" Dabi tilted his head, "Do we have a deal or what?"

Ren opened his mouth, then closed it.

"Look," Dabi blinked at his silence, "They'll be gunning for you whether you like it or not, Joker. Don't you want someone on the inside?"

Ren's eyes widened, "You're really suggesting...?"

"Yep. Shigaraki and Overhaul might have a common enemy, but they still hate each other. It won't be that hard to screw things up."

He rolled the thought threw his mind. Dabi tucked his hands in his tattered hoodie and leaned against the wall, studying him.

"It won't hurt to have another ally on the inside." Satanael said.

"Hmph, he's no ally." Baal muttered. "You've fought against him before, no? It would be foolish to trust him now."

"But he's not our enemy anymore either." Ishtar crossed her arms, "He has grown since the Summer Camp."

"It is up to you, Trickster." Satanael's tone held a note of finality, "Whatever you choose, we'll support you."

"What do you want out of this?" Ren asked when he finally found his voice, scanning over the horrible scarring around Dabi's body, "I could do more than try to save your friends. I can heal-"

“I don’t want to be healed. Just make sure that Toga and Twice survive what comes next, that’s all I’m asking.” Dabi stuck out his hand, the staples on his wrist made Ren’s stomach churn, “I’m only offering once.”

“... Okay.” Ren hesitated, but ended up shaking Dabi’s hand. The skin felt ice cold, and the Arcana card above Dabi’s head rippled across Ren’s soul.

Dabi rubbed his chest after he let go, barely raising a brow at the weird feeling. He shoved his hands back in his pockets and turned on his heel, “I’ll see you whenever shit hits the fan.”

“Wait!”

Dabi stopped with his back to Ren, tilting his head to listen.

“Are you still after revenge?” Ren stated before he could stop himself, the Reverse Justice Arcana slithering sourly through his heart. Dabi went rigid. “I remember the Summer Camp. You said you wanted to see Endeavor squirm for what he did to you, so much that you don’t care about what happens to the rest of your family.”

“So?” Dabi turned and raised a scarred brow, “He has other victims besides me. Isn’t that what you’re all about, getting Justice for those society trampled on? Why shouldn’t I be able to take Justice into my own hands like you?”

The way Dabi spat the word Justice stung Ren to his core. Akechi’s smirking face ghosted Ren’s mind in a way that screamed ‘I told you so.’

“It’s funny,” Ren dryly chuckled as he pinched the bridge of his nose, “how you remind me so much of somebody else. In many ways, he was just like you. His father caused his mother’s death, and he grew up wanting revenge. He was so consumed by it that he didn’t realize what he could’ve had instead.”

“What’s your point?” Dabi asked, his lip curling.

“He was our friend, once.” Ren’s voice trembled, “We tried to convince him that there was another way, that we could help him. We almost got through to him, but in the end he was killed by his own father’s machinations.”

Dabi scoffed, “Are you seriously telling me I should abandon my revenge for the sake of friendship ? Don’t be ridiculous.”

“It’s not that, Touya-”

“You tread on thin ice.” Byakko whispered when Dabi’s expression turned livid.

Ren didn’t care. Nothing was stopping him from what he had wanted to say to Akechi before it was too late . The Reverse Justice Arcana mercilessly taunted him, slamming against his mind like heavy steel doors.

“You came here to get help for your friends, Touya.” Ren took another step closer, “Shouldn’t that count for something?”

Dabi’s piercing stare skewered Ren as the silence stretched on.

“I don’t care who you think you are, you don’t know me.” Dabi snarled, “I am not the same as your friend. I came here to get back at Shigaraki for all of the bullshit he dragged me and the others through.” Dabi turned his back to Ren and stomped down the alley.

“Stop right there!” A familiar voice echoed as a figure dropped down from the rooftops.

Ren tensed, Byakko’s icy magic flowing under his skin when Dabi raised a hand wreathed in blue flame, but he stopped when the figure was lit up in the darkness. Mr. Compress stood to his full height, streaks of blue shining on his Arsene mask.

“Well, I’ll be damned.” Dabi huffed as he extinguished his flames, “You really did survive.”

“Yes, I’m alive and kicking no thanks to the League.” Mr. Compress’ voice held nothing but pure vitriol, “You’ll understand if I don’t buy your little story. How do I know you won’t go back to the League and reveal our location?”

“Why would I bother making a deal with Joker if I wanted you all dead?” Dabi scoffed, “I would’ve let the League and the Shie Hassaikai ambush the bar. Between them, the new High-End Nomu, and Gigantomachia, I doubt any of you would live if you were taken off guard.”

“High-End Nomu? Gigantomachia?” Ren said as Mr. Compress glared holes through his mask at Dabi.

Cu Chulainn looked at his spear, “I doubt that refers to one of my attacks.”

“The High-End is the doctor’s latest plaything. Its ridiculously powerful.” Dabi hasn’t broken off his staring contest with Mr. Compress, “Think of all of the previous Nomu and combine them into one.”

“And this Gigantomachia?” Mr. Compress snapped, “That name is familiar.”

“All For One’s top subordinate. A literal walking calamity with a bunch of quirks stuffed in him. I doubt that petrified potato kept Gigantomachia around for kicks. Shigaraki wormed his way into the giant’s heart, and both of them are dead set on getting revenge on Joker.” Dabi grinned at Mr. Compress, “Is the interrogation over? I have other shit to do, you know. Places to be, crusty assholes to piss off.”

Mr. Compress looked at Ren, who nodded. Mr. Compress stepped aside, but watched Dabi like a hawk as he melded into the darkness.

He curled his hands into fists.

"You're too trusting for your own good, my boy." Mr. Compress stated dryly, "I hope you know what you're doing."

"I just... I want to help him, too."

Ren sensed the pity radiating from Mr. Compress, "Some people don't want to be helped, Ren. In this case, it may do more harm than good. I sincerely hope your good will won't come back to bite us later."

The others jumped down from the rooftop, wearing varying degrees of worry. Except for Lavenza, who remained as calm as can be.

"We heard everything." La Brava stated, deeply frowning, "Do you think we're compromised?"

"I do not think so." Lavenza said as she looked to where Dabi disappeared, "He was not lying when he came to ask the Trickster for assistance. He formed a... damaged Arcana. I know not what to make of it."

"Lady Lavenza's right. I'm not sensing anyone else in these alleys, so he definitely came alone." Morgana said, curling his tail around himself.

"It's no wonder the Yakuza disappeared off the streets," Gentle Criminal stroked his facial hair, "If they're plotting something alongside the League."

"But Dabi wasn't clear as to what 'weakness' they're targeting!" Morgana stated.

Byakko's glacial breath washed over Ren's soul, "I suggest getting aid from the heroes. It's simply too dangerous to keep this to ourselves. Your lives depend on it."

Ren's eyes widened, "I never thought I'd hear that from you."

Byakko snorted, but said nothing more.

“But we can’t bring them here.” La Brava said when Ren told them.

“Gee, it’s almost as if we have an isolated location perfect for secret meetings.” Mr. Compress said, his sour tone colored by amusement. “Or a brilliant hacker, maybe we won’t have to meet them face to face.”

La Brava rolled her eyes.

Gentle Criminal looked at Ren, “So, what’s the plan?”

Ren took a moment to think, the others waiting patiently.

“Tonight we’ll sleep in shifts.” Ren steeled himself and looked at La Brava, “Detective Tsukauchi has been involved with the investigation since the USJ, he’s a good middle man without being one of the heroes currently searching for us. Send an encrypted message to Tsukauchi with a warning. We’ll cover our tracks and go to the harbor if we have to. Our safety, and Eri’s especially, takes priority.”

There was a round of uneasy agreements and the Thieves returned inside.

“The bastard was moved again.” Gran Torino grumbled.

“I know.” Tsukauchi massaged his temples, the map of Japan on the table had been burned into his retinas after staring at it for so many weeks, covered in red string and X’s, “I was hoping to catch either Gigantomachia or Kurogiri by now, but they’re playing it smart.”

“Do you think they’re being fed info?”

Tsukauchi frowned, “I don’t know. Its possible that there could be leaks...” Tsukauchi yawned and rubbed his eyes.

Gran Torino scoffed, “I thought you were used to pulling all-nighters by now.”

“A few all-nighters in a row, yes. Going on several weeks worth of combing through mountains looking for a someone with a warp quirk and their charge? Not so much.” Tsukauchi did a double take at the light draping in from the opening of the command tent, “So much for narrowing down Gigantomachia’s next location before sunrise...”

“Bah, get yourself together. Drink some coffee and let’s get to work.”

Tsukauchi wanted to slam his head against the table as Gran Torino laughed and walked out, chilled mountain air freshening the staleness of the tent. His stiff muscles protested as he stood from the hard chair. At the moment, his phone pinged.

He picked it up to see a message that was supposed to arrive several hours ago. The reception all the way up in the mountains was spotty in the best of times, but of all the luck-

[???

SOS: Shie Hassaikai and League Of Villains working together to target Joker’s weakness. Warn other Pro Heroes ASAP.

Tsukauchi’s tried to reply or call the number back. Nothing went through.

“Shit !” Tsukauchi bolted out of the tent.

By the time they realized what the message meant, it had already been too late.

Haru’s quirk filled her vision with dancing auras, each person in the Blue Lotus weaving together ribbons of breath-taking lights that nobody else could see. Haru looked at Risumi as her gentle lavender aura trembled against the massive morning crowd. She felt for Risumi, watching as the woman worked tirelessly against an endless wave of hungry customers.

Despite Haru's gentle prodding, neither Risumi nor Ayumu wanted to hire any additional help. They didn't have to say why.

Haru sighed and finished her tea. She was about to continue her day when something dark crept along the edge of her quirk's range, appearing as if from nowhere. Oily smudges that sapped life from the other colors. Auras that crumbled and molted and shifted into undulating waves of blackness... and they drew near liked a cursed tide.

Haru's heart pounded as two shadows sailed across the front window. One paused to stare at the mask charm hanging on the window, a tendril of hatred skittering through the air. The chime of the bell was muted to Haru's ears as she stared at the pair.

One wore ragged dark clothing, their hood hiding their features save for a few strands of pale hair.

The other was a man wearing a green jacket with a feathered purple collar, his face half-covered with a strange bird mask.

Haru looked at Risumi; the woman was so busy she couldn't see Haru.

She shuffled along and kept her head low as she went to the door, the pair not paying an old woman any mind. Being so close to them made her blood freeze, but she pushed through. For Risumi. For Ayumu. For young Hitoshi. For another poor boy that was so lost in the world.

Haru frantically looked around when she was out the door. At first, heroes and police patrolled this area nonstop. But as the months rolled by and signs of any nefarious activity remained at zero... their presence faded. From multiple daily check-ins, to once every other day, to once a week... to none. Now, the only one who stuck around was Officer Akane, who dozed in an unmarked car down the street.

Haru hobbled to the car as fast as her old bones dared, and he startled awake when she knocked on the driver window. He rolled down the window, his smile fading when he saw her expression.

"Haru-san?" Akane's brow wrinkled in concern. "What's wrong?"

"St-strange men went into the cafe! Th-their auras... they're like walking death . Akane-san, I don't think they stopped by for coffee."

Akane stiffened, "Do you think they're hostile?"

"I-I don't know, but I couldn't warn Risumi without tipping them off. Please, you have to do something!"

Akane reached for his radio, "Calling all nearby heroes to the Blue Lotus, we have a potential villain situation at hand."

Haru couldn't understand the static garble that responded when Akane hopped out of his vehicle.

"Stay here, Haru-san." He said as he placed a firm hand on her shoulder, "I'll scope out the situation before the heroes arrive, so just sit tight, okay?"

Haru nodded as Akane casually walked towards the cafe. Perhaps it was a blessing that he came in an unmarked vehicle and wore civilian clothes, but that didn't stop her from wringing her aching hands together as Akane's aura joined the others, a clear raindrop falling into a bleeding black lake. She waited a long, agonizing minute.

Suddenly, all the colors ceased to exist.

The earth ruptured and buildings were torn apart. She was thrown off her feet, Akane's car partially shielding her from chunks of concrete and glass raining down from the sky. Haru forced herself to her feet as an ear-ringing silence permeated the whole street.

Her hands flew to her mouth.

The corpse of the Blue Lotus was a broken and twisted thing. The roof was blown away, windows gouged out with glass peppering the ground, the charming tables at the front reduced to innumerable splinters.

Tears ran down Haru's face as she traversed the deadly terrain, stopping where the front door had been. The first thing she registered was the horrible silence, broken here and there by ominous creaks or groans. Shards of sunlight pierced through the heavy clouds of dust, the staleness eradicating the scents of sugar and spice, the smells she had associated with love .

"Risumi!? Ayumu!?" Haru screamed, her voice carrying over the hollow remains. "Akane!?"

No answer.

She jumped as her foot knocked something, a familiar chiming noise louder than the ringing of her ears. She knelt down and picked up the bell that had been attached to the door, next to it was Joker's mask charm, nearly cracked in half and plastered with grime. She held them to her chest, the itchy dust clinging on her face cleared with fresh tear stains.

Several bodies came into view when a sudden breeze cleared the lingering cloud. Alive, but bleeding heavily.

"Akane-san!" She rushed to the officer's side.

He was unconscious, impaled in several places by debris. His left leg was a mangled mess of flesh.

Sirens howled across the city as heroes arrived on the scene. She barely felt herself being gently pulled away by first responders, her eyes not leaving Akane's body as other emergency workers swarmed Akane and the other injured patrons.

Another oily stain appeared over the cafe's corpse, cards raining down from a cloud of black mist. Hundreds, thousands fell over Musutafu that morning.

One fluttered down in front of her, as soft as a feather, and landed on her shoe.

With a trembling hand, she picked up the black and gray card reeking of death.

For the insufferable thief, Joker,

You took something from us, so we stole something precious from you in return. We demand a trade. We'll give you 24 hours to respond before Ayumu and Risumi are painfully dismantled, piece by piece, and delivered to various police stations around Japan.

We'll be waiting.

- The Shie Hassaikai

Sips tea from the safety of a submarine somewhere deep under the ocean, smirking

See you guys on August 13th!

Also Chapter 8 of the Thieves Den will be updated with the Arcanas.

Broadcast Accident

Chapter 78: Broadcast Accident

“Are you alright, Iida?” Hawks asked when Tensei frowned at his laptop.

“Yeah, it must’ve been a glitch or something.”

I'm not responsible for any broken devices caused by this chapter ;)

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

Check my Twitter for some exciting news!

Hitoshi wrinkled his nose as the grass tickled his face, barely holding back a sneeze as he rocked to and fro on his stomach. His main predicament? He’d gotten himself tangled up while practicing with a capture weapon, his arms knotted behind his back, one of his legs painfully bent over his back where a strip of fabric pulled at his ankle. His other leg floundered as he tried to right himself like a fish out of water.

A sigh came from somewhere behind him, “I told you not to practice by yourself.”

“Uh...” He contorted his neck to look at Aizawa, grinning sheepishly, “I’m not sorry?”

“Of course you’re not.” Aizawa huffed, an amused smirk hidden by his scarf, “This is why you should always have a knife on hand.

There's nothing worse than one of your strengths being turned against you in battle."

Aizawa unsheathed the large knife at his lower back and cut him free. Hitoshi face-planted into the dirt when there was no tension to keep his head off the ground. He rushed to his feet and wiped the dirt off his gym clothes.

Hitoshi cleared his throat to mask his embarrassment, "When did you get back? You've been gone a lot recently."

Aizawa studied Hitoshi, his smirk disappearing, "I returned late last night to check in on my brats before I head out again this morning with some of my other brats. I apologize for not being around to help you train. Some missions... take longer than others."

"What's that supposed to mean?"

Aizawa opened his mouth, but they were interrupted by a small parade of footsteps. They turned to the approaching group of teachers. Hound Dog, Ectoplasm with a few of his clones, and Nezu, who rode on Ectoplasm's shoulder. Nezu's eyes sent off warning sirens in Hitoshi's head. How such glossy black eyes could hide so much fury and sorrow, he'd never know.

He was used to silver.

Aizawa frowned, "What's wrong?"

"Shinsou Hitoshi is coming to my office." Nezu stated, his tone bordering on frigid, "There's been an incident."

Hitoshi froze.

Aizawa's brow was heavy, but he urged Hitoshi to follow. They headed for the main building, the early morning sunshine reflecting off of it like a bright beacon of hope, if only the dour atmosphere wasn't choking Hitoshi with a sudden sense of doom. Stifling silence dogged them until the door to Nezu's office clicked shut.

The Ectoplasm clones stood guard outside, while Hound Dog and the real Ectoplasm took seats around the office, the way they stared at Hitoshi sent butterflies into his stomach. Nezu went to his chair, gesturing to the seat across from his desk.

Hitoshi ignored Admiral Feesh as he sat down at the edge of the chair, his heart pounding.

"What's going on?" Aizawa stood at Hitoshi's side.

"I'll not mince words," Nezu clasped his paws together, "The Blue Lotus has been destroyed and Ayumu and Risumi Shinsou have been kidnapped by Yakuza."

Hitoshi's heart stuttered, every beat accompanied by a startled stab of pain. His skin prickled as his ears rung, the sounds around him muffled as his world turned gray.

"Wh... what?" Hitoshi whispered, his tongue suddenly felt like a lead weight in his mouth.

"What happened?" Aizawa snapped as his whole body went rigid.

"Less than an hour ago, a patron tried to warn the police about potentially hostile persons entering the Blue Lotus." Nezu looked at Aizawa, "From Haru-san's descriptions, we conclude that Overhaul was one of the main perpetrators."

Nezu set a gray and black card in front of Hitoshi. It was nearly identical to Joker's calling cards, the righteous Phantom Thief insignia replaced by a plague mask and bowler hat. A sick mockery of the real thing.

Bile crept up Hitoshi's throat as he read and reread it.

"It seems my theory was correct. Joker did rescue Eri and escape Overhaul's clutches, the Shie Hassaikai wanted revenge... and now they want to trade your parents for-"

"Grrrrr, Nezu. " Hound Dog snapped as he went to Hitoshi's other side. A strong, but soothing hand clasped Hitoshi's shoulder, "That's enough. Ectoplasm and I will stay with the boy. You and Aizawa have an important mission ahead of you."

"N-no, let me... let me help." The four adults stared at him with wide eyes, "I can... I can help!"

"Shinsou, we can't allow that." Aizawa's pained grimace was a slap to the face.

"Indeed." Nezu tried a smile, but Hitoshi only saw it as another punch to the gut, "Yes, I know what you can do. You are talented, and your skills have been honed by many a fine teacher. However, unlike us or most of your peers in the Hero Course, you don't possess a Provisional Licence. Your actions could be considered vigilantism, and I would have to rethink your position as a hero hopeful. Am I understood?"

Hitoshi opened and closed his mouth, frustrated tears pricking at his eyes.

Nezu sighed, "That said, I know this is painful for you." The rat-mouse-thing scooted his chair back and deeply bowed to Hitoshi, "I apologize for not preventing this. I thought we made the proper preparations, but clearly I was wrong."

"I don't want your damn apology!" Hitoshi yelled. His voice cracked and tears streamed down his cheeks, "Just... just bring them back!"

Nezu firmly nodded. He approached Hitoshi and squeezed his hand, Hitoshi barely felt it over the blanket of cold detachment overtaking him.

Aizawa knelt in front of Hitoshi, “I promise we’ll get your parents back, safe and sound. Nezu, let’s go.”

“I feel like a damn hypocrite.” Aizawa said after they left Hitoshi to Hound Dog and Ectoplasm with heavy hearts.

“It cannot be helped. They’ll take care of the boy while we’re gone. In the meantime,” Nezu climbed up his shoulder as they pounded down the hall. “I already sent the message to the interns in 1-A and 3-A, instructing them to meet us at the entrance ASAP.”

“Is it wise to bring them?” Aizawa growled, “They’re too emotionally attached to this case with Joker, Eri, and now the tragedy of the Blue Lotus. They should stay here too.”

Nezu chuckled coldly, “Oh, but if we did that, then we might as well replace the whole team at Nighteye’s agency. You and I would be taken off as well. Would you prefer a different team to handle this dire case on such a short notice?”

“... No.”

Nezu nodded, “I thought so. I cannot even imagine Joker’s rage when he hears of this atrocity. What fools. The villains have signed their own death warrants... and I only hope we can prevent something truly catastrophic from happening this time around. Let’s not fail this boy and young Shinsou’s parents again.”

Aizawa rushed out of the building. The group of interns, true to Nezu’s word, hovered at U.A.’s entrance with costume cases in hand. The Big Three were at the head of the group, resolve rolling off of them in waves. For the 1-A interns, traces of fear in their eyes were overwritten by determination, the will to act and protect clear in their body language.

Aizawa gave them a stern glance, “Let’s go.”

No other words were needed as they marched out of U.A.

Kaito's stomach knotted at Eri's troubled sleep.

At his urging, the others went downstairs and left him alone with her, both to make their final preparations and to give him the privacy he wanted for this incoming discussion.

Eventually Eri stirred with a rustle of fabric, the blankets falling around her as she sat up. Ren's handkerchief was clutched tightly in her hands before her sleepy gaze landed on him.

He smiled, "Morning, sleepy head."

She blinked a few times, "Morning..."

Then the memories hit. Her eyes widened, her exhaustion washed away by mounting horror.

Tears came freely as she trembled, "I-I'm sorry. I-I'm sorry, I didn't mean-" A hiccuping gasp escaped her lips, "I-I didn't mean it I'm sorry!"

"Eri, it's not your fault." She flinched, but didn't shy away as he rubbed circles on her back, "It's not your fault. Ren is okay. Ishtar and Byakko are okay. Nobody was hurt."

"B-But I-" She buried her face in the handkerchief, "Ren-nii could've disappeared! I-I could've- I-I almost killed him! I don't want him to get hurt because of me!"

Kaito steeled himself against the raw agony in her voice. Such a young girl should never experience such pain.

"Eri, look at me." She shuddered against a muffled sob, but complied, "It's not your fault," He reiterated, "What you went through is not your fault. What happened with your father is not your fault . You didn't do anything to deserve this."

Eri stilled, "How did you....? How do you know...? I-I'm... cursed ."

"Do you remember what Ishtar said?"

"Y-yeah."

"She's right. You're not cursed, you just have a power you don't know how to control yet." Kaito's expression softened, "Believe it or not, we're pretty much in the same boat. Both of our quirks mutated so far off the mark that nobody could've predicted it."

"... What?"

"Do you want to know what my quirk is?" Eri blinked away the last tears and nodded. "I relive people's lives whenever I look into their eyes. Think of it like... like a witch's spell. I can't control it, or stop it when it's active. I'm forced to spend years living as somebody else, and when I come back... sometimes I don't feel comfortable in my own skin for a while."

Man. Woman. He spent so many years as either, and spent a few lives as neither.

Eri furrowed her brow, "So, not a spell... a curse?"

"... Yeah. My quirk first activated when I was younger than you are now... and from a crowd filled with hundreds of people. My sense of self was lost for a long time, and I hated my quirk when I finally came back to myself so many years later. I practically spent my whole life in a hospital. I hid from the world so my cursed power wouldn't hurt me anymore."

He never told a soul about his escape from that weird government hospital. Not even Ren or the others knew the full truth, and he wasn't about to go into details with Eri. He hadn't trusted his own parents not to send him back to that place, so he robbed them of nearly every yen and had been running away ever since. An old gnarled knot of guilt throbbed in his heart when we wondered how they were doing, or if they ever wondered what became of their coward of a child.

He pushed those ancient thoughts aside when Eri sniffled and looked at him with her big, watery eyes.

“Do you... still hate your quirk?”

“I used to, until Ren and the others came along.” Kaito looked to the stairs, Eri’s eyes followed, “They accepted me for who I am, for what I’ve been through, and they’re helping me learn that my quirk shouldn’t control my life anymore.”

He swiveled his head back to Eri. Kaito took the handkerchief and gently wiped away her tears.

“I lived through your life last night, Eri. Your power is soft and gentle. Ren, Ishtar, Morgana, me, and the others will help you see that, if you let us.” Kaito placed his hand over her arm, their suppressant cuffs clinking together, “Okay?”

Eri nodded as she lay her other hand on top of his, “O-Okay. I... I’ll try, Kaito-san.”

She would need a lot more than one conversation to heal years of trauma, but the seed planted by Ishtar would be watered with his and Ren’s reassurances. Maybe, after a lot of sun and gentle rain, that seed could bloom into the most beautiful flower.

“You don’t need honorifics with me, Eri.” He patted her head, “Do you want to take off the Quirk Suppressant?”

“N-no.” Eri traced the silvery band around her arm. “N-not yet.”

“Alright, but we’ll have to take it off eventually.” Kaito ruffled her hair, “Are you hungry? We can go downstairs for breakfast, and you can see Ren for yourself.”

Eri wiped away the last of her tears, settling back into a neutral expression. Her growling stomach answered for her. Before he could say anything else, claws frantically scrambled up the stairs.

“Kaito!”

Kaito turned to Morgana, whose eyes were nearly black from terror, and got to his feet, “What’s wrong now?”

“I-It’s.... I-It’s...” Morgana wildly shook his head, “Just hurry downstairs!”

Morgana was gone in a flash.

“Stay here until I know what’s happening, okay?” Kaito said.

Eri nodded and buried herself in her blankets.

Kaito raced downstairs, through the kitchen and into the bar front. The hairs on his arms and the back of his neck stood on end as he walked into a glacial den, his stomach plummeting as an animalistic terror gripped him. The culmination of countless years of experience screamed at him to run .

He saw Ren leaning over the bar counter with blazing gold eyes, glaring at nothing. Ren’s fingers were bone white as they clawed into the wood, small cracks splintering the counter like a shattered mirror.

Kaito had never seen such frigid rage consume Ren before. It wasn’t the type of volcanic anger where someone lashed out in the heat of the moment, but seething hatred that swallowed any other emotion in ice, sapped the very life and color from their surroundings. Deepened the twisted shadows around him.

Kaito had to stop himself from fleeing as he looked to the others.

Atsuhiro paced around the bar, expression grim. Tobita and Manami frantically whispered to one another, Manami close to tears as her eyes flicked to Ren. Tobita comforted her. Shuichi and Lady Stubbs were behind the bar, trying and failing not to panic at Ren's odd stillness as the golden storm brewed in his eyes.

"What's going on?" Kaito whispered, his voice too loud in the frozen silence.

"Look." Morgana glanced at the laptop on the bar.

Kaito's heart pounded as he scrolled through pictures of the Blue Lotus' remains. Other tabs were open to various news sites and social media, all of it plagued by images of the horrible black and gray card.

BREAKING: Blue Lotus Destroyed By Villains!

How To Prepare For A Spontaneous Typhoon And Other 'Natural' Disasters.

The Imminent Rise And Fall Of The Yakuza.

Fake Calling Cards Rain Over Musutafu!

Are The Heroes Responsible For Failing The Blue Lotus!?

Japan Holds Its Breath As People Await The Fate Of The Shinsou Family; How Will Joker React?

Kaito clicked away from the articles and to Joker's Spotlight being flooded with random comments.

'Oh my god, Japan's not ready for another typhoon!'

'How could they do this!?! The Blue Lotus was my favorite cafe!!'

'Welp, the Shie Hassaikai or whatever these losers named themselves had a good run. I hope they have nice plots picked out for their graves.'

'I wonder what Joker took that was so important??'

'Uh.... are they DUMB??'

'WRECK THEM JOKER!!!!'

'Wow, I'm going to need so much popcorn for this shit show.'

Kaito thickly swallowed and turned to Ren, "What do you want to do?"

Ren stood there, hunched over as his unseeing eyes glowed a dazzling citrine.

Morgana put his paw on Ren's arm, "Ren?"

The bar creaked when Ren snapped out of it. A renewed chill seeped into Kaito's bones as the air became smothered by Ren's power. The others weren't as subtle.

"I promised Eri she would be safe. Giving her up isn't an option." Ren spoke slow, but each syllable dripped with unimaginable strength plucking at their souls, "But I won't abandon Ayumu and Risumi either."

"If being with you taught me anything, Ren," Tobita whispered, "It's that there are always more than two options."

"Ah, yes." Atsuhiro gained a sharp smirk, his face pale against Ren's soul-searing aura, "Give up Eri to trade for the Shinsou couple, but I doubt they'll let us go that easily. Or, we stay away and seal the their fate. Both are unacceptable."

"S-so...?" Manami asked, her hands tightly clasped together.

"So we find our own solution. The secret third option, if you will." Atsuhiro looked at Ren, "The villains think they have the upper hand, but they've forgotten a vital little detail about you. As much as I loathed this idea before, teaming up with Nighteye and the other heroes will give us the advantage we need."

"All of us, plus a huge group of Japan's top heroes!?" Shuichi cried, "They don't know what they've gotten themselves into!"

"Merp!"

Ren closed his eyes. Morgana and the others gaped as Joker's costume slowly materialized, not within a burst of blinding flames, but from a silky veil of cold blue cinders falling over him like fresh snow. Even the shadows within the bar seemed to recoil as Joker's icy golden eyes snapped open. The atmosphere hummed with the power of a Demon Lord.

"La Brava."

"Y-yes?"

Joker pulled at his gloves, "It's finally time to meet the heroes." He chuckled, his smirk ice cold, "We'll be crashing the meeting they're undoubtedly having right about now. Hack into Nighteye's agency and see what our options are."

Manami squared her shoulders, "Okay! I put a backdoor to Nighteye's security days ago just in case. I'll comb through their information first before you make yourself known, see if they found anything concrete on the Shie Hassaikai."

"Ooh, that'll give us time to set the stage; the proper lighting, the background, the actors!" Atsuhiro beamed as he scanned Joker from head to toe, "All of it must be perfect if you are to present yourself! Leave that part to me, Joker!"

"At least someone's excited..." Shuichi muttered.

“Ren needs to calm down first.” Kaito said, Joker blinked at him. “I talked to Eri about last night and she’s doing a little better, but we don’t want to scare her. She’ll blame herself if she sees you like this.”

“Sorry.” Joker clenched his shaking fists and took long, deep breaths. After a few minutes, the hellish power withered away, almost slinking back into its master. Joker opened his eyes, his rage tempered into his razor sharp gaze. “Get started, La Brava.”

“O-on it!” Manami swiped the computer and they went upstairs.

“Ren-nii!!” Eri bolted from her futon and crashed into Joker, who had knelt down in time to wrap her in his arms. “I-I’m sorry…”

“Don’t be sorry, Eri. You did nothing wrong.”

Joker tightened his hug as her little fingers dug into his tailcoat. Joker whispered encouragements Kaito couldn’t hear, and they pulled back after a few long minutes.

“Eri, can you do something for me?” Joker rested his gloved hands on her tiny shoulders. Eri stared at him with wide, watery eyes, “I need you to stay with Kaito while we do something important. Can you be a brave big girl while we work?”

Eri sniffled and wiped her eyes. She stood as tall as she could for a child her size, and nodded with determination. Joker gently ruffled her hair and stood up, looking between Kaito and Tobita.

“Can you two take care of her while we set up?”

“Of course.” Tobita smiled despite his pallor complexion, and bowed to Eri, “Shall we go make breakfast, Eri? I know a delicious recipe for strawberry crepes with whipped cream.”

“O-okay.”

She looked at Joker one last time before she went downstairs, hand in hand with Kaito and Tobita.

“Now, I know just the trick to make you look far more intimidating for the heroes!” Kaito heard Atsuhiro say before they reached the bottom of the stairs.

Risumi thrashed against her restraints.

The burlap sack over her head made her vision swim in darkness, the suffocating fabric clogging her mouth and nose whenever she tried to gasp for breath. But no matter how she fought, her hands were bound behind her back in thick leather gloves to make her quirk useless, and those themselves were attached to cold metal chains on the wall.

She could barely get her bearings before the bag was ripped off of her head. She clenched her eyes shut against the startling brightness.

“Risumi!!”

Risumi forced her eyes open, staring across the white room to Ayumu. They had both been chained to the opposite walls, so close but yet so far from each other. Ayumu had some sort of collar around his neck, with sharp spikes digging into his skin.

“Did we say you could talk?” A raspy voice scraped into her ears, and a man with pale hair and a hand attached to his face kicked Ayumu. “Shut it, you useless NPC.”

“Enough.” Another man with a white hood and mask said, “The boss wants to talk to them.”

The pale-haired man scoffed.

Risumi’s blinked rapidly to study the crowd as her eyes finally adjusted. The pale haired man stood within another group of people; A girl with twin buns wearing a school uniform, a man with deep purple scars wearing a long black coat, another man in a full bodysuit, and a... creature crawling on all fours, its hungry golden eyes digging into her.

The other group wore plague masks, builds of all shapes and sizes. She recognized the leader from the cafe as his shadow fell over her, the one in the gold and red plague mask that pushed himself to the front of her line.

“Nemoto.” He droned, his voice lacking any emotion.

A person in a black plague mask and bowler hat stepped forward, “Do you know why you’re here?”

“No.” Risumi shivered as control of her own mouth was taken away.

“Do you know any of Joker’s weaknesses?”

“N-No, I-”

“Leave her alone, you cowards!” Ayumu screamed.

“You insolent worm!” Nemoto shouted, “Be quiet, otherwise I’ll silence you myself! Overhaul has deemed you-”

“Enough Nemoto.” The man with the red mask said. Nemoto obliged with a bowed head. This must be Overhaul. “You should be grateful, Ayumu and Risumi Shinsou. Your sacrifice will be used for a higher purpose.”

“What the hell is that supposed to mean?” Risumi snapped.

A weird little stuffed plush at Overhaul’s ankles cackled and jabbed a sharp finger at her, “It means you should be overjoyed to be bait for Joker! We’ll wipe his disease from the face of the earth thanks to you!!”

“Yes.” Overhaul sighed as Risumi exchanged a horrified look with her husband. The man knelt in front of her, “If you cooperate, I’ll make your deaths quick and painless. But if you try to cause trouble before Joker gets here-”

Risumi did what any sane woman would do when being held captive by crazy villains.

She spit in his face.

An inaudible gasp swept the room. Overhaul’s eyes shrunk into pinpricks as his eyebrows twitched like malfunctioning clockwork, his skin bubbling with hives as her spit dribbled down his cheek. Risumi continued to stare Overhaul in the eye with defiance.

His hand was over her face in the blink of an eye.

“Risumi!!” Ayumu screamed.

Chains strained as Ayumu tried to reach her. She couldn’t see how the weird abomination with golden eyes tackled him, cackling as it clutched Ayumu’s head in its meaty hands, forcing him to watch.

Risumi was frozen as Overhaul’s fingers clawed into her hair, every atom in her body screamed as her whole being was taken hostage. She couldn’t breathe. Couldn’t move . Somewhere in her heart, she knew Overhaul could end her without lifting a finger. She didn’t know how much time passed, an eternity or a few seconds made no difference when death had you in his grasp. Eons passed before Overhaul slowly pulled away.

She gasped and frantically backed herself against the wall.

“Are you alright, Overhaul?” The man with the white hood asked as if Overhaul was the threatened one.

Overhaul wiped his face with a clean rag from his pocket, and threw it on the ground. He then turned on his heel and approached one of his masked subordinates, the largest muscled one with metal knuckledusters and a skin tight black mask in the shape of a bird. A scream was locked behind Risumi's throat as the person exploded in a crimson wave, staining the wall and floor. She violently flinched when blood splattered on her face and the knuckle dusters crashed onto the ground with a loud clang.

The other people in plague masks hardly reacted as Overhaul breathed hard, while shock overtook the other group.

"Why the hell did you do that!?" The pale haired man snapped after an extended silence, "You should've killed her off! We only need one NPC."

"We need both of them alive, Shigaraki." Overhaul growled as he stared at her in disgust, the bloody mask of his former comrade clutched in his hands, "I could kill her and bring her back... but I don't want to disturb the natural process. This could prove a more useful hostage than the both of them."

Shigaraki tilted his head, "... What ?"

"I sensed a specific bundle of cells in your womb." Overhaul's voice was like a blade across her skin. He burned her with the manic sheen in his eyes, "Congratulations, Shinsou Risumi. You're expecting ."

The news struck her worse than the blood on her face.

"... Risumi?"

The whole world tilted when she looked at Ayumu, the beast still holding him down. Many emotions flickered through his expression. Happiness. Awe. Terror .

"I... I didn't..." She whispered. "Y-you could be lying..."

"We could get you a test. You're far enough along to where the results would be immediate."

Something in Overhaul's voice told her he wasn't lying.

“Regardless, you know why you must obey.” Overhaul headed for the door. He opened it and paused in the door frame, “Soramitsu, Yu, Toya, clean up Rikiya’s mess. Shigaraki, you and your group watch the prisoners until Joker arrives with my asset.”

Overhaul left with his remaining cohorts, leaving a trail of blood in their wake. The three who stayed behind turned towards the giant bloodstain, the one with a burlap sack around his neck, tied with a thick rope around his neck, and with eye holes and a creepy stitched smile, lumbered over to the grisly scene.

The scarecrow-like man stopped before the bloodied knuckle dusters, slowly pulling the knot that kept the sack in place. Instead of moving knuckledusters away like a normal person, he lifted the bag on his head to reveal a too-wide mouth with straight teeth, and began eating . A bubble of nausea rose into Risumi’s throat at the solid crunch of metal and slurping of blood. The other group visibly recoiled. Aside from the girl with twin buns, who watched with devious fascination.

The bald man with the plain white face mask sighed, “I’ll get a mop.”

The last Yakuza, another plague masked man with a crazed look in his eyes and shoulder length yellow hair, cackled, “Hurry up before Soramitsu finishes his meal.”

How can they be so callous? They just watched their boss murder one of their so-called allies in cold blood right in front of them, and their response was to... eat his remains and make jokes? Do they even have any human emotions left?

“Eugh.”

“Dabi! Where are you going?” Shigaraki snapped at the man with purple scars.

Dabi stopped by the door, scowling, “Getting the lady something calming to drink and a washcloth to wipe her face. A pregnant woman shouldn't be too stressed out, you moron. If you even think about touching them while I'm gone, I'll light your crusty ass on fire. Kurogiri's not here to stop me this time."

Shigaraki rolled his eyes, before glancing at the Yakuza in utter distaste, "I'm not sticking around with these circus freaks. Hood, you're with me. Toga and Twice can play babysitter."

The cackling beast crawled off Ayumu and followed Shigaraki out the door.

"Oh MY GOD! That... was... awesome !! I'll remember the look on Overhaul's face forever! " The school girl rushed to Risumi with stars in her eyes, bouncing happily. Risumi barely understood her past the crunch crunch. "Do you really have a baby in your tummy!? Twice, we should have a party! Go tell Dabi to get a cake!"

"Whaaaaat, we have to throw a baby shower!!" Twice flailed his arms, "Ew, no! Children are gross! Why do we have to babysit!? THIS. IS. TORTURE!"

Risumi locked eyes with her husband. His expression broke her heart. They couldn't come close enough to comfort one another. She took a breath as the girl babbled on excitedly, and tried to convey Strength and hope through her eyes.

After all, Joker would come for them.

It's only a matter of time before these villains would sorely regret their actions.

Midoriya tapped his fingers on his knee, staring at the horrible pictures on display via the projector. He still couldn't believe what happened to the Blue Lotus. It was unrecognizable now, all twisted metal and the bare warped frame of the building. His classmates' expressions were all sickened by the photos, and Kirishima barely held back tears before Fat Gum gave him some silent encouragement.

“I believe they escaped because the Shie Hassaikai had Kurogiri,” Iida Tensei said as he read a report from his laptop, “Detective Tsukauchi gathered several witness statements around Musutafu saying they noticed a black and purple cloud before the cards poured out.”

“So the League has teamed up with the Shie Hassaikai to get at Joker.” Nighteye steepled his fingers, expression grim.

“Those bastards!” Miruko slammed her fist on the table, “Why’d they have to bring innocent people into this!?”

“They’re villains.” Endeavor stated dryly, “They don’t care about civilian casualties if it means they can get what they want.”

Gang Orca radiated fury, “Why aren’t we out there doing something about it!?”

“We located their compound right before things went south,” Hawks scratched the back of his head, frowning, “But even so, I can’t send in any feathers to stage a rescue since they have a warper on hand.”

“I agree. If we make one wrong move, anything to tip off the Shie Hassaikai, then the hostages will be killed.” Eraserhead said with a dark expression, “We can’t rush into this blindly.”

“So we just sit here and waste time instead? The card said they’d only wait 24 hours before-”

“Gang Orca,” Ryukyu turned to him, her own posture fragile, “I know . I want them to be safe alongside Joker and Eri, but our hands are tied until we have more information and a solid plan of attack.”

“Any news on Joker’s Spotlight, Iida?” Fat Gum asked.

Iida Tensei sighed, “None. He still has about 20 hours to respond before...”

The projector screen turned fuzzy. A moment of static before it returned to normal, but Midoriya’s eyes snapped to it.

Nobody else seems to have noticed, except for Nezu, who suddenly grinned as his tail happily bobbed back and forth.

“Are you alright, Iida?” Hawks asked when Tensei frowned at his laptop.

“Yeah, it must’ve been a glitch or something.”

“Oh, I don’t think it’s a mere glitch!” Nezu chirped.

A velvety chuckle echoed around the room. Midoriya jolted as several gasps broke out.

“Nezu, you should know better than to ruin a perfectly good entrance.”

The projector changed to a spinning icon of a red top hat and a mask. Midoriya’s jaw dropped when Joker appeared on screen, an icy thrum running down his spine like the tip of a knife. His costume was different, accented with deeper void blacks and brilliant gold, his white domino mask equally changed to fit the new color scheme.

Darkness clung to the edges of the screen. The camera was put on a lower angle to look up at Joker, with a cold light highlighting the underside of his face and clothes, but made his blazing golden eyes gleam like drops of pure sunlight. Cold sunlight. A sort of righteous light threatening to burn evildoers with a single glance.

Midoriya felt like an ant while Joker looked like a regal king staring down at his subjects on a throne of wooden crates, his legs elegantly crossed while he rested a cheek against his fist.

Seeing Joker with unrivaled glory sent a jolt of cold fear and excitement through his heart, One For All thrummed under his skin in response to his terror. He exchanged horrified looks with Todoroki Shoto. Kirishima gawked at Joker, unshed tears building up in his eyes again.

Tsuyu let out a low croak while Uraraka covered her mouth with both hands, eyes so wide they could pop out of her head.

Tokoyami's feathers bristled out and his crimson eyes held nothing but thoughtful respect.

The Big Three were deadlocked, exchanging certain looks that traded several sentences in a second.

The heroes within Joker's estranged group openly gaped at the vigilante. Eraserhead locked on Joker with an unreadable expression.

A long silence strangled everyone. Joker's smirk widened, and he opened his mouth to make the first move-

"Is Eri okay!?" Midoriya blurted. Joker looked to him, and Midoriya shuddered as those eyes, a gaze that swallowed the hearts of stars, stared into his very soul. "Is she... she's okay, right?"

"Eri's fine." Joker's lips tugged upwards in a semblance of a softer smile, but it was as cold as ice, "We've been taking good care of her. I won't let Overhaul get his hands on her ever again."

Lemillion flinched.

Midoriya shivered, his core struck with guilt.

"Oh?" Nighteye glared at the screen, "And who's fault is it now that Ayumu and Risumi Shinsou are in their clutches? If you'd let her go back with Overhaul like Lemillion and Deku did, they would have been safe."

“Nighteye, you go too far.” Best Jeanist said, his voice trembling.

“Really?” Nighteye adjusted his glasses, “We would’ve handled it. My agency specializes in taking down Yakuza, we already had significant leads and we were close to-”

“Let’s get one thing straight, Nighteye.”

Midoriya shrank down into his chair. He would never know how the temperature plummeted from Joker’s scathing glare, a sudden pressure squeezing his lungs. His mind briefly flashed to All For One’s aura during the Kamino Crisis, but this was somehow worse, striking a deeper fear Midoriya hadn’t felt before.

The power of a true Demon Lord, not the fake that All For One claimed to be.

Joker slowly uncrossed his legs and leaned closer to the camera.

“I will never apologize for saving someone who needed help. I won’t sit around and let a little girl be tormented by her captor simply because some other hero decided it wasn’t her time to be saved.”

Nighteye scowled, standing in the face of such immense power, “Even so, it doesn’t change the fact that your actions led up to this point. Had you waited, the Blue Lotus would still be standing, and Risumi and Ayumu Shinsou would be safe. We would’ve rescued Eri in time.”

“You can’t possibly know that.” Joker outmatched Nighteye’s fiery gaze. “You have no idea what Overhaul has put her through.”

“Come on, you guys,” Hawks held up his hands, “What matters is what we can do right now. The past is the past, so let’s move on. There are people counting on us.”

Joker snorted, the atmosphere returning to some semblance of normal, “Fine.”

“... Fine.” Nighteye grumbled.

“Now, as for the information you all worked so hard to gather...”
Joker reached into his pocket for a burner phone, which he unlocked and idly scrolled through. “Following a known member back home with your feathers before they went to ground? Good work, Hawks. It’s unfortunate that you heroes couldn’t do anything else without... crossing lines.”

The hero in question stiffened, his wings poofing out.

“How do you-” Nighteye started.

“Your cybersecurity is dreadful, Nighteye. Truly dreadful. It seems you don’t have a full list of Shie Hassaikai members or their quirks, let alone any information on the League’s new ‘recruits.’ ” The heroes exchanged troubled glances, “Give me a few hours and I’ll hack into their security to provide a full scope of the situation. It’ll be untraceable, of course. They’ll be none the wiser until it’s too late.”

“My, my.” Nezu’s chuckle drew Joker’s curious gaze, “You could’ve silently taken this information to stage an attack all on your own. But the fact that you revealed yourself to us like this instead... Joker, do you wish to join forces with us?”

Joker grinned, “Why else would I bother doing this? I already have a plan to rescue Risumi and Ayumu, but we’ll need everyone’s cooperation.”

“Why should we follow your plan?” Endeavor asked, his tone surprisingly neutral, “It is our job to take these villains down.”

Joker hesitated, pinning Endeavor with an odd look Midoriya couldn't decipher.

Eventually, Joker huffed, “Because they’re after me , and if we mess up then Ayumu and Risumi will die and I won’t be around to-” Joker waved his scarlet gloved hand, Midoriya noticed how Todoroki flinched in the corner of his eye, "That outcome is unacceptable."

"Wait," Eraserhead stood up with a glare. It wasn't a heated glare, more of the same unimpressed look he'd give his students when they tried something stupid, "You're not seriously suggesting you use yourself as bait?"

"Absolutely not!" Gang Orca's slamming fists cracked the table, knocking over cups and displacing papers. His chair screeched back as he rose to his feet, "Joker, please don't do this. We just... you've been through enough. Call me selfish if you want, but I don't want to see you get hurt again! This is too dangerous!"

Joker's citrine eyes glimmered with something that made Midoriya's heart sink to the floor, "I know, Orca, but I can sneak a team of pro heroes into the Shie Hassaikai's complex without detection."

"You... what?" Fat Gum asked. "How?"

"We know Mr. Compress is with you." Nighteye stated, "Don't you think they'd search you for those marbles before you even entered their compound?"

Midoriya swore he heard an indignant huff somewhere off screen, but it was so quiet he must've imagined it.

"No, we aren't using his quirk. They know he's with us and would know what to look for, it'd be the obvious method to set a trap. This other method is... unorthodox, compared to what you're imagining."

"Oho!" Nezu leapt onto the broken table, paws clasped behind his back as he faced the screen, "Would this 'unorthodox method' be tied to your true home?"

"... You're sharp as usual, Nezu." Joker chuckled, his shock erased with an eerie smirk, "That it does."

Miruko mouthed 'true home?' to Hawks, who shrugged. Endeavor, however, pushed aside their cryptic words.

"So you're proposing a pincer attack?" Endeavor stared smoothly into the screen. "Bring a team of seasoned pros on the inside, while another, larger force waits on the outside?"

"Precisely. I'll unleash this group once I know where Ayumu and Risumi are being kept. The rest of you will hang back on the surface and wait for the signal to attack. With any luck, it'll be over so quickly they won't know what hit them."

Miruko cackled and smirked proudly at Joker, "A kick ass plan! I like it!!"

"Give me a few hours to gather intel, then I'll send messages to certain heroes with a meeting location to share the plan in full detail." Joker glared at Nighteye, "And only these heroes. I'll know if you try anything fishy."

Nighteye glowered.

"Wait, Joker." Hawks stood up, his feathers rustling, "There's something about this plan I don't like."

"Oh?"

"I... I don't see a way out for you once the fight is over." Hawks tilted his head, concern bleeding through his eyes, "You'll be surrounded by police and pro heroes. Are you... going to fight your way out, or...?"

Everyone held their breath.

Joker's silence rippled through the room. His eyes trailed over Midoriya, to the rest of his classmates, until finally they landed on Nezu and Eraserhead. Joker released a long sigh as he sagged into his throne.

Midoriya thought he looked beyond exhausted. A young but powerful monarch who had seen too much war and fighting and death . Emotions someone their age shouldn't have.

"No."

"What?" Hawks asked.

Joker rose from his throne in one fluid motion, golden eyes piercing the camera lens, "Once the Shie Hassaikai and the League Of Villains are taken down, and Risumi and Ayumu are safe..."

Every pro hero in the room waited on the edge of their seats. Midoriya's heart thundered in his ears. Only Nezu seemed to know what Joker was going to say, his black eyes sparkling in unrivaled glee.

"Then I, alongside Mona and the rest of my team, will turn ourselves in to U.A."

A collective record scratched in their brains. Similar looks of dumbfounded shock and dropped jaws littered the expressions of highly seasoned pros and young interns alike.

Joker turned away from the camera to hide a pinched expression, "Wait for my message. Until then, toodles!"

"Wait, JOKER!" Eraserhead roared, but it was too late.

Joker was gone, leaving behind a screen of white static. Several seconds of silence drowned the room as they stared at the blank screen. Joker's words, and the barest hints of his plan, replayed across their minds.

"Um..." Kirishima spoke over the dismal atmosphere, his voice trembling, "Are we... I mean, are we really going to follow his plan...?"

Nighteye glared at Nezu, "We can't."

“What choice do we have?” Nezu countered, “It’s true what he said. We currently don’t have a way to stage a rescue as is. Even if we break down their doors with a warrant, there is nothing stopping the Shie Hassaikai from executing their captives before we even get close. Doubly so if the League are in the ranks.”

Nighteye sank in his chair and pinched the bridge of his nose, “Let’s take a recess. I think we all need time to... digest what just happened.”

Eraserhead wordlessly turned on his heel and left the room first.

The door closed too softly for Midoriya’s liking.

“What are you dorks doing?” Dabi asked.

Toga and Twice whirled around to him, trying and failing not to look guilty.

“Nothing!” Twice shouted, “We’re totally not planning anything!!”

Toga smirked at him.

“So you’re planning nothing... in a dark supply closet?” Dabi deadpanned.

“Yep!” Toga chimed in, grinning.

“... Okay, but if any of those bird freaks catch you they’ll probably force you to tell the truth with Nemoto’s confession quirk. Who’s watching the captives?”

“Kurogiri! He came back a while ago.” Toga said, laughing, “They already used that on us to say our quirks, remember? And asked if any of us would betray them.”

“Shigaraki was so mad!!” Twice said.

“Toga, you shouted that we wouldn’t ‘stab them in the back’ before any of us could reply. You’re lucky they believed you like the morons they are.” Dabi leveled her with a raised brow. “But I know a concealed threat when I see one.”

Toga blushed as she covered her face with her sleeves, “And?”

Dabi peeked out into the hall. The coast was clear for now, but it wouldn’t be much longer before one of the Yakuza idiots found them. He ducked back inside with a mischievous smirk.

“You two need distractions?”

The devious pair looked at Dabi like he had hung the stars.

Once again, the tiny waiting room was filled with anxious students. The meeting was hours ago, but it felt like no time at all as they were lost in their own heads. Midoriya’s classmates gave him strange looks when he mumbled under his breath, his knee bouncing as he tried to put his thoughts in order to no success.

They looked up as the door opened and their teacher stepped in.

Eraserhead leaned against the door with a heavy sigh, “Joker was true to his word.” He droned as he looked at each of them, “Twenty minutes ago Iida received camera footage and detailed blueprints of the Shie Hassaikai’s compound. We’ve confirmed that the League Of Villains are there too, along with sightings of the hostages.”

“I’m sensing a but, Eraserhead.” Tsuyu croaked as she tilted her head, “What’s the catch, kero?”

Eraserhead buried his face into his capture weapon, “Iida also received a time and place for the meeting with Joker.”

“Who’s going?” Kirishima asked with stars in his eyes.

“Me, Nezu, Ryukyu, Hawks, Best Jeanist, Gang Orca, Iida Tensei, and Miruko.”

“Oh!” Uraraka beamed with excitement, “Are we going with them!?”

“No.”

Tokoyami startled, “What? They can’t leave us behind!”

“You’re not being left behind.” Eraserhead held up his hand before the others protested, “This situation is delicate. If it were up to me, all of you would be taken off of this case and sent back to school, not only because of your emotional ties with Joker, but also because of 1-A’s history with the League.”

“Then why aren’t we?” Todoroki growled. His balled hands and icy eyes revealed his true emotions, “We’re not the only ones with ties to either.”

“Since Principal Nezu is on this case, his word counts more than mine. Frankly, I think he’s being illogical.”

Kirishima clashed his hardened fists together, sparks flying, “We can help Aniki! We’ll totally kick the League’s butt!! Let us come with, Sensei!”

Eraserhead pinched the bridge of his nose, “That’s precisely why you’re being placed with the surface group.” He pulled his hand away, leveling each of them with an intense glare, “Let the professionals do their work. I expect each and every one of you to follow the heroes’ orders to the letter. Anyone who goes against orders will be expelled on the spot. Do you understand?”

The students exchanged uneasy glances.

Tokoyami relented first, “Yes, Eraserhead.”

Others followed. Todoroki agreed last, glaring at the floor.

“S-sensei.” Midoriya could feel his expression crumpling, but he tried to force his tears at bay. It wasn’t working. “C-could you... um...”

Eraserhead raised a brow, his eyes softening, “Could I what?”

“C-could you give Akira a message?”

“Like what?”

Midoriya couldn’t form any words. There was so much he wanted to say to Akira that he couldn’t convey all of it at once. He looked to the others, but they all had the same dilemma.

Eraserhead stepped forward and placed a hand on Midoriya’s head, “Whatever it is, you can tell him yourself once we all return to U.A. Got it, Problem Child?”

“Y-yes, Sensei.”

The man snorted, “Its Eraserhead while on the job, kid.”

There was another knock on the door before a furry white head poked in.

“Ah, there you are!” Nezu chirped, “We’re about to leave, Eraserhead. It’ll take some time for our little group to discreetly cross the city.”

Eraserhead nodded. He gave his students another pointed look before walking out with Nezu.

“Kaito,” Atsuhiro said as he rolled a few marbles between his fingers, “I already told Magne about our departure days ago. What’s this about?”

Kaito sighed and glared at a pile of dusty crates in the corner of the storage room. Magne was as stiff as a board, staring at Kaito with something akin to terror.

“I usually wouldn’t meddle in this sort of thing, but you deserve to know after everything that’s happened.” Kaito glanced at Magne, who flinched under his gaze, “Tell him, or I will.”

Kaito left the room on that note, leaving Atsuhiro gaping.

“Magne, what’s going on?” Atsuhiro asked, his fingers stilling, “Usually he’s not so... intense.”

Magne rubbed her arm, “I...”

“Whatever it is, I promise I won’t be mad.”

Magne sighed as she collapsed against the wall, “Don’t make promises you can’t keep, Sako. You’d have every right to be angry with me.”

The marbles in Atsuhiro’s hand ground together under his grip, “Magne, whatever it is, just spit it out. The tension is killing me. You know it’s not good for my complexion!”

“Okay.” Magne looked at him with such striking intensity that it made his stomach churn. “It’s... my fault that the League of Villains recruited you.”

Atsuhiro blinked. Then blinked again as he absorbed her words. “Come again?”

“It’s because of me that the League was interested in you!” Magne suddenly yelled.

“But... we...” Atsuhiro scratched his head, “You approached me about it and I obliged. I thought our plan was to scope them out first and then make the decision together, but you ducked out before I joined. I didn’t even hear from you again until a few days before the Summer Camp.”

“N-no, I...” Magne scrubbed her face with her hands, “I was in a dark place for a long time, Sako, and I joined them shortly after Hosu because I was desperate.”

“Okay?” Atsuhiro’s voice tightened.

“They were looking for someone with a quirk capable of capturing Joker... And my first thought was you . When I mentioned I might’ve known someone with a suitable quirk, Kurogiri took me straight to All For One. You know nobody can say no to that... that demon. I just... I couldn’t stick around after.”

“So you lied me?” Atsuhiro snapped, “Lured me into the group with the promise of camaraderie and fame, only to tuck your tail between your legs and run away? They nearly killed me! Not to mention what they did to Joker -”

“I wanted to make it up to you!” Magne shouted. Her posture wilted at his glare, “I thought if I helped provide everyone with a safe place to rest, that you’d-”

“That I’d what? Forgive you for lying, or were you hoping that I’d never find out? Would you have told me if Kaito didn’t forcibly drag us here to have this exact conversation?”

“I...” Magne trailed off, the silence answering for her.

“Save it.” Atsuhiro stomped past her. She nearly grabbed his arm, but his dark look made her think better of it. “No wonder Kaito looked so angry. Be glad that he didn’t tell the whole group, or I doubt you’d even be standing here.”

“But what about me? What about the bar? Sako, I don’t want to lose you!”

“Well, it’s a bit too late for that, isn’t it?” Atsuhiro scoffed, “I’m leaving with the others. We won’t be coming back. As for the bar, I don’t care what you do. Keep it open for business, close it, sell it. Turn it into a barber shop for all I care.”

Atsuhiro left. She didn't chase after him, not that he wanted her to, but the whole interaction left the sour taste of betrayal in his mouth and thorns in his heart.

He suddenly understood Ren's urge to get out of this place the day of his Second Awakening.

Thankfully, they'd leave within the hour and he'd never have to see this sad little bar ever again.

Hawks held back a sneeze at the smell of salt. He copied Eraserhead and buried his face in his fluffy jacket.

"What's with that look, Hawks?" Miruko, who covered her hero costume and brilliant white hair with dark baggy clothes, "Scared of the ocean?"

Hawks scoffed, "I'm not scared! But I'm supposed to be a hawk, not a seagull!"

"I don't know." Miruko tilted her head with a smirk, "Sometimes you act like a blue footed booby."

"What? What does that even mean!?"

"Knock it off, both of you." Ryukyu snapped. Her arms were crossed tightly over her chest, her fingernails digging into her arm.

"They're just nervous, Ryukyu." Best Jeanist whipped out a comb and ran it through his hair, "I'm nervous too."

"It's not just that, Jeanist." Eraserhead droned as he shifted his weight. Nezu remained silent on the man's shoulder, "Being here brings a certain sense of nostalgia, and not the good kind."

"Rusted warehouses beside the ocean, knowing Joker is here, a sense of lingering dread..." Ryukyu shivered, "It's like the Musutafu Raid all over again.”

“But we’re not here to arrest him.” Tensei said, keeping his tone light, “We’re here to help .”

“Can we get on with this?” She muttered.

“I agree.” Gang Orca snorted, his disguise bulging over his body, “Is he here, Hawks?”

Hawks bit the inside of his cheek as he tapped into feathers floating around the harbor, “I sense some sort of weird movement in the northern most warehouse. That’s where he said he’d be, but we’re not alone out here either.”

“What do you mean?” Ryukyu stiffened, her eyes glowing through the shadow of her hood, “Were we followed?”

“Not by a human.” Hawks looked up. The others had to squint at the small dark shape circling over them, nearly invisible against the cloudy night sky. “I think its a bird?”

Eraserhead hummed, “One of Joker’s summons is a 3 legged raven, its probably there to keep watch... to make sure we don’t betray him.”

Ryukyu and Eraserhead shared similar knowing looks.

Hawks was glad he dodged that bullet, otherwise he might be drowning in the same sense of guilt these two were.

Miruko stomped past them, “I’m not waiting around any longer! You chumps coming or what!?”

The group moved as one, trailing to the rickety warehouse bordering the seawall. Hawks sensed the other heroes’ heart rates rising when they stopped in front of a heavy metal door. At least he wasn’t the only one.

Gang Orca flexed his giant hands and pushed open the large door with a grunt. Dust and salty rust stained the air as the door screeched open.

“Watch your step.” Ryukyu said as they went inside.

“Did nobody think to bring a flashlight?” Best Jeanist asked, his voice echoing through the warehouse

“Give it a minute.” Eraserhead growled, “Our eyes will adjust.”

“What ever do you mean?” Nezu asked, amusement coloring his tone, “I can see just fine!”

“Same!” Miruko said.

“Hey!” Tensei pushed aside some rubble with his foot, “Not all of us can’t see in the dark!”

Best Jeanist gave Eraserhead and Tensei a deadpanned stare, “We’re the only ones without animal mutations to help us see in the dark. Go figure.”

Gang Orca huffed as Eraserhead released an exhausted sigh.

Hawks froze when he sensed a gentle whoosh of air behind them. He looked over his shoulder, wings splayed, but nothing was there, not even the sound of footsteps or breathing.

“Hawks?” Miruko and the others stopped, “You have something?”

“I thought I did, but-”

They sensed it only by the standing hair on their bodies and the battle forged sense of not being alone . A lurking shadow moved through the warehouse. Swift enough to seamlessly cross the lingering blackness with ease, yet it wouldn’t disturb the delicate flame on a candle.

Ice prickled at the back of Hawks' neck as he turned towards a particular patch of darkness deeper than most.

"Guys..." He whispered.

A shape in the darkness, barely detectable even to Hawks' eyes, separated itself from the void. Hawks felt a bundle of emotions balling in his throat as footsteps neared, until the splashing colors on the ground highlighted a familiar form.

Joker appeared under the skylight shedding the faintest ray of light, but to Hawks it might as well be the brightest sunlight on a summer's afternoon.

Hawks' eyes watered against his will. He couldn't stop his hands from shaking as he stared at Joker, and he at them. Joker... the kid looks so grown up compared to the last time Hawks saw him, so tiny, frail, and lifeless on that cursed metal slab. His new costume was a sight to behold in person, an unknown power radiated off of Joker and tingled over Hawks' wings.

Joker smirked and waved a blood red glove, "Hey."

A wail pierced the air as Miruko launched herself at Joker, the kid's shock covered as she tackled him in a hug. Fat tears dropped from Miruko's face as she lifted Joker off of his feet and rubbed her face in his fluffy hair. Hawks heard the pops of Joker's spine.

"YOU'RE REALLY HERE!!" Miruko bawled as she tightened her embrace. "I THOUGHT WE'D LOST YOU FOR GOOD!!!!"

"I appreciate the hug, Miruko, but c-could you-" Joker wheezed as a few more of his vertebra crackled, "You make a fantastic chiropractor, but could you please put me down before you snap my spine in half?"

Gang Orca approached as Miruko set Joker unsteadily on his feet, Hawks never thought he would ever see the giant whale man cry when Joker smiled at him.

“Go ahead.” Joker said as he tilted his head towards Gang Orca.

Gang Orca ruffled the boy’s hair, humming in pure happiness as he wiped away tears with his other giant hand.

Ryukyu held back sniffles as she rushed to Joker’s side after, gently touching his face and prodding his shoulders.

“Have you been eating enough?” Ryukyu asked with the urgency of a mother hen, “You have been getting enough rest, right?”

Joker’s face reddened, “Y-yeah, I mean it took a while to recover after Kamino, but I’m alright now, I swear!”

Ryukyu narrowed her teary eyes, “Uh huh.”

“Where did you get this new costume?” Best Jeanist’s eyes were puffy too, not that he’d openly admit it, “It’s not denim, but it’s still very stylish.”

“I, uh...” Joker looked down at himself, “Technically made it myself?”

Best Jeanist nodded in approval.

“It looks good on you, Joker!” Tensei had an easy grin and he wrapped Joker in a bear hug, the kid tensed before he seemingly melted into the embrace, “I’m so glad to see you again! You have no idea how much my baby brother still talks about you.”

“O-Oh.” Joker chuckled as they parted, though his mirth drained away, “I’m sure I’ll bump into him once I get to the school.”

Joker stared at him next. Hawks pressed down that mixed ball of joy and disbelief and threw on his best grin.

“Have you grown, squirt?” Hawks asked as he put his hand on the top of his head, then leveled it out towards Joker, “I swear you were shorter before.”

Joker chuckled, “What, are you jealous, shorty?”

“Shorty!?” Hawks put a hand on his heart in mock hurt, Miruko burst out with watery cackles. He flapped his wings and rose a few inches in the air, “There, I’m taller now!”

“That’s cheating!” Joker said, his grin stretching from ear to ear.

Hawks matched the kid’s grin as he landed. He couldn’t hold it in anymore as his smile collapsed. His vision suddenly blurred and he hastily took off his visor and wiped the tears away with the palms of his gloved hands.

“Are you okay?” Joker asked sincerely before he looked around to similar expressions, “I didn’t think... you’d all react like this?”

“Why wouldn’t we!?” Miruko’s lips wobbled, and she lightly punched Joker in the shoulder, “We’re just so happy to see you, kid!! Right, Eraser!?”

They turned to Eraserhead, who had yet to move. The man might as well be a statue. Hawks knew, as an underground pro, Eraserhead was one of the best at concealing his emotions... until now. He never thought he’d see such a brooding hero be ready to break into pieces.

Joker walked past them and stopped a few feet from Eraserhead and Nezu.

“Do you want a hug, Eraser?” Joker asked as he held out his arms. “This is a limited time offer.”

Nezu chuckled as he hopped off Eraserhead’s shoulder, claws prodding at the man’s calves, “Go on, Eraser. We know you want to!”

“Damn rat...” Eraserhead muttered as he stumbled forward.

Hawks hid his watery smirk behind his gloved hand. Eraserhead's hug was short and a bit awkward, but it was still as genuine as the rest of their reactions, and Eraserhead was actually hesitant to let go. Eraserhead buried his whole face in his capture weapon afterwards, his ears blazing red.

"I brought you something," Joker said as he reached into one of his costume pockets. "My best coffee. There's enough for everyone! I figured we'd need it when we go over the plan."

Aizawa took the small thermos in both hands, staring at it as if it were a gift from the gods, "... Thanks."

"Now, with the reunions out of the way..." Nezu stepped around Eraserhead and stopped in front of Joker, "I am curious about your plan, Joker. As you know, time is against us. We best not waste what hours we have left."

"... Right." Everyone took a moment to collect themselves when a powerful aura emanated from Joker, his expression somber. "I asked you for a favor in my message, Nezu."

Nezu's ears twitched, "Yes, but you didn't specify what you wanted me to do."

"I'll get to that." Joker stepped away from them, fidgeting with his left sleeve. He stopped a small distance away. "I'll explain everything as much as I'm able, but there's... something you need to see first, people you need to meet. Everything will have a part to play for tomorrow."

"People?" Hawks blinked as his feathers twitched, "But I don't sense anyone else around?"

Joker pulled something out of his sleeve; a small silver key attached to a chain on his wrist. Hawks could see an intricate 'V' stamped on it. Joker turned away and jabbed the key into thin air and twisted it, as if there really was a door there.

Hawks exchanged confused glances with the others, but all other thoughts were cast aside as a barred door appeared out of nowhere, flooding the warehouse with soft light.

Joker looked over his shoulder, the velvety glow casting his face in contrasting light and shadow. For some reason, despite everyone gawking in amazement, Joker didn't seem too excited about it. He looked.... troubled. Conflicted, yet determined.

He waved them closer when the barred door opened on its own, "Come on. Believe me when I say we don't want to keep them waiting."

Joker stepped through the door and disappeared inside, as if into a thick fog.

Nezu had a toothy grin as he dove in next.

"Nezu!" Eraserhead shouted, but the rat already vanished.

"Let's go." Ryukyu said as she hovered in front of the open door, her shadow stretching out towards them, "I could tell from his expression, Joker didn't reveal this secret to us without good reason. Let's not insult him or whoever else is behind this door by hesitating."

Ryukyu stepped inside.

Gang Orca sighed and was the next to disappear, followed by Miruko and Tensei.

"Well, see you on the flip side, Jeanist." Hawks said as he passed the threshold into the unknown.

Best Jeanist and Eraserhead gave each other equal looks of uncertainty, but they stepped into the door regardless.

Hours would pass before the door opened again.

“-And that was Polaris by BLUE ENCOUNTER! We have more awesome songs coming your way at Put Your Hands Up Radio! Up next is Colors Flying High, sung by none other than the lovely Lyn Inaizumi!” Present Mic shot finger guns into the microphone. Nobody but his team could see him do it, but he didn’t care, “Buuuuut before we get back to the tunes, let’s take a question from one of my amazing listeners!!”

Present Mic gave a thumbs up to his team. He heard the click in his headphones as a call connected.

“Listener, I’m glad you called!”

“Hello, Present Mic.” Came a familiar velvety voice. “I’m glad I could reach you.”

Present Mic sat ramrod straight as all color left his face. “Uh... What’s your name, Listener?”

A warm chuckle graced his ears, “Joker.”

Present Mic laughed, his tone manic as sweat broke out on the back of his neck, “O-okay Joker! What question did you have?”

“I’d like to make a statement instead.”

“Er, okay? Go for it.”

“Great! This little message is for the Shie Hassaikai and League Of Villains.”

Mic looked through the window separating him from his team. They were frantically working behind the scenes to disconnect the call, but nothing was working. His manager stared at him with wide eyes, throwing her hands up in defeat.

Joker cleared his throat, “Overhaul and Shigaraki Tomura, it seems you actually found a way to one-up me. Congratulations! I accept your offer of a trade and will be at the Shie Hassaikai’s front door tomorrow morning with your package.” Joker’s tone darkened, and the shadows around the room seemed to move, “However, should you not live up to your end of the deal, if you harm a single hair on their heads...”

Present Mic shivered. His team looked scared out of their wits as Joker’s voice haunted the line, dark power creeping out of every radio and cellphone tuned into his show. He wondered how many people across the country held the same terrified expressions.

“Then I’ll personally make you regret the day you were born.” The whole of Japan held its breath for a long minute of silence, the tension breaking when Joker chuckled, “Thanks for your time, Present Mic. I bid you adieu!”

“W-wait!!”

The call ended. Thick stillness hung over the studio like a death shroud. His manager knocked on the window and made frantic hand gestures.

“W-well, th-that was certainly something, eh Listeners!?” Present Mic hoped his panic wasn’t too obvious, “Let’s take a quick break before we get back into it! In the meantime, how about a word from our sponsors!?”

He heard the noise for the commercial break and bolted out of the room. He dug out his phone, intending to call Nezu, when a text came from Eraserhead.

Bestie!!

Sorry Mic, I thought it was illogical to do it this way

Its been... a very strange night

Presentation Micheal

UH, SHO????

WHAT THE HECK IS THAT SUPPOSED TO MEAN!?!?!?!?!?

Bestie!!

Classified

The rat will explain once it's over

Presentation Micheal

YOU CAN'T LEAVE ME ON THAT SHOUTA!!!

SHOOOOOOOOOOOOUTA!?!?!?!?!?!?!?

IF YOU DON'T ANSWER ME I SWEAR I'LL GIVE MARSHMALLOW A WHOLE CONTAINER OF CATNIP!!!!!!

Eraser never answered.

A door down the hall opened and his manager walked out with a bounce to her step.

"Mic, are you up for continuing or do you want to end it for tonight?
Please tell me you want to continue!"

"Uh, I guess?" He shoved his phone in his pocket, "Why? What's wrong?"

"Oh, nothing!!" Frenzied laughter escaped her lips, "O-our ratings just shot up by over 170% since the call with Joker! And the numbers are still skyrocketing!! Your Spotlight is getting flooded with reactions from fans!"

“WHAT!? ” His manager winced at his volume, “Well then, we can’t disappoint our new listeners!”

“Great! We’ll give you a few more minutes for the commercial break. We’re getting paid BIG time tonight!!”

She rushed back into the control room in a blur. He had never seen his manager this excited since... well, ever. Present Mic shook out his nerves and plastered on his brightest grin.

He threw himself back into his studio with a new vigor, determined to put on the best show of his life while the iron was still hot.

Kurono walked alone in the darkened gardens, listening to the last of the chirping crickets before the chill of fall fully silenced them. He stalked past the swirling rock gardens and over a vibrant red hashi bridge over a koi pond, stopping under the shadow of a cherry blossom tree along the path. He took solace at how the wind rustled through the leaves. He closed his eyes and allowed the peace to settle his mind.

Until something sharp scraped over bark.

Kurono looked up into the winding branches, eyes widened as he met the gaze of a large raven resting within the branches, partly covered by the flora. It felt as if it were judging Kurono’s soul as it stared back with intelligent eyes. A string of magatama around its neck shifted as it ruffled its wings.

A messenger of the heavens?

A warning, or an omen?

Footsteps crashed through the gardens, and he turned to see Nemoto rushing towards him.

“What’s wrong?” Kurono asked.

“What isn't wrong?” Nemoto snapped as he sliced his hand in an impatient arc, “Those heathens are causing another ruckus.”

“Again? They’ve been causing problems all day.” Kurono cursed under his breath, “Whats happened now?”

“Dabi told Rappa he’d never beat that Nomu abomination in a fair fight. Now Rappa is tearing through the place looking for it. There’s so much noise that Overhaul left his lab . He never leaves his lab! I was hoping you could calm Overhaul down before someone else gets killed.” Kurono felt Nemoto’s scowl through his mask, “As much as I hate those League scum violating our halls... we already lost Rikiya to Overhaul’s inflated temper. We cannot afford to lose anyone else.”

“Alright,” Kurono relented, “I’ll talk to Overhaul while the rest of you try to control that idiot. Use Tengai’s barriers to trap him if you must.”

Nemoto nodded and rushed back inside.

Kurono took a moment to gather himself. There were so many questions when they heard Joker’s answer over the radio. How did Joker know where their compound was? Why did he submit so easily? Did he really care for the captives so much that he’d hand over Eri, or was there something else at play?

Kai wouldn’t listen to his concerns. He hasn’t been thinking clearly since Eri was taken, and Kurono feared that this most recent ‘plan’ would be the final straw that broke everything.

A warble drew him from his thoughts. The godly raven’s presence had to be an omen, Kurono thought as he went inside to deal with yet another mess.

Some deeper part of him screamed that they had made a grave mistake.

Well, that happened. Once again I'm not going to reveal the characters' full plans until it actually happens.

Important note: Yes, I will be stopping here for now to take a break to recharge, I really need it. I do have the rough draft skeletons for the two Overhaul finale chapters (Big surprise it had to be split, there are So Many character interactions to balance) but I'm not too happy with a majority of the rough draft so it will need to go through reworks and possible rewrites, and I don't think I have the energy to cram all of that within the next 2 weeks. So, we'll leave off here and continue in October!

Colors Flying High - October 15th

Counter Strike - October 22nd

Huh, it's almost as if Mic predicted the next chapter title or something ;)

Colors Flying High

Chapter 79: Colors Flying High

Your flag, your alibi,

Can you hide behind claiming might is right?

Raise your fist to the sky

While below your boots common men die.

Colors fly, tell us who to love and who to hate,

And by the by, will the memories of our morals fade,

Staying true to your own convictions in this haze is harder to do then say.

So choose a color to live by~

Early update? Early update.

Enjoy this big juicy chapter as we get back into the swing of things~

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

Important Update from the previous chapter's exciting news! (It's still ongoing!)

Fanart!

Seasoned heroes entered one by one, ogling at the swaying chains crying with metallic timbres as they hung down from the black ceiling, then to the outer ring of empty cells inhabited by nothing but invisible specters. Delicate folds of velvet silk softened the otherwise bone-chilling space. Their expressions morphed to those of lost children as the endless song washed over them.

Igor and the heart of the Velvet Room remained hidden. Joker and the other Attendants agreed they should be kept a close secret for now, thus they erected a temporary wall.

It was different with his current teammates, but for these heroes? He just... wasn't ready to show that deeper part of himself, and Igor himself was too valuable to reveal at the moment, even if the strange man's smile stretched wider before the temporary wall went up.

Nezu's expression shifted from feral excitement to cold calculation in the span of a heartbeat. He didn't seem angry as he stared at Joker with those beady little eyes, but... it was a look that didn't sit well with Joker.

The heroes finally reached the bottom of the stairs, stupefied at their surroundings.

"Joker." Eraserhead's expression mirrored the others, an ocean of concern and worry swimming within coffee colored eyes, "Where are we?"

"In due time, Eraser." Joker shoved his hands in his pockets and turned on his heel, "Follow me. Stay close and don't wander off, or else I can't guarantee you won't suffer a painful death."

The heroes uneasily followed Joker down the nearby hall to the Challenge Room. They stepped through the velvet fog and into the large arena, where the Attendants and the rest of his team waited.

Kaito, with a bag slung over his shoulder, had Eri behind him. She huddled into Kaito's pant leg when the strangers flooded in.

Joker stopped in front of his team and faced the heroes, the Velvet Attendants stepping to his side. Lavenza was at his right, the rest at his left.

Morgana was in his normal cat form, hopping up to Joker's shoulder as the others shuffled on their feet.

Two sides of the same coin stood in a room bordering on the edge of dreams and reality. Joker wondered what Akechi or the rest of the Phantom Thieves would think.

Akechi would probably call him an idiot for not keeping this a total secret.

Joker cleared his throat before the tension reached unbearable levels, "Welcome to the Velvet Room." He blinked and tilted his head, "Huh, I never thought I would be the one to say that."

"The... Velvet Room?" Gang Orca's red eyes smoldered like embers as he looked to the barred walls and the guillotine looming at the other end of the room. "The prison cells, the chains, and now guillotines. Joker.... what is this place?"

"They don't need to know details." Elizabeth snapped, "In fact, I don't think they deserve to be here at all. Especially the man named Eraserhead."

Eraserhead stiffened and whipped his gaze to her. Her smirk sharpened as her golden eyes stabbed into him with flames of animosity.

"Elizabeth..." Theodore said, ready to step between them.

"Do not be rude." Margaret sent her sister a pointed glance, "We do not govern over whether the Trickster can invite additional guests or not."

Elizabeth sneered and crossed her arms.

"Elizabeth... actually has a point." Joker took a stepped away from the line of Attendants, Mona remained silent on his shoulder. The heroes stared at him as he allowed a small fraction of his frigid rage to take over. The mist in the Challenge Room stirred. "If we weren't in a life or death situation... if the cards weren't stacked against us, then I never would've invited you in. All you need to know is that this place is meant to aid me on my journey as a Trickster, to help me grow stronger. Let's leave it at that for now."

The heroes exchanged subtle glances, absorbing Joker's mysterious explanation.

"But... the cells, and the chains..." Hawks' wide-eyed expression became tinged with fearful concern, "You weren't- I mean, you didn't get hurt here, did you? I'd recognize such signs of abuse anywhere."

Joker grimaced as Elizabeth bristled, "How dare you-"

He cut off Elizabeth with a wave of his blood red hand, "Like I said, this was a place to help me grow stronger. What's a little pain if it helped me protect those I love?"

Shock and sorrow bounced between them. Miruko balled her hands into shaking fists and Ryukyu looked on the verge of murder.

Hawks opened his mouth, but Gang Orca stepped closer before anyone else could say anything, "Very well, Joker. We'll not break your trust on this." Gang Orca relaxed his posture, leaving himself vulnerable as he turned his simmering gaze towards his comrades, "It takes a lot to reveal such a sacred place, and we'd do well not to abuse this knowledge, hmm?"

Iida Tensei smiled softly, "I promise to respect your boundaries, Joker."

"We'll do everything in our power to help." Ryukyu hesitantly nodded, "This place... it feels different in a way I can't quite put my finger on. You know the rules of this realm, and we'll follow them to the letter."

"You'd better." Elizabeth grinned, "Or there won't be anything left of you to bury. That's a promise."

"She's feisty." Miruko matched Elizabeth's grin, "I like her!"

Joker facepalmed, "Enough. We can't waste any more time." He let his hand fall to his side, "Nezu, let's talk about that favor."

The rat vibrated with excitement, a million questions dancing within that steel-trap mind of his, just waiting to burst out. Nezu's tail sharply flicked as he curbed his curiosity.

"And what is this favor?" Nezu asked cordially.

Joker looked to Kaito and Eri. Kaito firmly grasped Eri's hand and went to Joker and Morgana's side. Lavenza followed, scrutinizing the hero group with a cold gaze.

"Is that...?" Eraserhead and the others were looking at Eri.

"Yep. This is Eri." Joker placed a hand on Eri's head, the heroes' demeanor softening when Eri leaned into the contact. "Eri, why don't you say hello?"

"H-hello..."

"Why hello!" Nezu's tail bobbed back and forth as he inched closer, stopping a respectful distance away, "Am I a mouse? A bear? A dog? No, I am the principal of U.A.! It's nice to meet you, Eri-chan!"

Maybe Nezu expected a laugh or a chuckle out of the tiny girl. He only received a blank stare before she huddled further into Kaito's pant leg.

"You'll understand if she doesn't trust new people right away." Kaito stated as he crossed his arms.

Nezu's eyes locked onto the silvery band on Kaito's wrist, then to the man's electric blue eyes, nodding.

Joker cleared his throat, "This 'favor' is actually the first stage of the plan. My favorite part, actually."

"Which is?" Hawks asked with a raised brow.

Joker's grin stretched from ear to ear as he looked at Lavenza, "The old bait-and-switch."

Yatagarasu soared over a city drenched in tension.

His shadow passed over innumerable police officers and heroes hiding in nooks and crannies around the Shie Hassaikai's compound. He landed on the roof of a nearby building.

Detective Tsukauchi and a short elderly hero spotted him right away. Tsukauchi smiled at Yatagarasu, lined with shaky nerves and a hint of guilt. The elderly hero grumbled something unintelligible. Yatagarasu leapt off rose into the heavens.

"Tsukauchi and the old hero from Hosu and Kamino have joined the ranks, but the surface heroes are keeping their word to hold back, Trickster." Yatagarasu said. "Nighteye commands them with surprising authority."

"At least they're holding up their end of the plan... for now. Any movement in the compound?"

Yatagarasu banked to his left, easily passing over the Shie Hassaikai walls.

“Heavy patrols in the garden and around the inner walls. They seem tense.”

The Trickster’s cold chuckle plucked at Yatagrasu’s bond, “As they should be. It’s the Shie Hassaikai’s and the League’s final act. Return to the mindscape, Yatagarasu. It’s Showtime!”

Yatagarasu looked to the heavens, absorbing the warmth of the sun on his feathers.

“Mother Amaterasu, please watch over the Trickster today.” He whispered before he returned to his other self.

Ren shifted in his black hoodie and pants, the silky smooth texture gracing his skin provided some comfort as he looked at the other form standing beside him. The figure’s black cloak, made of the same material, draped around their shoulders and down to their ankles, the hood shielding their face in a mask of darkness. Long moonlight hair spilled down the front of the cloak in stark contrast.

“Are you ready?” Ren asked.

The hooded figure nodded, and they stepped out of the shadowy alley together. The street leading up to the Shie Hassaikai compound was like walking through a ghost town. Half of the city’s civilians seemed to have left the city overnight after his declaration over the radio. After what happened at the Musutafu Raid, he didn’t blame them for being scared, but he’d make sure this battle wouldn’t spawn another massive typhoon... hopefully.

They stopped in front of the tall white wall surrounding the Shie Hassaikai complex. Ren threw on a wicked grin as he button mashed the buzzer by the door. They heard frantic movement and a tiny window opened.

“Yo,” Ren lazily waved as the lookout’s eyes bulged, “We have a date with your boss. Care to let us in?”

The window closed and several locks were undone, before the door was thrown open. Ren walked in with an easy stride, his tiny companion keeping pace.

Kaneshiro's tiny little hovel had nothing on Overhaul's digs.

The interior was strikingly beautiful, complete with a sprawling traditional Japanese mansion and an inlaid stone path leading to the front shoji doors. Well-kept rock gardens and the edge of a koi pond could be seen around the corner. Ren spotted the tree where Yatararasu perched last night, its branches sticking up over the roof.

Ren and his companion were surrounded by towering thugs in an instant. Despite the sea of people, it was quiet. Dead silent. Not even the wind dared disturb the intense atmosphere as the lower Yakuza members stared, weapons and quirks ready to fight at the drop of a hat.

He moved his hand up, the crowd jumping back with guns raised, to twirl a lock of his hair between his fingers, smirking. He was interrupted before he could play with(intimidate) his new friends.

"Kurusu Akira!" A deep voice resonated through the air.

The thugs parted. Ren recognized three members of the Eight Bullets from Nighteye's database.

Nemoto Shin with the black plague mask and bowler hat.

Setsuno Toya, a sleazy man with a crazed look in his eyes. He wore another black plague mask, though different from Nemoto's in that it showed the upper half of his face, his golden hair hanging limply around his shoulders.

The last one had long greasy hair draped over a bone white mask. Sakaki Deidoro wobbled on his feet, laughing as he dangled a green bottle in his hand. The bony man took a big swig of alcohol and grinned at Ren from underneath his mask. Ren idly wondered how much Sakaki drank for his 'Sloshed' quirk to have any affect on other people.

"The drunken one is already trying to use his quirk on you, and I suspect the others will too." Ishtar's power thrummed through his veins, "I'll keep their influence at bay, but you need to act accordingly. Sell that they have power over you and it'll draw them like moths to a flame."

"That's my name, Nemoto Shin. Don't wear it out." Ren pretended to sway on his feet as the group stopped in front of him, "I brought Eri, as promised."

Nemoto glanced at Setsuno, "Check him."

The other Yakuza held their breath when Ren held up his hands, allowing Setsuno to pat him down. Setsuno froze when he felt something in the hoodie pocket. He reached in to pull the items out, blinking at them before staring at Ren.

"Only a pocket knife and a tiny smoke bomb!?" Setsuno gawked at Ren.

"What were you hoping to accomplish with these?" Nemoto snapped.

"Can't be too careful out in the streets. What if we got mugged before we got here? Oh, and be gentle with that smoke bomb, will you?" Ren winked at Setsuno, "It might be small, but it packs quite a punch to those who aren't prepared for it."

Setsuno's eyes were warped by the wicked grin under his mask as he stuffed the items in his own pockets.

"You really came alone?" Nemoto's quirk prickled at Ren's skull, only to be eradicated with a swipe of Ishtar's hand. The man didn't seem to notice. "You don't have any heinous plans involving heroes or your other subordinates?"

“Nope. None whatsoever.” Ren said as he stuck his hands in his empty pockets, “It’s only Eri and I. All of my teammates left town last night, and there’s no way I’d partner up with those heroes after what happened in Kamino.”

Ren blinked and put a hand over his mouth, as if surprised he spoke the ‘truth’. The trio of Eight Bullets exchanged looks. Nemoto made to grab the small figure hovering behind Ren. He knocked the man’s hand away, staggering a step backwards to feign his dizziness from Sakaki’s drunken quirk.

“The deal was Eri for Risumi and Ayumu. I won’t let you have Eri until I see them.” Ren scowled, “Or have the Yakuza fallen so low that they’ve lost their honor?”

“How dare you.” Nemoto’s hands balled into fists. He took a sharp breath and forced himself to relax. “Fine. Overhaul’s orders were to show you to him anyway. Follow me, but don’t try anything funny. If we see any hint of your demons manifesting...”

He moved his cloak to reveal a gun holster on his belt. The other Eight Bullets had them, too. It looked like any normal pistol, but it had been modified to hold certain type of ammo... like the Quirk Erasing Bullets Fat Gum and his interns encountered days ago.

Fafnir laughed like a chugging steam engine, “I’d like to give them a taste of their own medicine!”

“Patience, Fafnir.” Ren said as he smoothed out his expression, “It’s no fun if we give it away too early.”

Ren and his hooded companion followed Nemoto into the compound, with Sakaki and Setsuno at their heels. Ren wrinkled his nose as the traditional Japanese aesthetic bled away into too-white walls and the overwhelming scent of antiseptic. The interior was cold and lifeless, so similar to the complex in Sapporo that it left a sour twist in his mouth. He shivered at the drug-hazed memories skirting his mind.

Satanael and the others sent their encouragements as Ren focused on following Nemoto.

A left turn here, two rights, another left. He had memorized these halls from the footage La Brava gathered. Nemoto believed that Ren would be too disoriented under Sakaki's Sloshed quirk to realize the little game they were playing.

But there was something else. A flash of gold lingering within the walls. Ren stared at it when they passed it the third time, and it vanished only to reappear around the next corner.

One of Overhaul's right hands, Mimic, followed them.

"Quite a big place you have here." Ren remarked when they took the fifth left turn.

"Be quiet." Nemoto scoffed, the other Eight Bullets snickered.

In an undisclosed location several blocks away, two figures were splashed with the bright lights of several screens.

"They're walking him in circles." Tensei said as his eyes drifted from one screen to the next.

"We figured they'd do something to disorient him." La Brava, her hands fidgeting under the table, said, "Believe me, Joker already noticed."

"How can you tell? It looks to me like Sakaki has him under his quirk."

"He's a lot more observant than he appears. Watch here." La Brava pointed at another screen, one Ren already passed a few times now. Ren glanced up at the camera with a subtle smirk, tapping his fingers on his side to the exact number of times they had passed under it.

Tensei leaned back in his chair, "I knew he was smart, but damn. Is Sakaki's quirk really not affecting him?"

La Brava snorted. "If only you knew."

Tensei's expression tightened.

"What?" She asked, her eyes not leaving the screens.

Tensei threaded a hand through his short hair, "I know we're following Joker's plan, but the longer they're in the Yakuza's clutches the more I worry."

"I know how you feel. Joker's smart, but nothing will stop him when the people he loves are in danger." La Brava sighed, "We can't signal the surface heroes until Joker's ready. It'll throw everything off and possibly put them in more danger."

"I know." The lines around Tensei's eyes deepened. He turned to the screen when the group trekked down a few flights of stairs, continued their circling game for a while, before stopping at a set of massive double doors. "I hope we won't have to wait much longer."

La Brava traced a finger around the communicator in her ear. Tensei had one, as did several pros who were in on the true plan.

They watched the cameras as they waited for Joker's signal.

The hooded girl clutched Ren's hand as Nemoto pushed open the doors and whisked them into a ginormous room. She blinked rapidly at the blinding white, her only sense was of Ren's hand gently squeezing hers.

The members of the League, along with Overhaul and his Eight(now seven) Bullets, dotted the room. Even with such a large group, they had enough space for a small army. The High-End Nomu hovered behind Shigaraki, bouncing between his limbs like a puppy told to wait before snatching a treat. 'Gigantomachia' was suspiciously missing from the Villain entourage, as were Risumi and Ayumu.

Shigaraki and Overhaul shared their seething hatred as Ren smirked.

Ren winked at Overhaul, "Too bad we couldn't get dinner first, eh Overhaul?"

"Don't push your luck, you insufferable brat." Nemoto grasped the gun on his belt as Overhaul's eyebrows twitched.

"Hand over Eri." Overhaul growled.

"What, that's it?" Ren's smirk sharpened, "No proper greeting or grand villainous monologue? I'm surprised, given that's exactly what All For One did before he kicked the bucket. Shigaraki, I'm almost disappointed. Have the Shie Hassaikai beaten the fight out of you?"

Dabi let out a dry huff of laughter.

Shigaraki glared at Dabi, before his ruby eyes snapped back to Ren, "Shut up! You better watch your mouth, Secret Boss, otherwise I'll wipe that damn smirk right off your face."

"I'm so terrified." Ren deadpanned.

"Knock it off." Overhaul commanded as he pulled on his white gloves. "Hand. Over. Eri. I won't ask again."

The Eight Bullets fanned out around them. Shigaraki, Hood, and Kurogiri remained where they were, the other League members kept their distance.

The hooded girl could do nothing but hold her breath.

"Bring Risumi and Ayumu first."

Shigaraki's hands twitched, "Kurogiri."

A cloud of mist dumped two forms beside Overhaul. Risumi's arms were bound in thick leather restraints, Ayumu had the same, along with some sort of metal collar around his neck with spikes angrily jabbing at his flesh. Her heart stopped at such brutality to innocents.

Ren's breathing stuttered.

They were alive, their eyes were wide open to reflect their fear, but they moved as slow as a mosquito drowning in tree sap.

"What did you do to them?" Ren growled.

"Chronostasis used his quirk as a precaution. Hand over Eri, or else..." Overhaul ripped off one of his white gloves and held his hand over Ayumu's head, "There will be consequences."

Ren grit his teeth. "You heard him, Eri." He stated, eyes locked on Overhaul, "Go over there."

The hooded girl crossed the no man's land between Ren and the villain leaders. She stopped beside Overhaul, who patted her head. She had to stop herself from jumping away, his touch sending vile slithering serpents through her body.

"So you finally return to your rightful place." Overhaul pushed the girl aside, letting Kurono grab her by the shoulder, "We'll have to repay Joker for taking such good care of you."

"You have Eri, now give me Risumi and Ayumu." Ren said.

She could see Shigaraki's grin from under the petrified hand on his face, "No, I don't think so. We have a little surprise cooked up for you instead."

The girl witnessed a black cloud opening behind Ren, a BANG piercing the air before she could shout. Ren stumbled as something hit him in the shoulder, a little vial with a needle.

Toga Himiko exchanged a knowing glance with Dabi and Twice behind the other villains' backs, nodding.

Ren fell to his knees, staring at his hands in horror. "What... what did you do?"

Overhaul shook his head, almost in disappointment, "Did you really think we'd let you leave after the trouble you've caused all of us?"

Shigaraki's dry laughter scraped into her ears. "What else, you overpowered secret boss!? How can you be so stupid!?" His slimy grin stretched from ear to ear, "We took your precious quirk away!"

Tears laced Ren's eyes, "N-no... they... they can't be gone..."

Toga Himiko cackled, but clamped her hands over her mouth. She was looking at Ren with a certain sparkle in her eyes. A mix of bloodlust, humor, and glee.

"Can... I kill.... him?" The Nomu spoke slow, and with such a deep, warped voice that it didn't sound human.

"No, Gigantomachia and I want to play with him first." Shigaraki snapped, "I deserve first dibs after what he did to Sensei! Kurogiri, go get him."

"As you wish..." Kurogiri bowed his head before he disappeared into his own fog.

"With my quirk, we can kill him as many times as we want." Overhaul stared at Ren as if he were an insect pinned to a board, "But after we're done I want to study his body. It could be useful for my research."

The hooded girl kept studying the three estranged villains, her heart leapt to her throat at the realization.

Toga knew . She somehow knew, but she wasn't doing anything to warn her comrades about the danger they were in.

Dabi stared at the hooded girl with a growing smirk. He slowly backed away alongside Toga and Twice as the rest of the villains circled Ren like hungry sharks.

The trio knew Ren was acting.

She put the thought aside when she looked at Risumi and Ayumu, frozen on the floor. Kurono tightened his grip on her shoulder, his masked eyes locked onto her as the rest of the villains basked in their false victory. She couldn't grab them without drawing unwanted attention, nor could she enact plan A from her side. Her eyes fell back on Ren when he sniffled.

The Trickster's acting was second to none, so his faultless expression still sent a cold lance of dread throughout her heart. She never wished to see that pain on his face ever again. His false fear drew the villains in like a honey trap, who tightened their circle like a noose. To these villains, it looks as if the curtain is about to fall on the once powerful vigilante.

The Trickster glanced at her, the golden flecks in his eyes intensifying as she discreetly held up two fingers.

Time for plan B.

"Wow, that was fast." Ren said when Best Jeanist handed him the bundle of clothes.

"Well, it was a special express order." The man chuckled warmly.

"And these will work? I can't don my costume too early or they'll be on edge."

"Yep. I asked Nighteye and Fat Gum for the blueprints on those bullets and crafted these for you." Best Jeanist crossed his arms, pinning Ren with a look he couldn't identify, "It's not denim, unfortunately, but they're woven with kevlar threads and a variety of different silks. It'll keep you and the little lady safe from those Quirk Erasing Bullets." Best Jeanist looked away, his shoulders hunching to further bury his face in his strange denim costume. "I made sure of it."

"I sense no drugs entering your system, Trickster." Ishtar confirmed.

Shiva hummed, "The bullet did not pierce the threads, as promised."

"Hurry and don me as your mask!" Fafnir howled.

Ren kept the terror plastered on his face, the villains' derisive laughter and about all the ways they'd kill him ringing in his ears, "Not yet..."

Ren glanced at the hooded girl, discreetly holding two fingers. He slowly blinked in affirmation.

The temperature dropped and a prickling energy laced the room, making the villains hesitate. Kurono startled backwards as the hooded girl knocked his hand away, her footsteps incredibly loud in the sudden, unsettling silence. Overhaul glared at her as she tugged on his sleeve and forced a small envelope in his hands.

"Eri, what's this?" Overhaul growled as she backed away.

"Not yet..." Ren's soul brimmed with ethereal fire as Overhaul opened the envelope, eyes widening when he dug out the black and red card.

"Well? What does it say?" Shigaraki asked.

"To the League of Villains and Shie Hassaikai, The Proprietors of Suffering and False Righteousness, your reign of terror has gone on long enough. For the sake of saving innocent souls, we're putting an end to your regimes once and for all. From, the Phantom Thieves of Hearts." The card was unmade in ribbons falling on the ground,

Overhaul's expression turning livid as he stared at the hooded girl, "Eri, what the hell-"

"I am not who you seek." Lavenza's voice carried throughout the room.

Lavenza cast off her cloak and wig and tossed them at the villain leaders as Joker donned his costume in a dazzling pyre.

"You brat!" Kurono fired at Joker, but the bullet bounced off and redirected itself, the needle piercing Kurono's arm.

Joker didn't wait to find out which bullet Kurono shot himself with, performing a roundhouse kick to Kurono's stomach. Kurono flew back with an oomph and landed on his back with his arms and legs splayed, unmoving.

A stream of blue flame shot from Dabi's hand, separating Shigaraki and Overhaul from Joker, "Do we enact the plan now, Shigaraki? You wanted Overhaul and the rest of these idiots dead too, right?"

Shigaraki flinched, "What!? I never-"

Overhaul whirled around to Shigaraki, rage boiling in every fiber of his body, "So this was your plan all along? I should've killed you when I had the chance!"

Joker grinned as the Velvet Key dangled from his wrist, the sound of thrashing chains and velvety light painting the room as chaos broke out.

Toga suddenly pulled a gun from her sweater and took aim as the Velvet door manifested.

"Kai!!" Kurono jumped in front of Overhaul as Toga fired, taking the bullet.

"Were you meaning to use these bullets on Joker?" She purred as she waved the gun.

“Toga, what are you-” Shigaraki’s scream was interrupted as the Velvet Room door flew open, and familiar figures stormed out, a single Attendant leading the charge.

“Lavenza!” Margaret threw a familiar chainsaw to her sister, the roar of it accompanying the fresh cacophony of noise.

Overhaul slapped his palms on the ground, ginormous earth spikes rupturing in all directions.

Gang Orca’s sound wave ripped through some of the spikes at the same time as a hail of vibrant feathers darted around the room. Several of the Eight Bullets’ clothes tightened over them and they fell over, invisible strings trailing to Best Jeanist’s fists.

Utter bedlam spread through when a howling roar, vibrating through the walls themselves, shook the entire complex.

“Hood, KILL THEM!!” Shigaraki screamed, “Damnit Kurogiri, hurry up!”

Hood’s battle cry reverberated through their bones, giant black wings shooting out of his arms as it jumped over the spikes. A burst of energy shot out its back and it charged at Joker like a freight train. Joker stood still, grinning.

Miruko cackled, her face a mask of battle lust as she jumped, her bone-breaking kick landing on the Nomu’s face. Joker heard the crackle of bones and saw the spittle fly as Hood was blown back, breaking through several spikes and cracking the opposite wall under the force.

Miruko ruffled Joker’s hair before diving into the fray.

The whole building trembled and the ground shattered under their feet like parched earth. A renewed ripple of spikes ruptured through the room, a majority of them towering over Joker and the others to pierce the ceiling. Screams and cries and bangs echoed throughout the maze of spikes, the walls themselves grew louder as a massive tide of purple mist curled in the corners of Joker's vision.

Another, much larger roar boomed from Kurogiri's growing portal.

Joker leapt over the spikes to get away from Kurogiri, coattails flaring behind him, as he desperately searched for Risumi and Ayumu through the bedlam.

By that time Hood had burst out of the wall and flew around the spikes, wings splayed as he shot for Joker.

"Fafnir!" Joker shouted.

Hood was upon him again when blue flames swirled around Joker. Fafnir cackled as he curled protectively around Joker, repelling Hood's attack to send him crashing through several rows of spikes and into another wall. The cracks split the room in two and travelled into the ceiling, and Fafnir pounced through the choking dust and tackled Hood.

Joker turned away from their battle, finally spotting Risumi and Ayumu motionless within a small clearing.

"Hawks!!" Joker screamed as he dove for them, a pair of brilliant feathers flying after him.

The floor ruptured beneath his feet, a crisscrossing pair of thinner spikes shooting out. The feathers snagged Joker's collar and yanked him back before the spikes beheaded him.

"Don't move!"

Overhaul's voice rang over the other battles, the spikes clearing the way between he and the Shinsou pair. Murder shown in Overhaul's eyes as Kurono walked behind him, uninjured and quirk restored. Joker's heart pounded as the villains grabbed Risumi and Ayumu by the necks, with Kurogiri pointing a gun at Ayumu's temple, Overhaul grabbing Risumi by the neck with his bare hand.

"Take one more step and they'll die." Overhaul said.

Joker grit his teeth. He needed Eraserhead, but he didn't know where the hero was over the spike maze and the sounds of battle echoing across the massive room. Joker dared not look away, either. They were locked in a stalemate.

"I've had enough of all of you." Kurogiri's billowing body appeared between them, yellow eyes glaring, "We'll finish you off!"

Hawks' feathers shot for Kurogiri, but they were gone in a wave of black mist. Kurogiri's body surged forward in great waves of darkness, sweeping any who were close enough into the unknown. Joker tried to jump away, planning to shoot out his grapple at the ceiling, but Kurogiri predicted his route.

His vision turned pitch black, then startling white as the sensation of falling overtook him.

The sounds of battle cut off suddenly as Joker rolled into his landing, his tailcoats weaving around his legs as he was on his feet. He cursed as purple wisps evaporated around his heels. The white walls and burning smell of antiseptic told him he was still in the Shie Hassaikai complex... somewhere. It was another room as large as the one he was just thrown out of.

The silence was deafening, as if he had been plunged into a deep ocean.

Images flashed in his mind; of Fafnir laughing as he ripped Hood's flesh with rending claws, only for the Nomu's injuries to stitch themselves back together within seconds. Joker shook his head and pushed Fafnir's wild connection to the side so he could focus.

He reached into his pocket for his communicator and popped it in his ear, noise battering his eardrums the second he turned it on.

“La Brava, status update!”

“Joker!” La Brava sighed in relief. “Several cameras have gone out and the whole place is shifting! Iida’s working on stabilizing the connection, so we don’t have a headcount of everybody yet.”

“It seems we’ve found ourselves in quite the pickle!” Mr. Compress’s voice crackled in Joker’s ear. “I got teleported away.”

“Where is everyone?” Eraserhead droned, his sense of calm easing Joker’s heart, “I’m alone as far as I can tell, but I feel like I’m being watched.”

“I dunno, even my feathers are all flustered. Did it sound as if the walls were howling earlier?” Hawks chirped. “Are they alive or something?”

“It’s probably Mimic.” Joker took a few tentative steps, straining to listen to anything nearby. “Lavenza, Mona, are you there?”

“Yes!” Mona sounded breathless.

“I am fine as well.” Lavenza hummed, “If you could summon the Velvet Room Trickster, myself and Margaret could be at your side in a moment.”

Joker reached for his wrist, his heart stopping when he grabbed empty air. “Oh shit .”

“What is it?” Eraserhead asked.

“The key’s gone. I-” Joker facepalmed, “The guy with the larceny quirk was right behind me. He must have it.”

Getting Risumi and Ayumu into the safety of the Velvet Room had been their primary objective. The sudden stab of fear was washed away with a thrash of Fafnir's tail striking the Nomu's head, bravery and rage coursing through them.

No, this wasn't the time to panic.

"You lost your key?" Margaret asked, worry coloring her tone. "We shall find it, one way or another."

"We'll have to work around it for now." La Brava huffed, "Joker, should we signal the surface heroes? I'm working on locating Risumi and Ayumu, but we'll need help-"

The hair on the back of Joker's neck stood on end. A gaping portal spread over the ceiling, and Joker flipped to the side when a gigantic fist, as thick and stocky as a tree trunk, hurtled out. The ground ruptured with spider webbing cracks. Joker shielded his face before dust could clog his throat.

A veritable giant hauled himself out of the black portal, a jagged mountain of muscle several times taller than Joker himself. His lower jaw jutted out and revealed razor sharp teeth.

A radio was tied by a thick rope around his neck, which crackled to life as the two opponents sized each other up.

"Wait, Gigantomachia! I'd like a word with our friend first."

"You." Joker violently shivered at the familiar, grating voice echoing through the radio, "You're that doctor from Sapporo."

Joker tuned out his Personas' rage and the various concerned voices in his ear, the loudest of which was Mr. Compress violently swearing.

"And you're the prize that slipped through my fingers... just barely." The doctor's cold chuckle was warped by the radio's static, "You have no idea what trouble you've caused me, having to scour everywhere in that cursed Kamino hospital for your body and for All

For One's. But I found neither! All For One was already cremated and you... your body went missing from the morgue. I'm glad you're alive though, because Overhaul has another thing coming if he thinks he has any right to claim you for research! With you returned to my lab, my boy, progress on my next set of Nomu will be exponential!"

The mere implications sent Joker's heart rate skyrocketing and shot ice through his veins, Satanael's soothing wings brushing against his mind kept his panic at bay.

"I'll take your silence as an end to this dull conversation." The doctor chuckled again, "Gigantomachia, be sure to make his death as painful as possible as revenge for killing our master, but remember to bring him back in one piece. It'll make my work easier."

The doctor's voice fizzled out and the radio went silent.

"You..." The giant locked onto Joker with rage filled eyes flooding with tears, "You... YOU KILLED MASTER!!!"

Joker's grin felt shaky as he waved the giant forward, "Come and get me, big boy."

Another scream tore through the air as Gigantomachia charged, swinging a fist with the strength of a hurricane. The fist bounced off a mere foot away from Joker's body, the force redirecting itself back onto the giant. Gigantomachia's eyes went wide before his own punch sent him flying through the air, demolishing one of the walls and causing a large chunk of the ceiling to fall on top of him.

Joker shot out his grapple and swung himself to the door, "Glad we had this quality time, Mr. Giant, but I'm afraid I can't stick around to play with you!"

Gigantomachia grabbed what was left of the wall and pulled himself out of the hole, his eyes burning holes into Joker.

"I think we just made him mad." Satanael whispered. "His own redirected power didn't leave a scratch."

"We need a plan." Joker slowly backpedaled as Gigantomachia's snarl rumbled through Joker's chest, "He's too big to fit through most of the complex, and we can't risk anyone from our side getting hurt in the crossfire."

"We need him out of here..." Kohryu snorted, "I have an idea, Trickster, but we need to be closer to the surface!"

Joker turned on his heel and flung himself through the door. Gigantomachia followed, bulldozing through solid concrete as if it were wet cardboard.

"La Brava!" Joker shouted over the mayhem of cascading concrete and rebar, "I need a way to the surface!"

"Wh-what!? But what about what the doctor just said-"

"There's no time for that right now!"

"O-okay! I-I'll do my best!" La Brava said.

"Joker, what's your plan?" Tensei asked, worry heavy in his voice, "We need to summon the surface heroes before it's too late!"

"Not yet!" Joker yelled over Gigantomachia's screams, "We need to get Gigantomachia away first, he's too dangerous!"

"A-alright... I think I see a route to the surface. You're not too far down, but the layout keeps changing. Hurry!"

Joker followed her instructions, his stomach flipping from the thrill of being chased by a monster, pushing away memories of frantically fleeing from the Reaper in Mementos. Every step Gigantomachia took collapsed another hallway, and eventually bits of upper floors collapsed with him. Screams and shrieks of surprise filtered through the cracks. Joker felt the force of Gigantomachia's next attack through the floor mere feet behind him, his back harmlessly peppered with concrete shards.

Joker drew strength from Fafnir and cast Debilitate, but the orbs of light dancing around Gigantomachia didn't even slow him down.

"Let me try a distraction." Baal smiled as he sipped from his goblet.

Baal's Charge flooded Joker's veins with fire, and Baal stepped into reality after Joker flung himself around a corner. Baal remained calm as Gigantomachia's howls bounced off cracked walls, smiling as he sliced his hand towards the giant.

Three shining arcs of blue light cut through the air. Baal's Ayamur hit Gigantomachia square on, but left nothing more than faint scratches.

"Oh my..." Baal muttered as he turned to blue cinders before Gigantomachia crushed him.

Joker hauled himself up a staircase, using his grapple to escape Gigantomachia's meaty hands.

"La Brava, how close am I to the surface?"

"About two floors! Why?"

"Is there anyone from our side above me?"

"I-I don't think so. You should be below the rock gardens-"

"Fantastic! Tell the surface heroes to get ready!"

"Wh-what!?"

Kohryu rumbled with excitement, "I hope the Faith will forgive me."

Joker skid to a stop in the middle of the next hallway, turning to face the cataclysmic force head on. Gigantomachia, covered in dust and debris, and chunks of the building pouring down around them, raised his fist with an enraged battle scream.

Joker smirked as the hallway blazed with golden scales.

“This is taking too long.” Nighteye said with a scowl.

“Do ya think something went wrong?” Fat Gum asked.

“Aniki’s okay!” Red Riot pumped his fists, Suneater shrunk away from his kohei’s enthusiasm, “It’s just taking a little longer, that’s all!”

“I-I hope that’s all it is.” Deku’s gaze was on the ground, fists clenched.

“Come on, you guys!” Lemillion beamed, “Everything will be fine once we go in! I’ll make sure of it!”

“Everyone, prepare yourselves.” Iida Tensei’s voice filtered through the comm, “The signal should be-”

They felt the tremors through their shoes. The sounds of cracking and breaking ruptured through the sky, as loud as if the whole world was about to end. Police and other heroes cried out when huge chunks of earth exploded over the complex, a rush of golden scales dazzling them in the bright sunlight.

Powerful winds buffeted them as Kohryu rose into the sky, his jaws clamped around a giant. Nighteye’s soul trembled as he recognized Gigantomachia, All For One’s top subordinate disappearing up into the clouds with hair-raising screams. Clumps of dirt, plant life, and stone fell around them like rain. Unbeknownst to them, Kohryu’s teeth snapped an old rope around the giant’s neck, causing a silver radio to fall and shatter within a lonely alleyway miles away.

“-Now... Everyone, go!”

Nighteye watched the golden glimmer disappear over the buildings, shaking himself out of his own shock to give the order to attack.

Joker stood at the precipice of the gaping hole that used to be a beautiful garden and a decent chunk of the mansion's first few floors. He squinted as Kohryu's form veered towards a familiar harbor at the edge of the city.

His nerves settled the further Kohryu flew away with Gigantomachia.

Joker turned to stare at the large crowd of Yakuza gaping at him. The winds had knocked them over and chunks of debris impaled the grounds.

An unsettling grin spread on Joker's face as he slowly leaned forward, "Boo."

His voice was barely a whisper. And yet, the Yakuza screamed for mercy and tried to run away, throwing down their weapons in fear. They scrambled over one another, pushing their own comrades down to get ahead.

More cacophonous noise echoed when a familiar dragon rose on her hind legs and broke the outer walls down with a mighty push. Aside from La Brava and Tensei, Ryukyu was the only one who thought it was better to stay with the surface heroes with her interns at her side, as her strength would benefit more. Heroes and police poured into the complex, battle cries and quirks clashing.

One such hero group spotted Joker calmly standing among the chaos of battle. Joker turned his back on them and stepped to the edge of the hole. Another pair followed Nighteye; Endeavor and Todoroki Shoto.

"Joker, stop !" Nighteye rushed towards him, accompanied by Midoriya, Tokoyami, and Lemillion. "You don't have to go back in there. Call it quits and let us handle it from here."

The heroes and police lingering behind Nighteye gave Joker stunned looks, a few of them openly gaping. Ryukyu snarled and spread her wings, snapping them out of it as they invaded the compound.

Joker tried to ignore how Midoriya and his classmates' stares stabbed into his back like hot pokers. "That's not how this works, Nighteye. I don't follow your orders. Risumi and Ayumu need me."

"Wait!" Midoriya reached out to him, "Please!"

"There's no time, Deku." Joker couldn't bare looking at the tangled ball of emotions shining through Midoriya's eyes, "See you inside."

Joker jumped, the flutter of gold rimmed coattails the last thing they saw before he disappeared into the darkness.

Endeavor stomped towards the hole, stopping where Joker stood a moment ago to peer into the hole.

"Shoto, stay with Nighteye. Use your ice to reinforce the structural integrity of the complex when needed."

Todoroki glared at his father, "What about you?"

"I'm following Joker."

Endeavor's hands burst with flames and he dove into the hole.

Nighteye sighed as he adjusted his glasses. "Lemillion, you should go ahead, too."

Lemillion perked up, "Sir?"

"Iida lost tabs of the hostages, and you can move fast enough to locate them before it's too late."

"Yes, Sir!"

Midoriya took a shaky breath when Lemillion gently nudged him with a bright smile, before he jumped into the hole after Joker and Endeavor. Midoriya exchanged a long look with Tokoyami and Todoroki, hardening his uncertainty.

With a unified nod, they raced into the complex alongside Nighteye.

The world flipped rapidly, belly under the sky and back to the shrinking ground, and around and around again in countless dizzying twists and turns. Kohryu thrashed as Gigantomachia's screams echoed through the heavens.

The Trickster's presence grew faint as the sun glinted off of a cold sea. Kohryu reared up into a lone column of sun dappled clouds, violently wrenching his head upwards as he released Gigantomachia.

They both hovered in the air a moment, floating in the midst of this sacred place, a beautiful shrine of Kohryu's domain. But unlike Kohryu, Gigantomachia was a creature stuck to the ground and thus gravity worked her cruel nature, fury etched in his rigid expression before he fell.

Kohryu turned a tight circle, his tail catching the giant with a violent SNAP. The clouds were blown away as Gigantomachia crashed to the earth, the rusty harbor flattened by the impact. Great waves rose into the sky and rippled through the sea.

Gigantomachia tore himself from the crater, sea water filling the hole in cascading waves. Kohryu felt a new shiver in his core. It trailed up his spine, the orbs in his claws flaring like supernovas. Kohryu stilled as the power surged within him until it bubbled in his throat.

With a great breath, he opened his jaws and fired a Heavenly Ray. It out-shined the sun's brightness as it hit Gigantomachia, the giant flying out and skipping over the water like a rock. Kohryu rushed forward. Water swirled up around him as he descended to the surface of the sea and caught up with the flailing monster.

He snatched Gigantomachia in his jaws and curled around his body like a python, dragging the both of them down, down, down into the cold dark depths of the sea.

Joker shivered when he sensed Kohryu plunge into the water, the image at the edge of his mind. Fafnir's presence was much closer, flashes of claws and fangs tearing the Nomu apart, with the occasional atomic fire searing the Nomu's skin. But the Nomu healed every injury. Not that Fafnir minded. The wild dragon was playing with the High-End like a cat with a ball of string.

Joker rushed through another hall, the walls changing with every turn. The pathway behind him had closed as soon as he stepped foot on stable ground and continued to shift since. He cursed under his breath when the layout moved before his eyes, but he pressed on towards another path.

"La Brava, any updates?" Joker frowned when he received static, "Just great ."

He wondered if there was too much interference for a clear signal. His teammates were scattered to the wind. Heroes and squadrons of police closed in from above and Overhaul and his Yakuza were laying in wait deeper within, not to mention where Shigaraki and Kurogiri ran off to. Dabi and the other two were a huge question mark. Risumi and Ayumu were still missing, and now Joker found himself at a fork in the road.

He inspected the surroundings with Third Eye. His breath caught when a pair of glowing footprints trailed over the right path, small and delicate. A woman's footprint.

"Should one of us go down the other route?" Shiva asked.

"It would be unwise to split ourselves further and drain our energy." Satanael said.

"But what if one of our allies needs help?" Ishtar added.

"... The Trickster should trust in his teammates' abilities so we can put our focus on our objective. The Strength need us at our best."

Joker reached into his pockets for the Quirk Bullet he was shot with earlier, still full of the drug that contained Eri's DNA. He'd need one of the modified pistols the Eight Bullets carried to shoot it, as it didn't properly fit in either of his weapons.

His fists tightened around it as he shoved it back in his pocket.

"Hang in there, I'm coming." Joker whispered as he descended further into the complex.

"Those no good traitors." Shigaraki growled as he reduced another patch of wall to dust. "Why didn't you let me stay in that room!? I could've killed Overhaul then and there!"

"Be calm, Shigaraki Tomura. Your safety is my priority... however I don't understand why you wish to stay here? We should flee for the doctor's laboratory, to lick our wounds and regroup. We lost this battle, Shigaraki Tomura."

"Shut up!" Shigaraki was breathing hard, rage pounding through his blood, "I'm going to find them and kill them. Every last one!"

"Shigaraki Tomura, it would be best to vacate completely. It's too dangerous. We simply have too many enemies and not enough information."

"Too dangerous!?" Shigaraki whirled around to Kurogiri, "No, I refuse to tuck my tail between my legs and run away now!"

“But-”

Shigaraki grasped Kurogiri’s pristine outfit, pinky raised, “I said I’m not leaving until I kill those traitors. That’s an order! Do you understand?”

Kurogiri sighed, “Very well.” Shigaraki let go and Kurogiri dusted himself off, “I know the general area where my portal caught them off guard. The traitors are separated, so might I suggest we-”

Kurogiri froze, looking over his shoulder.

“What now?” Shigaraki grumbled.

Kurogiri tilted his head. Suddenly, his golden eyes went wide and Shigaraki fell through a portal in the floor, screaming in rage. A silver coil of fabric whipped through the air and wrapped around Kurogiri’s brace as his quirk was erased. He crashed onto the floor.

Eraserhead crept out of the shadows like a ghoul, eyes blazing red and hair floating. He stopped next to Kurogiri, tightening the capture weapon around Kurogiri’s brace.

Kurogiri simply glared as he was at Eraserhead’s mercy.

Suneater’s vision wavered as he leaned against the wall and sank to the ground. Unconscious bodies littered the broken floor around him. He did his job. He took down some of the Shie Hassaikai’s top members so the others could press on.

Suneater leaned his head against the wall, trying with all of his might to not fall unconscious himself. His ears strained when there was a noise on the other side of the door Fat Gum, Nighteye, and the others went through. Did they come back, or...?

The door screeched as a blade tore it to shreds. Suneater was on his feet, staggering as a wave of dizziness took over, his eyes widening as a person in a black coat rimmed in red stepped in, balancing perfectly on unusually long geta shoes. Suneater couldn't see their face from the samurai-like mask, with two long white ribbons flowing down its back. It stared at him with golden eyes as bright as the sun. The eyes of a god .

It readied its long bladed weapon when he fell into a wobbly battle stance. He had nothing left in his belts for his quirk to use, except for some of the crystals from one of the Eight Bullet's quirks-

"Izanagi, hold." A woman's silky voice came from the hallway behind the god.

"Izanagi...?" Suneater mumbled as the god stepped aside and allowed a beautiful woman dressed in blue through.

The mystery woman scanned the room, her eyes stabbing into one of the Eight Bullets before landing on him. Despite all of his years of training, he shivered at her intensity. It was as if death walked over him, and he believed that she could easily kill him without lifting a finger.

He just wanted to go home.

"You are a hero, correct?" The woman asked pleasantly.

"Y-yes. I'm Suneater, Fat Gum's intern..."

"Ah, I see. Then it appears our allegiances align for the time being. My name is Margaret." She smiled at Izanagi, tapping a huge tome at her hip with a perfectly manicured nail, "That will be all for now."

Izanagi placed a hand over his heart, bowed to her, and disappeared in a shimmer of blue ash.

Suneater inhaled sharply, "That's-"

"Izanagi's not one of Joker's." She studied Suneater's tattered costume and the blood dripping down his face, before she turned to the unconscious bodies on the floor, “Impressive. You really faced three of these villains by yourself?”

“Y-yeah. I stayed behind to fight them.” Suneater’s heart pounded and he wanted to turn away from her striking beauty, but he didn’t want to be rude to one of Joker’s allies, “Fat Gum and the others... you didn’t see them?”

“No.” Margaret frowned as she looked to the door behind her, “I encountered no other heroes besides you. I suspect the layout was changed by the villain skulking in the walls.”

“O-Oh...”

Margaret walked over to one of the Eight Bullets, “Interesting. May I ask why there’s so much glitter?”

Suneater sputtered. Aside from the faintly sparkling crystals made by Hojo’s quirk, the ground and the nearby walls around the downed trio were covered in a thick carpet of red and black glitter. Small pieces stuck to his costume and fluttered off of his cape, but he considered himself lucky to not be covered in it.

“O-one of them thought he was using some sort of smoke bomb, but... it exploded too early, and with glitter instead.”

“I see.” She snorted before a scowl overtook her expression, “They deserve such humiliation from the Trickster.”

She kicked over the one with the larceny quirk and rifled through his pockets. Such cold and calculated maliciousness didn’t belong on her face.

“Ah, here it is. It’s lucky Elizabeth and Theodore were ordered to stay behind. They would’ve shown no mercy.”

“What’s that?”

“Nothing that concerns you.” Margaret sighed as she pocketed something on a silver chain, “I’m afraid I’ve no more time for pleasantries. You have two options; Either you wait here and I continue alone, or I could heal you and we go together. My orders were to not directly interfere with any fights between the villains and heroes, but that doesn’t prohibit me from healing injuries afterwards. Your choice.”

Suneater stared dejectedly at the empty containers on his belt, “I wouldn’t be able to use my quirk. I’ll only slow you down.”

The woman hummed. She snapped her fingers, sparkles of green energy floating around his body. A sharp gasp left his lips as his pain eased and his more gruesome injuries healed in the blink of an eye. He gaped at Margaret.

“You’ve already fought valiantly and won a hard battle. Don’t sell yourself short, Suneater.” Margaret’s expression softened with a smile, “Rest now and leave this in the hands of others.”

Suneater watched her leave without another word, too stunned to follow.

... He really wanted to go home.

Mr. Compress stomped through the complex, several marbles full of concrete walls bouncing around in his pockets. Unprepared Yakuza that stumbled in his path were taken care of with ruthless efficiency. He knew the cause of his sudden anger, and surprisingly, it wasn’t Overhaul or the League of Idiots.

The doctor’s words for Joker were hard to hear through the communicator, but it was Doctor Ujiko’s voice nonetheless. The final tie to the False Demon Lord of Kamino, the one who thought he was safe in a lab buried deep under a certain hospital. Mr. Compress didn’t have the time to bring it up to Joker, what with the boy’s slow recovery and fractured mental state that still wasn't completely patched.

Perhaps... he should keep this a secret from Joker. He could feel Joker's terror before their communications went down. It wouldn't be right to ask the boy to face that monster head on, especially since they're going to U.A. after this mess was all cleaned up.

But, if he played his cards right, U.A. and other pathetic heroes like Nighteye would be in his debt. They could take the doctor down, get their own hands dirty and not have a fucking traumatized child do everything for once.

Oh, there he goes swearing again.

How very ungentleman-like of him.

He took a breath to calm the unexpected rage taking over his heart, but he made a silent promise to take care of this later.

A low, far away rumble brought him out of his schemes. Right now, they all had to make it through this endless hellscape first.

"Ugh, these villains have no style!" Mr. Compress muttered as he carved the next chunk out of the wall, adding another marble to his growing collection, "As soon as I get my hands on these villains, they'll be sorry!"

He stepped out into another long hallway, groaning. This whole place looked the exact same no matter where he turned or how many holes he made in the sentient wall. He had no idea which direction to go in this ridiculously drab underground labyrinth, and with their communications went any chance of a decent guide.

"Maybe I should make a hole in the floor and descend that way..."

His ruminations were interrupted by the purr of an approaching motor. He blinked as he looked down the hall. No matter what was said later, he didn't shriek like a school girl and throw himself against the wall to avoid getting run over by the Monabus. He. Didn't! Anybody who stated otherwise was a blatant liar.

The Monabus screeched to a stop. Black marks dug into the ground as the Monabus went in reverse, stuttering to another hard stop in front of him.

Mr. Compress's jaw dropped as the driver window rolled down, "Lavenza! ?"

"Oh, I am glad you're alright." Lavenza said with a pleasant smile.

Spinner and Lady Stubbs gasped dramatically from the back seat, "She's a crazy driver!! Are we off this ride yet!?"

"Like you're one to talk, Spinner!!" Mona's voice yowled from the radio.

"Er... Are you old enough to drive, young lady?" Mr Compress asked, amused.

"Human ages don't apply to me." Lavenza said with a dignified nod.

"I'm taking that as a 'no'." He opened the door and made a shooing motion with his hands, "Scooch, I'm going to drive now."

"Oh thank god ." Monabus said, "I don't know how much more I can take!! Please tell me you're a nicer driver, Mr Compress!"

Mr. Compress shut the door and gripped the wheel, "I have a license under many names, but it's been quite some time since I last drove. Any particular direction we should go? There are baddies that need to be taken down, after all."

"No idea!" Spinner shouted, "We totally kicked some Yakuza butt before Mona and Lavenza caught up to us!" He cackled as he held up Lady Stubbs, "Nobody is a match for us, Right Stubbs!?"

“Merp!” Lady Stubbs trilled as her pudgy paws flexed, revealing her Tiny Scythes of Doom.

“Encounter anyone important?” Mr. Compress asked. “I haven’t seen hide nor hair of Overhaul or his Eight Bullets, or anyone from the League. It’s a bit concerning.”

“Uh, don’t think so? They were all wimpy pushovers.” Spinner grinned, “They couldn’t even scratch us thanks to the armor Joker gave us!”

“Those I encountered underestimated me because of my size,” Lavenza tapped the chainsaw laying on the floor with her foot, “But it wasn’t long before they were all screaming and running away from me. It was... surprisingly entertaining. I think I understand Elizabeth a little more now.”

Mr. Compress and Spinner exchanged long glances, “I’m not going to ask. But enough talk! Let’s find friendly stragglers and prevent anybody from dying today, shall we?”

Mr. Compress put the pedal to the metal and they sped through the underground tunnels.

The walls rumbled underneath Todoroki’s ice.

“How is he so strong?” Tokoyami asked as he warily watched from a distance.

“It seems Mimic has control over the whole complex...” Nighteye scowled, “It’s possible he took a significant amount of Trigger to accomplish something like this. We can keep breaking down the walls, but it’s better to reserve our strength for now.”

“Is it smart for us to continue?” Todoroki stepped away from the wall, a cold mist leaving his lips, “Everyone is being split apart. We lost Fat Gum and Red Riot, and a majority of the police force to the maze. My ice won't hold for long."

"We have to press on." Nighteye said as he looked to the small group of police behind them, "Everyone else is fighting and we're no exception."

They stopped when the tunnels shook, Todoroki's ice splintering. Screams rang out as the walls and floor warped and shifted like fresh clay.

"Watch out!" Tokoyami shouted as Dark Shadow burst out of his back, tackling Midoriya and Todoroki out of the way when great chunks of ice broke and the floor opened up beneath them.

Nighteye's shout was cut off as they plummeted through the darkness. Dark Shadow's howl echoed as they tumbled down, the quirk protecting them when they finally crashed onto the ground. They all groaned and slowly sat up.

"Is everyone alright?" Tokoyami asked as Dark shadow pulled back, hovering over his partner's shoulders.

"I think so?" Midoriya said as he got to his feet.

Todoroki scowled at the unblemished ceiling, "It looks like we're on our own. Now what?"

Midoriya looked up and down the white hallway, frowning, "Like Nighteye said, we press on."

Tokoyami snorted, "We may be students, but I feel sorry for any villain who faces the three of us."

"That doesn't mean we can be careless." Todoroki rolled his shoulder, "We should proceed with caution."

"I agree, but which way should we go?" Midoriya said.

Dark Shadow twisted away from Tokoyami and floated around them in a wide circle, listening, "There are lots of vibrations all over the place. I don't think it matters which way we go, we'll probably encounter somebody no matter what!"

Tokoyami sighed, "Okay. Splitting up isn't an option. We stick together and pick a route. Which path should we take, Deku?"

"Y-you're asking me?"

Todoroki shrugged, "We can't waste any time and you have a good head on your shoulders. Plus you're our close range fighter."

Midoriya took a deep breath and scrutinized either path.

He chose the hallway leading south, hoping it was the right path as his fellow heroes-in-training followed his lead.

Toga gripped her favorite knife in her right hand while the gun dangled from her left.

Things were going to plan, until they didn't. At first, she thought she did something wrong after they shot Joker, only to be unable to stop herself from laughing as he still had the gold flecks within his silver eyes. The same gold that swam in moonlight when they danced together, the same gold that stared at her in horror when she wore Risumi's skin at the Summer Camp.

And now, she wandered alone, separated from Dabi and Twice. With the ever changing layout of the compound, she had no way to find them. That, and Kurono had jumped in front of Overhaul and took that bullet, and it was more than likely that Overhaul reset Kurono by now.

She hated wasting one of the few precious bullets. Toga's grip tightened on the cold metal of the gun. She wouldn't let Dabi's hard work go to waste. She just had to press on and hope she found allies, or be strong enough to take down their enemies.

Toga stopped at the sound of shuffling footsteps ahead. A figure hobbled around the next corner with his hand on the disintegrating wall, dark coat tattered with dust and grisly stains, with petrified hands around his body. With every step he took, the walls and floor crumbled around him.

Ice prickled through Toga when Shigaraki hobbled to a stop, gleaming red eyes landing on her.

Silence crept between them for a single heartbeat.

“You .” Shigaraki snarled.

Toga set her expression in defiance as she raised her knife. “Me.”

“Why?” Shigaraki clawed at his neck, “You wanted to live freely? I would’ve given you that.”

“Maybe you could before you became obsessed with Joker. But I don’t want to be this way if it means I have to hurt my friends either!” Toga took a shaky breath, her mouth tasting of ash, “Mr. Compress was supposed to be our friend, a-and Joker...”

“Joker is the enemy! He ruined our plans and killed Sensei! We would’ve had everything we wanted if he wasn’t in the picture! Why don’t you realize that!?”

“Joker... he...” She scowled and shook her head, “Even when we were fighting in that mansion, he was the first person to show me kindness! Mr. Compress had that same kindness and we betrayed him !”

“So that makes it right for you to betray me and everything the League stands for? Whatever.” Shigaraki took a step closer, his head tilting at an odd angle so that his ruby red eyes sparkled with bitter hostility, “I suppose you’re my enemy now. I should’ve suspected the Rogue... they’re always the traitors.”

Shigaraki charged with inhuman speed.

Toga’s body moved on instinct as she twirled away from him, her knife singing to the tune of her racing heartbeat. She rapidly moved to avoid the decay creeping through the floor. She and Shigaraki danced around each other, the latter’s movements erratic and wild, and if Toga had been any slower she would’ve been reduced to dust. She had no time to aim the gun, her muscles burning as she dodged and sliced at Shigaraki, small dribbles of Shigaraki’s blood flying with every swing.

Hallways crumbled and entire rooms rotted away as they continued their twisted waltz. Bloodshed and ash became their entire world, two sole opponents wishing for the other’s head as they moved like an infernal tide. Shigaraki slowed as the dozens of shallow cuts wept with crimson tears, and her tired muscles protested and her pounding heart threatened to break out of her ribcage.

Then, a new element entered their world of battle.

From the next hallway came a growl and a blast of sound. Toga jumped away as her teeth chattered and her skin broke out in goosebumps. The sound attack barreled past her, as if she wasn’t its true target.

Shigaraki wasn’t so lucky.

A crack echoed through the hallway as he was hit in the chest, flying back and crashing against one of the walls. He slid down from the cracked wall and slumped onto the floor. Petrified hands scattered in all directions. Still, decay crept towards them like the withered roots of a dead tree.

Toga took aim.

The gunshot rang in their ears, and Shigaraki flinched when the bullet sank into his shoulder, eyes widening as he slowly turned his head to stare down at it. His rage melted into confusion.

“... What did you do?” Shigaraki’s voice was quiet like it had never been before. Vulnerable. Scared .

The massive presence stopped behind her as the weapons dropped from her grasp. Shigaraki’s breathing became raspy and strained. He scrambled onto his knees pressed his hands on the floor, expecting a new wave of decay to execute his enemies. Nothing happened.

He looked at her, his expression slack and almost child-like, “WHAT DID YOU DO!?”

“I-I...” Toga’s throat clogged. “I just...”

“She just acted.”

Toga froze as Gang Orca loomed behind her, his shadow swallowing her small frame. This was it. She clenched her eyes shut and braced herself. Surely he’d use another sound blast to knock both of them out, maybe she’d be lucky to wake up in a dirty cell-

“I’m sorry.”

Toga opened her eyes to see Gang Orca staring down at her, his red eyes holding a different flame of emotions to Shigaraki’s.

“... Huh?”

He knelt in front of her, “You were asking for help during the Provisional Exam, and I didn’t figure it out until much later.” He extended a giant hand towards her, the fear shooting through Toga’s heart was expunged as he gently lay it on her head. A strange warmth twisted through her chest as he softly ruffled her hair, “But now that I've found you again, you have an important choice to make."

"That's bullshit!" Shigaraki rushed unsteadily to his feet, a twisted snarl upon his cracked lips, "Kill him, Toga! You know the heroes would only leave you for dead the moment you turn your back! They can't even help a child lost in the streets, what do you think they'll do to you after everything you've done!?"

Toga found herself shivering at the sudden lack of warmth on her head. Gang Orca stood up, walked around her, and stopped in front of Shigaraki with as pitiful an expression as an orca could get.

Shigaraki lashed out, swiping Gang Orca's chest repeatedly. Toga wanted to turn away and cover her ears as his screams turned desperate and animalistic, Gang Orca's bulk shielding her from the tears falling down Shigaraki's face. Eventually, his howls died away, his actions slowing and losing steam as hopelessness seeped into his body.

"I'm sorry nobody saved you when you were small, Shimura Tenko. There's still a chance for you in my program-"

Shigaraki flinched, "I don't want your damn apology! And there's no way I'd ever be in your so called 'rehabilitation' program!"

"No, I thought not..."

Toga covered her mouth when Gang Orca viscerally head butted Shigaraki.

Shigaraki's eyes rolled into the back of his head and he collapsed onto the floor in a boneless heap. Gang Orca reached into his hip pouch and cuffed the now quirkless Shigaraki Tomura, then he stood, turning his gaze to Toga.

"Toga Himiko," He walked to her, his footsteps heavy as he held out his massive hand, "Now you make your choice. If you willingly surrender here and now, then you'll be put under my protection and placed in my rehabilitation program. I'd rather not fight you, young miss."

Her heart thundered in her ears and her limbs shook, "I... I..."

Gang Orca's eyes softened, "You'll be able to get the help you need, and after, choose what sort of life you want to live. I won't abandon you just because of your quirk."

I won't abandon you because of your quirk.

Her mind flashed back to her parents, always demanding that she hide her true self so that her 'evil' quirk would never see the light of day. She had pushed her emotions and true self into a tiny glass bottle to keep her parents happy, suffocating and suffering in silence, until the pressure was too much and that bottle exploded. Nobody remained untouched from the fallout, forcing her into hiding.

Until... now.

"What about Twice?" Her watery eyes were wide and her voice shook, "He... I want to help him too."

Gang Orca nodded, "I'll see that he gets into the program, should he be taken into custody today. I promise."

Toga stared at Gang Orca's hand. The hero had the patience of a saint as he waited for her to decide. Slowly, she reached out to Gang Orca. Her hand was a fraction of the size of his, and much colder.

Gang Orca grinned as he helped her to her feet, "I'll have to confiscate your weapons and restraint your hands in cuffs until everything is finalized. For your safety as well as others."

Toga swallowed the lump in her throat, but complied.

Knives of all shapes and sizes clattered onto the floor. A butcher knife holstered on her back. Another strapped to her thigh, which the hero respectfully looked away for. She dumped all of the needles and other sharp objects tied within her sleeves. A small pile was at Gang Orca's feet when she looked down at her legs.

"... I have more knives in my shoes."

The hero almost gave her a flabbergasted expression as she knelt down and extricated a small collection of pocket knives to add to the pile. Her gaze lingered on the gun within her reach. Gang Orca noticed and picked it up, the weapon too small for him to use.

"Wait, are these the permanent Quirk Bullets?"

Toga grinned, "Yeah! Well, all but one."

"Where's the last one? How did you even get these in the first place? If you don't mind me asking."

Toga giggled as she stood up and smoothed out her skirt, "Joker has it."

"... What?"

She elegantly twirled around, copying a certain moonlit dance as Gang Orca watched, "Dabi provided the distractions while Twice made more of me so we could gather information faster, and with my skills we found out what Overhaul's plans were after listening in to his lackeys and digging around his lab. I found the bullets and the gun he planned to use on Joker, so it was easy switching them up, except for that single bullet."

"I don't quite follow."

Toga resumed her dance, her grin widening as she held out her arms and looked to the spinning ceiling, "Overhaul and the Eight Bullets thought their guns had the permanent ones, but they are only just temporary. But still, Joker was shot with a permanent one."

Gang Orca's eyes widened as anger sparked through him, "Your plan was to get his powers taken away for good?"

"No!" Toga faced him with her hands in a placating gesture, "There's no need to give me that look, Orca! This is Joker we're talking about. The man who survived the Kamino Disaster and defeated the Demon King of the Underground. I knew he was smarter than to walk into the lion's den unprepared. My plan was to give him a free bullet without exposing myself too early."

"But what would've happened if that plan backfired? You could've gotten him killed."

"But it didn't." She looked at Gang Orca from head to toe, "You're proof of that, aren't you? Whatever gate you and the other heroes appeared from are part of his power too, right?"

Gang Orca grumbled, his grip on the gun tightening.

"I'm hoping Joker will use that bullet on Overhaul." She tucked her hands behind her back, her smile softening as her eyes turned wistful, "I only wish I could see the look on Overhaul's face when he becomes permanently Quirkless. His ultimate goal is to get rid of all quirks, but he'll be completely powerless if his own gets taken away. Kinda ironic, don't you think?"

"... I see." Gang Orca tucked the gun away and sighed, "Do you have any more weapons? If not, then I suggest we get moving. I'll need to cuff you before we continue."

Toga frowned, but held out her hands. She shivered when the cuffs clicked in place, but that giant warm hand was placed on her head again, and the cold and empty heaviness in her body faded away. She couldn't help the weak smile spreading on her face.

Gang Orca turned away with a firm nod, throwing Shigaraki Tomura over his shoulder like a sack of potatoes, "Let's go, Toga Himiko."

Toga glanced at the pile of knives gleaming under the flickering lights with a tightness in her chest, then to the various petrified hands, and finally to the gun hidden somewhere in Gang Orca's costume. The weapon she used to permanently end the next Symbol Of Evil. The gun she snatched when she wanted nothing more than to protect those she cared about.

The hero watched as she turned her back to the pile of knives, the one comfort she's had over her time as a villain. Her part was done, and now it was all up to Joker and his friends. She kept her eyes forward as she walked side by side with Gang Orca and, with any luck, into a brighter chapter of her life.

Dabi thought he'd be used to the scent of incinerated flesh by now as his shoes left sooty footprints behind him. The smell always soaked into him for days after, and turning those lowlife Yakuza to ash wouldn't be any different. His only regret is that he hadn't found Overhaul or any of the Eight Bullets.

... Or Shigaraki.

He paused when a loud noise clambered from somewhere down the battered hall.

Wild mechanical laughter, Hood's inhumanly enraged battle cries, and-

A manic grin tugged painfully at Dabi's staples when the unmistakable sound of Endeavor's shouting and the roar of flames bathed the hallway in unbearable heat.

Welp, that happened. And there's still more to come! The Overhaul finale had to be split into 3 chapters because there are SO MANY CHARACTERS AND INTERACTIONS TO BALANCE that it couldn't be contained in 2 chapters.

Current Update Schedule

Counter Strike - October 22nd

Take Over - November 5th

Freedom & Security - November 26th

Also despite being on a break my mental health decided to take a straight nosedive and explode all over the place... so please be patient with me if the schedule or anything else needs to be moved around.

Counter Strike

Chapter 80: Counter Strike

Nothing went according to plan at first, but now it's time to turn the tables.

Aaaahhhhh I got so many nice comments about last chapter and they really lifted my spirits. Thank you so much for the patience and kindness after that break. I always seem to convince myself that every single chapter I write is garbage and expect people to react repulsively and treat it as such... so to get the opposite reaction so frequently throws me off in the best way possible.

(And yes, I have believed it for literally every single chapter that's been updated but I digress augdfghobjafn)

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

Eraserhead dragged out a sigh as he tugged on his capture weapon, hauling Kurogiri across the floor like dead weight. Kurogiri wasn't keen to teleport as long as Eraserhead kept hold on Kurogiri's neck brace, but the villain went limp and made himself a problem.

"I demand you to release me." Kurogiri grumbled, "As we are both in a bit of a rush."

"No." Eraserhead growled, "There's no way I'm letting you go free after all the crap you put me and my students through."

"It's a shame." Kurogiri tilted his misty head, "I wonder how Shigaraki Tomura is faring. I hope he was able to take his revenge against those who've wronged him."

"Be quiet ." Eraserhead sharply tugged on the knot holding Kurogiri's brace, "I think he was pretty stupid not to run away while he had the chance. I wouldn't be surprised if he rots in Tartarus after this."

"I doubt he will be taken down easily."

"Right." Eraserhead rolled his eyes, "A man-child who can't think for himself will clearly win the day and exit this hellscape unscathed."

"You should give him more credit."

"Why?" Eraserhead groaned, "You know what, never mind. Why is it that you are so obsessed with Shigaraki?"

"I've taken care of him since he was young because Sensei ordered me to. Shigaraki Tomura was quite small when Sensei took him in, but Sensei was often absent because he had other important matters to attend to. Thus, I was given the job as caretaker."

"... How old?"

"He was only five years old, scared and alone. A terrified child who had just lost his whole family."

Eraserhead frowned as a stone sank into his gut, "You're being... awfully forthcoming with this information."

"I was never ordered to keep silent about such things."

"Is that all you can think about? Orders this, orders that. Shigaraki Tomura this, Shigaraki Tomura that. Do you think about yourself once in a while? Do you even care that you got captured?"

Kurogiri went silent as he seemed to think it over, leaving Eraserhead to drag them through the white tunnels, dust raining down as another tremor spread through the complex.

“No.” Kurogiri hummed, “My only directive is to take care of Shigaraki Tomura’s needs, and to follow his orders since Sensei passed away.”

“Directives and orders...” Eraserhead rolled his eyes, “What did you even do before you were All For One’s lackey?”

“I... don’t recall.”

“You ‘don’t recall’?”

“Yes. I have been under Sensei’s care for as long as I can remember.”

“Anything before that? Friends, family? What about your childhood?”

“I...” Kurogiri’s mist curled, “I don’t recall anything before Sensei.”

Eraserhead slowed to a stop. “No memory of your life before, and unable to think for yourself or go against orders.” Eraserhead’s eyes widened. “That sounds pretty similar to a Nomu.”

“Don’t be ridiculous, I’m not a-” Kurogiri’s mist trembled again, “No, that’s impossible. I voluntarily served Sensei because I believed in his ideals... didn’t I? I don’t remember...”

“Kurogiri-”

“N-no, I... I did feel a strange sort of kinship with Hood. But why would I? I’m not... like him... I...” Kurogiri’s mist undulated in a way Eraserhead never thought mist could, like ripples of water caving in on themselves, “Why can’t I remember anything ? No, wait...”

That rock in Eraserhead’s stomach sprouted thorns, “Kurogiri -”

“I do remember something... locked away in the darkest corner of my mind, it’s... hazy... A voice in my ear... a collapsing building... a hospital... Sho-” Kurogiri screamed and hunched over.

Eraserhead rounded Kurogiri and crouched in front of him, “Hey, snap out of it!”

Kurogiri’s mist shrank down. He looked up at Eraserhead, the barest wisps curling around a more human-like head, streaks of silver tears falling from golden eyes. Another twitch, another scream that jolted through Eraserhead’s veins before Kurogiri sagged forward, eerily still.

“... Kurogiri?” Eraserhead shook Kurogiri’s shoulder, “Kurogiri!”

The villain(?) awakened with a start, the mist flowing over his form as usual. Golden eyes narrowed at Eraserhead’s hand on his shoulder, before they trailed to the hero’s face in contempt.

“I have no idea what you think you’re doing, Eraserhead,” Kurogiri spat, “But I demand that you release me, as we’re both in a bit of a rush.”

“You... you don’t...” Eraserhead drew his hand back and stood over Kurogiri, a powerful wave of sorrow, of all things, coursing through him, “Do you remember anything we just talked about? About... your past?”

Kurogiri scoffed, “I have no idea what you’re talking about.”

Eraserhead swallowed as his stomach churned. If his suspicions were correct... then Kurogiri could be as much a victim as any other Nomu. To be torn apart and sewn back together with a whole bunch of quirks stuffed into you was a fate he’d wish on nobody.

His mind briefly trailed to Joker.

“Kurogiri.” The misty man looked up, eyes narrowing at Eraserhead’s strained tone, “I promise I’ll get you the help you need.”

“I don’t need your help, Eraserhead. I’d rather toss your rotting corpse into the ocean.”

Another rumble broke the stilted silence as they stared at one another.

Eraserhead sighed, "... Let's get moving."

"You're the one who will do the moving."

Eraserhead grit his teeth and continued dragging Kurogiri. No other words were exchanged as they trudged through the shaking compound. That was, until Eraserhead heard the tell-tale sounds of battle around the next corner. He grimaced as all went silent after a moment and footsteps travelled closer, widening his stance as he tightened his grip on Kurogiri.

Figures appeared around the corner and stopped, either party staring at one another.

"Eraserhead?" Best Jeanist gaped.

"Jeanist! And-" Eraserhead raised a brow at the tiny hero behind him, "Gran Torino? What are you doing here, old man?"

"Bah, I have as much stake in this raid as you! I came in here after that golden dragon flew off with Gigantomachia. After all the trouble Tsukauchi and I went through to try and find him, he gets stolen by Joker. Figures."

"I ran into him after we all got separated." Best Jeanist said, "He's been... an interesting companion."

"Oho!" Gran Torino's eyes flicked to Eraserhead's captive, a grin sprouting as he marched up to Kurogiri and sharply tapped him with his cane, "Where've you been hiding, you coward?"

"Knock it off." Best Jeanist and Gran Torino gawked at Eraserhead's sharp tone. Eraserhead buried his face in his capture weapon, "It's possible that Kurogiri is another of All For One's victims. A Nomu."

"A Nomu!?" Best Jeanist asked.

Gran Torino scoffed, “Well, Kurogiri? Is that true?”

Kurogiri glared in silence. If looks could kill, Eraserhead was pretty sure he’d be six feet under already.

They tensed as another quake rumbled from somewhere below.

“We should get out of here.” Best Jeanist said, “Some hallways are unstable, and one passage was completely collapsed. We don’t want to get stuck down here, or worse.”

“Can you take him to the surface?” Eraserhead asked, “I need to find my students.”

Gran Torino snorted, “Toshinori was right! You really are a softie at heart.”

“Are you sure?”

Eraserhead’s eyes hardened, “Of course I’m sure.”

Best Jeanist sighed, “Alright. Be careful though, the whole structure isn’t safe.”

“Thank you. Kurogiri can’t go anywhere as long as you hold onto his brace.” Eraserhead straightened out his ruffled capture weapon as Best Jeanist activated his quirk, tightening Kurogiri’s clothes while strings of denim connected him to the hero, “I owe you a favor.”

Best Jeanist’s eyes crinkled with a hidden smile, “Nah, don’t be like that. Just make sure the kids make it out okay. The Shinsou’s too.”

Eraserhead nodded and disappeared deeper into the fractured tunnels.

Fafnir’s claws gouged the bloody floor as he sprinted on all fours, tail thrashing and steam chugging from his jaws.

Adrenaline coursed through Fafnir's metallic blood like an addictive drug. The thrill of the chase. Hunter and prey. This is what he was made for. The High-End Nomu might have been handed the title of apex predator on a silver platter, but he would put that second rate prey in his place!

Hood looked back, cackling. The walls were wide enough for Hood to stretch his great black wings, using the jet-like growth on his back to fly ahead. They played cat and mouse through this same area over and over, the cracks sprouting over the walls and floor were like delicate egg shells. Despite the pools of Nomu blood on the floor and caked in Fafnir's claws, his prey was unharmed and making fun of him.

Hood rounded the next corner, and Fafnir heard the squelching noise as the Nomu shot out another of its ilk from its body. Claws screeched over tiled flooring as Fafnir threw himself around the corner, his legs banking off the wall to leap on his new prey. A smaller Nomu encased in viscous liquid sloshed around on the ground, his claws stamped out its life in a spray of red before it even sucked in its first breath.

That's how Hood escaped the first time.

Hood wriggled through slime covered talons as it spat out new adversary after adversary, using its own kin as cannon fodder. Fafnir crushed them all while Hood kept his distance and watched Fafnir's every move. Studied him like a strange new insect, picking him apart to look for weaknesses to exploit.

As if he'd find any.

Tendrils of steam curled from Fafnir's mouth as the Nomu below him twitched in its death throes, then went still. These things were not human. An empty, mindless husk that would never regain what they had lost. Killing them was a mercy in Fafnir's eyes. No different to Shadows. The Trickster was too preoccupied to heed their deaths and Fafnir would keep it that way.

Hood disappeared by the time he looked up.

“Hiding won’t work!” He howled as he crawled off the dead Nomu, “Face me and meet your death like a warrior!”

Fafnir whipped around as Hood crashed through the wall, dark wings splayed like massive sails as he slammed into the ground next to Fafnir. The floor and surrounding walls finally crumbled under the relentless destruction. Hood’s weedy laughter taunted Fafnir as he plummeted to a lower floor. The Nomu continued to swipe at the walls and rip out great chunks to throw down, encasing Fafnir in a veritable mountain of debris. Darkness encased Fafnir as the stones settled with groans, but he released an amused huff as sharp points rubbed harmlessly across his steely scales.

His claws sliced through the entrapment like warm butter, he climbed out and shook the grime from his scales. Hood was perched at the edge of the hole above.

“You’ll have to do better than that!”

Hood jumped down, studying Fafnir with a tilt of its head, “You... strong. Can’t be... injured. Immortal? Who are... you?”

The Nomu’s unnaturally deep and warbled voice was an affront to Fafnir’s ears.

Fafnir reared up on his hind legs and roared, “I have been called many names throughout the centuries! A vile serpent with legs. Wyrn. Greedy dwarf. I am Fafnir!”

“Fafnir...” Hood licked his lips as they circled each other, “Your death... will be a good death...”

“How do you expect to kill me when you haven’t landed a single scratch?” Fafnir cackled as Hood snarled, “What, are you finished sending your brethren to their deaths?”

Hood crouched, ready to pounce, when there was a crunch of a footstep before they were bathed in a crimson deluge. The Nomu shrieked as the scent of burnt flesh pervaded the room, while Fafnir purred as the fire's warmth invigorated him. Fafnir sent the surge of healing energy to Kohryu. The old dragon was growing cold and weary deep into the black ocean as his own opponent continued to struggle in vain, but renewed strength warmed his limbs and healed his broken scales.

The air warped when the fiery torrent stopped. Tongues of flame coated the ground and gave the room a hazy glow.

Fafnir turned towards the largest crack in the wall. Endeavor stood there, fire bursting throughout his costume. A name popped in Fafnir's head courtesy of the Trickster's memories.

"Flameo, Hotman!"

"Not that cursed nickname again." Endeavor scoffed, his cerulean gaze drilling into Fafnir.

Hood charged with a wild screech, not at Fafnir, but at Endeavor. The two collided with a sickening crunch, with Hood pushing the hero down on the floor. Hood raised a meaty fist raised to strike Endeavor's head.

"Don't ignore me!" Fafnir hissed as he leapt after them.

Fafnir landed on Hood's back and clamped down on the vertebrae jutting from Hood's neck, the taste of sickly copper flooding his mouth. With a wrench of his head, he ripped Hood off of Endeavor and tossed him into the same pile of debris he used to encase Fafnir.

Endeavor got to his feet, blood dripping from a gash on his arm caused by the scattered shards of concrete.

"Don't bleed out, Hotman! Why are humans so fragile?"

“This is nothing.” Endeavor sneered as he cauterized his wound, wincing as blood bubbled, “Just stay out of my way, lizard.”

“I claimed Hood first! Besides, that didn’t stop you from shooting your flames before.”

Endeavor scowled, “Joker wasn’t hurt by my fire in Hosu. I figured you wouldn’t be either.”

“Hmph.” Fafnir snorted as he shook his horned head, “Well, you’re lucky fire heals one such as I.”

Endeavor startled, but didn’t have time to voice his reaction.

Hood climbed out in a cloud of dust, panting. The black hood tied around its neck was torn away, revealing an open brain and large, jagged teeth. The soulless eyes were bloodshot as it glared at them.

“Hood was fun at first, but now I’m growing bored. I suppose I’ll allow you to share in the glory of slaying this High-End, Hotman. With our combined attacks, we may be able to overtake its regeneration.” Fafnir crawled forward, laughing as a blue glow lit the inside his throat, “Give your hottest flames, hero! Don’t you dare hold back!”

Fafnir pounced, his scales gleaming crimson as the room was consumed in an undulating sea of fire.

Hood wailed as it flapped its wings to retreat, but Fafnir snatched one of its legs and slammed it down. He took a note from Kohryu and wrapped his sinuous body around Hood, squeezing until the snap of bones trembled through the air like broken twigs. Hood struggled and thrashed, rolling several times to try and dislodge Fafnir as the endless wave of flames boiled its skin.

“Prominence Burn!” Endeavor’s shout was swallowed by the roar of fire, the temperature skyrocketing.

Fafnir's strength increased in droves as the heat melted the concrete under them. Hood, howling in rage, stretched out his bony neck, the muscles ripping apart just below its jawline. Fafnir snarled. Was Hood trying to decapitate itself to save the brain? Could it regenerate without the rest of its body? Fafnir didn't want to find out the hard way.

"No you don't!" Blood spurted from the Nomu's brain as Fafnir clenched Hood's head within his jaws, the atomic fury in his throat burning brighter than Endeavor's flames.

A blinding beam shot from Fafnir's mouth and drowned Hood within the Cosmic Flare. Red and blue danced in tandem, a swirling vortex thriving like the heart of a newborn star and consuming the Nomu's whole being in unlimited fury.

The purple-black hue of its skin shriveled, its face an unrecognizable chunk of scorched flesh. Endeavor's fire ceased as the Cosmic Flare in Fafnir's throat slowly died away. Fafnir let go of the head and sunk his fangs into the Nomu's neck, black ash and the taste of ozone coating his tongue as he snapped Hood's neck for good measure.

Fafnir tossed Hood away, his body crumpling between he and Endeavor in a smoking heap. They waited. Hood wasn't moving, nor was there any sign of his regeneration kicking in. Fafnir crawled over the melted concrete and steaming piles of metal to poke what was left of the charred corpse.

Fafnir bellowed out a reverberating victory cry, "It's dead!"

"I can see that." Endeavor grumbled as he fell on his knees, the flames around his costume sputtered.

Fafnir huffed, "I don't have any healing spells, Hotman. Don't die on me or the Trickster will be upset!"

"Shut up, lizard. I'm not dying today." Endeavor wiped the stray ash sticking to his sweat laced body, "I just need a moment to recover.

Prominence Burn isn't supposed to be used in such an enclosed space, and whatever attack you did made it worse."

Fafnir cracked the end of his tail like a whip, "You're welcome ."

"Well, isn't that a shame?"

A shadow hovered at the edge of the same crack where Endeavor entered. Blue flame flooded the room with a wave of Dabi's hand, Endeavor's startled shout became strangled as he was swallowed by it.

Fafnir leapt in front of the hero, pooling his magic to cast Psycho Force. Reality bent and twisted itself with bright, undulating lights, and Dabi screamed as he fell to his knees and clutched his head.

"What... the hell... was that ?" Dabi muttered through harsh pants.

"An attack on your fractured mind." Fafnir growled, "Stand down, otherwise the Trickster's misplaced sympathy for you won't stop me from taking you down!"

"What are you talking about?" Endeavor's voice sounded like rolling gravel as he pulled himself up, clutching his left arm.

The left half of his body had been covered in a carpet splotchy burns traveling up his leg and torso, devouring his whole arm before climbing up his neck. His left eye bled heavily as the burns travelled there, stopping below his hairline.

"Stay out of this!" Dabi snapped at Fafnir, "You have no business interfering, you overgrown snake! He deserves this after all this time!"

Endeavor glared with his good eye, "I've never met you personally, Dabi, but I've read your profile."

Fafnir craned his head towards Endeavor, "You don't know who he is?"

An eerie grin split Dabi's face, "Oh, you've 'read my profile' have you? Is that it? After all this time that's what you have to say to me!?"

"I don't-"

"Look me in the eyes and figure it out! I want to see your pain when you finally realize who I am!" Endeavor stared for a long moment, silent. After a few moments Dabi laughed, high pitched and manic. His hands dropped away from his head and he stood on wobbling feet, "Oh come on, old man. Do I need to say it to your face? Figures you'd need help to get this far, even if it's from your very first failure ."

Realization slapped Endeavor, his good eye going impossibly wide, "No, it can't be... Touya?

"I don't go by that name anymore, asshole."

"You... you're supposed to be-"

"Dead ?" Dabi tilted his head, an ear to ear grin stretching his patchwork face, "Did you really think I'd kick the bucket that easily!? Look at what became of your firstborn son, Endeavor! "

The hero looked. He studied the scars along Dabi's body, travelling up to his face to meet crazed cerulean eyes. His eyes. Tinged with madness so deep there was no pulling back from such depths.

Endeavor shook his head, horror creasing his burned features, "How? How did you survive that fire? We looked for you and only found bones!"

"What does it matter?" Dabi took a step forward as Endeavor continued to crumble, Fafnir tensed, "Now that's the kind of expression I was hoping you'd have! It's not enough, though. Shoto's here too, right? I wish I found him first. I could've slaughtered your precious masterpiece and dragged his burnt husk of a body before you. That would've been a real kicker!"

“Why, Touya?” Endeavor stood, hunched over with a mask of pain not entirely born from his burns, “Why are you doing this? Why didn’t you come back to us!?”

“Come back? Come back!?” Dabi shot another starburst of searing flames, but Fafnir shielded Endeavor with his own body, “I did come back! Three long years after I ‘died’, and you know what I saw?” Dabi jabbed a finger towards Endeavor, expression twisted by pure hatred, “I saw you training Shoto. I saw Fuyumi and Natsuo living their lives as if I never existed! Everyone moved on and forgot about me!”

“Touya, no .” Endeavor clutched his heart, “The pain of a parent losing a child never goes away! It changed all of us! I never... I’ve never experienced such a deep pain before, and your mother-”

“Oh, so that’s why you abandoned me after Shoto got his perfect quirk?”

“Your own quirk was hurting you! I couldn’t-”

“That night of the fire, I only wanted to show you how much my quirk improved so you would see that Shoto was the failure, not me! I waited and waited for you to come, but you never showed up! After everything, why would I return when I was already a forgotten ghost!?”

“I never abandoned you!” Endeavor roared, “Fuyumi still cries every anniversary and she’s kept all the portraits you drew when you were little. Natsuo visits the family grave every weekend and leaves offerings. Shoto may not remember you as well, but he took care of the shrine we set up for you at home. And your mother...” Endeavor blinked rapidly as tears threatened to form, “She may not be able to do much in that hospital, but I know she keeps your memory alive in her heart!”

“Shut up. Shut up! SHUT UP!! I don’t want to hear your bullshit LIES!” Dabi gripped his head, steam wafting from his burnt skin as his arms limply fell to his sides, a puppet who's strings have been severed. He raised a hand toward them, breathy and manic laughter escaping his jagged grin, "I'm going to end you, and then I'll find Shoto and end him too. I'll kill Natsuo and Fuyumi next. You said Mom's still in that hospital too, right? It won't take much effort to burn that place to the ground. Oh, and I'll give them your regards as I see the life go out of their eyes."

Fafnir's jaws snapped in a screeching metallic timbre, "Enough of your insanity! I'll put you down like a rabid dog!"

"No, stand down, lizard." Endeavor hobbled around Fafnir to stand in front of him, the flames around the unburned half of his costume spurting to life as he raised his right hand, "This is my responsibility, and mine alone."

Dabi's wheezing laugh came out bone dry, his grin all bared teeth.

Silence permeated the room as father and son stared each other down.

Flames were shot. Burning red and striking blue met in the middle, Fafnir did nothing but blink away the dust and wait for the spots in his eyes to go away before the twin flames clashed again.

Faintly, Fafnir recalled something deep within the Trickster's cherished memory. The same show in which Endeavor's nickname came from, one of many the Trickster used as an escape when he was young and his parents' abuse got worse.

Contrasting hues of cerulean and scarlet drowned out any other color, the agonizing screams and shouts of dueling family members singing with the boiling heat of a volcano. They clashed like swelling waves and lightning called down from stormy heavens.

Sibling vs. Sibling.

Son vs. Father.

In that show both ended in tragedy. A son, scarred and banished because of his father's icy cold heart. A sibling, so broken with madness. Fafnir was witnessing a depressing mix of both in the duel before him.

And yet, as another flash of scathing heat warmed Fafnir's scales, he was torn on whether or not to stop this foolishness.

Torn because while there was so much hatred and pain and regret, Endeavor was willing to step up and change his ways, possibly try and fix his broken family even if that meant he would dig through the broken shards and bleed for it.

The two men were revealing the full extent of their own humanity.

On the other side of the coin, Touya took the Trickster's trust and kindness and threw it back in their faces. He'd stop at nothing to fulfill what his own twisted ego desired. There was no way to reason him back to rationality. Reverse Justice indeed.

The next waves of weakening fires faded to ash and curls of black smoke, both Todoroki's were heaving as either of them were on the verge of collapse. The skin where Touya's flesh was stapled together looked painful and swelled with angry burns.

Enji was on the brink of his limit, the fire on his costume was no more.

Fafnir silently compared the both of them to used matches that burned far too long, all black and brittle from overuse.

"Touya," Enji whispered, but they still could hear his voice in the stilted silence, "If you win, if you overcame me and... killed the rest of our family, what would you do after?"

Touya chuckled as he swayed on his feet, "I'd let all of our dirty laundry go public. Your precious family name will be dragged through the mud for centuries! With any luck, the title of Number One Hero will never be the same, forever stained by your crimes.”

Fafnir’s had enough.

Such pride and integrity meant nothing if they both killed each other.

As Touya and Enji raised their hands for the final blows, Fafnir readied himself to end this charade once and for all. He didn’t get the chance.

Touya suddenly disappeared, a blue orb dropping to roll on the ground where he stood. Several figures stood at the cracked entrance.

“You’d rather die here than make amends like a proper father should?” Mr. Compress wagged a finger at Enji as the hero’s good eye was blown wide, “I’m rather disappointed in you, number one hero.”

“Goodness,” Lavenza stepped inside, craning her head this way and that at the smoldering remains, “Whatever happened in here?”

“Wow, it looks like a volcano went off in here!” Spinner ogled at their surroundings with a dropped jaw.

Lady Stubbs, perched on Spinner’s shoulder, pressed herself into the lizard’s neck, nose curling at the acrid scents.

Fafnir puffed out his chest, “I defeated the High-End Nomu!”

“W-we see that...” Mona wrinkled his nose as the crumpled Nomu husk and stared at the hero. Enji didn’t seem to hear them, his horrified focus was on the marble Mr. Compress picked up, “Uh, would you like me to heal you or-”

“No. No, I....” Enji shook his head, “What are you doing here?”

“Don’t change the subject!” Mr. Compress threw up his arms.

“We were lost until we found a bunch of charred bodies... we followed the trail all the way here.” Mona shivered, “W-we overheard you guys shouting and came as fast as we could.”

Enji limped over to Mr. Compress, who flipped Touya’s marble in the air several times, as he would a coin, “Hand him over.”

“Why?” Mr. Compress scoffed, “So the two of you can kill yourselves in a pointless duel?”

“Mr. Compress.” Mona chastised, before looking at Enji with softened eyes, “Look, you’re really hurt. Let me heal you and then we can come up with a plan from here on out.”

“I don’t need your help!” Enji roared. Mona jumped behind Lavenza as the man’s half-burnt scowl met the terrifying visage of Mr. Compress’ Arsene mask, “Give. Him. Here.”

“Sorry, number one, but I refuse.”

Enji was consumed in a light blue glow before he, too, was reduced to a marble rolling on the floor.

Fafnir bent his neck and sniffed at it, “This one has finally earned his rightful place as Death.”

“Death?” Lavenza blinked, “Yes, I suppose that man is Upright Death now. How... curious.”

“Alice won’t be pleased.” Fafnir quietly mused.

Mona crossed his arms, his brow was knotted in worry.

“Are you sure that was a good idea, Compress?” Spinner asked, “He was-”

“Not thinking clearly.” Mr. Compress swept up both marbles and stuffed them in his pocket. “I told Joker that letting Dabi go was a bad idea, and it came down to this. I had no choice.”

“What are you going to do with them?” Lavenza asked, unfazed.

“I’ll turn Dabi over to the authorities. Endeavor will remain stabilized in my marble until we can get him to an ambulance, since he’s so stubborn that he refuses to be healed.” Mr. Compress turned away from the melted room, his ire radiating through his mask, “Let’s get out of here, this place reeks. Are you coming with, Fafnir?”

Fafnir stiffened. He stood on his hind legs, head tilted towards the Trickster’s direction so far below when soul searing icicles of rage stabbed into their being.

“... Fafnir?” Mona said.

“The Trickster...” A snarl clattered in Fafnir’s throat like broken wind chimes, “He has located this world’s Strength... I must return now.”

“Wait!” Spinner waved his arms. “Where-”

Fafnir disappeared, his ash blending with the cooling embers on the ground.

Overhaul’s grip was tight enough to bruise, “Stop struggling.” He said as he dragged Risumi through the white halls, “You’re only making things worse for yourself.”

“Let us go!” Risumi tried and failed to free herself, “Most of your so called Eight Bullets aren’t here, and the heroes will find us any minute. Joker won’t ever forgive you for this!”

“You’re valuable captives. As long as we have you, we have a chance at getting Eri back.” Nemoto growled and pointed his gun at Ayumu, who was restrained in Kurono’s grasp, “Kurono could trap you in slowed time again, or we can kill you and drag your corpses to our next hideout for Overhaul to revive.”

“Do you want your unborn child to die, Shinsou Risumi?” Overhaul asked without a single drop of emotion, eyes shining like a cold star. “Remember that I’m allowing it to live... for now. Perhaps it would be useful for study, should I decide to let it come to term.”

“Risumi...” Ayumu whispered, his voice hoarse from the shock collar which prevented him from sleeping during their captivity.

Risumi stared at her husband with teary eyes, letting her body relax.

“Wise choice.” Overhaul said, “Now let’s go.”

Risumi drowned in helplessness as the Yakuza dragged them further into the belly of the beast, probably to a secret exit. She kept hoping, praying, to whichever gods would listen that Joker would appear around the next corner to rescue them. She just wanted to go home, to hold Hitoshi and Ayumu in her arms and never let go, to smell Akira’s coffee and see the boy’s radiant smile again...

Risumi shut everything away as her body slowly went numb. She felt like an observer in her own flesh. The occasional rumble and shake of the building cast away a small part of the haze before she lost herself again, Ayumu’s desperate gaze prickling at her back.

It wasn’t until she heard a pair of screams that she violently snapped back into reality.

Overhaul whirled around, dragging her with. Her mouth dropped at the sight of a flaring red cape, and of a young man with golden hair downing Nemoto and Kuroso in one fell swoop. Ayumu fell on his backside, mouth agape, as the young hero’s vibrant cape shielded him from view.

Overhaul’s fingers trembled as his right hand tightened around her neck, “Hold it right there.”

The young hero froze when Risumi tried to claw at Overhaul’s fingers, her breath squeezing through her throat in harsh rasps.

“Let her go, Chisaki!” The hero sliced his arm through the air,
“Release her and surrender, otherwise-”

“Otherwise you’ll what ?” Overhaul took a step back with Risumi, the young hero made to follow- “Don’t, or I’ll reduce this woman to a bloody paste. And not only this woman... why don’t you tell him of your condition, Shinsou Risumi?”

“I-I...”

“Tell him.” Overhaul’s growled in her ear, his grip threatening to crush her windpipe.

“I-I’m pregnant.”

Coldness laced the hallway like a breath of winter, making her hair stand on end as the shadows warped around them. For some reason, she didn’t think it came from the shocked fury radiating through the young hero’s eyes.

“That’s right.” Overhaul huffed, “You’ll stay back and let us leave, unless you want to abandon another child like you did Eri. Your hero name was Lemillion, right? You want to save a million people.”

“How did you-”

Overhaul tilted his head like a curious vulture, “By my count, you’re still at zero. You couldn’t even save a little girl that was right in front of you, let alone this woman and her unborn child.”

“I...” Lemillion’s hands balled into fists, the snarl curling his lip didn’t fit what Risumi imagined to be a usually happy face, “I won’t ever abandon anybody again! I won’t rest until you’re in prison and these two are safe! Mark my words, Chisaki, your reign of terror ends here!”

“Hey, Overhole, I’d listen to Lemillion if I were you.” Ayumu stood up with renewed confidence, “Do you know what happened to the last guy that gave Risumi and I trouble?”

“What of it?” Overhaul snapped.

Ayumu’s feral grin stretched across his face, “Joker royally kicked his ass.”

Overhaul scoffed, “Joker’s not here to save you-”

A BANG deafened them as a silver bullet whizzed past Lemillion, striking true into Overhaul’s arm. The shadows thickened as more gunshots sounded, blood splattering from Overhaul with each one. Risumi gasped as his hold loosened and she pushed way from him.

Lemillion took this chance and disappeared into the ground, reappearing in a flash to punch Overhaul in the face. Dizziness claimed Risumi as the world blurred, and within moments she found herself being set down next to Ayumu. A kind, beaming smile was upon Lemillion’s face when Ayumu threw his arms around her.

Overhaul, bloodstained and laying on the ground, pulled himself up when loud footsteps echoed ominously through the hall. Risumi’s blood froze when Joker emerged from the shadows, coattails weaving around his heels and dual guns of angelic light and demonic dark smoking.

The new mask didn’t cover the rage pouring out of Joker’s molten gold eyes. His footsteps splashed with vibrant colors as he kept his aim on Overhaul, stopping in front of them while Lemillion’s breath left in a sharp gasp.

“Risumi, Ayumu, are you alright?” Joker asked, his voice soft yet flooded with righteous fury.

“Y-yeah...” Ayumu whispered, eyes wide like dinner plates. “W-we’re okay.”

“Good. Just hang in there a little longer.” Joker reloaded his guns, empty ammo clips dropping to the floor with a metallic ting, “This will all be over soon, I promise.”

“Yes, it will .” Overhaul muttered before the earth ruptured.

An odd trio rushed through the underground tunnels, having found each other through nothing more than sheer dumb luck. Margaret found Eraserhead first, and a mutual nod was all they needed to pair up. Then they encountered Nighteye taking down some lower level Yakuza with weighted stamps that, somehow, managed to knock the villains out.

Without so much as a proper greeting, Margaret, Eraserhead, and Nighteye agreed to go together on the condition that Margaret won't fight as long as they held up their deal with Joker.

Eraserhead was formidable, in his own way. He worked well with Nighteye as they seamlessly defeated any lower Yakuza that got in their way, with Eraserhead's fascinating scarf techniques and Nighteye's merciless accuracy.

Nighteye kept giving her sideways glances when he thought she wasn't looking.

“What is it, Nighteye?” Margaret asked courteously.

Eraserhead blinked at them as Nighteye adjusted his glasses, frowning, “Nothing.”

Margaret smiled, “That sour tone suggests otherwise.”

“Do you have a problem with her?” Eraserhead asked in a surprisingly protective tone.

“No, I...” Nighteye glared at the wall as they walked, “It's not a problem, it's rather that your and Lavenza's presence during the raid was unexpected. I don't know where you came from or who you are, and nobody would tell us what happened when Joker met up with them."

Nighteye cast a pointed look at Eraserhead, who stared at the other wall and kept silent.

Margaret chuckled, earning Nighteye's ire, "We're an unknown element that makes you uncomfortable?"

"Such a lack of information could be detrimental to a case." Nighteye balled his hands into fists, "I've no information on you, and its as if you came out of nowhere. Forgive me if I harbor suspicions about your true motivations."

The air became chilled as Margaret's beauty gained an icy edge, "I don't care what suspicions you have. I won't have any quarrels with you as long as you uphold your end of the deal with Joker. But if you keep disrespecting Joker, or if you have plans to double cross him..." Margaret stopped, a low hum of magical power surrounding her, "Then nothing will stop my siblings and I from exacting vengeance. Are my motivations clearer to you now?"

Nighteye flinched, eyes wide as her aura smothered them.

Eraserhead's shoulders sank with a long sigh, "Nighteye, all you need to know is that they're on our side. There's no need to be suspicious of them."

Nighteye turned away, his eyes trained on the floor, "Fine. I apologize for my misgivings."

The inhuman strength around Margaret died away, "Apology accepted... for now. But I sense a deeper wound within you that won't be settled by a mere apology. I suspect your qualms are not actually with Lavenza and I, but with Joker. What has you so bothered about him, Nighteye?"

A thoughtful expression crossed Nighteye, tinged by... envy?

“How does Joker do it?”

“Do what?”

“How does Joker change fate? The events from my visions should have been etched in stone until Joker interfered.” Nighteye stared into her eyes, “He changed everything .”

Eraserhead’s eyes widened minutely, but he said nothing as his eyes flicked between them.

“Interesting,” Margaret simply smiled, “As the Reverse Wheel Of Fortune, you believe fate is immovable. You’ve tried to shift it with your own hands before, but you’ve given up after you found it as solid as stone. You’ve noticed Joker has changed the very fabric of fate you fought so hard against in vain.”

Nighteye paled, “How did you know that?”

“It was my own deduction.” Margaret sighed airily.

“... And?”

“I can offer advice.” She faced him fully, her golden eyes glittering, “In your quest to change fate, did you ever allow other people to aid you, or did you shoulder everything all on your own?” She shook her head when Nighteye winced, like she would when scolding a child, “Joker gains strengths from the bonds he forges. You need to expand your own horizons, Sir Nighteye, gather those you trust to share the burden with you. Only then may fate turn from immovable stone to malleable clay.”

“I... I see.” Nighteye’s expression turned thoughtful.

They were about to continue, when they heard a noise coming from behind. Margaret stepped aside as Nighteye whipped out a handful of his weighted stamps and Eraserhead readied his scarf.

The heroes stared in confusion as the Monabus sped through the hallway and slammed to a stop in front of them.

Mr. Compress rolled down the window and stuck his head out, "Ah, Margaret! We were wondering where you ran off too!"

She chuckled, "I successfully retrieved the key. I take it you're heading towards the Trickster?"

"We're trying!!" Mr. Compress startled when Spinner pushed him down to stick his head over, "We met up with Fafnir! We gotta hurry though, because Joker found Overhaul!!"

Nighteye scowled.

The floor trembled and loud crashing could be heard somewhere below.

Lavenza rolled down the opposite window, "Margaret, we have no time to dawdle. The Trickster needs us!"

"Get off!" Mr. Compress gasped dramatically as he shoved Spinner off of him, "If everyone is done chatting, we have someplace to be!"

Margaret walked over to the Monabus and opened one of the back doors, looking at Nighteye and Eraserhead, "Are you coming, or shall we leave you here?"

Nighteye exchanged glances with Eraserhead, before looking over Lavenza, Mr. Compress, Spinner and Lady Stubbs. He pinched the bridge of his nose and groaned.

"So be it. I can't believe I'm about to get into a vehicle with a bunch of vigilantes ."

"Hey, it could be worse!" Monabus griped.

Eraserhead's expression shifted through several emotions, including shock and startled realization.

“Wait a minute.” Eraserhead’s eyes went wide as he stared at the bus, “... Mona?”

“Er... yeah?”

“So, let me get this straight.” Eraserhead glared in disbelief at the car ears, then to the tail wagging from the bumper, “Back at the Summer Camp when Joker said you’d catch up later while getting luggage out of a bus that looked just like you... that was you ?”

The Monabus purred, “Yep! I’m pretty cool, huh!?”

Eraserhead massaged his temples, “I’m demanding a raise after this.”

Nighteye blankly stared at the bus. Margaret chuckled as she walked over and grabbed their sleeves. The Monabus bounced as Spinner and Lady Stubbs scrambled to the front seat, while she, Eraserhead, and Sir Nighteye took the back. Nighteye was cramped against the door, clearly miserable by his hunched shoulders and constipated expression.

Mr. Compress adjusted the mirror to stare at the heroes. He didn’t wait for them to get comfortable before stomping on the gas.

“COME OUT YOU WITLESS TWO-BIT SACK OF BONES!” Miruko screamed as she bounced off the walls like a hyper ping pong ball, “WHAT SORT OF COWARD HIDES BEHIND THESE WALLS, HUH!?”

Her ears twitched as the walls vibrated with furious howls. She was getting closer, she could feel it. Just a little more taunting and the harebrained idiot would reveal his location, and she could put a stop to this never ending maze for good.

“C’MON!” Miruko howled as her feet landed on the ground, “IF ALL OF YOU ARE THIS WEAK THEN OVERHAUL DOESN’T STAND A CHANCE! HOW COULD YOU DEVOTE YOURSELF TO SUCH A SORE LOSER!?"

The next scream drowned out all other thought, a sharp pain drilled into her sensitive eardrums, but she leapt up to the ceiling without hesitation, her kick breaking it apart and revealing the ugly mug she'd been searching for. She dug her fingers around the edges of the hole, grinning.

"Found ya!"

Mimic snarled in her face and began receding back into the ceiling.

"No you don't!" A younger voice yelled.

Miruko jumped down as a sheet of ice entrapped Mimic. Another howl echoed as a black shadow charged, claws ripping the villain out of the wall, dust and ice shards glittering like snow.

"I got him!" Deku, green lightning sparking around his body, flew into her vision as Dark Shadow threw Mimic, Deku's kick crashing into Mimic like a speeding freight train.

Miruko whistled as Mimic fell to the ground, mouth agape and eyes blank. The walls stilled as Mimic was finally down and out for the count.

She whirled around to the trio of students rushing towards her.

"Way to go, kiddos!" Miruko trapped Deku in a headlock and furiously ruffled his hair. She let go, cackling at the sputtering kid's beet red face, "He was being a royal pain in the ass. I could probably teach you a few things to improve your overall form, Deku, but you all did great!"

"Th-thank you?"

Miruko looked them over, "Where are the others?"

Todoroki Shoto glared at the unconscious villain, "We were with Nighteye when the floors caved in thanks to that villain."

"Thankfully we were still together," Tsukuyomi straightened his cloak as Dark Shadow hovered over his shoulders, "We've been wandering until we heard you shouting, Miruko. I'm glad we could be of assistance."

Miruko nodded. She reached into her hip pouch for restraints and cuffed Mimic's wrists, "There, even if he wakes up he won't be able to use his quirk again." She sighed and faced the trio of young heroes, "Stick with me from here on out, kiddos. I won't let anything get the jump on us!"

As if to contradict her statement, the whole complex rumbled. Not the distant quake she'd hear every once in a while, but teeth-chattering, bone-grinding earthquake that could be felt throughout each and every tunnel within the compound.

Deku fell into a battle stance, "But Mimic is down!"

Miruko crouched and set her ear to the floor, "It's coming from below..." Her previous playfulness melted away with a hardened brow, "If I had to guess, somebody finally caught up to Overhaul."

Another great rumble showered them in dust.

"You don't think Joker found Overhaul?" Todoroki Shoto asked. "These earthquakes are too big to be anyone else."

"He did have a head start compared to the rest of us..." Deku mumbled.

"Well, whoever it is we're not going to let them face Overhaul alone!" Miruko righted herself and cracked her knuckles.

"What are you going to do?" Tsukuyomi asked as he stepped back. Smart kid.

“We don’t have time to find the stairs,” Miruko let her feral grin take over, Deku shivered while the other two stared at her in muted shock, “We’ll make our own way down! We’ll win if we can knock Overhaul out of the running, so the more people we have fighting him the better.”

“What about him?” Deku looked at Mimic, frowning.

“Leave him.” Miruko sighed, “He’d slow us down if we brought him with, plus we don’t want him getting killed in the cross fire. You guys ready?”

The kids traded quick glances, then nodded.

Miruko whirled around, swinging her leg in a wide arc to slam onto the ground. Cracks spread, but it didn’t break... yet.

“Hey, Dark Shadow! Mind helping a lady out!?”

“Aye!!”

They took turns bashing the floor in until it caved. Miruko jumped down onto the next floor first, and called them down when it was deemed safe.

“Well, it is faster than stairs...” Todoroki Shoto muttered as he slid down an ice ramp, “I hope we’ll make it in time.”

“Less talk, more destruction!” Miruko ordered.

“Yes, ma’am!!” Dark Shadow roared.

She hoped they would be fast enough. Miruko would never forgive herself if she failed Joker a second time.

“Risumi, Ayumu, are you alright?”

Joker couldn't see their expressions as his vision tunneled on Overhaul, but what he had just heard... what Overhaul had threatened to do with Risumi now that she was-

"Y-yeah..." Ayumu's voice cracked, "W-we're okay."

"Good. Just hang in there a little longer." Joker reloaded his guns, empty ammo clips dropping to the floor with a metallic ting, "This will all be over soon, I promise."

He felt Fafnir return to him that moment, purring from the satisfaction of a battle won. It distracted Joker for a fraction of a second, but that's all Overhaul needed.

"Yes, it will ."

Joker's teeth chattered as the ground exploded with spikes, Risumi and Ayumu's startled screams felt like ice water pouring through him. Blue flames roared around Joker in reaction.

"Cu Chulainn!"

The Persona materialized with a flare of his white cape and lunged his spear forward. Joker felt light-headed as Cu Chulainn's Gigantomachia attack drained his health and decimated the wave of spikes. Thundering crashes shook the complex, chocking dust and shards of concrete rained down upon them.

Joker covered his face as Lemillion shielded the others with his cape.

"It is safe, Trickster." Cu Chulainn said when the rumbles calmed.

Joker lowered his arm and studied their surroundings.

They stood in the center of a massive cavern, waves of destruction had knocked down walls and eradicated entire rooms into flat, craggy plains. Small rocks fell from the ceiling and bounced around their feet, motes of stale dust clouded the far edges of the space like low-hanging fog.

“Is it over?” Ayumu whispered.

“No, Overhaul wouldn’t go down that easily.” Joker looked over his shoulder and did a double take, “Where’d Kurono and Nemoto go?”

Lemillion frowned, “They were right there! Overhaul must’ve grabbed them?”

“Or they were faking it and waiting for a chance to escape.” Joker said.

“Th-they had guns.” Risumi said, shivering.

“Guns?” Joker looked around with Third Eye, “Were they the quirk canceling ones?”

Risumi and Ayumu exchanged quick glances, with Ayumu whispering, “I-I don’t know?”

“Why are you asking about the guns and the quirk canceling bullets?” Lemillion asked as he helped Risumi and Ayumu to their feet.

Joker sighed when there was no sign of a shiny golden treasure to pick up from the floor. They weren’t careless enough to drop one, so he’d have to get one from Nemoto or Kurono. Joker sheathed his guns and reached into his pocket, Lemillion gasped when Joker held up the Quirk Bullet between his thumb and pointer finger.

“I think Toga Himiko stole the permanent bullets, but even if this one was temporary, taking away Overhaul’s quirk would put an end to this fight.”

“Sun Eater was shot with one of those,” Lemillion frowned, “It took his quirk away for hours.”

Joker smirked, “Exactly .” He pocketed the bullet and turned to Risumi and Ayumu. Prickles of rage washed over Joker when he spotted the torture device on Ayumu’s neck, “Hold still.”

Ayumu’s eyes widened when Joker approached, unsheathing his knife. With a single swift slice, the shock collar fell from Ayumu’s neck and tumbled onto the floor.

“Thank you.” Ayumu rubbed his neck dotted with irritated skin, “That thing sucked .”

Joker nodded and sheathed his dagger, but froze when Risumi reached out and softly lay her hand on his arm.

Her glasses were cracked and her hair was a long tussled mess without a braid. Still, she peered at him with such clarity and unbreakable willpower, even as her eyes watered and her lips trembled.

“You’ve grown so much.”

The coldness throughout Joker’s body disappeared when she cupped his face in her hands, the warmth of a mother’s touch melting the icy wrath within his heart.

“I-I know.” He lay his hands over hers, “Let’s save this until after you’re safe, okay? We can catch up later.”

Risumi nodded and backed away with a warm smile.

“What do you want to do, Joker?” Lemillion placed his hands on his hips.

“Me? What about you?”

Lemillion frowned, “I don’t want you to face Overhaul alone.”

“You’d fight side by side with a vigilante?” Joker asked, eyes widening.

“Of course! I’m partially guilty for everything that’s happened.” He looked at Risumi and Ayumu, his posture soaked with guilt, “I’ll make sure Overhaul pays for everything he’s done.”

“But what about us?” Ayumu asked. “We can’t exactly... fight. And with Risumi’s condition...”

“One of mine will watch over you.” Joker said as his mindscape stirred.

Cu Chulainn bowed his head and returned to Joker.

This Persona just returned to him, but his defenses would make sure they’d remain unharmed...

Fafnir came into reality with a whisper of blue ash, rising above Joker with a metallic trill in his throat. Lemillion gaped as Fafnir crawled around Joker and stopped in front of Risumi and Ayumu, who were equally flabbergasted.

Fafnir deeply bowed, “Greetings, Strength.”

“Uh, hi?” Ayumu said as he gawked in amazement.

Risumi smiled and patted Fafnir’s snout, the tip of his tail thumping on the ground.

“Fafnir will keep you safe, maybe find you a way out of here.” Joker ran his gloved hands down Fafnir’s side as he rounded on the dragon’s head, “Right, Fafnir?”

Fafnir absorbed how Joker’s soul simmered with a sun’s righteous heat since Risumi calmed his rage, and of Satanael whose influence pressed on the edge of Fafnir’s mind in stern warning. The Trickster’s unrivalled power flowed over their bond. It was a single stream within a bottomless ocean of unrivaled potential, and Fafnir had to stop himself from trembling like a newborn hatchling.

“Of course.” Fafnir nodded to his true master, purring when Joker scratched his favorite spot behind his horns, “As much as I would like to devour Overhaul for his crimes against you and the Strength, I’ll follow your orders, Trickster.”

“Good.” With a roll of his shoulders, he turned to Lemillion. “Ready?”

Lemillion took a breath and his face broke out in a determined smile, “Let’s go!”

Joker grinned as he shot out his grapple to the closest intact surface and leapt away, Lemillion following in a flying blur after he shot out of the floor.

“Please, be careful!” Risumi’s muffled words were lost to the wind howling in Joker’s ears.

“Wait!”

Ren and Lavenza stopped at the foot of the stairs within the Velvet Room. It was now well into the night, and Ren was to call Present Mic’s radio station. Lavenza and Eraserhead would go with him as back-up as everyone else finalized their preparations. Eraserhead practically fled outside after Theodore spoke with him in private, he was probably sipping religiously from the thermos Joker gave him as he waited.

“What’s wrong, Kaito?” Ren asked.

“I just...” Kaito caught his breath, “Before Eri and I leave with Nezu, I...”

Lavenza politely smiled at him, “Whatever it is, please make it quick. Time is our enemy.”

Kaito wrung the straps of his bag in his hands, “Promise me you’ll all make it out alive.” Kaito looked over his shoulder, nobody else was in ear-shot, but he leaned in and whispered, "I don't want to hear how you did something stupid and needed to be revived by Mona again."

"I -"

"And it better not be like the half-assed promises you made before." Kaito glared at Ren, "A real one, this time."

"Kaito, I-"

Kaito held up his hand, his heart suddenly pounding, "No, don't make the promise to that name, I..." He reached up and grasped his pendant, "I want you to make this promise to my real name. I.... my name is Ito. Ito Kazuya."

"You..." Ren's shock bled away, coloring his silver and gold flecked eyes with powerful conviction, "Ito Kazuya, I promise we'll make it back. All of us will return to you and Eri."

"I'll make this same vow." Lavenza said with a curtsy, "Is this satisfactory, Ito Kazuya?"

"Yeah." Kazuya smiled as unexpected emotions tangled in his throat, a unknown weight lifting from him, "Eri and I will be waiting for you at U.A., so don't take too long."

Ren winked before he and Lavenza went upstairs and disappeared into the door of light.

Deep in his heart, Kazuya knew Ren would uphold his promise this time.

Hoooo boyyy does it Go Down next chapter...

Update Schedule:

Take Over - November 5th

Freedom & Security - November 26th

Take Over

Chapter 81: Take Over

We're rolling deep into your underground crib

Thought I sent a prior notice card for you

We wanna make this a party you don't want to skip

Gonna be a show to remember

Take Over, it's time to boogie down

Make over nothing's gonna be the way you might like

It was over when you started with us

You should've thought twice

Walked on thin ice

Hey, game's over!

It's showtime

Joker gets a new bestie

Miruko's more badass than Kaneki

Canon Overhaul should consider himself lucky

The Arcana Is The Means By Which All Is Revealed

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

Hawks and Gentle Criminal delved into the complex, their eighth time evacuating injured police officers and small time heroes, as well as arresting Yakuza. A trail of small feathers would lead them back to one of the gaping holes to the surface.

“Can I ask you something?”

Gentle Criminal blinked at Hawks, “What is it?”

Hawks tightened his grip on his feather swords, “How was Joker after... you know.”

“I’m afraid you’ll have to be a little more specific.” Gentle Criminal donned his softest smile at the troubled look in Hawks’ eyes.

“The kid. After... after he came back from Kamino.”

“Hmm, I’d be lying if I said he bounced back right away.” Gentle Criminal pulled on his gloves, frowning, “He couldn’t even walk for a while, and the immeasurable guilt from what happened in Kamino nearly crushed him. It... was a difficult time for all of us. I like to believe we helped him pull through, but there are times where I see him looking more solemn when he thinks nobody is looking.”

“... I see.”

“Why did you want to know?”

Hawks shook his head, “People like him will always help others, but then turn around and refuse to ask for help with their own problems. I just wanted to know if I could do anything to help him after everything he did for me.”

“Yes, that sounds like him.” Gentle Criminal smiled sadly, “But perhaps there is something you can help him with, after this raid is over.”

Hawks nodded. They walked in silence after that, the sounds of other battles vibrating through the floor of this endless maze. They had navigated through a half destroyed corridor before coming to a random door like the dozens they've encountered before.

"Here." Hawks stopped and spread his wings, "This is where I sensed some movement last time. There are four people in there."

"Do you think they're hostile?"

"I don't know." Hawks tilted his head, listening, "There's... a smaller form laying on a bed. Maybe a student."

Gentle Criminal snapped his fingers. A perfect bubble formed around them and over the door, "If they are hostile... they won't escape."

Hawks smirked, "Good idea."

Hawks opened the door. Immediately, they were faced with Rappa, one of the Eight Bullets. Hawks lunged forward, smaller feathers darting out to pin him to the wall. His duel feather blades formed an X over the villain's neck.

"Whoa, Hawks!!" Someone Gentle Criminal didn't recognize stood next to an unconscious Kirishima laying on a bed, covered head to toe in gruesome injuries.

Hawks glared as Rappa struggled fruitlessly against the feathers, "... Fat Gum?"

"Yeah..." Fat Gum sheepishly grinned. "This is what I really look like when my quirk uses up my body fat."

Fat Gum had slimmed down to a much more muscular body, his hair a ruffled mess of platinum-blond. Most of his bright yellow hero costume was in complete tatters and the black mask over his eyes was ripped in several places.

Another of the Eight Bullets was tied up against the wall. A tall, slim man with short spiky hair, wearing a traditional yukata. The one with a barrier quirk, Tengai Hekiji. He scoffed and turned his head away.

“Explain. Now .” Hawks demanded.

“Easy, Hawks.” Fat Gum held up his hands, “Red Riot and I encountered these two when the walls caved in. We battled, of course, but came to an impasse.”

“Yeah!” Rappa shouted as he squirmed, turning his masked head to Kirishima, “The little dude fought with all of his might and won against me! Me ! I thought, as equals, he and Fat Gum deserved to patch up their wounds!”

“You’re an idiot, Rappa.” Hekiji muttered.

“Ignore him.” Rappa said. “He wanted to prevent us from having a real manly match!”

Hekiji rolled his eyes and sulked into his restraints.

Gentle Criminal cleared his throat, “I could heal Red Riot. I don’t have any items to heal him fully, but it will be enough to take him out of the danger zone until we can get you to the surface.”

Fat Gum beamed, “Yes! Please do, the little man worked so hard so I could get the final attack in on Rappa.”

Gentle Criminal took out one of few remaining healing stones Joker entrusted to him. He followed Joker’s instructions, snapping it between his fingers while concentrating on Kirishima. A sparkling light flowed over Kirishima’s body, some of his most gruesome injuries healing over. A hard knot in the boy’s brow softened and he fell into a more peaceful slumber.

Fat Gum’s grin widened as tears came into his eyes, “Thank you.” He ruffled Kirishima’s hair, “I don’t know what I would’ve done if...

if...”

Gentle Criminal nodded, then looked the hero up and down, “Do you need healing?”

“No, please save whatever you have left in case someone else needs it.”

“If that’s everything, then we evacuate you to the surface.” Hawks said after a stilted silence.

“Good idea. We’d only bring others down if we went out there again.” Fat Gum turned and picked up Kirishima as gently as he could, huddling the boy to his chest, “We’re ready.”

“Okay.” Hawks pulled his feather blade from Rappa’s neck, “Let’s go.”

Hawks kept the two Eight Bullets suspended in the air with his feathers as they walked back to the surface, the occasional deep rumble giving them a moments pause before they continued. Aside from a sour Hekiji, the atmosphere with this group was rather... pleasant. As odd as it was, Gentle Criminal didn’t mind Rappa’s bleeding enthusiasm as he retold a colorful version of his battle with Fat Gum and Red Riot.

But deep down, a worm of worry burrowed within Gentle Criminal’s chest.

Joker and the others have been radio silent for quite some time, and nobody could get in contact or find their location despite La Brava and Tensei’s hard work. Both he and Hawks had been unable to find a way down, either cut off by a collapsed hallway or dead ends caused by Mimic.

He hoped the rumbles deep down in the earth were a good sign that his family fought on.

They were complete opposites; one a young hero of sunlight with a billowing scarlet cape, the other a shadowy vigilante steeped in midnight, but they both had the same hints of gold in their hearts as well as their clothing. Like yin and yang, both circling together in perfect harmony as their souls cried out for justice.

Joker shot his next swing when Lemillion spotted three figures crossing the broken floor below.

“There!”

Overhaul, tailed by Kurono and Nemoto, whirled around at Lemillion’s voice. They didn’t blink before Overhaul slammed his hands against the floor. Kurono’s white hood fell as clock-hand shaped hair shot forth like a flurry of arrows, Nemoto took aim with a gun before their surroundings were consumed in a bursting array of spikes and jagged columns of earth.

Lemillion phased through the attacks and disappeared into the madness.

The flowing columns molded themselves like clay, all aiming at Joker with breakneck speed. Joker pulled out of his swing, tailcoats whipping around him as his grapple snapped back into the holster and the earth threatened to impale him mid-air.

“Pixie!”

Pixie’s appearance was followed by the blinding flash of a Megidolaon. Columns and spikes were eradicated into nothingness, and Joker rolled into a landing upon a patch of smooth ground it created. Joker’s vision was filled with thrashing arrows.

Pixie switched with Gabriel, deflecting Kurono’s quirk with her blade. Gabriel charged at Kurono with a valiant cry and a beat of her wings, pushing him into the spikes.

Joker smirked as Kurono stood at the edge of smooth ground, pointing his gun at the vigilante.

“You want to shoot yourself again, Nemoto?” Joker said as meaty thuds and singing metal echoed from somewhere within the surrounding spikes, “Was once not enough?”

Nemoto flinched, “How did you do it?”

Joker’s devilish smirk grew as Nemoto’s quirk hummed through the air, Ishtar was hardly amused as she erased it with a swipe of her power. The gun in Nemoto’s grip trembled when Joker remained silent.

“Tell me how!!”

“Confession doesn’t work on me.”

“But... but you answered before...”

“Acting was part of the plan, and you fell right for it hook, line, and sinker.”

Joker stepped forward and Nemoto staggered back. He tripped over the edge and tumbled onto the broken earth, staring at Joker in horror as his shadow blanketed him.

“What... what are you?” A shaky breath escaped Nemoto’s mask, “Are you even human? You... you really are the True Demon Lord, aren’t you!?”

Joker leaned forward and whispered, “It’s simple, really. I’m the one who’s going to end the Shie Hassaikai. Permanently.”

A dry hissing noise came from the next Persona materializing in beautiful flames, sickly purple scales highlighted by brilliant azure. Pressure bloomed in Joker’s head as he anchored four Personas in reality at once. Nemoto craned his head up towards Vasuki’s six arms and the serene expression on the giant serpent's human-like face.

"Revel in turmoil." Vasuki whispered.

With an elegant dance, Vasuki cast Brain Jack. Nemoto stilled, relaxing his hostile posture as his fear faded away. Vasuki vanished with deep, weedy laughter.

"We're friends now, right?" Joker's grin smoothed out into an easy smile as he held out his hand.

"Wh-what? Oh, right..." Nemoto took Joker's hand and got to his feet, and Joker wiped the dust from Nemoto's shoulders.

"And since we're friends, you don't mind me borrowing that gun, do you?"

"Of course not." Nemoto droned as he held out the modified pistol.

Joker grabbed it, smirking as he checked the magazine. Two blue Quirk Bullets were inside, a different color to the one he was shot with earlier. Did that mean his red bullet was the Permanent version? He reached into his pocket and added his red bullet before reloading the gun with a satisfying click .

He's about to find out.

"Thanks, pal." Joker aimed at Nemoto, "You're such a great friend."

Gabriel appeared in a sweeping rush of her blade, batting Kurono into the smooth clearing. He rolled to a stop as Gabriel hovered protectively between he and Joker. His plague mask was gone, his clothes decorated with clean slashes, so his horrified shock was as clear as day.

"Nemoto, what are you doing!?"

Nemoto snapped out of it as Joker shot him point blank. With his other hand, Joker unsheathed Paradise Lost and struck Nemoto on the side of his head with the pommel. The bowler hat fell off as he collapsed onto the ground, unconscious and with a blue Quirk Bullet in his chest.

A jagged shout ripped through Kurono's throat as two strands of his hair shot out. Gabriel slashed through one and Joker leapt away from the other, the point stabbing into one of the nearby spikes.

"How dare you!" Gabriel raised her weapon, summoning several floating swords, each as big as a man and pointed at Kurono.

She swiped down, severing the twin strands while commanding the Sword Dance to move. The blades impaled the ground, one at Kurono's feet, another at his side, others all around him until he was kneeling uncomfortably in a sharp cage. His hair writhed as he formed another arrow, but froze when Gabriel's sword touched his neck.

"I'd say there were no hard feelings, Kurono Hari," Joker said, Kurono glaring daggers when he took aim, "But then that'd make me a liar, and Eri doesn't need any more of those in her life."

Kurono snarled as Joker pulled the trigger. The blue bullet stabbed into the man's left shoulder, his hair going limp. Fine white strands continued to fall where his hair was cut by Gabriel's blade, his expression slowly going slack as he hung his head.

"One villain left," Gabriel whispered as she lowered her sword.

Kurono laughed mirthlessly, "You may have taken our quirks, but you'll never beat Overhaul. Never."

"We'll see." Joker turned his back on Kurono, "Let's go, Gabriel."

He sheathed Paradise Lost and shot his grapple, Gabriel following with a hard flap of her viridian wings.

Standing among broken concrete was Overhaul, his hands digging into the ground as his skin flowed with earth. Bits of cement fused with the skin around his arms and body, protecting him when Lemillion burst out of the ground in an uppercut. The man's head snapped back, shards of broken rock flying, but the bone breaking force was blunted by his armor.

Joker's boisterous laughter echoed overhead when Gabriel pointed her bouquet of lilies at Overhaul. Lemillion felt his hair stand on end and flipped away when a pillar of searing light erupted underneath Overhaul's feet, consuming him in a blinding curtain.

"Am I late to the party?" Joker said after he landed, colors cascading around his black and gold boots.

"You're just in time." Lemillion went to Joker's side as the Makougan faded.

The scent of burnt hair invaded their noses. Overhaul's skin steamed, what flesh that wasn't protected by rock was an angry swatch of red, his stone armor splintered in several places. Overhaul's wild and bloodshot eyes stabbed into Joker. Overhaul simply touched his own arm, burns and cracked armor repairing itself.

"Where are the other two?" Lemillion asked, eyes set on Overhaul.

Joker smirked at Overhaul as he twirled the modified gun, "Taken care of."

"You... you disease ridden abomination!" Overhaul growled, his voice distorted by rolling gravel, "This is all your fault."

"My fault?" Joker raised a brow, "Why do villains always blame somebody else for their own actions? All of this happened because you experimented on a helpless little girl."

“Eri was the key to everything ! I’m the only one who can control her curse! She’ll lose control without me to reset her, and anyone she touches will be erased!” Overhaul shook with rage, “And you... you took her away. You don’t know what you’ve unleashed into the world!”

Overhaul slapped his palms onto the ground, spikes erupting in a deadly wave.

Gabriel switched with Cu Chulainn, countering Overhaul’s spikes with another Gigantomachia attack. The spikes were reduced to dust, the whole complex shaking as a new ripple of destruction spread outwards. Joker’s vision wavered as Cu Chulainn’s attack took its toll on his health.

“Don’t give up!” Cu Chulainn vanished as Orpheus Picaro took his place, calm even as the earth raged around them, “We aren’t out of this fight yet, so stay focused!”

Orpheus Picaro plucked the strings of his lyre, the weaving musical lights of a Cadenza to ease Joker’s oncoming migraine.

Lemillion looked down at himself as his sore knuckles smoothed over and he felt lighter on his feet. He shook his head and fell into a battle stance as Overhaul stood from within the dusty destruction. Overhaul looked deranged, swaying on his feet as he repaired any damage, his yellow-gold eyes were twin daggers of hatred.

Lemillion frowned, “He shrugs off everything we do.”

Joker glanced down at the modified gun in his grip, “I can’t risk shooting him with a Quirk Bullet while he’s armored, we’ll have to keep at it until there’s a clear shot.”

“Keep your distance and cover me from afar,” Lemillion said as he widened his stance, “We can’t chance getting touched with his quirk.”

“Understood, hero.” Joker chuckled as he tucked away the modified gun and pulled out the Tyrant Pistol, the demonic grin and blazing red eyes on the black gun thirsting for battle.

For a moment, the battle field was frozen, each side watching the other for the first move.

Until Byakko briefly leapt into reality, his booming war cry casting the crimson light of Matarukaja on Joker and Lemillion. Orpheus Picaro readied himself as Byakko returned to the mindscape just as fast as he appeared.

Overhaul lunged at them with a crazed look in his eyes, streams of rock and an explosion of spikes following in his wake.

Joker and Orpheus Picaro jumped in unison, Joker’s grapple shooting out.

Lemillion met Overhaul head-on, their attacks colliding in a crunch . Overhaul growled and swiped at him, but the next attack went right through Lemillion’s head.

Joker flipped out of his next jump as a handful of columns collided in the air right behind him. He fell as dust rained on him, shooting at Overhaul while Orpheus Picaro called down fireballs. Overhaul whirled around to put up a barrier of spikes, exploding when the fireballs tore them asunder.

They continued this dance as Joker circled the crumbling arena, shooting the Tyrant Pistol while his personas countered with scorching fire, Shiva’s crackling lightning, and Baal’s howling blades of wind. They careened around the countless stone pillars, and Joker threw everything he had into his acrobatic skills to avoid getting hit. He landed on one of the previous arches and sprinted halfway across the arena, taking potshots when Lemillion wailed on Overhaul with empowered punches.

Lemillion managed to break Overhaul's arm during a flurry of strikes, but Overhaul managed to heal himself when his counter phased through Lemillion's body, instead landing on a nearby spike to absorb it. His armor was restored, broken bones were healed.

They had reached a stalemate.

However.

Overhaul was not the calm and collected Yakuza boss Ren met in that alley. The man fought like a wild animal, with no thought other than the destruction of his enemies. Something vital had broken within him. Perhaps Eri's disappearance sparked desperation, which grew more frantic as his own home and subordinates collapsed like dominoes in front of him.

Everything he worked for was falling right before his eyes.

Joker landed on a smaller arch as Lemillion and Overhaul traded more blows below, Shiva rising behind him.

"Lemillion, get to cover!"

The Persona called down a spear of lightning after Lemillion vanished into the ground. Crackling serpents shot out in all directions when the heavenly spear embedded itself into the shattered ground.

Overhaul raised a high tower to avoid it.

"Just give up!" Joker shouted as Shiva danced, a flare of Lemillion's red cape appearing next to him, "Your hideout is being destroyed, you're outnumbered and outmatched, and you'll never lay eyes on Eri ever again. It's. Over."

"He's right, Chisaki!" Lemillion said, "This has gone on long enough!"

"No. It doesn't matter what you throw at me. I'll walk to the ends of the earth to reclaim Eri by myself if I have to!"

Joker scoffed, "And they call me dramatic."

Overhaul stood upon his tower, glaring down at Joker as a coating of dirt swirled around him. He looked more statue than man now, the edges of his mask blending skin and stone into a melted harmony. His fingers were tipped in jagged claws.

"He's tenacious, I'll give him that much." Satanael whispered.

"We need to end this soon." Baal said, "While the Trickster and Lemillion have energy to fight."

Another crash came from above. They looked up as the ceiling finally caved in, Joker's heart soaring as Miruko burst through with a malicious smirk.

Fafnir guided the Strength into a hallway that was somewhat intact, the vibrations from the battle behind them had taken its toll on many of the underground tunnels.

"Are you sure we should leave him?" Risumi whispered.

Ayumu squeezed her hand, "Joker won't lose. He's got that other hero with him too."

"The Trickster will win!" Fafnir trumpeted, "There's no way he'd be defeated by that failure of a leader, and then the Strength will be reunited with him!"

"Yeah, y-you're right. I know you are... but it doesn't stop me from worrying." She shivered and crossed her arms, "He's one of ours, you know?"

"I know, Risumi. But that's why he won't lose. He's got something to protect." Ayumu frowned, "By the way Fafnir, why do you keep calling us Strength?"

“Because it is what you are to the Trickster... to Joker. Your Arcana is a bond that empowers him.” Fafnir lowered his head between the two while they walked, claws clacking over stone, “Those who possess gentleness, bravery, and virtue against hardship are worthy to bear the Strength Arcana. You should be proud to hold such high respect!”

“That’s...” Ayumu trailed off, lost for words.

“Strength, huh?” Risumi gently nudged her husband, “It suits us.”

“Yeah,” Ayumu smiled, “Yeah, it does.”

Fafnir suddenly growled and protectively wrapped one of his arms in front of Risumi and Ayumu

“Wait.” Fafnir whispered, “I hear something up ahead.”

“Ehehee...” Diedoro crawled upside down along some exposed pipes on the ceiling, guzzling from a green bottle, “I almost catch up to the boss... and look what I find instead...”

Fafnir, with as much gentleness contained within a dragon of steel and fiery wrath, pushed the Strength behind him.

“I’ll take care of this gnat.” Fafnir snapped his jaws, a burning blue glow warming his throat.

A sly grin stretched beneath Deidoro’s bony mask, “Oh yeah? You’ll be too sloshed to even-”

Fafnir’s deafening roar vibrated the hall as he charged. Deidoro cried out and fell to the ground with an undignified thud, the bottle careening away from his reach. He shakily reached for the gun on his belt as Fafnir crawled over Deidoro, his claws resting on either side of the drunkard’s shoulders. Fafnir put his nose right up to the barrel of the gun.

Deidoro was frozen, staring up at Fafnir as the gun trembled in his hands.

A hiss of steam chugged from Fafnir's glowing throat, "Shoot me, coward, I dare you."

A small stamp whizzed through the air and struck Deidoro in the temple, knocking him out as the gun clattered to the floor.

Fafnir's head whipped up, tail thrashing, but his anger for a stolen victory were dashed as multiple humans approached. And one not-cat in his Metaverse form, as well as another cat... thing.

"Fafnir!!" Spinner yelled as Lady Stubbs yowled from his shoulder, "You couldn't give us directions before you disappeared!?"

"This is another of Joker's... summons?" Nighteye asked as he wrinkled his nose, still holding several stamps between his fingers.

"... It seems so." Eraserhead stared at Fafnir, "Though I've never seen this one before."

Lavenza chuckled, "Fafnir is new."

Eraserhead blinked, "New?"

"Bah!" Fafnir grumbled, "Don't you know that stealing prey is against the rules?"

"You were toying with him." Nighteye countered, "I simply ended it before it went too far."

Mr. Compress waved an impatient hand, "Fafnir, where's Joker?"

Another great rumble answered for them, stronger than the others in that it didn't end after a few seconds. A jolt of Joker's panic shot through Fafnir. The stones at their feet bounced from the raw force and smaller spikes bloomed on the remaining surfaces and crept across the floor like overgrown ivy.

“Wh-what’s happening!?” Mona screeched.

Fafnir snarled as they were thrown off balance by the violent tremors and stone which tore itself asunder, only to flow unnaturally off into the distance as if it were sentient, heeding the call of an unknown master. The weakened structures crumbled, great chunks of the ceiling collapsing with thundering crashes and thick plumes of dust.

He bellowed as a boulder separated him from the rest of the Trickster’s team, “Take cover, Magician!!”

“Fafnir !!”

Fafnir whirled around towards the Strength. Several moving stone pillars and a sea of writhing dust separated them. Fafnir’s metallic screech reverberated off the rocks as he broken into a frantic sprint. One stone pillar erupted right below Fafnir when he was close, his scales producing a shower of sparks as he was harmlessly tossed upwards and to the side like a ragdoll.

Fafnir and Ayumu met gazes through the final opening of moving rock, which was growing smaller by the second. Understanding and regret bloomed on Ayumu’s expression before he picked up his wife.

“Ayumu, what are you-!?”

Ayumu threw Risumi through the opening. Fafnir scrambled to catch her and protectively wrapped his body around her as she screamed her husband’s name. The lights went out and their thoughts were drowned out by the raging earth, the last of the abused complex collapsing and trapping them all in a dark, stony tomb.

A few minutes before...

Miruko’s laughter was a bone-chilling battle cry as she descended onto Overhaul. The man lunged to the side as her kick sent deadly shock waves down his tower.

Other familiar forms dove in after her, sliding down a massive ice ramp flowing like a frozen waterfall.

Todoroki Shoto, Dark Shadow and Tokoyami, Midoriya with neon green lightning crackling around him, landed in front of Joker in battle stances.

Joker's gaze snapped back to Miruko and Overhaul as the villain caught Miruko's next punch with a stone-fused hand twice the size of hers.

Fire swirled around Todoroki's left arm and he was about to shoot, but Joker held out an arm.

"No, wait-!" Joker shouted, but it was already too late.

Miruko screamed as blood dripped down the tower. In one monstrous hand, Overhaul clutched Miruko's arm, broken in several places as streams of crimson leaked from half-destroyed skin. The other was clutched around her neck as he held her against him, his thumb inches from piercing through her left eye.

"Miruko!!" Tokoyami and Midoriya shouted in unison.

"You monster!" Lemillion yelled.

Overhaul growled, "It seems, Joker, that you want a repeat of what happened to Mr. Compress. I'll be extra slow and make you watch as I tear her apart piece by piece."

Blood dripped through his fingers, and Miruko, to her credit, wouldn't give him the satisfaction of another scream as her broken bones ground together and layers of her skin were slowly unmade.

Midoriya looked at Joker, eyes wide.

"What do we do?" Todoroki growled, "Joker, what are your orders?"

Joker assumed the role as Leader as Shiva returned to him, “We can’t get close without-”

“Oi, asshole!”

Miruko’s blood flecked face warped with a feral grin. Joker’s heart leapt into his throat when she punched the fingers around her neck with her good hand, breaking stone and bones like dry twigs.

“DON’T TREAT ME-”

She twirled around, the arm still in Overhaul’s grip breaking further into sickening angles-

“-LIKE I’M SOME-”

Her knee shot into Overhaul’s stomach, he bowled over and dropped her arm, which floundered uselessly at her side with a nauseating splatter. Miruko didn’t care. She took a step back, her rising kick generating it’s own wind as she struck him a second time right in the face.

“-GODDAMN DAMSEL IN DISTRESS!!”

Overhaul’s head snapped back with a visceral crunch . He was thrown off the tower as it began to crumble from the force of her attack, Miruko wobbled on her feet when the top of the structure tilted dangerously, until it snapped. She fell into the rising dust cloud.

“Yatagarasu!”

“Dark Shadow!!”

Yatagarasu materialized and soared alongside Dark Shadow, his wings batting away the dust clouds with a rising gale. Dark Shadow spotted Miruko and rushed forward, catching her before she hit the ground. The rest of the tower collapsed in on itself as Dark Shadow brought her to safety, Yatagarasu landing on Joker’s shoulder.

“Miruko, how are you even conscious!?” Lemillion asked as Dark Shadow gently set her down at their feet.

“This is nothin’!” Miruko said despite her moon white face, “I could keep fighting for hours after an injury like this! Where is that asshole!? I’LL SHOW HIM WHAT FOR!”

Joker held onto her shoulders as she tried to stand, “Just sit still while I heal you, okay? Then we can finished kicking Overhaul’s ass.”

Yatagarasu ruffled his feathers as he cast Mediarahan. The hero interns gasped as streams of light danced around them in a heart shape, healing whatever injuries they accumulated. Most of the light flooded over Miruko’s arm, where it gently faded away to reveal smooth skin. No broken bones or blood were in sight.

“Oh my god !” Miruko shot to her feet and marveled at her healed arm. She rolled her shoulder and punched the air, “Tensei told us how it felt to be healed by you, but holy shit this is badass!!”

“You’re welcome.” Joker smirked as he looked at Yatagarasu, “Scout the area for Overhaul, he can’t be too far.”

“Understood, Trickster.”

The hero interns gaped when the bird talked, Lemillion’s jaw dropping to the floor, as Yatagarasu rose into the air.

“Joker...” Midoriya reached out for Joker, but hesitated.

A silence overtook them as the three hero students pinned Joker with varying looks.

Joker’s mouth went dry. He knows why they’re staring at him like that, of course. Everything that happened from Kamino onwards probably felt like a stab in the heart, and he was the one holding the dagger.

Miruko lightly slapped Joker on the shoulder with her brand new arm, "You kids can catch up later! We still have work to do!"

Joker rubbed his arm, "Yeah, you're definitely the High Priestess..."

Miruko gasped, "I'm one of your Arcana too!?"

Joker blinked rapidly, "You-"

"Trickster! I have found Overhaul with his subordinates. Hurry!!"

Joker jolted, "Yatagarasu found them. Let's move!"

"Right! Okay, team!" Miruko cackled as she followed Joker, "Let's go kick some honey buns!!"

"Is everyone alright?" Margaret asked as their tiny pocket lit up with blue licks of flame.

"F-f-f-f-fine!?" Spinner screamed in a high pitched voice.

"Why are you scared?" Mona griped as Mercurius held up some rocks that would've otherwise crushed them, "You've seen Mercurius before!"

"It's not Mercurius we're afraid of! N-not to sound ungrateful for Mercurius' hard work, Mona..." Mr. Compress pointed to the other Persona, "But what in the living hell is that thing ?"

"Not today, Satan!" Spinner yelled.

"Oh, how marvelous." Margaret smirked as she held her Compendium open to one of her favorite pages, "This, in fact, is Satan."

Spinner staggered backwards while a strained wheeze scraped past his throat.

Mr. Compress swallowed, "What an unfortunate time for Spinner to guess right."

Eraserhead groaned as he clutched his head and sat up, "What are people screaming about?"

Then he too, looked up to the gigantic six fingered hand holding the boulders over his head, skeletal and wrapped in greyish-blue skin. His eyes trailed over the five other bony arms, to the six insect-like wings sprouting from its back and serpentine lower body, and finally to the twin bone tentacles sweeping around the floor. The terrifying skull face opened its jagged jaws and released a wicked cackle, the air turning frigid at its breath.

In essence, it looked like it enjoyed eating damned souls for breakfast.

Eraserhead blinked, scrubbed his eyes with the palm of his hands, and then stared with another slow blink, "Okay, so we all died and went to hell. Great."

"Don't joke about something like that!" Spinner snapped.

"You should be thankful, Spinner." Lavenza stood up and dusted herself off, "Joker had to execute Satan several times to bestow you the very armor you're wearing under your costume. Had his stock not been full at the time, he would've had this one with him before encountering you. Or Beelzebub... or Lucifer... Perhaps Sandalphon or Metatron... any combination of them, really."

Spinner gulped and trapped Lady Stubbs in a bone crushing hug. The cat thing looked nonplussed as she happily chirped at Satan, who in turn rattled his wings back at her. Margaret raised a brow, but otherwise made no comment.

Mr. Compress pointed at Satan, "Hey Eraserhead, how many heroes would soil themselves if Joker fought you with that ?"

“... Yes.”

“If you’re done screwing around...” Their gazes turned to Nighteye, who was crumpled against the wall and holding his stomach.

Mona gasped, “You’re injured! Mercurius?”

“A little busy, Magician.” Mercurius muttered, a few stones falling as he adjusted his burden.

“Allow me.” Lavenza reached for the Compendium at her hip, “Thankfully, Joker has left me with a healing Persona. And... you’re only injured because you pushed me out of the way of the collapse, didn’t you? It’s the least I could do to return the favor.”

Eraserhead furrowed his brow, “... Persona?”

“You saved Lavenza?” Spinner said as he scratched his nose, “I guess not all heroes are bad. Maybe.”

Mr. Compress crouched beside Nighteye, “We’ll have to remove that little splinter before you’re healed, of course.”

Nighteye glared at the massive spike jutting through his stomach and out his back, a curtain of blood dripping over his once pristine suit and into a growing puddle on the floor. He breathed through clenched teeth, tasting copper on his tongue.

“Do it, then.”

Lavenza opened the Compendium and summoned Titania, who blinked and studied her surroundings. She seemed disappointed when she didn’t see Joker.

“You may feel a little pinch.” Mr. Compress deadpanned before he ripped it out.

Nighteye gasped as his whole body was wracked in agony. Then, just as fast, the pain faded with the weaving lights showering their cramped space.

Mr. Compress tossed the bloody spike aside as Nighteye glanced down in shock. His fatal wound was gone. He felt around his abdomen, pulling his hand away to stare at his at it. There wasn't a drop of blood in sight.

Eraserhead cleared his throat, voice shaking, "Are you alright, Nighteye?"

"Yes, I'm..." Nighteye got to his feet, half dazed from disbelief, "I think I'm fine."

Titania winked at Nighteye and disappeared with a playful twirl, but everyone jumped when Lavenza's Compendium dropped to the ground with a heavy thud .

"Ah..." She gripped her chest as she fell on her knees.

"Lady Lavenza, what's wrong!?" Mona asked as she rushed to her side, "Are you hurt!?"

Margaret frowned, "The healing did not work?"

Lavenza shook her head, "N-no, it's not that. I am uninjured."

"... Then?" Margaret asked softly.

"I feel like... I'm being split in half again." Lavenza shut her eyes as the others, except for Mona and Margaret, exchanged alarmed glances, "No, it's the Strength Arcana!"

"Risumi and Ayumu!" Mona's expression fell in shock, "Did something happen to them!?"

"... Maybe Fafnir couldn't save them in time."

"Mr. Compress!" Spinner shouted, "Don't say things like that!"

“No, he may be right.” With a grimace, Lavenza got on her feet and picked up the Compendium, wiping it free of dirt with her gloved hand, “Something has happened to the Strength. I can feel their pain as my own. We must find them.”

Mr. Compress reached for his marbles, “I’ve collected enough chunks of concrete from this place, if I can stabilize this pocket long enough for us to dig ourselves out...”

“It’s already claustrophobic in here.” Eraserhead said, “Let’s get this over with.”

“We’ll have to move slow-” Mr. Compress was cut off by ominous rumbles from all around them, “... Or not.”

“From the sounds of it, the real battle has just begun.” Nighteye scowled as he pushed up his cracked glasses, “Mona.”

The not-cat flinched, “Y-yes?”

“You’d be small enough to fit through a gap in your... other cat form, wouldn’t you?”

“Yeah?”

“You should scout ahead, should one such gap open.”

“But-!”

“I agree.” Lavenza gravely smiled at him, “If possible, you must aid the Trickster.”

“What about you, Lady Lavenza?”

“I can vaguely sense where the Strength is,” She placed a hand over her heart, “The rest of us should focus on finding them while you fight alongside the Trickster. He may get distracted if he’s feeling this same pain. He needs you.”

Mona looked around the others' worried expressions, before landing on Mercurius. His Persona nodded and sent a wave of confidence.

"O-okay. Let's do this!"

Mr. Compress threw a few choice marbles on the ground. With a snap of his fingers, large chunks of concrete appeared and cemented themselves between the floor and collapsed ceiling.

"That should do it for this side. Mercurius, try letting go. Slowly, please." Mr. Compress said.

Mona sighed in relief when Mercurius released the burden. They held their breaths as the extra concrete squished them closer together, but the groans overhead faded as their tiny pocket stabilized.

"Ruler of Power," Satan whispered to Margaret, voice as dry as crisp autumn leaves, "I sense a new passage opening. The Magician may be able to squeeze through."

"He's right." Mercurius pointed to the stones behind one of Satan's bone tentacles, "There's a faint breeze between these smaller stones."

"Allow me." Mr. Compress pulled at his glove, before trapping rocks with his quirk until a faint light pierced through the velvety blue.

Mr. Compress tilted his head at Mona, "Think you'll fit through there?"

Mona winced, but he reverted to his normal feline form. Eraserhead and Nighteye gaped at the sudden change, but remained silent as Mona stepped into the opening. It was a tight squeeze, the rocks pressing on either side of his shoulders, but the tunnel wasn't too long.

“I can fit!” Mona turned to stare at them as Mercurius returned to him, “You guys be careful, okay?”

“We should be telling you that.” Eraserhead muttered, “We’ll be fine. Just go.”

Mona nodded before he crawled towards the light.

“Kai...” Kurono whispered as blood dripped from the deep gashes around his body, the price he paid for escaping that bladed prison in a hurry.

He stood before his best friend, dragging the unconscious Nemoto behind him.

“Kurono.” Overhaul droned, golden eyes glinting.

With a brush of Overhaul’s deformed claws, Kurono and Nemoto were made whole again. Kurono’s pain eased as his quirk returned to him.

Thankfully, Joker shot them with a temporary Quirk Bullet this time, so all Kai had to do was expunge the drug blocking the body’s response to the Quirk Factor. Kai had to waste the only prototype cure they had after Toga hit him with a permanent one earlier during the heat of battle.

If it was a permanent bullet that completely destroyed the Quirk Factor then... not even someone as smart as Kai could rebuild something like that from scratch.

Only Eri’s curse would be able to bring it back without the cure.

They were restored not a moment too soon. A pang of despair filled Kurono when he recognized the familiar raven circled them before it vanished in blue ash, moments later Joker and his fellow hero scum found them through the wreckage. Kai didn't move as the group descended on them, continuing to stare Kurono in the eye.

"I understand." Kurono smiled as he reached into his pocket for several syringes. With a pained grunt, he shoved all of the needles into his chest and pressed on the plungers, his blood replaced with biting ice as his restored quirk burst with unrestrained power, "Use us as you will, Kai. For our dream."

"Yes," Kai slowly put his hand over Kurono's face, whispering in a deceptively gentle tone, "For our dream."

Kurono's world split apart, never hearing the cries of dismay as his and Kurono's sacrifice, paired with an immense amount of Trigger, turned his best friend and leader into a living nightmare.

Clumps of tangled seaweed and salt water dripped from Kohryu's body as he floated towards the compound. The massive weight in his jaws, a mountain in the shape of an unconscious half-drowned giant, made the journey taxing.

Both of them sustained gruesome injuries. All For One's wicked creation was far stronger than Kohryu gave him credit for.

In truth...

Kohryu would not have won without Fafnir healing him in the nick of time. His blood had seeped into the ocean depths thanks to how Gigantomachia had swelled in size, his grubby hands morphing into devilish claws that tore at Kohryu's belly and made deep rents into his scales.

Perhaps the pressure had gotten to Gigantomachia as they fell into the blackness, or he had finally run out of oxygen after nearly an hour underwater. That last bout was one of desperation, and Kohryu didn't regret running the giant into an underwater cliff face at the deciding moment.

Cries of surprise drew Kohryu out of his thoughts as he approached the Shie Hassaikai complex. Gaping chasms riddled the ground like bullet holes, the largest of which he created.

The Temperance sealed some of the smaller holes with his quirk, while a blur of scarlet wings burst forth from another. Feathers, colored like daggers of flame, darted behind the Star, rescuing both friend and foe who were trapped underground.

Kohryu ignored the startled gasp of an inferior dragon and her interns as he slithered through the sky, blazing ruby eyes focusing on his target. The great dragon stopped over Tsukauchi, the sunlight on his scales casting the whole street with a thousand tiny sunbursts. Kohryu stared the bewildered detective in the eye for several moments before he spat Gigantomachia at his feet, the thunderous boom shaking all police cars within a half mile radius. Several crabs dislodged from Gigantomachia's hair and scuttled around the pavement.

"A gift," Kohryu whispered as to not blow out Tsukauchi's eardrums, "From Joker."

Tsukauchi snapped himself out of his shock as he commanded a small army of officers and heroes to restrain Gigantomachia, half of them gaping at Kohryu in unrestrained reverence.

"Hey!"

Kohryu turned his head. A few figures approached in the air; the scarlet sparrow, a flying girl who the Trickster had named 'Nejire', and the other dragon awkwardly flapping about with leathery wings. They had such brave faces for ones facing a god.

"Do you know where Joker is!?" The Star spread his wings in a gentle flutter, "We can't locate Joker or some of our other allies down there! If you could help us-"

Kohryu cried out at a sudden pain in his chest. The humans startled as his tail thrashed helplessly through the air, his claws lightly dragging across the unharmed scales on his belly. The pain surged through his other selves, and he sensed the Trickster clutching his chest with a strangled yelp.

Fafnir's bond went dead silent as he... rejected their presence.

"Tragedy strikes..." Kohryu whispered.

"What!?" Ryukyu ventured closer, "What are you talking about!?"

The ground trembled. Spikes slowly bloomed over the Shie Hassaikai grounds like the petals of a deadly flower.

"GET BACK!" Kohryu's voice struck the humans in a crack of thunder.

A violent wind picked up as Kohryu surged towards the shifting ruins, the other flying humans' struggling to keep up.

Time slowed as Joker absorbed the horror before him.

Overhaul stood in a cloud of red mist, the blood of the man's subordinates, turning to them as crimson rivulets streamed down his body. The sudden crackle of earth was their only warning.

Satanael ripped himself out of the mindscape, sweeping the group into his arms as his six leathery wings beat frantically. Joker gasped as the space they were in moments ago was devoured by countless spikes grinding together from all directions. Fafnir's defences may have protected Joker, and maybe Lemillion or Miruko could have avoided it, but the others would have been a bloody paste at the speed in which it happened. Barely the blink of an eye.

The whole complex broke apart as Overhaul's body contorted, blood thickening and swirling around him as bursts of spikes and innumerable columns ruptured the earth, all charging towards Overhaul.

They could only watch as Overhaul allowed himself to be consumed, blood and bone and massive chunks of earth roiling together.

“We can’t defend ourselves all the way up here!” Miruko yelled as dozens of stone hands and whipping arrow-shaped tendrils burst through the amalgamation.

“Satanael, set us down!” Joker ordered, “Everyone, form a defensive circle when we do!”

“Roger!” The hero students shouted in unison.

Satanael carried them a distance away before he let go, and they landed on their feet just in time to beat back a fresh wave of spikes from below and arches of earth coming in from above. No words were needed as the group moved as one unit.

Todoroki summoned a massive glacier trapping stone in a layer of ice.

Dark Shadow charged out of Tokoyami, swelling in size as he bellowed in rage, claws cleaving through ice and stone like warm butter.

Ice cracked and another wave of stone broke through, but Midoriya, Miruko, and Lemillion attacked together.

“Luna Rush !!”

“Manchester Smash!”

“Phantom Menace!”

Miruko and Midoriya flung themselves through the air, Miruko dove towards the wave of spikes with a flurry of kicks and Midoriya backed her with an axe kick of his own. Lemillion was a blur as he used his quirk to ping-pong around them, taking out columns and spikes.

Satanael raised his weapon as Joker waved his hand forward, about to finish it with a Riot Gun to break through to Overhaul. That was, until pain exploded through his heart. Joker clutched his chest with a pained yelp, Satanael copying with a startled shout of rage as agony blossomed through them.

“Joker!?”

Massive shadowy arms wrapped around Joker and yanked him back, the rest jumping away from the last ripple of spikes to regroup. Satanael faded from reality as the pain radiated through them.

The arena went quiet as a wall of dust blocked their vision of Overhaul, the other students protectively surrounding Joker as he tried to pull himself together. Joker grit his teeth to contain shouts of pain as his newly forged soul threatened to break at the seams.

“I’m fine.” Joker waved Dark Shadow off.

“You don’t look fine!” Miruko snarled at him.

“Something’s coming!” Tokoyami shouted, Dark Shadow hovered above them, claws ready as a massive shadow moved through the thick dust wall.

The ground trembled as dozens of stone hands supported the huge black shape lunging closer. Dust clouds parted like a curtain, revealing Overhaul, or what he became .

A stone colossus rose before them, with bulging black and white veins arching across its body. The arrow shaped tentacles thrashed in all directions from any openings in the stone colossus’ skin, making it impossible to get close. Black and white fabric billowed out of its horribly fanged mouth and around its shoulders like tattered capes, the last remnants of Overhaul’s subordinates.

Overhaul was inside the mouth, the bottom half of his body completely fused with the goliath. His soulless eyes pinned them to the spot.

"I don't have time to cure yo ur sickn es s, her oes . Where's Eri?"

His voice was intermixed with both Nemoto and Kurono's, a familiar ripple of energy churned the air at it's distorted timbre. Ishtar, despite the pain within them, eradicated its influence.

"I don't know!" Midoriya shouted.

"As if we'd ever tell you!" Lemillion said.

"The heroes never said a word about her." Tokoyami muttered.

"She's already at U.A. with Nezu!!" Miruko blurted. Her eyes widened in horror as she slapped her palms over her mouth.

"U.A.... U.A.... U.A... A so urce spo uting t he hero dise ase..."
Overhaul's strange voice warbled, "I 'll destr oy it and t ak e her back!"

A deafening screech tore through their ear drums as the abomination turned away and grasped the wall with dozens of disjointed limbs, leaving a ripple of spikes with each booming step. It climbed several hundred feet with ease, and the ceiling was unmade with a single touch.

Joker and the others shielded their eyes as sunlight blinded them.

Todoroki glared at Miruko, "Why did you tell him!?"

"I don't know!!" She gave Joker a pleading look, "It just came out all on its own! Joker, I swear I would never endanger Eri! Never!!"

"So those blue bullets were just temporary." Joker muttered before he gave Miruko a reassuring smile, albeit shaky, "It's not your fault, Miruko. It was Nemoto's quirk; Confession. Is everyone else alright? No injuries?"

"Are we okay?' Midoriya gaped at him, "What about you? What happened earlier?"

He opened his mouth to answer-

"Joker!"

Tokoyami and the other students startled as a flying feline launched himself at Joker, propelled by blasts of emerald wind.

"Mona!" Joker held out his arms and hugged Mona to his chest when they crashed into each other, "Are you alright? Why are you alone?"

"I-I'm okay!" Morgana rubbed his head against Joker's chin, "They... Mr. Compress, Ladies Lavenza, Margaret, and Stubbs, Eraserhead, Spinner, Nighteye... we were all together when the complex collapsed. Don't worry, they're okay!"

Joker paled further, "What about Risumi and Ayumu?"

"Fafnir was with them, but we were separated when everything came down." Morgana's ears flattened, "Lady Lavenza felt this intense pain in her chest... I'm worried."

"No..." Joker faced Lemillion with no small hint of desperation, "You have to find them!"

"He's right! There are civilians in danger!" Miruko gave Lemillion a stern look, "With your quirk you have your work cut out for you, Lemillion! We'll take care of Overhole!"

Lemillion nodded, "I'll find them, I promise!"

The young hero dove into the wreckage without a second thought.

“... Are you okay to fight, Joker?” Todoroki asked as he stared at Joker in concern.

Joker rubbed his chest, it felt as if his insides were breaking apart.

“I will keep the pain at bay for as long as I am able, Trickster.”

Satanael's presence hovered over Joker's whole being, holding their soul together and taking the pain onto himself, “But I don't know for how long. The Strength Arcana is gravely injured...”

“I'll be fine,” The white lie didn't convince them as they stared obvious disbelief. He waved a hand as Morgana climbed his shoulder, “Let's focus on getting to the surface before Overhaul gets too far.”

The sound of destruction and Kohryu's furious battle cries echoed from the heavens.

“How are we going to get up there!?” Dark Shadow shouted as he curled around Tokoyami, his body shrunken by sunlight, “It's like a mile up!”

A familiar shadow descended into the bowels of the Shie Hassaikai complex.

Tokoyami inhaled sharply, “Hawks!!”

“That's how.” Joker smiled as Hawks hovered above them, “Care to give us a lift, Birdie?”

Hawks winked as several feathers shot out, “The Hawks Hero Express is now open!” He chirped as the feathers impaled themselves in various pieces of their clothing, “Please keep all hands and feet inside your compartments! This is gunna be a bumpy ride!”

Todoroki blinked at the feathers sticking out of his costume, “... What compartments?”

They ascended. Morgana yowled as he clung onto to Joker for dear life. Wind struck their faces as they were torn from the underground and into the bright sunlight high above the compound. Deep crevices and spikes consumed the former Shie Hassaikai manor, half of it now melded into its former master as he carelessly stomped around. That poor cherry blossom tree had been ripped up by its roots like a pesky weed, shedding leafy tears as dirt and wood intermingled with the tendrils along its back.

Ryukyu and Nejire flitted around the colossus' head like flies, shooting blasts of golden energy or streams of dragon fire. This high up, those heroes and police who were fleeing looked like ants.

Kohryu flew to them when he sensed the Trickster.

"Set us down on Kohryu's back!" Joker commanded as golden scales were beneath their feet.

Hawks sputtered, but complied.

Miruko gasped as she knelt down and rubbed her hands on radiant scales, her eyes sparkling like stars. The other students' legs wobbled as they clutched the ridge going down Kohryu's spine, their whirlwind of emotions lit up by golden flecks bouncing off Kohryu's scales.

There was a sudden crackle in Joker's ear as Kohryu shuttled them over the chaos.

"Joker!?"

"La Brava!?"

"Oh, thank goodness!" Gentle Criminal's voice came through next, "We were so worried!"

"You're not the only one, Gentle!" La Brava said, "You were right there when that thing came out! Are you okay!?"

“Y-yes, it was a close call, but my quirk rendered those spikes harmless. He hasn’t spotted me yet thanks to Ryukyu and her intern.”

“What’s the plan?” Tensei said with a practiced calm, “La Brava and I are guiding the first responders away, but we need to take that thing down before it can get to them!”

“Going down there without a plan would be suicide.” Hawks said with a scowl as Ryukyu barely avoiding being impaled.

“I admit that I won’t be much use in this grand battle,” Tokoyami said, “The light is too bright for Dark Shadow.”

Todoroki scowled, “Overhaul’s actively fusing other things to him. My ice would be a detriment and my fire isn’t powerful enough to hurt him.”

Baal swirled his goblet with a hum, “Trickster, if we were to pool a great amount of magic into a single attack... it may be the only way to get a clear shot at Overhaul.”

Ishtar blinked, “What do you propose?”

“Perhaps, with the Magician’s help, we could call down a great tornado to surround Overhaul’s abomination, then we can execute him when he’s weakened.” Baal said, “In your memories, Titania and the Magician combined their magic to heal that hospital, correct?”

Yatagarasu gasped, “Kohryu, myself, Baal, the Magician and Mercurius, plus Concentrate... it would be very powerful indeed.”

“It would take much energy,” Kohryu hummed, “It would have to be the final attack before Overhaul takes the Quirk Bullet.”

Hawks studied Joker, “You have a plan, don’t you?”

“Yes, but more people need to be away from the disaster zone.” Joker looked across the conflicted expressions, “Hawks, you and the others can help evacuate people.”

“Joker, let me stay with you!”

Joker’s eyes widened at Midoriya.

Hawks shook his head, “Kid, this is too dangerous-”

Midoriya let go of Kohryu’s ridge and walked in front of Joker with his head held high, wind weaving through his hair, “I promised myself that I wouldn’t ever leave anyone behind again! I failed with Eri, and I’ve failed you too. I won’t let Overhaul get away with everything’s he’s done! Please, Akira.”

The other boy’s eyes seemed to glow. He wouldn’t take no for an answer.

Curious, Joker looked at Midoriya with Third Eye. Eight different colors encompassed Midoriya’s own, one color passing its strength to the next until it’s enormous power culminated within his soul.

It wasn’t like All For One’s trapped souls screaming in agony, these colors fluctuated in perfect harmony.

Joker’s pained heart lurched when the Chariot card slowly spun over Midoriya’s head, blazing in its own prismatic rainbow as it offered its flow of strength back to him. Joker could almost hear the Chariot crying out for the Strength, see that same resolve reflected within Midoriya’s eyes.

“He can do it.” Joker stated as Third Eye faded.

Midoriya’s expression lit up.

“What!? But-” Hawks sputtered.

“I’m going too!” Miruko pounded her chest with her fist, “There’s no way I’m missing out on this after what that bastard did! Besides, Hawks, you’d be the best choice to get people outta here! Don’t you call yourself the fastest hero, or was that all just a bunch of bullshit blown up your ass!?”

Hawks clamped his mouth shut when Joker and Miruko pinned him with knowing grins. Hawks’ face turned red and he cursed under his breath, “Alright, but I’m not going to answer to Nighteye if something happens!”

Ryukyu roared below as she barrel rolled to avoid a half dozen tendrils, “Nejire and I could use some help down here!!”

“You all have your parts to play,” Joker said, “Now move!”

Hawks, still muttering under his breath, zoomed towards the fleeing police, dragging a pair of students with him.

Twice doesn’t know how he staggered through the underground labyrinth, nor could he feel the fresh air and sunlight on his body as he emerged outside the complex’s walls. Wetness dripped down his face as he fought against the turmoil, his skin felt too tight and ready to burst as angry voices howled in his mind.

“Please... please stop, ” He finally fell to his knees, hands gripping either side of his head as it threatened to split open, “I’m being torn apart... It hurts... Toga....”

“Ther-ody her-!?”

“He-ou alr-?”

“Twice!?”

Kind, familiar hands touched him. They tied soft fabric around the exposed half of his face. The voices calmed, turning from a raging hurricane to a small, still pool.

“Twice?”

He looked up, his mind finally clear, “Toga? Toga!!”

She smiled as he wrapped his arms around her, but she couldn’t hug back. He backed away with a shot of alarm as he saw the cuffs on her wrists.

“What is this!?” Twice threw Toga behind him, glaring at Gang Orca a few paces away, “Run, Toga! I’ll distract him! No, we’ll both run away screaming!”

Nobody moved.

Gang Orca wore a bemused expression and Toga chuckled behind him, “It’s okay, Twice.”

“Eh?”

Toga walked around him to Gang Orca, who also had his old crusty boss thrown over his shoulder, before she faced him with a soft smile.

“I’m going with him.” Her smile fell as her eyes filled with tears, “They can help me start over. I don’t want to be a villain anymore!”

“... start over?”

“Come with me, Twice.” She held out her cuffed hands, “We don’t have to be all alone. You don’t have to suffer anymore.”

“I...”

Fear jolted through them as the sun was blotted out by a blazing gold dragon charging towards the stone monstrosity as big as a building. The monster was distracted by whizzing shapes darting around its head to notice the dragon coming head on.

A great crack tore through the city when the two collided, the dragon’s massive horns tearing off a small chunk of the big monster's body before it flew away, dancing around several arrow-shaped tendrils.

He froze when the shadow of a falling chunk of rock fell over him. Twice pushed Toga away and scrunched his eyes shut. He prepared for pain, but it never came.

"Watch out!!"

Twice opened his eyes to see a finely dressed gentleman standing before him, hands splayed to the sky as the chunk collided with a stretchy barrier. The gentlemen grunted and skid back when the two forces collided. Twice thought the stone would break through, but the momentum slowed and it rolled harmlessly off the barrier and onto the ground.

"... You saved us?" Twice whispered.

"Y-yes, I-" Gentle Criminal turned and did a double take, his brow hardening as he scanned the small group, "Gang Orca? You two... are with the League."

"Not anymore!!" Twice shouted, "Toga-chan and I quit! Nah, we were fired. They owe us severance pay!"

Gentle Criminal blinked, and stared at Gang Orca.

"It's true." Gang Orca said with a shrug, shuffling an unconscious Shigaraki Tomura on his shoulder, "Toga even took out their former leader."

"But how did you get out?" Gentle Criminal asked, eyes widening, "Hawks and I were checking the compound before that monster emerged."

"I used my quirk to make our own path out." Gang Orca pointed to one of the many holes behind them.

The dragon's next cry summoned a blanket of clouds, an unnatural cold front and the refreshing scent of rain sprouted goosebumps across their bodies.

"It's too dangerous to linger here." Gentle Criminal said when a harsh breeze hit them, "You have to leave before you get hurt!"

Twice puffed out his chest as he pulled out a length of his measuring tape, "No, let me help!"

"What are you doing!?" Gentle Criminal flinched back when Twice approached.

Twice jabbed a finger at the dueling behemoths, "You have a plan against that monster, right!? No you don't! We're all doomed!!"

"Um... y-yes?" Gentle Criminal and Twice ducked as the golden dragon flew over them again, its heavenly roar piercing the heavens, "It's my duty to prevent Overhaul from getting away from the compound, but erecting a large enough barrier to contain him is proving difficult."

Twice grinned under his new patchwork mask, "Wouldn't it be easier with multiple of you!? One is just fine, what am I talking about!?"

Gentle Criminal's eyes widened, "... Yes, that would work! Thank-"

"I'm not doing this for you!!" Twice snapped as he quickly took Gentle's measurements, "I'm doing this to protect my Toga! I'd go to the ends of the earth for her!"

Toga covered her mouth, eyes watering, "Twice..."

"Twice, does this mean...?" Gang Orca asked.

"Yeah! I'm going wherever my angel is!" Grey goop shot out from Twice's body, "But first, we're taking that asshole down !"

“Gabriel!”

Gabriel swung her sword through a few tendrils that got too close for comfort.

Joker grit his teeth as his head pounded, and the growing pain in his chest slowly eluded Satanael’s influence.

“Gentle, what’s happening!?” La Brava asked, “Why am I getting so many readings!?”

“Getting a little help from a former foe,” Gentle Criminal’s tone was tinged in amusement, “I’ll explain later!”

Joker grinned as he spotted the multiple Gentle Criminals jumping around and surrounding the compound in an iridescent wall.

“Trickster!” Kohryu said as raindrops plopped down from the cloudy sky, “Cast Concentrate and get ready!”

Joker chuckled as the others stared at him, “It’s almost Showtime!”

He grinned as Kohryu’s Concentrate briefly cast him in a blue silhouette. Morgana cackled while Midoriya and Miruko readied themselves.

“Ryukyu, Nejire, fall back!!” Joker ordered.

Ryukyu maneuvered into a mid-air twist. Her intern followed as they flew away towards the fleeing police now in the distance. Overhaul raised a few of his many arms to swipe at them, only to collide with Gentle’s barrier. His arms pounded against the stretchy air.

“No you don’t!” Gabriel cried as several swords appeared around Overhaul’s monstrous body.

The weapons shot down, stabbing into the stone around the base of the creature’s head. Joker gasped as he felt the visceral rush of a Critical Hit. Overhaul's creation screeched and tumbled onto its back, crushing another part of the mansion underneath.

"Mona," Joker held up his hand, "Baton Pass!"

Morgana jumped off of Joker's shoulder with a flip, blue flame consuming him as he turned into his Metaverse form and slapped Joker's hand, his body bursting with bright blue energy. Kohryu dove closer to the ground as Mercurius appeared beside him.

Kohryu opened his jaws and roared as he flew tight circles above a vulnerable Overhaul, forming a golden ribbon from the ground to the sky.

"Now!!" Kohryu commanded.

Joker forced himself to bear the pain when Gabriel disappeared, and in her place, Baal and Yatagarasu materialized on either side of him, easily balancing on Kohryu.

Mona and Mercurius' wind struck first, Joker and his Personas' following the flow of magical power.

The spells were cast, entangling with one another like the instruments in an orchestra. Clouds overhead twisted and churned, their ears popping with the sudden pressure as a funnel stretched its tail downwards and into the space within Kohryu's circle. The roaring wind sounded like a speeding freight train.

To any onlookers, the massive tornado appeared as if out of nowhere. Hints of startling golden scales peeked out of the impassable wall of wind, flashes of lightning highlighting the dragon's shadow as it descended on a deformed monster.

They heard the deep crack of splintering rock through the twister, pieces of Overhaul's new body were being sucked up into the atmosphere.

“Wind is his weakness?” Mona gasped, “I can continue the Baton Pass, Joker!”

“Me next!” Miruko held up her hand, “Before Overhaul regains his balance!!”

Mona slapped Miruko’s hand, scarlet energy flaring around her body. She took off as Baal and Yatagrasu’s wind magic aided her descent. Miruko threw herself into mid-air cartwheels above Overhaul.

“Luna Ring!! ”

Her whirling attack sliced through the goliath’s throat, sand and dirt gushing from the wound as the lower jaw broke off. They all felt it through the string of Baton Passes. Another Critical Hit.

Miruko wasted no time throwing herself up in the air again, her quick leaps taking her around Kohryu’s body and back up to the group.

The hero held up her hand, “Deku, NOW!! Finish this!!”

Midoriya activated his quirk and jumped. The two passed each other mid-air as Midoriya hit her extended hand. Miruko was caught by Mercurius and set beside Joker.

Their jaws dropped as a flash blinked into existence.

Midoriya’s body crackled with a mix of bright white and green lightning, his hair standing up as static danced over everyone’s skin. Midoriya righted himself as he prepared a vertical kick. The strength of eight additional souls, the most powerful form of Baton Pass, and the Chariot Arcana plummeted with meteoric power.

The earth tore itself apart when these combined forces collided with the prone stone goliath.

They shielded their eyes as arcs of lightning shot up through the eye of the tornado and into the surrounding clouds, briefly lighting the whole city in a flash of striking green. Dust and small stones exploded in all directions when the tornado's winds were eradicated by the sheer force, harmlessly bouncing off of Gentle Criminal's barriers and onto the ground below.

Green lightning still crackled through the thousands of suspended pieces. They couldn't see Midoriya or Overhaul from the clouds of debris, as a great swathe of the compound collapsed in on itself.

"They have to be down there!" Miruko shouted.

"Mona!" Joker reached for the modified pistol in his costume.

"Got it!"

Mercurius scooped Joker and Miruko up in either arm, and with Mona on his shoulder, he jumped down. The clouds overhead cleared and spears of sunlight broke through. They descended back into the bowels of the compound, into the desecrated arena where Kurono and Nemoto lost their lives to their leader's madness.

"There!" Mona pointed to the base of Overhaul's broken tower.

Two unmoving figures were there, several meters apart; Midoriya and Overhaul.

Overhaul, now mask-less, was disfigured by stone and flesh that wasn't his. His legs were completely gone, his lower torso covered in a layer of creeping stone. White and black fabric clung to him like mournful ghosts.

Midoriya was splayed out on the ground, all of his limbs in disjointed angles. He was still conscious, his face a mask of unbearable pain.

"Mona-"

"I know!" Mona said, "I'll take care of Midoriya! You get Overhaul!"

Mercurius dropped Joker and Miruko on the ground near Overhaul, while Mona and Mercurius rushed to Midoriya.

Joker ran to Overhaul, his shadow draping the broken man.

Overhaul slowly opened his eyes and stared into the barrel of the gun pointed at him. His own golden eyes met Joker's, his serene expression shifting to horror as he stared at the golden halo of sunlight silhouetting Joker.

A lone gust pulled at their clothes before a single gunshot pierced the underground.

The red bullet hit an open patch of flesh in Overhaul's neck.

Joker let the empty gun fall from his grasp. Overhaul stared at the fabric of his former subordinates clutched in his deformed hands, not moving as Joker rifled through the tattered remains his jacket, finding all of the pockets empty.

"You're finished, Chisaki Kai." Joker patronizingly smoothed out a wrinkle in Overhaul's jacket, "Don't think for a second that you deserve redemption or Eri's forgiveness. She would never heal you, even if you grovelled in front of her for the rest of your sorry life."

Joker stood, watching as the last of Chisaki Kai's willpower faded from his dull gold eyes.

The Reverse Aeon's quirk, and his ability to walk due to missing legs, was gone forever.

Joker turned away from Overhaul as that fact sunk in, the man's expression plummeting into despair. Joker went over to Midoriya as Mercurius healed his broken body with Salvation. Midoriya slowly sat up, eyes wide. For some reason, Midoriya gaped down at his gloves hands, his eyes wet with unshed tears.

"Are you alright?" Joker asked softly, extending a hand.

Midoriya blinked rapidly and took it, "Y-yeah."

"That was one hell of a final attack, Deku!!" Miruko shouted.

Mona wore a sly grin, "As if we'd do anything less than kick butt!" Mona's smile faltered as they stared at Overhaul, seemingly lost within his own mind as he stared at the two contrasting pieces of fabric, "What should we do with him?"

"Hmph, I almost feel sorry for that pathetic human... almost." Mercurius whispered before he returned to Mona.

"I got this." Miruko's face was unreadable as she clapped Overhaul's wrists in irons.

Joker put a hand to his ear, "La Brava, Tensei, the fight's over. Status report on everyone else?" He clicked his tongue when he received nothing but static... again.

"Guess we're too far down." Mona said, "We should-"

Joker clutched his head as his vision darkened, a deep ringing noise slicing through his skull.

It seems Satanael couldn't hold it back any longer.

"Hey, Joker!" Mona waved his arms, "What's wrong!?"

Kohryu, having returned to him along with the other Personas, rumbled with sadness, "The Strength need you, Trickster. Now more than ever. Repair the Arcana before its too late!"

Joker shook his head as Fafnir's unrestrained emotions hounded the mindscape like a speaker on full blast, "Risumi... Ayumu..."

"H-hey, wait-!!" Miruko's voice was lost to Joker as the three of them vaulted over the destruction.

They ran through the remnants of the underground complex as Joker focused on Fafnir's bond, dodging around mountains of debris and through broken tunnels. Joker threw himself around that final corner to be greeted by a grim scene.

Risumi was crying as Lemillion held her back, both of them covered in dirt and grime, seemingly oblivious to the unconscious and bloody Deidoro at their feet. The remainder of his team, plus Nighteye and Eraserhead, stood a little ways off beside Fafnir. They were all covered in dust, and while Nighteye's clothes were torn and bloody, they all seemed unharmed.

Almost every inch of the ground had been gouged out, as if something had been burrowing frantically through the rocks. A thick layer of dust caked Fafnir's claws.

"Trickster!" Fafnir whipped towards Joker, "The Strength...."

"It's Ayumu!" Risumi was hyperventilating as thick tears fell down her cheeks, "Wh-when the building collapsed, he... h-he...."

"Please, you have to calm down-" Lemillion tried.

"Don't tell me to calm down! Not when my husband is... is..."

Mr. Compress put a hand to Joker's shoulder, "This is... going to be difficult to look at."

"He's right," Eraserhead wore a deep frown, "It's not pretty."

Midoriya's hand went over his mouth in horror.

"Let him through." Lavenza said sternly, "The Strength's fate is in the hands of the Trickster now."

"Joker..." Mona put a tiny paw on Joker's leg, "Whatever you decide, we have your back."

Risumi finally broke way from Lemillion and sprinted to Fafnir. She froze before collapsing to her knees, her scream tearing at Joker's soul.

"Eraser," Joker's voice trembled as his throat tightened, "All of this happened because of me. I'm going to fix this."

Eraserhead looked to the scene behind him, then to Mona, and finally to Joker with a haunted gaze, "You have the same power that Mona used on you after Kamino?"

Joker nodded.

Eraserhead looked at Nighteye, who shook his head, but he moved aside regardless. Nighteye's eyebrows twitched as Joker walked past.

Risumi lay Ayumu out on her lap, clutching his body with heart breaking cries. Joker shuddered at Ayumu's injuries. He had been crushed, for the lack of a better term. All of his limbs had been pulverized, his clothes doused in coppery red. He wasn't breathing. His face lacked any color aside from the heavy bruises around his eyes.

Joker's eyes stung as he collapsed on his knees next to Risumi.

Risumi looked at him, a shaky hand resting on his cheek, "This... this isn't your fault."

Joker shook his head and blinked rapidly to hold back his own tears, "No, you're wrong."

"Akira-"

"Risumi, please ." He ducked his head, his hair shielding his eyes, "Please step back, Risumi. I can... I can still save him."

"Wh-what...? Sweetheart..." Her breath hitched.

Fafnir curled into himself, making himself as small as possible as he quietly disappeared, his shame curling through the mindscape. Ishtar appeared as his only active Persona. Thanks to Kohryu's Life Aid, they would have enough magic for a full Samarecarm.

The Persona looked at their captivated audience.

“Trickster, are you sure you want to openly reveal this power?” Ishtar asked. “There’ll be no going back.”

“Do it. Ayumu never deserved this.”

“As you wish.”

“Stand back, my dear.” Ishtar said with a reassuring smile, “Your husband will be back in your arms within the minute.”

Risumi’s eyes went wide as she settled Ayumu onto the floor. Ishtar helped Risumi stand before floating over Ayumu’s body like she did with Tensei so long ago.

Ishtar cupped Ayumu’s face and kissed him on the forehead. Glowing vines and flowers sprouted around Ayumu’s body, illuminating the underground space with soft tones. Calmer floral scents overtook the aroma of dust and sticky copper, the glowing vines wrapping around Ayumu’s injuries cast him in a transcendent glow. Joker heard muffled gasps as a crystal blue butterfly emerged from a blooming flower. It fluttered to Ayumu’s chest and disappeared into his skin.

Ayumu convulsed, eyes flying open with a strangled gasp.

His injuries faded, as did the glowing flora around him

“Ayumu!?” Tears streamed down Risumi’s face, her hands hovering around him in uncertainty.

“Risumi?” Ayumu sat up, staring down at his stained clothes, “What happened? I think... I think I just saw my parents?”

Ishtar vanished. Joker backed away to let them have a moment together after Risumi threw her arms around Ayumu’s neck and wailed. Nighteye looked at Joker as if he had single handedly shattered reality.

Lemillion was rooted to the spot, gaping and pale.

“W-wait.... that butterfly... those flowers...” Midoriya’s pupils shrunk into pinpricks, “Hosu .”

Joker ignored them as he stopped in front of Eraserhead, “Now it’s over. Can we... can we just leave? I don’t... feel so good...”

“Hey!” Eraserhead knelt in front of Joker as he collapsed on his knees.

The surrounding voices were muffled and Joker’s breath strained through his throat as his tears dropped onto the ground. His hands and legs felt numb. His Personas’ encouragements fizzled out from the blood rushing to his ears. The staggering pain in Joker’s heart disappeared when the Strength Arcana fully restored itself, replaced by a relief so powerful it made his vision swim.

He had trouble keeping his own Thief Outfit on as exhaustion pressed down on him.

Someone wrapped their arms around Joker, allowing his head to rest on their chest.

“It’s alright, Trickster,” Lavenza’s voice pierced through the disarming fog, “It’s over. We’ll handle the rest.”

Another person’s warmth was at Joker’s side.

Joker looked to the Hierophant’s steady gaze, “I promise you’ll be safe. You and all of your teammates.”

His Arcana bathed him in a sense of calm that slowed his pounding heart and tugged his mind towards sleep; Faith, Apostle, Magician, Hierophant, two forms of Strength, Reverse Fortune, and the Chariot. The High Priestess was a shining beacon nearby, drowning out the sourness of the Reverse Aeon.

His muddled mind sensed the Upright Death and Reverse Justice nearby, yet he couldn’t pinpoint their locations.

Joker let his costume fade with the rest of his energy. Lavenza tightened her hold when he closed his eyes and let darkness sweep him away.

Well that's obviously the perfect place to take a spontaneous nap. Remember when Kunikazu mentioned Joker making a tornado like 20 chapters ago? Good times.

So, the next two chapters are going to be a little more spaced out. It took nearly 3 months just to get these three Overhaul finale chapters done, and it was a lot to handle with cruddy health. Plus, my health still isn't up to par yet and I want to make sure that everything is as smooth possible as we enter the final stretch of the story. There's still not final chapter count or anything like that (in case chapters are too long and need to be split, or a plot thread needs a little more to flourish properly), but... we're getting there, folks.

(On a somewhat related note, I think it's funny how many comments I've gotten that were along the lines of 'Well it looks like this fic is ending soon...' ever since the Kamino chapters, despite several author notes and comments stating otherwise.)

Anywho, here's the current update schedule:

Freedom & Security: November 26

Ark: Dec 17

Freedom

Chapter 82: Freedom

Before he could get lost in thought, one of the forms laying on him shifted again. Ren looked down to see Eri's eyes fluttering open, going as wide as saucers when they locked gazes.

“Ren-nii!!”

So, to clear up any confusion for those that didn't read the updated note last chapter, this chapter needed to be split in half because life threw a speeding curve ball and I'll be suddenly and unexpectedly busy for most of December. The second half will be updated on December 10th!

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

The camera panned over broken buildings, streets deformed by deadly spikes, the worst of it concentrated within the former home of the Shie Hassaikai. The beautiful mansion was nothing more than a smoking ruin now.

“This is the battlefield where Overhaul was taken down just two hours ago.” The camera turned to Demizu Mika, countless police officers and heroes worked together to clean up the mess. Something flew overhead and landed just behind her, “Oh, Hawks! Do you have some time to answer questions!?”

Hawks looked tired and... haunted. He wiped that expression off his face with a blinding smile, and those who saw something more thought they must have imagined it.

“Just a few, as there’s a lot of work to do!”

“O-of course! Can we get a confirmation that Overhaul has been arrested?”

“Yep, he’s on his way to Tartarus!” Hawks winked at the camera, “I can also confirm that the former League Of Villain’s leader, Shigaraki Tomura, has also been placed in custody with other members of the League.”

“Goodness, that’s amazing news! Have there been any casualties on either side?”

Hawks’ smile turned strained, “Mostly a few minor injuries on our side, with one hero needing to be taken straight to the hospital. Don’t worry though! I’ve been told that, while there will be some scarring, they’ll make a speedy recovery! As for the villains, there’s been a few fatalities due to Overhaul using his quirk on them. There’s also evidence of infighting between the Shie Hassaikai and the League that lead to a few fatalities.”

“Last question, and no doubt what people across Japan are wondering: What’s the status of the Shinsou family? What’s happened to Joker!? There’s nothing on his Spotlight and fans are getting worried! People all over the city have spotted his gold dragon flying overhead earlier, there are pictures and videos going viral online! There’s also been reports of a spontaneous tornado!”

“Ah, well...” If it wasn’t for his visor, the cameras would’ve caught how many shades paler the hero turned, “Both Risumi and Ayumu Shinsou have been recovered in... good health. But as for Joker and his team...”

Demizu Mika held her breath and inched the microphone closer.

Hawks grinned, “You’ll find out soon. I’ve got to get back to work, ciao!”

“Hawks, wait-!”

Hawks soared away with a beat of his wings.

Demizu Mika sighed and faced the camera, hair tussled by the burst of wind, “Well, there you have it. Some questions are answered, but the bigger ones are being left as a mystery at the moment. We’ll give updates as they come. This is Demizu Mika, signing off!”

Yaoyorozu muted the television as it went to commercials.

The 1-A dorm was unusually quiet, the only sounds were Iida’s frantic pacing around the common room.

“No updates?” Yaoyorozu asked.

“None.” Iida pushed up his glasses.

“It can’t be bad news, right?” Ashido asked, “None of our friends were seriously hurt, right!?”

“I dunno, Midoriya and the others aren’t answering.” Sero said.

“I-I’m sure they’re okay!” Hagakure waved her arms, “Aizawa-sensei would tell us if something bad happened!”

Iida sighed and dug his phone from his pocket, “I believe he would inform us if that were the case. However, there’s also the wording of Nezu’s email that also concerns me.”

“Me too.” Yaoyorozu frowned as she ran a finger down Flit, who perched on her shoulder, “He sent it to every staff member and Class Representative in the school. It can’t be a coincidence.”

“That’s when you know something’s going down!” Kaminari shot to his feet, “I mean, every student is confined to the dorms for the whole day and he threatened instant expulsion for anyone found wandering outside? It’s crazy!”

“And each dorm is being watched by Ectoplasm clones.” Ojiro said as he sank into his chair.

“I heard one right outside earlier...” Shoji stated.

Jirou stuck one of her ear jacks into the wall by the window, “Yep, there are two clones circling our dorm, alongside some of the small annoying robots. I hear similar movement all over the place.”

“Maybe it has something to do with bird-brain being cagey about Joker.” Several shocked eyes went to Bakugo slouching on the armchair. He glared back with a rabid snarl, “What!? Why else would he suddenly take off after one question about Joker!? Why else would that rat put every dorm on lockdown!? Something’s going on and they’re keeping their traps shut about it!”

“Oh my gosh, you’re right! What if Joker accepted Nezu’s program behind the scenes!? What if Joker made some sort of deal with the heroes to fight Overhaul!?” Ashido threw up her arms and squealed, “What if Joker’s ALREADY HERE!?”

The front door opened. The tension skyrocketed as several footsteps trailed closer, until a group led by Aizawa walked into the common room.

Asui, Uraraka, and Tokoyami looked unbothered.

Kirishima was covered in light bandages, but otherwise looked fine, cheery even.

Todoroki looked distracted, his fingers hovering over the phone in his pocket.

And Midoriya...

He looked out of it. His eyes were locked onto the floor and his movements lagged behind the others, he nearly knocked shoulders with Todoroki before he caught himself.

Aizawa crossed his arms. A weary heaviness lingered in his eyes, “You’ll give them space if they ask for it. Am I understood? I won’t tolerate any badgering.”

Iida chopped his arm, “Of course, Sensei! We’ll respect their privacy!!”

“Aizawa-sensei...” Yaoyorozu stood from the couch, her hands clasped over her stomach while Flit rattled its wings in support, “We saw the news, and know it was a hard battle, but we’re all wondering why Nezu sent that e-mail early this morning. Is all of this...” She waved a hand at the returned students and the muted television, “Related, by chance?”

Aizawa pinched the bridge of his nose as the students behind him flinched, Midoriya finally snapped out of his daze and looked up for the first time since entering the dorm.

“There will be an announcement during tomorrow’s homeroom. That’s all I can tell you right now.” His eyes flashed red and a myriad of different reactions were brutally silenced, “We’re on high alert, so don’t think you can sneak out to do anything stupid. Am I clear?”

“Yes, Aizawa-sensei!!” A chorus of voices yelled.

Aizawa’s phone pinged, and he briefly glanced at it before shoving it back in his pocket.

“I need to check on things. Iida, Yaoyorozu, I’m counting on you to keep everyone in line.”

“Understood!!” Iida shouted.

Aizawa turned. He paused beside Midoriya and put an encouraging hand on his shoulder before walking out.

Yaoyorozu smiled at them, “Is there anything you need? You all must be exhausted.”

“I am going to go meditate and do a tarot reading in private.”
Tokoyami stated with a bow of his feathered head, “The darkness calls to me.”

Tokoyami stalked up the stairs without another word.

“I... I’m going to go lay down.” Midoriya mumbled before he followed Tokoyami.

“I need to contact my siblings. I’ll be down later.”

Iida frowned in concern as he watched his friends go upstairs.

“Mina.” Yaoyorozu chastised when the other girl tried sneaking after them, the girl sagged and trudged back into the common room.

“Ochako, Tsuyu, Kirishima, why don’t you sit down and relax. I can make you some tea if you want?”

“I-I’m fine, really!” Uraraka said as she and Asui sat down on one of the open couches, “I’m more tired than anything.”

Sato moved to let Kirishima have an armchair.

“Did you fight the villains!?” Sero said as he scooted closer to Uraraka and Asui.

“Sero!” Iida chopped his arm, “Aizawa-sensei just said -”

“It’s fine, I don’t mind questions!” Kirishima beamed, “And yeah! Fat Gum and I got separated from the larger group, and we battled it out with some of the strongest Shie Hassaikai! It was so manly!!”

“Is that why you’re covered in bandages!?” Hagakure gasped, “It looks like it really hurts!”

“Y-yeah,” Kirishima bore a wistful smile as he rubbed the back of his neck, “I don’t regret pushing myself, and Fat Gum fought so hard too! I don’t remember much after the battle. My injuries were a lot worse, but apparently Hawks and Gentle Criminal found us, and... Gentle Criminal healed the worst of my injuries.”

Wide-eyed looks were exchanged between classmates.

Asui blinked, “Uraraka and I weren’t actually part of the fighting. Ryukyu put us with the medics and we got to take care of the casualties Hawks and Gentle Criminal helped evacuate.”

“Oh, but we did see the final fight against Overhaul!” Uraraka paled, “And Joker’s gold dragon up close... and that tornado. They were all huge . It was... kinda terrifying....”

“So it’s true that Joker created a tornado!?” Sero asked.

“Yeah!” Ashido grinned and rubbed her hands together, “There’s no clear pictures of it, but they have it on the weather scans!”

“I think it was pretty irresponsible of Joker.” Ojiro said as he crossed his arms and scowled, “I mean, a tornado? Really ? While there were still heroes and police close by? Our classmates ? That’s no better than him creating a hurricane to save his own skin.”

“You weren’t there.” They stiffened as Asui’s voice turned grave. Uraraka squeezed her hand as Asui stared out the window, “That... thing Overhaul became was desperate. He was charging right for us, and if it wasn’t for bravery shown by both heroes and vigilantes then we probably would’ve been killed.”

“Yeah.” Uraraka’s smile turned watery, “Gentle Criminal put up barriers to protect us before the tornado hit.”

“I didn’t see him put up the barriers myself,” Kirishima said softly, “But from what I hear it was like him protecting us from the Nomu in the Summer Camp all over again.”

Asui nodded and stared Ojiro in the eye, “So even if they are vigilantes who went against the law, they seem to be good people.

We should give them a chance if they're really here."

Ojiro shifted before his eyes fell to the ground.

Silence permeated the dorm once more.

Yaoyorozu smiled as she reached for the remote, "Why don't we watch movies to get our mind off things?"

"Oh! I know what I want to watch!" Sero said as he made grabby hands for the remote.

"Dude, we're not watching your favorite movie again ." Jirou snapped. She extended an ear jack and snatched the remote, "We've seen it six times already! It's someone else's turn to pick something."

"I can bake a cake before the movie starts!" Sato offered.

"That would be sweet of you," Yaoyorozu said, "Do you need any help?"

"I wouldn't turn it down if someone wanted to!"

"Ooh, me!!" Kirishima shot up from the couch, "I'll help!"

They walked into the kitchen together with bright smiles. Bakugo rolled his eyes and got to his feet, stomping after them.

"Are you going to help too, Bakugo?" Iida asked.

Bakugo scoffed, "Shitty Hair doesn't know jack about baking."

Ashido snickered as Bakugo disappeared into the kitchen, "It's true! There was this one time in our middle school where we had to make stuff for a bake sale, and Kirishima burnt everything he made! I had to go to the store and buy cookies and pretend he made them so he didn't fail! OH! And there was this other time-

Uraraka and Asui exchanged glances, the familiar bickering of their classmates providing some comfort.

Aizawa neared the infirmary, but stopped in his tracks when he spotted Margaret leaning against the wall, staring at the doors across from her. One half of the infirmary was split into private rooms, the first door housed the Shinsou family. Hitoshi had been reunited with his parents and Aizawa could faintly hear voices coming from the other side.

The second door contained Joker's private room, and the last was the examination room where Recovery Girl treated any injured students, as well as being connected to her main office.

"Is he awake yet?" Aizawa asked.

Margaret smiled, her hand hovering over the huge tome on her hip, "No, he's still resting. He needs it after the vast amount of energy he spent this morning."

Aizawa nodded and leaned against the wall a small distance from her. A beat of silence passed. Aizawa refused to fidget as Margaret's golden eyes peered into him, as if she were judging the very weight of his mortal soul.

"Can I ask something?" Aizawa asked to still the awkwardness.

"If I can ask a question in return."

Aizawa nodded, "What are you to Joker? Obviously, you're protective, and still ready for action despite the fight being over."

Margaret chuckled, the sharpness in her eyes softening when she stared at Joker's door, "Your fight with Overhaul and the League of Villains may have reached their conclusion, but Joker's battle is far from over. As for what we are, we're simply here to aid in Joker's journey. Lavenza is his original Attendant, but Joker's... unique situation brought us together. Now, my question for you."

Well that answers nothing.

Aizawa deflated, "Go ahead."

Margaret's eyes picked him apart again, "Theodore took you aside last night before you left the Velvet Room. Normally, I would respect my siblings' privacy, but it's unusual for him to be so straightforward whenever Elizabeth is around."

"Oh." Aizawa buried his face in his scarf as renewed terror crawled over his skin, "That ."

"Aizawa, may I speak with you?"

"... Sure."

Theodore escorted Aizawa out of the Challenge Room, the loneliness of the cells and the chains hanging from the ceiling made Aizawa shiver. The endless, mournful song made it much worse. This place had nothing but jail cells and guillotines, torture devices that a teenager should be kept safe from... and yet, Joker acted as if this place was good.

It made no sense to him.

They stopped at the end of the hall where another cell sat empty. Aizawa thought that Theodore was the most polite of the siblings, but that sentiment melted away when the man's expression turned as sharp as an apex predator. Something in his eyes made Aizawa's soul quake. The whole of the Velvet Room shifted and groaned, and the ethereal chain rattles grew louder as Theodore's glare pinned him to the spot.

Aizawa wasn't superstitious nor was he religious, but it felt as if he wasn't standing in front of a normal person.

Not quite a god, yet not quite... human.

Perhaps something in between?

"I'll only say this once." Theodore said, his tone calm as if he were having a pleasant conversation, "You would never leave this place alive if you weren't the Hierophant of this world."

A jolt struck Aizawa's chest, "Excuse me?"

"Joker has placed his trust in you as one of his Arcana, however your carelessness nearly cost him his life. I, for one, cannot accept that."

Aizawa's expression hardened, "I know. I... I didn't know how much pain he'd go through when my quirk erased his power. I promised never to use it on him again."

Theodore dangerously narrowed his eyes, "Hmm, we shall see."

"At least tell me why you and Elizabeth feel so strongly about this. I hurt Joker, and I'll never forgive myself for it, but there has to be more to the story. You wouldn't casually threaten to kill me otherwise."

Theodore chuckled, it was ice cold and the temperature around Aizawa turned frigid.

"Because..." Theodore tightened his hands into fists, his white gloves creaking, "Someone precious to us lost one of their friends when they tried to suppress the power of their own soul. I refuse to see it happen again." Theodore's eyes sent another dagger through Aizawa's heart, "You might prepare yourselves against Elizabeth's threats, as futile as it is. However, should you or any of your ilk harm Joker ever again..."

A shadow had fallen over Theodore's face, his eyes were twin blazing gold suns in the darkness.

"Then you'd never know what hit you until your spirit is staring down at your own lifeless corpse... if there was anything left of it."

"I see."

Margaret didn't express shock or try to apologize for Theodore or Elizabeth, not that he expected or deserved one. These siblings harbored mutual feelings for the kid and had the strength to back up their threats should Joker be harmed. If Margaret could summon Satan, then who knows what else could be up their sleeves. Or Joker's, seeing as how new ones popped up out of nowhere.

Lavenza hinted that Joker could've had Satan(Or Beelzebub, Lucifer, and others?) in his stock, and had previously executed Satan several times to give his allies armor. Whatever that was supposed to mean.

Satan had called Margaret a 'Ruler Of Power', so they had multiple titles apart from Attendant. They also appeared as if out of thin air like Joker himself did at the USJ. They had to have come recently, since their inherent protective nature would've reared its head at the Musutafu Raid or Kamino Disaster. Perhaps they came when that flying scarlet serpent made its appearance?

"You would never leave this place alive if you weren't the Hierophant of this world ."

"Your fight with Overhaul and the League of Villains may have reached their conclusion, but Joker's battle is far from over..."

The Red Rain and Nezu's flippancy over any new information he held close to his chest.

All of these new puzzle pieces fell right into his lap, but Aizawa still couldn't form a clear picture. It's been around six months since the USJ, and they still knew next to nothing about the enigma that was Joker.

Still, that phrase bothered him... this world...

This world. They spoke as if there were more than one.

But that's impossible.

... Isn't it?

No, it was illogical to even consider something like that, despite how cold talons of dread squeezed his heart at the thought of being separated from Joker again.

Margaret adopted her role as a silent vigil once more, leaving him stewing in a whirlwind of impossibilities and half-baked theories.

With no way to get solid answers, Aizawa leaned against the wall and waited.

Ren opened his eyes to a pale ceiling.

He was wrapped in a cocoon of warmth, familiar weights on his chest stilled the initial wave of panic. Ren looked down to Morgana, spread out like a starfish over his chest, and Eri, who huddled into his left side. Lavenza took the chair to the left of his bed, her small gloved hand clasped around his.

They snored softly.

But despite the softness and warmth, there was a ringing in his soul that made his blood run cold. A familiar and terrible sensation plucked at his deepest core, like a single sharp claw scratching against the glass of his soul.

His Personas brushed against his mind, erasing the last of his grogginess. A comforting reminder that they were there with him.

Always.

“... Ren?”

Ren looked to his right. Kaito put a book aside and sat on the edge of a comfortable chair, electric blue eyes looking at him in relief.

Ren squinted, “Did you seriously take your full last name and the first part of your given name to make ‘Kaito’?”

Kaito stiffened, then glared at him, “You’re fine if you can make a joke out of it.”

“So... do we still call you Kaito or would you rather be called by your real name?”

“Kaito.” A glazed look appeared in his eyes as he studied various medical instruments around the room, and shivered, “Let’s keep it a secret from the heroes and any doctors, okay?”

“Can I ask why?”

Kaito’s mouth twisted as if he sucked on a lemon, “I... I’m not ready to share that yet.”

Ren nodded solemnly, “Alright, I understand.”

Kaito released a huff, “Thanks.”

Ren stiffened when Eri shifted in her sleep, but fell back to a calm slumber as she huddled closer into his chest.

Ren stared back at Kaito, grinning, “I’m trapped.”

Kaito snorted, his apprehension melting away, “Eri and I almost lost it when they brought you in like this, you know. She hasn’t left your side since everyone got here.”

“Where are the others?”

Kaito pointed past the foot of Ren's bed. He lifted his head, careful not to wake his sleeping friends. Mr. Compress, Spinner and Lady Stubbs, Gentle Criminal and La Brava. Extra couches and comfortable chairs had been arranged around the room, and they all slept pleasantly as curtains of golden sunlight draped in from the window. Just outside, he could see buildings and acres of sprawling gardens and forests.

"Hitoshi, Risumi, and Ayumu are in the room next door." Ren startled, but Kaito held up his hand, "They're safe and resting."

The memories flooded back. The raid. Overhaul. The last desperate battle to take the mad villain down. Ren absorbed the horrible things Risumi and Ayumu went through, the shock of waking up in a sterile white room with no hand cuffs or drugs, and the incessant buzzing under his skin that spoke of the Metaverse. It put all of his Personas on edge.

"How long was I out?"

"A little while. It's late afternoon now." Kaito sighed as he leaned back in his chair, "That raid only lasted a little over an hour, but I can see how exhausted everyone is."

"An hour?" Ren's bones felt a little heavier, "It felt like we were down there for ages."

Kaito hummed, "From what Nezu told me, Overhaul and his Shie Hassaikai, as well as the League Of Villains, are all in custody. Footage of Kohryu went viral and reporters have been pestering the heroes for updates about you. It's any wonder they got you here without incident."

"We're.... we're really here, aren't we?" Ren whispered, "After all this time, we're finally at U.A."

"Yeah, we are."

Ren stared at the ceiling as he let his body sink into the surprisingly soft mattress.

They were here.

They were finally here!

Before he could get lost in thought, one of the forms laying on him shifted again. Ren looked down to see Eri's eyes fluttering open, going as wide as saucers when they locked gazes.

"Ren-nii!!"

Her shout startled the others awake as she wrapped her arms around his neck and hugged tight. Morgana shot up, hackles raised, but he grinned brightly and rubbed against his fluffy hair.

Lavenza sat up, blinking the sleep from her eyes as the rest got to their feet.

Eri sniffled as Ren hugged her and Morgana close, and with Kaito's help he managed to sit up in bed.

"Joker, you're awake!" Mr. Compress clapped his gloved hands together, "How are you feeling?"

"I..." Ren glanced at Eri and Morgana snuggled into his chest, "For once, I think I'm okay."

La Brava wiped unshed tears from her eyes, "They told us y-you were only exhausted, but still...."

Gentle Criminal beamed, "I'm happy everyone made it here, safe and sound."

"Yes," Mr. Compress tipped his hat, "The heroes haven't shared what happened with Ayumu to the public, and I think they're at least smart enough to make sure it stays a secret. They haven't even shared that we're at U.A. yet."

La Brava nodded, "Best Jeanist, Hawks, and Miruko are covering for us at the complex. Tensei is working with the Nighteye Agency to make sure nothing about us gets leaked."

"I'm surprised Nighteye would bother helping us out." Spinner ran a scaly hand through his pink hair, "You should have seen the look on his face as we went to the surface, Joker! He looked as if he were about to crap his pants."

Gentle Criminal chuckled, "Well, that is a rather inelegant way to describe it, but Spinner is correct."

La Brava scoffed and rolled her eyes, "Serves him right for being such a jerk though."

"What about Midoriya and the other students?"

"Aizawa took them back to their dorm." La Brava said, frowning at Ren's worried expression, "I'm sure Deku and Lemillion wouldn't spread it around?"

"I have faith the Chariot won't oust the Trickster." Lavenza said as she patted his hand, "If it comes down to it, you can always speak with him."

"That's the least of our problems." Morgana flicked his tail and stared at Ren with a hardened brow, "The Metaverse is everywhere. I'm sure you can feel it, too."

"Yeah. It's creeping me out." Ren grimaced, "Do you think it's a Palace?"

Morgana took a deep breath, "I... I don't know. I'm not being forced into my Metaverse form, and I still can't tap into it directly like I could back home. I'm definitely sensing Distortions and something like a Treasure, though it's hard to tell because U.A. is so big. This... this doesn't make any sense."

“Lavenza, what do you think?”

“Yes, I sense the Metaverse as well.” Lavenza tucked some stray hair behind her ear as the atmosphere shifted into a razor edge, “Perhaps we could investigate the source and figure out a way to stop it from leaking through the whole school.”

“The USJ.” Morgana nodded, “That’s where Ren and I appeared when Yaldabaoth banished us.”

“Yatagarasu confirmed that it was the center of something malicious.” Ren frowned, “We can only imagine how much worse it’s gotten since then.”

“Do you think Nezu would allow that?” Gentle Criminal asked, looking troubled.

Morgana scoffed, “Well, he won’t have much of a choice if Shadows start appearing around the school. It’s any wonder it hasn’t happened yet.”

Eri was conflicted, looking between all of them with confusion.

Kaito swiveled his head towards the door at a sudden noise in the hall, “We’re about to find out.”

The door opened and figures, both familiar and not, walked inside. Nezu, Recovery Girl, and a petite woman he didn’t know. She was dressed in lighter clothes with a doctor’s coat, her golden hair glowing like a halo around her head. She held a thick bundle of folders under her arm.

“Ah, it’s no wonder I heard all that ruckus from next door.” Recovery Girl smiled as she approached Ren’s bed. Eri stiffened and huddled into Ren, almost protectively. Morgana watched her every move with sharp eyes, “How are you feeling?”

“Fine.” He shifted Eri and Morgana so that he could throw off the covers and swing his legs over the side. He looked at the other doctor, “Who are you?”

The woman bowed, “My name is Kuramatsu Zoey, but you can just call me Zoey. I’m the head doctor of the hospital you went to after Kamino. I’m not surprised you don’t remember, given what happened.”

“Indeed. Recovery Girl and I trust her immensely, she won’t go spreading unnecessary rumors.” Nezu clasped his paws together and grinned at Ren.

“I’ve worked with them for many years. Recovery Girl is my mentor, and I would never do anything to betray that trust. In fact, it was by Nezu’s request that I deliver these to you.” Zoey looked down to the bulging folders, “There are many unexplained questions. Kurusu’s lack of a quirk factor, inconclusive results on that black substance after his seizures, among... others. But I can let all of that go as long as it ensures your safety, Kurusu.”

“Oh,” Ren’s eyes widened as she set the folders on his bedside table, “I... thank you.”

Zoey’s smile was like a ray of sunshine, “It’s no problem at all.”

He should probably just burn these files like he did with the mad doctor’s scans.

The doctor... he was still at large. The echoes of their conversation in the complex replayed in his mind, making his mouth go dry.

As if reading his mind, Mr. Compress locked a reassuring hand on Ren’s shoulder. Some of the tension drained away from Ren, and he gave an appreciative nod to Mr. Compress.

Mr. Compress trapped the files in a marble and handed it to Ren.

“Now, let’s get down to business.” Nezu said, “We do have one thing to discuss before we move on to our next steps.”

“What?” Ren narrowed his eyes.

Ren could feel Mr. Compress roll his eyes from behind his mask, “Medical check-ups. Apparently Kaito and Eri were quarantined here until we arrived, and while Recovery Girl made sure we weren’t injured, they’ll be sorely disappointed if they think they can get anything more out of me.”

The others gave Mr. Compress a bewildered stare. Nezu’s grin stretched from ear to ear as he gave Mr. Compress an appraising look.

Ren didn’t know why until Satanael chuckled and said, “He spoke in French.”

He nodded at Mr. Compress, and Nezu’s expression brightened more.

Recovery Girl cleared her throat, “I’d like to do physicals, specifically on Eri. We need to make sure she’s healthy before interacting with the larger student body. Both for her safety, and theirs. The rest of you may opt out if you wish.”

“And not just the physical side. I’m sure there’s a lot of mental trauma to account for.” Nezu said, appraisal falling into a deep understanding, “For example, we don’t know what exactly happened while you were in All For One’s clutches, or to what extent of the trauma you went through over these past few months.”

He didn’t want to talk about this. It must’ve been obvious in his expression, as Nezu held up a paw.

“We aren’t going to force you, Kurusu.” Nezu’s beady eyes scanned the rest of the group, “That goes for everyone else, too.”

“... Really?”

Nezu smiled at Ren, “Really. While it would help us in our efforts to understand certain events, I also understand that this sort of topic is... delicate, for many reasons beyond our own understanding.”

Nezu took a step forward when Ren put the marble in his pocket, “After we’ve finished up here, we’ll give you a basic tour of the main building and then we’ll meet up with the rest of the staff.”

“So,” Recovery Girl’s eyes roamed over the group, “Who’s going through with the check-ups?”

“Pass.” Mr. Compress muttered.

“Same,” Spinner shook his head, “Lady Stubbs isn’t getting one either!”

“Merp!”

“I’m in good health,” Morgana stuck his nose in the air, “I don’t need any doctor to tell me so!”

“I’m not good with doctors either,” Kaito crossed his arms and frowned, “I’ll pass, too.”

La Brava and Gentle Criminal exchanged glances.

“We’ll do it.” Gentle Criminal said with an easy smile, “What’s the harm in making sure nothings wrong?”

Ren squeezed Eri’s hand when she looked to him for an answer. He could refuse to do anything, as Nezu stated. But his own reluctance would harm Eri’s chances at healing. If he were to do his own check-up alongside her, show her that these people could be trusted... it could go a long way for her recovery.

“Okay, I’ll do it.” Ren looked at Eri, “You want to do a check-up with me, Eri?”

“I-I...” Her pupils were blown wide and she trembled, “They won’t hurt me, right?”

“No, they won’t.” He tightened his grip on her shaking hand, “I’ll be right here beside you.”

“Me too!” Morgana rubbed his face against her cheek.

Eri’s eyes flicked between Recovery Girl, Nezu, Morgana, and Ren.
“O-okay.”

“It would be faster if Recovery Girl and I split the group evenly,” Zoey said as she kindly eyed Gentle Criminal and La Brava, “If that’s alright? We’ll go to the empty student infirmary next door.”

The pair looked at Ren while he studied the doctor with an intense gaze, one she returned with nary a flinch or a squirm. This tiny woman, a complete stranger, had stuck her neck out for them, between taking care of him after Kamino and discreetly returning the medical files to his hands.

... Files that could have exposed him while her name would be cemented in history.

She was the complete stark opposite in looks to Tae Takemi, but the two of them shared the same deep level of care for their patients.

Ren gave Gentle Criminal and La Brava a firm nod.

Zoey’s smile brightened the room, “If you’ll just follow me next door.”

“We’ll go with...” Spinner and Lady Stubbs trailed after them, “Just in case!”

Zoey chuckled, “I’m not going to bite.”

Ren stared expectantly at Recovery Girl when the room was less crowded.

“Let’s get started, dearies.”

To Ren’s surprise, the first part of the check-up wasn’t so bad. Though Mr. Compress, Kaito, and Morgana watched her like a hawk as she took Ren and Eri’s height and weight, asked routine questions like if he took any medications or had other health concerns they should be aware of.

Lavenza, as usual, studied everything with calm interest.

Nezu stood by the door, analyzing every move made by either side. He seemed to find it funny that Ren didn’t actually need glasses, but he hadn’t worn any fake glasses since he let Giran kidnap him. He doubted they would help hide his identity at this point anyway.

Recovery girl dug through some cupboards and set butterfly needles and tubes on the bedside table, frowning as the two children froze like deer in the headlights. The others tensed. A dark look clouded Lavenza’s eyes and a palpable chill entered the room.

Recovery Girl sighed, “We can skip this part if you’re uncomfortable. However, I’d advise against it. I’ll only need a small amount to do some routine tests to make sure you’re free of diseases and certain parasites. We have your files from Kamino, Kurusu, but it never hurts to double check after what you went through.” She smiled sadly at them, “After that, we’ll be done. Your choice, dearies.”

Ren’s heart-rate picked up as he stared at the instruments. Satanael and the other Personas tried to soothed his worries, a few like Cerberus and Cu Chulainn promised absolute destruction upon the small needles.

Eri stared up at him, her doe-eyes filled with terror.

He could almost see Takemi rolling her eyes and chastising him for being afraid of something so small, especially in front of a little girl who had been so brave.

Ren cleared his throat, "It's fine." He rolled up his sleeve, still wearing the clothes Best Jeanist made him, and held out his arm, "It won't hurt that much, right?"

"I'll make it quick and painless." Recovery Girl said.

Still, Ren couldn't watch after she sanitized the area, put the tourniquet on his arm, and grabbed a needle. He focused on petting Morgana once the needle pierced his skin, unable to stop bouncing his foot or holding his breath. A strange burning and itching sensation spread through his body centered around the needle, something that started happening after he had escaped that interrogation room.

Takemi held an obvious sadness when she informed him it that it was most likely a psychological reaction due to what he had been through.

Finally, the needle was taken out and he could breathe again.

"That wasn't so bad." Ren forced a light tone as Recovery Girl bandaged his arm.

Recovery Girl set his tubes aside and turned to the Eri, "Ready, dear?"

Eri looked up at Ren again, her fear replaced by determination, and nodded. Still, her breath stuttered as the hero wrapped the tourniquet around her arm and reached for the needle.

"Hey, Eri." Eri focused on him, wincing as the needle went into her arm, but she didn't look away, "How about we have apple curry for dinner? Er..." Ren looked at Nezu, who studied Ren with sharp intensity, "If we could borrow a kitchen?"

Nezu's sharpness eased with a grin, "Of course! The teacher's dorms have a state of the art kitchen, and our ingredients are always fresh with someone like Lunch Rush around! You'll have free reign of the facilities any time you need it."

"Wait," Mr. Compress tilted his head, "Teacher's dorms ?"

"Are we staying there?" Kaito asked with a raised brow, "... With the staff?"

Nezu nodded and tucked his paws behind his back, "Where else did you think you were staying?"

Mr. Compress shrugged, "A high security cell far away from the students, only to be let out at certain times? Is my complexion going to be ruined from a lack of sunlight?"

Nezu chuckled, "This isn't a prison! Despite being vigilantes, we'll treat everyone with respect... provided that you don't break our trust." Nezu flicked his beady eyes between Ren and the others, "It was no small matter getting my Vigilante Program approved without such barbaric things like ankle monitors and more heavily fortified sleeping quarters! I threw out the plans for Quirk Suppressants after certain..." Nezu stared at Ren, "Enlightening events."

Recovery girl shook her head as she finished Eri's blood draw, "If Kunikazu had his way, this program would never exist and you'd all be sent to Tartarus."

"Which will never happen now that he's out of the picture." Nezu chirped, "The Hero Commission would have no rights... not that they'll be a problem with Ryoto supporting us."

Lavenza chuckled, drawing Nezu's curious gaze.

"If such a place like Tartarus were to appear again," Lavenza was smiling, but it was the same smile Noir would give to Shadows moments before executing them with her axe, "Then we'd destroy it without mercy."

Nezu tilted his head, "'Appear'? My dear, it seems we aren't thinking of the same 'Tartarus'. Our Tartarus is a prison meant to hold the most ruthless villains in the country."

"Oh... I see." Lavenza said, though the ice in her voice remained strong, "Even so, such a place would never hold him for long."

Nezu's fur stood on end, "A threat I'm sure would be followed through to the letter."

Mr. Compress huffed, "And then some."

"All done." Recovery Girl finished wrapping gauze around Eri's arm. She held Eri's hand and placed a few gummy candies in the girl's palm, "You were so brave, Eri."

"Th-thank you..." Eri said as she popped them in her mouth, eyes sparkling as she chewed.

She offered Ren some, but he politely declined.

"Now all we need to do is wait for the others!" Nezu said.

"Actually," Ren scratched the back of his neck, "Can I see Risumi and Ayumu first?"

"Of course." Nezu said with a flick of his tail, "I'll come get you when Zoey finishes!"

Ren smiled at Eri, "Can you keep an eye on Kaito and the others while I'm gone?"

Eri puffed her cheeks and nodded.

He set her on the bed and walked towards the door. Morgana and Mr. Compress took to distracting her when he left.

"Is everything alright?" Margaret stepped up to him, her smile rigid, "I sensed Lavenza getting tense earlier."

“We’re fine.” Ren said as he tugged down his sleeve, “I’m just checking with Risumi and Ayumu before we get shown around.”

“Very well. If my presence is no longer required, then I should return to the Velvet Room.” She reached into her pocket and pressed the Velvet Key into his hands, “Don’t ever lose this key again or there will be consequences.” She ruffled his hair, “Am I understood, young man?”

“Y-yes ma’am.”

“Good.” She pulled back as the barred door appeared behind her, “Now, I better get back to Elizabeth and Theodore.” Margaret smiled at Aizawa, “After all, they promised to burn the school to the ground if I don’t return with a report before sunset.”

Both Ren and Aizawa shivered as she elegantly strolled into the Velvet Room, the door disappearing with a slam of iron bars.

“... Are they always so terrifying?”

Ren chuckled as he shoved the Key in his pocket with the orb, “Pretty much.”

Aizawa’s coffee colored eyes scanned Ren from head to toe, “The Shinsou’s are in that room. They’ve been asking for updates about you.”

“Thanks.”

He went to the room Aizawa pointed out and raised his fist to knock, but hesitated. Every time his knuckle got close to touching the door, something made him freeze up. He didn’t know how long he stood in front of the door like an idiot.

Ren glanced at Aizawa, who had leaned against the wall with his eyes closed. At least he was pretending not to notice Ren being a total coward.

The door suddenly swung open and lavender eyes rooted Ren to the spot. His heart stuttered as he and Hitoshi stared at one another for several seconds. Hitoshi had filled out with lithe muscle since the last time Ren saw him...

In front of the Raven's Nest, smiling and telling him not to worry before they left for the Summer Camp months ago.

Ren turned on his heel when a hand latched onto his wrist. He blinked in surprise and followed the hand up to Hitoshi's strangled expression of pain, relief, afraid to let go again .

"Where are you going?" Hitoshi asked.

"Uh, back to my room?" Ren said as he felt his face heat up, "I'm sure you just want to spend time with your parents and I'd be bothering you-"

"Nu uh. Stop it."

"Stop... what?"

Hitoshi flicked Ren on the forehead with his other hand. Ren squawked and rubbed the spot as Hitoshi put on a rather terrifying scowl.

"You, blaming yourself for the shit villains do all on their own. Well, guess what mister, what happened is not your fault and you don't need to act guilty for something none of us have any control over. That includes everything before my parents got kidnapped." He jabbed Ren in the chest several times, "Now shut up, get over yourself, and get in here ."

Ren could hardly react as he was yanked into the room, and before the door shut Ren swore he saw a proud smirk on Aizawa's smug face. Satanael, Kohryu, and the others were laughing at him within the mindscape too. Traitors. All of them.

“Akira!”

Ren was swept up in Risumi’s warm hug, a smile worming its way on his face as he hugged back.

She cupped his face as she looked him up and down, “They told us you just needed rest, but we were so worried. Are you okay? None of these heroes hurt you or anything? You’re not being sent off to a prison, are you!? I swear I’ll fight them tooth and nail if they think they can take you away from us!”

“Risumi, you’re smothering him.” The grin in Ayumu’s voice was obvious, “Let him breathe.”

She settled herself with a deep breath, then ruffled his hair and stepped back. They all looked at him expectantly.

“Y-yeah, I’m alright. I’m not being carted off to prison or anything like that.” He chuckled as a pleasant heat spread over his face and heart alike, “What about you? A-after everything that’s happened-”

“We’re fine.” Ayumu stood from the edge of his bed, “Practically in perfect health thanks to you.”

Ren blinked. Beside Ayumu’s bed was an empty IV bag, and the man himself was as pale as death warmed over. A soft breeze could knock him over. Ren looked between Hitoshi and his parents.

“... Does he know?”

“Oh...” Risumi put her hands over her stomach, “N-no.”

“Do I know what? Wait...” Hitoshi stared between them in horror, “Did something happen? Did those assholes hurt you guys!?”

Risumi winced, “You see, when your father-”

Ayumu suddenly cleared his throat and moved to hide the IV stand from Hitoshi’s view, “Hitoshi, son, you know when Recovery Girl and that other nice doctor asked us to leave the room to examine your mother?"

Risumi and Ren furrowed their brow at the sudden change in subject.

"Uh... yeah?" Hitoshi said, worry radiating from his tense shoulders, "Is there something wrong? Is she sick?"

"No, nothing's wrong." A warm smile creased Ayumu's face when he threaded his hand into Risumi's, "You're going to be a big brother Hitoshi. We... we actually found out while we were with the villains. Recovery Girl just wanted to confirm it and make sure everything was okay."

Hitoshi blue screened.

Risumi frowned, "Hitoshi, are you okay?"

"I... I'm going to be a big brother?" He asked in a quiet, strangled voice, "Wh-when? How?"

Ayumu snickered, "You see, Hitoshi, when a mom and dad love each other verrry much-"

"No!" Hitoshi slapped his hands over his ears, "We already had the birds and bees talk and it was awkward as hell! Akira doesn't need to be put through that! Nope! Nu uh!"

Ren sputtered, and Risumi matched the sparkle in his eye with one of her own.

"It's still gonna be a while yet," Ayumu said with a nod, "And it's still too early to tell if its going to be a boy or a girl."

"I-I don't care which one it is." Hitoshi looked elated, vibrating with excitement, "I just can't believe it. I'm going to be a big brother!"

“We’re not counting you out either.” She grabbed Ren’s hand, “You and Hitoshi already act like brothers, I’m sure this one will be no different, Akira.”

And just like that, Ren’s heart was stabbed with an icy chill.

“O-Oh.” Ren let his hand fall out of Risumi’s.

“Hey, are you okay? You’re pretty pale all of a sudden.” Ayumu asked, eyes wide.

Ren traded a glance with Hitoshi, the excitement dying from their eyes. Hitoshi pursed his lips, his hands forming into fists. They both knew that Ren most likely wouldn’t be here to greet Hitoshi’s new sibling.

Ren shook his head as his throat tightened.

He wasn’t ready yet.

Hell, how was he going to tell Eri? To the other bonds he’d made in this world? Just casually mention that one day soon he’ll disappear and never see them again?

“Uh, it’s just...” Ren scratched his neck, scrambling for words, “My name isn’t Akira. That’s just an alias I made up before I worked at the Blue Lotus.”

Ayumu isn’t the only one who could switch truths on the spot.

Risumi blinked several times, Ayumu’s expression was wide in shock.

“Wait, what ?” Hitoshi whirled around to Ren, “This whole time you’ve been using an alias?”

“Y-yeah.” Ren stared at the floor, “I understand if you’re mad about it. But Morgana and I were all alone when we came here, we didn’t know if we could trust anybody. I was terrified . Making a fake identity was what I did to help cope with our situation.”

Warm hands planted themselves on his shoulders, “We understand.” He looked up to Risumi smiling at him, “I would do the same if I were in your shoes.”

“Yeah,” Hitoshi crossed his arms, a certain realization dawning on him, “Besides, you had your reasons for not being able to trust people easily.”

Ayumu grinned, “Being an absolutely kickass vigilante is probably one of them.”

“Dad!”

“What? It’s true and you know it.”

Despite himself, Ren laughed, “Yeah, that was one reason. You guys aren’t mad?”

“Nah. A bit surprised, yes, but I don’t want to waste time being mad at you over something like that.” With whatever time we have left, went unsaid between them as Hitoshi held out his fist, “It doesn’t matter to me. I’d call you my brother no matter what.”

Ren’s eyes watered, but he smiled and fist-bumped Hitoshi.

Hitoshi frowned as he pulled his fist back, seemingly unsatisfied as he gave Ren a strange look, “Ah, screw it.”

He jumped forward and trapped Ren in in a bear hug. Risumi’s chuckle was watery as she held her boys in her arms.

“Welp, I’m not going to be left out of this.” Ayumu said as he joined in, wrapping his arms around all three of them and holding them close.

Ren smiled as he basked in the full power of the Moon and the Strength, the Arcanas shining the brightest they've ever been. He didn't know how long they all stayed like that, just holing each other, nor did he really care. This is what it was like to be treated as family. He'd probably miss this the most when the time came.

There was a knock on the door and Nezu popped his head in.

"I hope I'm not interrupting anything?" He chirped as he fully stepped into the room.

"Of course not." Risumi said as they all pulled away, though her tightened tone revealed otherwise.

"Nope, you obvious didn't intrude on a private moment or anything." Ayumu said, wiping his eyes with the palms of his hands.

... Ren was honestly close to tears himself.

Hitoshi cleared his throat, his own eyes wet, "What did you want, Nezu?"

"Ah, I came to tell Kurusu that the rest of his team are waiting!"

Ren blinked, "Oh, I'm going to have to tell everyone, aren't I?"

"That's probably a good idea." Ayumu said, chuckling.

"Oho?" Nezu tilted his head, "Tell everyone what, exactly?"

"That Kurusu Akira is just an alias. My real name is Amamiya Ren."

"I see." Nezu beamed, "Well, I can email the teachers with this little update before we announce your arrival!"

"When are you going to announce it?" Hitoshi asked.

"During homeroom tomorrow!" Nezu waved away their flabbergasted gapes, "For now, I suggest Amamiya-san should follow me for the tour! Oh,” He nodded at the Shinsou’s, “And Cementoss and Power Loader are working on your apartment, and will come escort you when it’s finished!”

“You’re staying at U.A.?” Ren asked.

Ayumu nodded, “Yep. Nezu was nice enough to let us stay here until we can figure out what to do about...” Ayumu cleared his throat, his voice falling, “The Blue Lotus.”

Ren’s spirits sank, “... Oh.”

“Hey,” Hitoshi glared, “What did I say?”

“I know, I know,” Ren held his hands up, “I shouldn’t be guilty about it.”

“Damn right, you shouldn’t.”

“Language, Ayumu!” Risumi elbowed her husband, “... But you’re right.”

Nezu grinned, “The new apartment is right beside the teacher’s dorms, so you’ll practically be neighbors! Of course, you’ll be able to see Amamiya whenever you wish... provided he completes certain duties first.”

“Wait, what?” Ren asked with a raised brow.

Nezu had already walked out the door, cackling.

With a sigh, Ren glanced in between the Shinsou family, “I’ll see you later?”

“Yeah, you will .” Ren froze when Hitoshi wrapped him in another tight hug, “Even if I have to hunt Nezu down myself to do so. I learned my skills from a master, you know.”

Ren hugged back, chuckling. He took one last look at the Strength and the Moon, bathed in the power they so lovingly gave him, before following Nezu out the door.

He caught up to the rat as the others waited at the end of the hall, “Nezu, what did you mean by ‘certain duties’?”

A cheshire grin spread on Nezu’s face, one Ren would come to regret every time it appeared, “Did you think I would simply throw you in a random class and leave you to the sharks?”

“Well... maybe? I’m technically not an adult.”

“No, but your unique situation calls for a higher station than just being a mere student.”

They reunited with the others before Ren could even ask what that meant. Nezu hopped on Eraserhead’s shoulder as easily and Morgana did with his.

He didn’t see Recovery Girl or Zoey, but heard faint movement within the student infirmary.

“Onwards with the tour!” Nezu said, cackling.

Aizawa glared, “I’m not your damn horse.”

Even so, Aizawa took the lead with Ren and Morgana at his side. Eri grabbed his hand, the other already latched onto Kaito. Mr. Compress and the others were at Ren’s back, absorbing every detail as they left the medical ward behind and into the school proper.

Lavenza stayed at the very back of the group, guarding against potential ambushes.

It reminded Ren of how the Phantom Thieves would infiltrate a Palace for the first time. Always alert, ready for any Shadows or traps or the intricate puzzle or two. He knew they were already taking notes on camera locations and other possible security measures. As much as it hurt, Ren's heart swelled with pride.

All in all, the school was as he remembered from the Sports Festival; ridiculously ginormous hallways as big as a road, equally huge doors, and when you've seen one classroom you've seen them all. The garish cafeteria could hold hundreds of students at once, but the silence of a practically abandoned school put Ren on edge.

Aside from the emptiness, there was... something else .

That strange feeling lurking through the air that made Ren's teeth itch. Morgana and Lavenza felt it, by the way they craned their necks at any shadows.

Aizawa opened the last door and let them see the teacher's lounge.

"It hasn't changed." Ren stated.

"Right... because you broke into the teacher's lounge during the Sports Festival." Aizawa muttered, "I'm still surprised that you weren't caught by our security."

La Brava hid her smirk by scratching her nose.

"Well, Joker is a true master thief." Mr. Compress said with a confident nod, "No paltry security would catch him so easily!"

"Ah yes, security that has been heavily upgraded since then! If I may ask," Nezu glanced at Ren as they left the teacher's lounge behind, "What happened with the information you gathered?"

"La Brava put a virus on the drive." Kaito said as he kept his eyes forward, "We used that virus to destroy all evidence at the Raven's Nest after Kamino, and then everything on the drive deleted itself. You don't have to worry about that information getting out."

"... I see." Nezu said.

Ren remembered the blueprints La Brava gathered from their initial infiltration, showing several labs for Support Course students and even a gun range protected by Snipe and Power Loader. The gyms and various training grounds were on the list too, miles away from the main building.

Maybe Nezu didn't trust them enough yet, or perhaps there wasn't enough time in one day.

"Are you getting tired, Eri?" Kaito asked when the girl let go of his hand to rub at her eyes.

Eri blinked rapidly, "... No?"

"Nezu, we've all had a long day." Aizawa grumbled, "Let's call it quits for now."

"Yes... I suppose they'll get used to the school soon enough. Let's get to the dorms!"

They exited the massive 'H' shaped building and walked through the grounds, swathes of forest and gardens stretched over the horizon, cut through with elegant cobblestone sidewalks. Autumn's early sunset painted the whole grounds in a curtain of gold. If this eerie feeling wasn't rattling Ren's bones, then he would even call it beautiful.

"The Metaverse is definitely here." Yatagarasu whispered.

"Let's hope these heroes won't get in the way of our investigation." Satanael said with a deep frown, "Such hesitation could put countless humans in mortal danger."

"The Devil possesses unusual cunning and seems to know where our true home lies." Cu Chulainn muttered, "But that also means he won't be fooled easily."

“So you’ve all noticed it as well...” Ishtar hummed, “The Devil’s talk of trust and increased security weren’t said just for the sake of it. It is both a hidden threat and a boon.”

“We’ll have to tread carefully.” Shiva said, “To balance the hidden plans to secure our allies’ future freedom while maintaining an innocent facade will be difficult in the coming days.”

“On top of everything else we need to do.” Satanael sighed.

Ren’s shoulders sagged with renewed exhaustion.

“Are you alright?”

Nezu’s question snapped Ren out of his daze. They were standing in front of a gate to a beautiful brick building, with a sprawling yard and large porch. He could see a figure hovering at the tall windows by the front door.

“Yeah, I’m fine.” Ren said.

“He kinda does that a lot.” Spinner said as he fidgeted with Lady Stubbs’ fur.

Aizawa furrowed his brow, “Is it something we should be concerned about? It’s not healthy spacing off for long periods of time like that.”

Morgana blinked and flicked his tail over Ren’s back.

“Offering a shred of truth will deepen their trust.” Satanael suggested.

“I’m fine, really.” Ren rubbed the back of his head and studied the brick building to avoid their eyes. Several other buildings like it were scattered in the distance, half covered by trees, “Sometimes my Personas just talk a lot and it takes most of my concentration.”

“Personas?” Nezu’s eyes sparkled as he leaned closer to Ren, “Is that the official name for your ‘summons’?”

Morgana looked at Ren and sighed when his partner nodded, “Yes. They are a direct manifestation of our personality, our ‘Will of Rebellion’.”

“Do you have multiple of these Personas, Morgana?” Nezu asked.

“Nope, most people only get one.” Morgana beamed proudly at Ren, “Our leader is special in being able to hold over a dozen at one time.”

“Amazing! It must take a lot of mental capability to maintain and manifest so many!” Nezu said, “And they can all speak with you at any time, whether they are summoned or not?”

“Pretty much.” Ren smiled as Satanael and the others lovingly brushed against his mind, “They are me as much as I am them. That’s our vow to each other; I am thou, thou art I.” Ren scratched his cheek, “Although, my vow changed to we instead of I when I reawakened my powers.”

Aizawa’s eye twitched, “I’m going to need gallons of coffee to understand any of this.”

Morgana smirked, “This isn’t even the bare basics! It gets a lot more complicated than this, you know!”

“Get used to the headache, Aizawa.” Nezu patted Aizawa on the head like he would a small child, “For now, let’s get into the dorms before the other staff explode from anticipation!”

See you on December 10th.

Also yes, I added the cake bit in the first part for you, Stella.

Next time on 'Dost Thou Even Steal Hearts?' - The teacher's 'act natural' when Ren and co arrive and there may or may not be discussion over the USJ with a certain Devil. Maybe some coffee and Dadzawa moments as well....

Security

Chapter 83: Security

Present Mic gasped and whirled around, his arms flapping like a flightless bird, “They’re coming through the yard!! EVERYONE. ACT. NATURAL!!”

(See the end of the chapter for notes.)

“Aizawa sent the message, they’re on their way.” Thirteen stated as they set their phone on the coffee table.

“Okay everyone!” Midnight clapped her hands together, “Remember the game plan!”

“Wait, what game plan!?” Present Mic shrieked, “When was there ever a game plan!?”

“Since yesterday when Nezu dropped the bomb on us out of the blue.” Hound Dog growled, “But I guess you weren’t here with your radio show and all.”

“The game plan is making them feel welcome!” Midnight placed her hands on her hips as she scanned the teachers, “Mic, wait at the door and let us know when they arrive!”

“Yes, ma’am!” He saluted and scrambled for the door, where he stuck his face on the glass like a child watching the year’s first snow.

“Lunch Rush, is the pantry stocked!? We won’t stand for anyone going hungry!!”

Lunch Rush gave her an enthusiastic thumbs up.

“Ectoplasm, Vlad, have you double checked the rooms to make sure they’re ready!?”

“Yes,” Ectoplasm said, “They’re pretty bare, but they’ll be able to decorate them as they choose.”

Vlad King nodded at the row of doors facing the common room, “Nezu was smart enough to include extra rooms when the dorms were first built. Aizawa doesn’t mind being next to them.”

Each door had a name tag. From left to right they read; Aizawa Shouta - Eri - Joker&Mona - Kaito - Mr. Compress - Spinner&Lady Stubbbs - Gentle Criminal - La Brava. An additional slab was below their vigilante names in case they wanted to put their real names there. Eri’s room, per Nezu’s request, was connected to both Joker and Aizawa’s rooms in case of an emergency.

“Snipe!” She turned to Snipe, who had his face smooshed into a pillow as he lay face down on a couch, “What are you doing? We have no time to mope around!”

Snipe groaned into the pillow, “I don’t have a clue how to act around Joker... or how to apologize about what happened at the USJ. What if the kid hates me?”

“RAAAUGH!” Snipe yelped as Hound Dog lifted him up by the back of his cape and throttled him, “You had several months to come up with something and you draw blank when he’s coming here right now !?”

“I-I’m sorry!” Snipe floundered uselessly, “You know I’m a ‘shoot first ask questions later’ type of hero!”

“Wrong choice of words, idiot.” Vlad remarked.

Hound Dog snarled, spittle flying, “That’s exactly what put you in this situation to begin with!!”

Yagi sighed, "I feel the same way."

"What do you mean?" Thirteen asked.

"Well, I did punch him at the USJ because I thought he was one of the villains, and I tried to take him down in the Musutafu Raid, too. And everything else that happened with Kamino..." Yagi put a hand on his side, where his scar used to be, "Plus, look at me now. My quirk is gone, but I actually look like a normal, healthy person thanks to Joker. I can eat real food without getting sick. I can enjoy life again." A ghost of a frown came over him, "He suffered greatly at the hands of my arch nemesis and ended a centuries long war. I owe the boy a lot."

"... Don't we all?" Ectoplasm said as he shuffled his cloak, "He protected our students and rescued many people. Half of Japan owes much to this boy and his team. The least we can do is make them comfortable and safe here."

"But we'll have to keep a close eye on them regardless. They're still vigilantes." Vlad King muttered, "We can only guess how the students are going to react, it probably won't be calm or pretty after the announcement tomorrow. My class will probably do something stupid to get Joker's attention."

"You can leave that to me." Ectoplasm said, "My clones will be on constant patrol and Nezu upped the number of robots on campus too. We won't let anybody harass them."

"Yeah, but you shouldn't spread yourself too thin. Let us know when you need our help." Midnight's determined expression met each of her coworkers', "We're a team. That's never changed despite everything that's happened this year. We'll have this in the bag as long as we work together!"

A round of cheers (and Snipe's half-hearted groan) went around the room.

Present Mic gasped and whirled around, his arms flapping like a flightless bird, “They’re coming through the yard!! EVERYONE. ACT. NATURAL!!”

The teachers scrambled.

Hound Dog unceremoniously dropped Snipe face first onto the couch and sat on top of him, Vlad King and Thirteen joining in. Snipe’s muffled grunts and feeble attempts to escape were futile.

Midnight sat on the arm of the couch and struck a pose, Vlad King grumbling as her hair slapped him in the face.

Present Mic dove behind a chair.

Yagi broke out in a sweat as he rushed towards one of the open chairs, only to trip over his own feet and face plant on the ground.

Lunch Rush held two proud thumbs up high into the air.

Ectoplasm stayed where he was, facepalming.

They froze when the door swung open and the vigilante group walked in with Aizawa and Nezu.

Midnight’s heart sank when she spotted Joker with Mona on his shoulder, holding hands with a girl no older than 6. People could forget just how young he was when he was constantly blown up in the news, especially with how much power he held. Whether he liked it or not, people expected him to hold the World on his shoulders.

The others in his team were so close together that they touched shoulders, eyes alert, though confusion broke through at the scene before them.

Aizawa slowly blinked at the teachers, “What are you idiots doing?”

“N-Nothing!” Present Mic popped up from behind the chair, “Absolutely nothing whatsoever!”

“So you didn't swan dive behind the chair in a blind panic?” Vlad King asked nonchalantly.

“At least I didn't trip like Yagi!”

“Hey!” Yagi stood up and dusted himself off, “Give this old man a break.”

“Grrr, you're not even that old! What would Gran Torino do if he ever heard you say that!?” Hound Dog snapped.

Yagi flinched, “Every time he calls me a ‘zygote’ I get flashbacks of him kicking me in the face during high school. Let's not tell him.”

Thirteen pleasantly chuckled, the tense atmosphere lightening like the first flower blooming in spring.

The mysterious groans coming from beneath the three teachers were ignored.

Midnight saw her chance when the uneasiness fell away from Joker as he listened to the teachers' banter, a tiny hint of a smile on his lips. She hopped off the couch arm and sauntered over to them, keeping her movements slow and deliberate. His eyes scanned her from head to toe, but his gaze was not in the lecherous way she was used to due to her R-18 theme.

He was looking for threats. Picking apart possible weaknesses, lingering on where her hands were, her general posture, and what items were on her belt. She thanked her lucky stars that she didn't have her whip with her. All the teachers, including Snipe, left their weapons elsewhere for tonight.

“Welcome to U.A.!” She plastered on her best motherly smile as she extended her hand towards Joker, “We may not have the best history together, but I hope we can have a fresh start?”

The kid looked at her extended hand, then up to her eyes. Charm practically oozed out of him when his smile bloomed into a radiant grin and he shook her hand with a firm grip.

“Of course. We look forward to working with you.”

Any lingering tension vanished like fog in morning light. Several smiles broke out on the hero side, while the vigilantes’ relaxed under their leader’s unbreakable confidence.

“Hey Listener!” Present Mic beamed at Joker, “Your call last night really spooked me!”

Joker sheepishly rubbed his neck, “Sorry. I didn’t get you in trouble, did I?”

“No! In fact, people are still buzzing over it and my radio show got hundreds of new listeners thanks to you!!”

“He hasn’t stopped talking about it all day.” Midnight said with a smirk, then she looked down at Eri, then to La Brava and Lavenza, “Oh, aren’t you three as cute as buttons? We’re going to have so many girls’ nights-”

“Midnight .” Aizawa warned with a stern glare, “They don’t need your coddling.”

“I’m an adult, you know.” La Brava said as she put her hands on her hips.

Spinner chuckled and La Brava punched him in the shin for it.

“I may look it, but I am no child either.” Lavenza said coolly.

“Excuse me.” Thirteen did a headcount with their fingers, “But I think we got the number of rooms wrong? There’s an extra person....”

“Oh no!!” Present Mic screamed, “What are we gonna do!? This doesn’t make us look like bad hosts, does it!?”

Joker looked to Nezu, who shrugged from Aizawa's shoulder.

Midnight noticed how the golden flecks in Joker's eyes simmered as he studied the heroes, the doors with their names on them, and then to the tiny girl dressed in blue. He nodded, as if coming to a decision.

"Lavenza, you can go back now."

Lavenza blinked, "Are you sure, Trickster? I am hesitant to leave you like this."

"I'm sure." Joker smiled softly at her, "I'll summon you and the others if something happens."

"Very well."

The mysterious girl scanned the teachers before she walked towards the blank wall. Midnight held out her hand just as she was about to bump face first into it, only for a bright velvety flash and the sound of chains to whisk her away into the unknown.

Shock rippled through the other teachers.

"Uh, what the heck was that!?" Present Mic threw his hands up in the air, "She was there and then POOF!!"

Aizawa pinched the bridge of his nose, "A long, long story."

"A story which will have to wait for the time being!" Nezu stated, silencing the questions bursting from the teacher's minds, "For now, let's allow them to get comfortable and-"

A loud growling noise rumbled through the room.

All eyes fell to Joker as his face turned scarlet. How adorable! Midnight wished she could pinch his cheeks right then and there.

"Sorry. I haven't eaten since early this morning."

“Lunch Rush!” Hound Dog snarled, “How about some grub!?”

“Wait a moment!” Nezu leaned against Aizawa’s head, his black eyes glittering as he looked at the kid, “You wanted to borrow the kitchen to make curry, right?”

“Nezu,” Hound Dog’s eyes lit up with concern as he stood from the couch, Snipe’s grumble of pain forgotten, “They’re already so tired...”

“It’s fine.” Joker ran a hand through his hair and turned his charm on full blast. Color Midnight impressed, “What better way to forge bonds than to share food?”

“I can help with tea and other beverages!” Gentle Criminal offered with a warm smile of his own.

Lunch Rush radiated with happiness as he whisked the vigilante group into the kitchen. Curious heroes snuck in to watch and make idle chatter.

Snipe stayed where he was, groaning and smooshed into the couch cushions.

Midnight, Aizawa, and Nezu stood in the kitchen doorway, listening to the calm conversation and the sound of multiple dishes and cookware being taken out.

Joker matched Lunch Rush’s eagerness as ingredients were prepared and Gentle Criminal warmed several kettles. Thirteen eagerly waved their hands about as they talked to Spinner and Lady Stubbs about everything and nothing, while Yagi, Hound Dog, and Vlad sat across the table from La Brava, Mona, and Eri.

The only ones not actively talking were Kaito and Mr. Compress.

The pair leaned against the wall closest to Joker and Lunch Rush, watching as Ectoplasm stood close to Joker and asked him about his favorite dishes.

All in all, nobody died or seemed insulted. She'd call it a win.

"... The kid's really grown up." Midnight whispered.

Aizawa crossed his arms, "Maybe a little bit too grown up. He's still a kid."

"Even so," The tip of Nezu's tail bobbed back and forth, "He and the others will need a lot of support in these coming days. It won't be an easy journey for any of us."

"Don't worry." Midnight whispered with a smile, "We'll have their back, no matter what."

A weird twinkle entered Nezu's eyes as he peered into her, like a knife twisting into her back, "I'll hold you to that, Midnight. I expect you to uphold your words when the time comes."

She and Aizawa blinked at the odd tone, as if she had just made a promise that went into a far deeper hole than they thought.

"I hope you don't mind me being straight forward, but can I pet Mona?" They overheard Yagi say.

"Hey!!" Mona arched his back and yowled, "Don't think you can treat me like any other feline!"

"So he really does talk." Vlad King muttered.

Yagi looked as if they kicked a puppy right in front of him, "But you're letting young Eri pet you?"

The girl slowly blinked, staring Yagi in the eye as she ran her hands down Mona's back.

"Come on, Mona." Joker smirked as he finished slicing dicing carrots and grabbed an apple next, "Don't you want them to know how soft your fur is?”

“No way!”

“Perhaps Mona and I can exchange tips for taking care of our fur!” Nezu grinned as he hopped off Aizawa’s shoulder and skittered to their table, “It takes a lot of work to keep up this healthy lustre!”

Mona blinked at Nezu, “E-Exactly! At least somebody understands!”

“Merp!”

“Don’t discount Lady Stubbs!” Spinner called across the room as his own cat... thing puffed out its fluffy chest, “She works hard too!”

“Ah yes,” Gentle Criminal tapped his chin, “None of us can match Lady Stubbs’ grueling beauty routine.”

“Is that sarcasm I hear!?” Spinner yelled.

A round of laughter trickled through the dorm.

Midnight smiled as delectable scents made her mouth water, she had never seen Lunch Rush so excited and overjoyed to cook with someone before.

“What’s that look for?” Aizawa asked with a raised brow.

Midnight shook her head, “Nothing. It’s just...” Small ripples of uncertainty bubbled between hero and vigilante, but both Nezu and Joker’s willingness to interact with the opposite side was already working its magic, “I’m glad they’re finally here.”

Aizawa smiled as he looked at Joker, “... Me too.”

“Softie.”

“Shut it.”

His dorm room.

His first real bedroom in... almost two years.

Not a holding cell the night of his arrest, or the lumpy old couch his parents forced him to sleep on when he ‘couldn’t be trusted’ with his own privacy afterwards. Not an attic with a stiff mattress laid over cartons, or futons set out in an internet cafe or while hiding over a bar.

It even had a private bathroom stocked with toiletries, a decently sized work desk, a full closet, and a window over his bed. Glass balcony doors shed tears of moonlight through the room, leading out to an enclosed garden only the staff had access to. The walls were a soft blue. His room lacked the pizzazz the Leader of the Phantom Thieves should have, but after dinner they filled out forms for things like clothing sizes and preferences for decorations that would be picked up sometime tomorrow.

Ren had requested fairy lights and adhesive stars for his ceiling. Maybe a Phantom Thief banner to hang over his desk, which gained an unimpressed look from Aizawa.

Oh, and to test the security he used Cerberus’ fire to turn those files into the pile of ash in his bathroom waste basket, testing if the heroes would burst through the door and punish him for using his powers. Nobody did. Ren wouldn’t push it by making it obvious.

The heroes weren’t stupid though, Nezu gave them a few restrictions.

La Brava’s couldn’t have access to any device without supervision, for example.

He wondered if he’d be prohibited donning his Thief outfit or summoning his Personas during school hours, not that it would matter in case of a Metaverse emergency. They couldn’t stop him from going to the Velvet Room or accessing the hidden cashe they set up there, either.

But despite all of this planning, any obvious breach of trust would have consequences.

They'd walk on eggshells until some sense of a normal schedule set in. They'd learn which rules to absolutely follow to the letter, which ones could bend to their favor, and which they'd have to sneak around like shadows over water.

"Such restrictions will be meaningless in the end," Satanael said to soothe Ren's tangled worry, "Phantom Thieves always triumph over unfavorable situations. Use our original Star's sharp wit, and the Sun's shining charisma, and all shall go well."

"... We can hope." Ishtar said, "Even the best laid plans can go wrong in the blink of an eye. We've learned this the hard way before."

"Third Eye revealed no cameras or listening devices in the Trickster's room, and they didn't react when those files were burned. We have a small window of opportunity here." Byakko growled, "They at least trust him that much."

"The leash may be slack, but it is still a leash nonetheless." Vasuki warned.

"Ren, are you awake?" Morgana asked.

He sighed, "Yeah, can't sleep."

"Same here." Morgana sat up on Ren's chest and wrapped his tail around his legs, his blue eyes glinting off the pale moonlight, "I can't stop thinking about tomorrow. I'm... actually kinda nervous."

Ren followed Nezu when he and Yagi left the kitchen while plates of curry were passed around, respectfully waiting a small distance away as Nezu whispered something to Yagi. Whatever Nezu told him, the retired hero looked as if he had seen a ghost.

Nezu saw him standing awkwardly in the hall, and nodded at Yagi, "I called in a few favors. With any luck, you'll be able to see him as soon as you get there."

"Th-thank you, sir."

Yagi fled the dorm after, and Ren was finally able to ask the burning question that held the fate of multiple worlds at stake.

Nezu faced Ren with that knowing smirk on his face, "Something on your mind, Amamiya-kun?"

"When can we go to the USJ?" Ren kept an easy posture, but his eyes were as sharp as knives.

"Hmm, I was wondering when you were going to ask! I did want to wait a few days for you to rest and get acclimated here..." Nezu frowned when Ren grimaced, "But that's not agreeable to you. Why is that?"

"We don't know when something bad will happen. I want to be prepared and have a plan in place to protect the students if it comes down to a fight."

"A fight? And not 'if', but 'when'." Nezu's ears perked forward, "So my fears were correct in believing enemy forces could invade the school?"

Ren scoffed, forcing every iota of sarcasm into his voice, "Does a power-hungry god and his army of angels and demons sound friendly to you? I'm surprised U.A. hasn't been overrun by now."

He'd properly explain the term 'Shadow' later. For now, he had gotten his point across when Nezu's void black eyes sparkled with something akin to interest, shock, and a healthy dose of fear.

"I understand." Nezu clasped his paws together, "If that's the case, then we can begin our initial investigation first thing tomorrow morning."

Tension drained from Ren's body, "... Thank you. It's better to be safe than sorry."

Nezu chuckled, "Yes, I agree now that you've put this situation into perspective. We'll need as much information as possible if we are to combat this mystery together. With any luck, we'll get some answers we've been seeking for half a year!"

"Don't worry, Morgana." Ren said as he scratched behind Morgana's ears, "We'll figure this out. We always do."

"I hope so."

"Don't tell me you're having doubts now."

"O-O course not!"

"... Then?"

"I-it's stupid." Morgana's ears wilted, "I'm afraid we'll be stuck here forever. That everything we've done in this world has been for nothing. That... that we'll never see the others or find a way to get home. I doubt Yaldabaoth's been sitting around and twiddling his thumbs while we've been here, either."

Ren sighed, "I know, Morgana, I'm scared too. But we're not alone, we have a whole team here. The Attendants came here from our world, so there has to be a way back somehow. They'll be with us at the USJ tomorrow."

"... Yeah." Morgana's voice brightened slightly, "I told you it was stupid."

Ren smirked, "It's not stupid at all, Morgana."

They froze when a door opened. Ren activated Third Eye as he sat up and looked around the room. He spotted a glowing blue silhouette with a card floating over her head, of an angel with long flowing hair.

"Eri?" He whispered when he saw her peek from their connected doors, letting Third Eye fade, "Are you okay?"

Eri shook her head as she walked in, wearing a set of cat themed pajamas Mr. Compress got for her.

"... Can't sleep, Ren-nii." She said as she crawled on the bed and tucked herself into his open arms, "It's too lonely in my room, a-and I have a scary-bad feeling. I... I don't like it here."

Ren and Morgana exchanged glances.

The Metaverse had been crawling nonstop over their skin like chittering insects. They could only imagine what the others felt.

"Don't worry, Eri!" Morgana beamed, "Ren and I will work on taking the scary-bad feeling away!"

Eri's eyes widened, "Really?"

"We promise. Let us know if you see anything strange or scary. You just leave the scary-bad things to us, okay?" Ren said as he booped her on the nose. "You can stay in here if you can't sleep. How about we reread your favorite chapter of Arsene Lupin?"

Her eyes brightened, "O-okay!"

Ren stood, scooping up Eri as he opened the small duffel bag on his desk that he had been too tired to unpack yet. His spare clothes and whatever other keepsakes he dared keep out of the Velvet Room were in there. The book lay on top of the pile.

“You know, I wonder if the others are having trouble sleeping, too.” Morgana said, “After all, we slept in close quarters for a long time.”

Ren grinned as he held up the book, “I have an idea.”

Midnight lightly dozed on one of the many couches in the common room.

She’d never eaten so much curry in one sitting before, and multiple meals like that could potentially ruin her figure. She wondered if Joker just trained a lot or if it was just his age. Young people and their darned high metabolism.

“You alright, Midnight?”

She cracked her eyes open to Cementoss and Power Loader returning to the dorms at last.

“Just a food coma, no biggie.” She said, “How’d moving the Shinsou family go?”

“Well enough...” Power Loader said, “They thanked us for our hard work and everything, but you could tell they were sad.”

“Aww, poor things.” Midnight righted herself on the couch, “Joker’s crew aren’t the only ones we have to feel welcome.”

Cementoss and Power Loader exchanged uneasy glances.

“... And how did that go?” Cementoss asked.

“I feel bad for missing out on the introductions.” Power Loader muttered.

Midnight opened her mouth, when there was a creak nearby. Oh, right. She thought she heard some doors opening and closing while she was dozing, but she never expected-

Spinner, with arms so full of blankets and pillows he could barely see where he was going, shuffling towards Joker and Mona's room. The lizard wore bright yellow sleeping clothes that clashed with his green scales. He elbowed Joker's door open and slipped inside.

Following a few paces behind was Lady Stubbs, proudly dragging her own plush blanket toward her Leader's room. She froze mid-stride, fluffy paw outstretched, and swiveled her head like an owl at them.

The cat creature's large, ghoulish eyes narrowed, before she huffed and marched into Joker's room. Her claws scratched the door as she used her back leg to kick it shut, but not all the way.

Midnight smirked and rubbed her hands together.

"Oi, what are you doing!?" Power Loader whisper yelled.

Midnight batted at them, "Shush! I want to see what they're doing!"

Cementoss sighed, but his curiosity got the better of him too.

Lady Stubbs left the door open a crack, and Midnight held back an excited squeal when she peeked through.

The Phantom Thieves were scattered around Joker's floor in a semi-circle, all covered in their own pile of pillows and blankets. Eri was there too, wrapped up in a cocoon while Mona cuddled with her. Mr. Compress was still in costume, mask and all.

In the center, highlighted by a flashlight, was Joker. He held a black book in his hands, the golden writing on the cover glinting from the light.

The Thieves didn't notice their audience, too enamoured by Joker's fervent reading.

"Arsene Lupin, the eccentric gentleman who operates only in the chateaux and salons, and who, one night, entered the residence of Baron Schormann, but emerged empty-handed, leaving, however, his card on which he had scribbled these words:" Joker turned the page, grinning from ear to ear as he deepened his voice, "Arsene Lupin, gentleman-burglar, will return when the furniture is genuine."

Cementoss pulled back first.

Midnight, wanting to hear more but getting caught by Lady Stubbs' scathing eyes, backed away from the door.

Power Loader shook his head, fully closing the door as quietly as he could, "Should we tell Nezu, or...?"

"Nah, leave them be." Midnight said as she stretched, "It's their first night, I think they should be allowed to have a sleepover. It's cute!"

"If you say so." Power Loader turned away and walked down the hall, "I'm turning in."

"I should too, its getting late and we have an eventful day tomorrow!" Midnight winked at Cementoss, "Night!"

Cementoss, however, was rooted to the spot, his hand on his chin as he was lost in thought.

He wondered how Joker managed to get a first edition of such an old and beloved book. The cover was new, but the pages spoke of it's age and the great care it needed to last this long.

And if it was a genuine original in its home language, then Joker translating between languages so fluently deeply impressed him.

Toshinori's new stomach churned as a guard led him through the oppressing atmosphere of Tartarus, utterly silent as they passed rows of cells housing the worst criminals Japan has to offer. He caught the quick flash of the Hero Killer's gaze in one of the cells. He was surprised any prisoners were awake, granted it was 3 in the morning... the guards didn't look too thrilled when he showed up this late in a tizzy though.

That, or the constant bright lighting made it impossible to tell what time it was.

"Toshinori!" Tsukauchi was like a ray of sunlight as he waited in front of an elevator.

Toshinori rushed to his friend and locked both hands on his shoulders, "Is he here?"

"Yes." Tsukauchi sobered, "Shigaraki Tomura was transported here as soon as Gang Orca turned him over. He's... they've put him in that cell, Toshinori."

Toshinori blanched.

That cell. The one originally meant for Joker.

"Gentlemen, we're on a tight schedule." The guard droned like a robot.

"Lead the way." Tsukauchi said.

Tsukauchi and Toshinori went into the elevator. The guard turned a key into one of the panels, opened it, and pressed a button. They rode down in a long, dreadful silence. Toshinori counted over two dozen of his frantic heart beats, eventually losing track as they continued to go down. Finally, after what felt like an eternity descending into the bowels of hell, the elevator stopped and its doors opened. Several guards lined the long hallway, watching them as they approached the only door at the end.

"We can't permit you to stay long, All Might." The guard by the door said, "A few minutes at most."

"... I understand."

“Are you sure you want to go in by yourself?” Tsukauchi asked, his expression lined with worry.

“Yes. I... I need to see him alone.”

“I’ll wait here, then.”

The guards let Toshinori through.

The space was split in half by a thick glass wall. Toshinori stood in the one half connected to the door, while the other contained a form huddled over the stiff cot shoved in the corner, hands gripping pale hair. But before Toshinori could approach the cell, he saw it .

Sitting outside the cell was a special Iron Maiden. A wicked creation of the coldest, cruelest steel and leather straps meant to restrain someone in the most painful way imaginable. Right next to it...

Toshinori pushed down another wave of horror, his hands balling into fists.

An IV stand with a sickly green fluid-filled bag hanging from it. The translucence made it glow ominously in the soulless lighting Tartarus offered its prisoners, a testament to the vile poison that eroded someone’s whole being into nothing more than a living vegetable.

The final punishment originally meant for a terrified teenager.

Ryoto promised it would be destroyed, but it seems they hadn’t the time to before Shigaraki’s unexpected residence.

.... Or the guards kept it there on purpose to torment Shigaraki. Maybe they even lied and said it had been destroyed. He’d find out.

A harsh, strangled breath snapped him out of his thoughts, “You .”

Shigaraki stood from the creaky cot and staggered towards the glass wall. It was obvious that something within Shigaraki had died, leaving a haggard and depraved husk behind, “Come to laugh at me like every guard did on the way down? Are you going to marvel at how the quirkless Shigaraki Tomura is locked down here? To throw away the key in front of me!?”

“I-”

“WHAT DO YOU WANT!?”

Toshinori didn't jump as Shigaraki beat his fist against the glass wall, his expression twisted in rage and sorrow and pain .

“I needed to see my master's grandchild, and offer what comfort I could.”

Shigaraki's eyes widened, “What did you just say?”

Toshinori approached the glass wall and put his hand on it, over Shigaraki's fist. Shigaraki lurched away as if it burned.

“You're my master's grandson.” Toshinori said, his expression set in determination as Shigaraki stared at him with a slack-jawed expression, “Nana always regretted leaving her son behind, and what happened to you, my boy... what All For One did to you should never have happened.”

“You're lying.”

“I'm not-”

“You're LYING!” Shigaraki paced a frantic circle, “I knew my grandmother was a hero, but my father hated her. He... she can't be the same one that trained you...”

“That's why All For One took you in the first place. It was all a ruse to get to me.”

“You're lying . Sensei cared about me!”

“My boy-”

“I’M NOT YOURS!” Shigaraki whirled around to him, balled fists shaking. “Leave me alone!”

"Please, Tenko-"

“LEAVE!!”

The steel door opened behind Toshinori, and the guards waited with blank, soulless expressions.

“Times up, All Might.”

Hollow sadness clawed at Toshinori's heart as his hand dropped from the glass, “I’ll come back, young Tenko. I promise.”

Toshinori turned to look before the heavy steel door shut, witnessing his master’s grandson collapse onto the floor, arms wrapped tight around himself as tears fell.

Tsukauchi was a silent anchor of support as they made their way back up to the surface. This elevator ride up didn’t seem as long, and before Toshinori knew it, he was passing by the first floor cells beside Tsukauchi.

“Who else is here?” Toshinori asked, his voice empty.

“Gigantomachia is in another specialized cell,” Tsukauchi said as he rubbed his eyes, “As is Kurogiri, Overhaul, and the surviving Eight Bullets. The rest of the Shie Hassaikai have been split between other facilities.”

“I see...” Toshinori looked at his friend, frowning, “Tsukauchi, have you slept at all since the raid?”

Tsukauchi’s expression lightened in a wry smile, “No, there’s too much work to be done. I haven’t even gotten Joker’s side of the story, let alone everything e/se he went through since the USJ. That’s a whole other ballgame by itself.”

“Yes, Nezu is being especially protective about the boy and his friends.” Toshinori frowned as he recalled All For One’s words about the boy being ‘not from this world’ and then Nezu’s subtle deductions afterwards. He pushed those thoughts back with a shiver, “Joker may not be ready to share everything, either.”

“I know. Maybe it’s for the best to wait for him to be ready.” Tsukauchi said as he rubbed his bloodshot eyes again, “I’m too flooded with work as it is right now and Aizawa asked for an important favor with Kurogiri-”

Toshinori stopped as they encountered another unlikely visitor.

Endeavor.

He leaned against the wall next to a certain cell, and through the window Toshinori saw Dabi; heavily restrained in a metal chair, but slumped forward and unconscious. Black marks slightly warped the chair and the faint smell of smoke trickled into the hallway.

Tartarus didn’t use Quirk Suppressants. Instead, they taunted their prisoners with their own powers, and severely punished them for using their Quirks.

Endeavor’s visible eye was cast in a thousand yard stare that passed through everyone. Bandages covered the left half of his body, mostly hidden by his hero costume. He didn’t have the energy to manifest the flames. How the man was even standing was a miracle, he should still be in the hospital in Toshinori’s opinion.

At the same time, Toshinori sympathized, as he was here for a similar reason.

The state of Endeavor’s first born son would remain a state secret, and Toshinori was only informed in private due to his previous status as Number One Hero. But just because it was hidden from the public didn’t mean it wouldn’t affect Endeavor or the rest of his family for a long time to come.

Tsukauchi gently grabbed his arm and pulled him away.

The oppressing air of Tartarus lightened as they left the prison wing behind, got checked through security, and into the heavily guarded entry.

“Are you kidding me!?” A familiar voice snarled by the front desk, “We’ve already had his transfer approved by the Commission! We’ve sent all the paperwork through official channels multiple times! How could you lose everything more than once!?”

“Ma’am, please,” The guard’s tone was as indifferent and monotone as the rest of the security in this place, “Just be patient and we’ll find your paperwork.”

“Be patient!? We’re talking about a 14 year-old boy! How many times do Gang Orca and I have to send in the paperwork only for you to ‘lose’ it!?”

“Ryukyu?” Tsukauchi asked, eyes wide.

Ryukyu turned to them, anger softening, “Tsukauchi. All Might. What are you doing here?”

Tsukauchi gestured for her to come away from the desk. She sent a scathing glare at the guard, who yawned as she turned away and followed them out of ear-shot.

“I came to visit Shigaraki Tomura. What are you doing here, Ryukyu?” Toshinori asked.

Ryukyu crossed her arms, “I was trying to transfer Mustard into my care, but whenever we try to get him-” She whipped around and glared at the guard, “These assholes ‘lose the paperwork’ in order to continue tormenting a child !”

Toshinori swallowed. He promised he’d never let her know what was in the cell intended for Joker, lest she go down there in dragon form and tear it apart somehow.

“We’re going as fast as we can, ma’am.” He said, yawning again while making direct eye contact.

“Why you-!” Her eyes flashed a reptilian gold, “I’ve been waiting here for hours and you haven’t even moved!”

Tsukauchi grabbed her arm, holding his hands up in surrender when her molten gaze turned to him.

Ryukyu deflated as she pinched the bridge of her nose, “Sorry for losing my temper.”

“It’s okay. It’s pretty late... or rather early.” Tsukauchi said with a reassuring smile, “It seems I’m not the only one who hasn’t gotten any sleep since before the raid. How are your new charges settling?”

“They’re fine.” A soft smile broke the last of Ryukyu’s anger, “They decorated the dining area of the facility last night, and after supper Gang Orca stayed up and shared stories with them as he helped them arrange their respective rooms. They’re.... actually kind of sweet, despite their past. They’ll start therapy in a few days.”

“... Would you be willing to accept other villains?” Toshinori asked hesitantly.

“Of course.” Ryukyu said without missing a beat, “Who?”

“Shigaraki.” He grimaced as she winced, “I know, I know. It may take a while, but I’m not giving up on him. I feel like it’s my duty to show him that there are other ways, that he deserves help. That... that he’s worthy of love. He’s my master’s grandson, after all. I can’t just leave him here to rot.”

“I see.” Ryukyu sighed, “It’ll be a long road for him, but Gang Orca and I won’t abandon him if he ever accepts our program. Take as long as you need and let me know of his progress.”

“Thank you.”

She nodded, then glanced between Tsukauchi and Toshinori, “And how’s our kid? Is he settling alright? Nobody’s been mean to him, right? I’m sorry that none of us have visited, we’ve all been so busy handling the fallout.”

“He’s fine, so are the rest of his team.” Toshinori, despite the sour hopelessness of Tartarus, smiled brightly, “He actually made curry for all the teacher’s last night, and we all ate together.” He leaned in and whispered, “The boy is already Lunch Rush’s favorite person.”

Tsukauchi playfully pouted, “Lucky.”

“I’m not surprised.” Ryukyu chuckled, before her smile crumbled and she looked Toshinori in the eye, “Tell him that we’re all thinking of him and Mona, okay? I don’t want him thinking we abandoned him or something.”

“I’ll let him know. I’m sure he’ll understand.” Toshinori said.

“Thank you.”

“Miss Ryukyu, we finally located your paperwork.” The bored guard called, “Turns out one of the new interns found them in the back of the wrong filing cabinet. Accidents like these happen all the time here.”

“Yeah, I’m sure it was an ‘accident’.” Ryukyu nodded at them before she walked to the front desk.

Tsukauchi sighed, “I guess this is where we part ways. I still have work to do here.” He patted his best friend on the shoulder, “Take care of the kid for me, okay?”

“I will. Try to go home and sleep once in a while.”

Tsukauchi waved him off.

Toshinori left the dreary prison behind, determined to save his master's grandson no matter how long it takes.

Ren was the first to awake from a light sleep.

Maybe it was the strangeness of sleeping in a new place, or perhaps the Metaverse's constant ringing in his soul that kept from a deeper rest. Still, at least he was wrapped up in cozy warmth despite the hard wooden floor. He slowly sat up and worked the crick out of his neck. Pale twilight streamed in from the balcony doors, highlighting the forms of all of his sleeping teammates around his room.

Ren was still getting used to that.

His bedroom .

'Dorm' technically, but he wasn't too picky about terms.

He untangled himself from the blankets and various limbs strewn about, careful not to step on Shuichi's leg or Manami's arm. He caught Kaito's eye when he was at the door, gesturing whether or not he wanted to follow.

Kaito shook his head and stared at Eri, who was huddling her face in Morgana's soft fur. Not that Morgana minded, he was smiling in his sleep.

Ren nodded and stepped out. He shut the door silently and looked around the common area now without the noise of excited Pros. The walls bore a pleasing green shade, with floor to ceiling windows letting in the twilight. Several couches and armchairs were scattered around coffee tables and desks, providing space for teachers to work comfortably. Peaceful scenery, but tainted by the ominous presence of the Metaverse still weighing down on him.

He hesitated when he spotted the bright yellow caterpillar with Aizawa's face laying a few feet away.

“Were you there the whole night?” Ren asked with a raised brow.

“... Only a few hours. Cementoss notified me of your sleepover, and I wanted to make sure nobody bothered you or nothing went wrong on your first night.”

Kohryu happily purred in the mindscape.

Aizawa shrugged himself out of the sleeping bag and stood up, folding it neatly and throwing it on the closest couch. He blinked when Ren smirked at him, “What?”

“I’ve always wondered if you’d emerge as a beautiful butterfly some day, but it turns out you’re still the same... just with more pink.”

“Very funny.” Aizawa deadpanned, rolling his eyes as Ren chuckled at Aizawa’s hot pink sweatpants.

Ren, still grinning, turned towards the kitchen, “Coffee?”

“Always.”

Ren wondered if Sojiro would be jealous of this kitchen. These teachers had, not one, but two ginormous fridges stocked full of goodies, and a stove with six heating elements. There was enough counter space for a whole team of chefs to work, alongside an extra island with a second stove and additional seating.

He opened one of the cupboards, having memorized where everything was after Lunch Rush’s enthusiastic tour last night. A whole treasure trove of specialized appliances and various types of coffee, both expensive and cheap, filled it to the brim.

“Nezu really likes you.” Aizawa said as he sat at one of the stools on the island, “You know we never had any of that stuff before you arrived here? We always had the cheapest instant crap, but now there’s whole beans and coffee instruments I have no idea what to do with.”

“My condolences.” Ren said sincerely, “Do you have a preference?”

“Not really,” Aizawa squinted at the bags lining the cupboard,
“Anything you make will always be better than what I can manage.”

Ren smirked, “I’ll have to teach you how to brew a real cup sometime. Maybe one day you’ll make coffee as good as mine... maybe. After a lot of training and hard work.”

“You sound like me when I talk to my own students.” Aizawa huffed,
“But yeah, maybe.”

“Want me to show you how to use a siphon?”

Aizawa raised a brow when Ren set the siphon on the table, an odd contraption with a pair of glass containers and its own heating element that looked at home in a mad scientist’s lab. Aizawa must have noticed Ren’s excitement. He hasn’t used one in ages!

“Go for it.”

Ren grinned. He dug around and found a bag of Kona coffee - one of his favorites.

Light, sweet, and incredibly smooth with hints of fruits, nuts, or chocolate depending on how long the beans were roasted.

Ren fell into a familiar rhythm of grinding the beans, pouring the hot water into the siphon’s rounded base. He flicked on the heating element and, once the water started boiling, attached the other glass container to the top of the first one. A small string of beads from the top container floated around in the boiling water.

It would be a lie if Ren said he wasn’t amused at Aizawa’s subtle amazement as the top container slowly filled up with water, then went back down to the bottom again after the coffee was added and allowed to brew.

When it was done, Ren detached the bottom filled with coffee and poured Aizawa a mug.

“Ta da.” Ren said as he put the mug in front of Aizawa, “I remembered you like your coffee black.”

“Thanks.” Aizawa picked up the mug in both hands, inhaled deeply, and then took a sip. He sighed contently, “As good as ever, Amamiya.”

Ren blinked, “I guess Nezu sent that e-mail already.”

“He did last night. You don’t mind me calling you Amamiya? Or would you rather be called Joker?”

Ren shrugged, “Ren is fine. I suppose you’ll have to call me Joker or Amamiya around the students though, right?”

Aizawa nodded, “We can’t show favoritism, regardless of the situation.”

As Ren prepared a second cup of coffee for himself, Aizawa slowly put his mug on the counter and studied Ren with unusual intensity. It was all too familiar to one of Sojiro’s stares. A sharp pang of homesickness smothered his insides.

“What is it, Eraser?” Ren kept his smile despite the knot in his stomach.

“I want to know if you’re alright.” Aizawa’s gaze hardened when Ren opened his mouth, “And no, don’t say that you’re fine or I’ll call you out on your bullshit. Yesterday, with Ayumu. Even if he’s alive now, seeing somebody in that state takes a toll on you... more so if it’s a person you care deeply for.”

The words died on Ren’s tongue, so he focused on pouring his coffee instead. The silence weighed on Ren as he took a sip to wet his dry mouth. Kohryu encouraged him with a soft rumble.

“... It’s not the only time I brought someone back.”

Aizawa stilled, “What?”

“Native was the first. In Hosu.” Ren kept his gaze down, running a finger around the rim of his cup, “Native passed away because Stain caused a lot of internal bleeding. At that time, Mona and I didn’t even know it would work.”

“Ren-”

“And then there was that little girl I saved from the Musutafu fires. It had gotten way too hot for her to handle, and she was all curled up in that closet...” Ren’s chuckle was mirthless, “My Personas keep me from having nightmares, Eraser, but sometimes I still see them whenever I close my eyes before sleep comes. I can’t even imagine how terrible it was for Mona when he saw me in the Kamino morgue.”

“... Do your other teammates know?” Aizawa asked, his voice barely above a whisper.

“Mona told them about it before they revived me.”

“That’s not what I meant.” Aizawa’s voice softened further, “Do they know it still bothers you like this?”

Ren shrugged, “They have enough on their plates as it is.”

“I’ll take that as a no.”

“They upended their whole lives to help Mona and I.” Ren avoided Aizawa’s eyes, “The least I can do is make it easier for them.”

Aizawa sighed, “If you need to talk about anything, you can come to me or Hound Dog, or any other teacher. That’s what we’re here for.”

Ren cracked a smile, “You know you’re not the first person to tell me this, right?”

“Big surprise.” Aizawa deadpanned, “I probably won’t be the last either.”

“I know.” Ren finally looked Aizawa in the eyes, “It’s not easy for me to trust adults, but I’ll... try to work on it.”

Aizawa nodded and left it at that. They fell into easy silence as they nursed their coffee, until the next person dragged themselves into the kitchen like a zombie.

“Shouuuuuuta.” Midnight, dressed in fuzzy purple pajamas and with her hair tied in a messy bun, shambled towards Aizawa. Crooked red glasses balanced on her nose. It was a much more modest look compared to her hero getup, “I smell coffeeeeee.”

Aizawa glared when she attacked him from behind with a hug, hands feeling around for his mug.

“This is mine . Get your own, Kayama.”

“But Shouuuuuuta, you know I’m too clumsy in the morning! That’s why I always steal yours!”

“Clumsy, or lazy ?”

Ren chuckled, “Sit down, Miss Midnight. I’ll make you a cup.”

Her eyes popped open and she looked at Ren from over Aizawa’s head, “Oh, you’re such a sweetheart! Much better than this grumpy sourpuss.” She plopped down beside Aizawa, who still gave her the stink eye as he huddled protectively over his mug, “You don’t have to call me Midnight while we’re here and out of costume. You can just call me Nemuri!”

“Call me Ren.”

Her eyes sparkled as she watched him use the siphon and set a hot cup in front of her.

“Please taste it before you add several pounds of cream and sugar.” Aizawa grumbled.

“Ugh, fine.” She said as she warmed her hands with the mug, “I don’t get how you can drink it just straight black!”

She took a sip, Aizawa and Ren shared mutual smirks as her eyes nearly bugged out of her head.

“Oh. Oh .” She looked at Ren, gaping, “Where in the world did you learn to make coffee like this!? I heard rumors about the coffee from the Blue Lotus, but this is divine .”

Ren smiled, “I learned from a master.”

“I’m so jealous! Can you teach me?”

“Get in line.” Aizawa stated after he downed the rest of his mug, “I call first dibs.”

“Cheater!”

“It’s not cheating if he offered it to me first.”

They devolved into friendly bickering as more people trickled into the kitchen, both hero and vigilante drawn by the scent of fresh coffee. Morgana was hugged to Eri’s chest as she sleepily walked in with Kaito, Mr. Compress still wearing his full vigilante costume, and Shuichi with Lady Stubbs on his shoulder. Ectoplasm and Cementoss came in next, already in full hero gear as light chatter permeated the atmosphere.

“GOOOOOOOOOOOD MOOOOOOOOORNING LISTENERS!!!!”

Present Mic burst into the kitchen with the energy of a jack rabbit injected with caffeine, sporting finger guns and an ear to ear grin.

Aizawa groaned, turned in his seat, and wrapped Present Mic’s mouth shut with his capture weapon, “It’s too early in the morning to be this loud, Mic.”

Present Mic frantically waved his arms and looked at Nemuri in desperation, but she winked at him and turned away to finish her coffee. He put his hand over his heart in mock betrayal, flopping to the ground as Aizawa rolled his eyes. Eri and the vigilantes exchanged glances, while the other teachers just laughed and continued their morning.

Must be a regular occurrence, then.

It suddenly dawned on him how... normal these heroes were. They got up early and readied themselves for work like everyone else, made jokes and messed around to make each other laugh.

That thought finally cemented itself in his mind when a stranger walked into the kitchen. Someone with short lighter colored hair with bangs forming a spiral, their eyes were like looking into the event horizon of a black hole swirling with trapped starlight.

They retrieved a carton of eggs and a gallon of milk from the fridge, only noticing his staring after they set them out on the counter. Surprisingly, a well of pure compassion and warmth radiated from their smile.

“Good morning! Did you sleep well, Amamiya-san?”

“Uh... good morning?”

Something must’ve dawned on them as their ethereal eyes widened, “Oh, you probably don’t recognize me out of costume. I’m Kurose Anan, my Hero name is Thirteen!”

“Oh. And yeah, I did. Thank you.”

“I’m glad! It’s important for someone your age to get plenty of sleep.” Kurose said, beaming. In the corner of his eye, Ren swore he saw Morgana grinning at Kurose. “Would you like an omelet?”

“It wouldn’t be too much trouble, would it?”

“Of course not! I love cooking for other people.”

Kurose went off with a bounce to their step, humming happily as they raced off for more ingredients.

Ren was stunned.

“The heroes are actually being nice? It wasn’t just a one-off act?” Ishtar said, “This is rather... strange. And unexpected.”

“Kurose was nothing but genuine.” Gabriel stated with a tilt to her head, “In fact, I’ve sensed no malice at all within these heroes. Their hearts are pure.”

“I noticed that the Hierophant didn’t use his power on Present Mic, either.” Shiva said.

Kohryu snorted, “He knows not to use it whenever the Trickster is near, lest he accidentally harm us again.”

“How thoughtful.” Alice remarked dryly.

“Are you alright, Alice?” Ishtar asked, “You’ve been really quiet lately.”

“Fine.” Alice crossed her arms and pouted, “I’m just fine.”

Fafnir cackled, “She’s just mad that Upright Death is Endeavor.”

“Shut up, you stupid wyrm!”

“I’m glad you’re getting a balanced breakfast, Amamiya! Be sure to thank Thirteen later!”

Ren jumped out of his skin and stared at Nezu. When did he hop up on the closest stool to stare at Ren? Did he do it when talking with Kurose, or when listening to his Personas? The rat bear thing was grinning strangely again, maybe he figured out when Ren was distracted by his Personas.

"Are we going?" Ren whispered.

Nezu chuckled, "We'll get on a bus as soon as you finish breakfast, but its imperative we begin our investigation before the students start class. I suggest the rest of your team eat a hearty meal as well. After all, we don't know what today has in store!"

"A normal bus!? How lame!" Pixie complained, "The Magician should be insulted!"

"Wouldn't flying be faster?" Kohryu asked with a flick of his whiskers.

"Maybe next time." Ren said, "You'd terrify the students."

"But we aren't scary!" Cerberus whined.

"Tell that to your claws and fangs, Guardian Hound of Hell." Gabriel whispered.

Ren nodded at Nezu, who was grinning in that certain way again, and got to work on Eri's breakfast.

He naturally gravitated towards Kurose with a handful of apples, listening to their easy conversation as the sizzle of eggs hit a hot pan.

Eri said nothing about the apple swans looking less than perfect. He crouched next to her chair, and she looked at him in concern when he smiled at her. It wasn't a happy smile.

"The others and I are going to be gone for a little bit. Can you stay here with Kaito until we get back?"

Her breath hitched, "Y-You're not going to get hurt again, are you?"

A more genuine smile crossed his lips, “No, we won’t even be leaving U.A.”

Morgana, still in her lap, gently headbutted her chin, “We’ll be back before you know it!”

“O-okay. I’ll be good, I promise.”

“That’s my girl.” Ren gave her a head pat before he stood up.

His hands trembled in anticipation when he returned to the counter. Kurose must’ve noticed. They pushed a plate with a freshly made omelet into his hands, hiding their worry as they nudged him to go sit down with his teammates.

At long last, the sun rose over the throes of twilight and the first rays of warmth filtered through the windows. The sky gained a warm crimson glow. To anybody else, it would be a sight of beauty, the start of a fresh new day.

To Ren, he simply hoped the red morning sky wasn’t an ill omen for things to come.

Hooooooo boooooooy we finally revisit the USJ next chapter! I wonder what will happen...

The original Freedom&Security chapter had all of last chapter to the part with Midnight seeing the Thieves' little sleep over, I added the next few parts from Ark to make this one a little longer. Next chapter is allll about the USJ.

Next updates:

Ark - December 24th

Erosion - Jan 21st

Updates may be a little further apart for the time being as my health continues to go downwards. BUT!! More time between chapters means higher quality chapters in the long run, and I really want to do this last stretch of the story the best as I can. We'll wrap up all remaining plot threads while time whittles down to the ultimate showdown. I especially can't wait for the chapter when the whole truth is finally revealed. It's going to be funnnn :D

Ark

Chapter 84: Ark

Elizabeth raised her foot to punt Nezu down the long flight of stairs, but Margaret tactfully stepped in front of her and urged Nezu on with a pointed look.

Merry Christmas, ya filthy animal

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

"I told you he would do something like this!"

"There has to be an explanation." Fuyumi said, but Shoto heard the doubt in her voice, "H-he came so far! Shoto, have you heard anything?"

"Nothing." Shoto frowned, "I haven't seen or heard from him since we got separated at the start of the raid. I even got an email from Burnin' this morning saying Nezu has canceled the work studies for the rest of the term. She never replied when I asked about Endeavor."

"That's not right!" Natsuo griped.

"I wanted to learn more about my fire but... I guess it has to wait."

"I'm sorry, Shoto." Fuyumi whispered, "This isn't fair to you. Or any of us."

"I'm not holding my breath on whether the bastard will ever grace us with his presence again. Don't bother letting me know when he remembers he has children."

"Natsuo-"

"No, Fuyumi. I'm done ."

Natsuo hung up, leaving a sour silence.

"... I should get ready for class."

"Alright." Fuyumi sighed, "I'll let you know if I hear anything, okay?"

"I'll do the same. Thanks, sis."

"Anytime, Shoto."

He hung up and threw his phone in his bag. Shoto finished his morning routine, put on his school uniform, and left his room with his bag slung over his shoulder. He went downstairs and into the commons area.

Iida's voice boomed from the kitchen, "As heroes-in-training, you need a balanced diet! You can't just eat sugar every single morning!"

"Lame!!" Ashido shouted, "Just tell me where you hid the donuts, Class Rep!"

Shoto sighed, stopping in his tracks when he saw Midoriya sitting on the couch, staring off into space. He looked around, but Midoriya was the only one in here.

"Are you okay?" Shoto asked as he sat beside his friend.

Midoriya snapped back into reality with a jolt, "Y-yeah! Why wouldn't I be?"

"You've been acting weird since yesterday." Shoto double checked their surroundings again, "Just what happened down there after Overhaul was defeated?"

“Nothing?”

“Midoriya. If somethings bothering you, I want to help for a change.” Shoto deadpanned more than his normal, “You’ve helped me with my problems so many times.”

Midoriya swallowed. His eyes focused on the opposite corner of the room, “I... I figured out what Joker really did for Native in Hosu.”

Shoto frowned, “Oh.”

Midoriya turned so fast that Shoto was surprised he didn’t get a neck cramp, “Wait, did you know ?”

“... I did. I was close enough to tell that Native didn’t make it.”

“A-and you didn’t say anything?”

“I thought about telling Tsuragamae what Joker did when they debriefed us in the hospital, but that power shouldn’t be widely known.”

Midoriya bit his lip as he contemplated, allowing Shoto to continue.

“If Endeavor pursued my mother to the extent that he did just for her quirk, what do you think people would do if they knew the full truth of Joker’s abilities? He’s beyond powerful for sure, but bringing back the dead? That’s unheard of even for quirks.”

“... Do you think people pursued him like that in the past?”

Shoto shrugged, “We can only speculate at this point, though I think the Musutafu Raid is proof enough.”

“Yeah. I suppose you’re right.” Midoriya clasped his hands together and sighed, “I understand that some things need to be kept secret.”

“Are you afraid of Joker because of it?”

“I-I’ts not that I’m scared of him or anything like that!” Midoriya put his hands up in surrender, “I think I just need some time to accept it?”

“That’s fair.” Shoto looked down, frowning, “It took a few days for the shock to wear off, too.”

“To be able to do... that... on top of everything else he can do already. And now he’s even more powerful because he can have multiple summons out at once. He couldn’t do that before Kamino, a-and his costume is different! I wonder if his costume correlates to the amount of power he can use?”

“Midoriya”

“H-he can summon it at will too, so is it just another aspect of his power? Where does it go when he’s not wearing it? Just what else can he do? What are his new limits? How did he create new summons we haven’t seen before, like Fafnir and Baal?”

“Midoriya.”

“They really do have their own trains of thought, considering they all worked together against Overhaul. Not to mention how each has different and incredibly powerful defences and a whole range of powers. How does Joker decide which one gets what abilities? How does he-”

“Midoriya .” Todoroki snorted when Midoriya clapped a hand over his mouth.

“Was I muttering again?”

“You were.”

“Sorry.” Midoriya’s hand dropped and he glanced at Shoto with uncertainty, “Listen, I know you and Iida had a talk about Kamino, and what Joker went through after.”

Todoroki winced, “How?”

“After Kacchan and I got in trouble, he asked Nezu questions and said he overheard you two talking about it. I don’t blame you for not telling me! That’s just as hard of a topic as seeing that part of Joker’s power in person.” Midoriya grimaced as he lowered his voice, even though the common room was empty, “But Nezu confirmed that Mona used the same power on Joker and mentioned a morgue... I just can’t even imagine...”

Shoto’s heart twisted, “Kamino took a massive toll on him. More than people will ever realize.”

“Y-yeah.”

They sat in silence, absorbing the information shared between one another.

“Who did he use that power on?” Shoto asked after a few more seconds, “If you don’t mind me asking.”

“Shinsou’s dad. There’s something else, too.”

“What?”

Midoriya held up his hands, “My scars are gone.”

Shoto’s eyes widened, “All of them?”

He nodded, flexing his hands several times, “I have full range of motion again, like before I started at U.A.! The joint pain is all gone, a-and my other scars, like the one I got from the battle with Muscular, are all healed too.”

“Does Aizawa know?”

“N-not yet! I was going to go to Recovery Girl later so she can confirm that everything’s okay.”

Todoroki hummed, “He healed all of us when he healed Miruko, right?”

“Right.”

Shoto ran his fingers over his own scar, “Then I wonder why I still have this, when Miruko’s arm was healed and your scars are gone?”

“It confirms a theory I had for a while.”

“What do you mean?”

“There are different degrees of healing.” Midoriya held up three fingers, “The first degree: Weaving lights forming a heart shape that healed our immediate injuries. The second degree, the one Mona healed me with after we defeated Overhaul: A concentrated whirlwind of energy that healed all of my injuries and my past scars. I bet this is the one Joker used to heal Iida’s brother, too. The third degree: Revive. We... we know how that one works.”

“That makes sense... wait...” Shoto sat ramrod straight, “I just realized something.”

“Huh?”

Shoto looked at Midoriya with the utmost seriousness, “If your injuries from the Sports Festival are healed, then I’m not the Hand Crusher anymore.”

Midoriya blinked twice, and then burst out laughing, “N-Not that Hand Crusher thing again!!”

“My hands are finally clean,” Shoto looked down at his palms as he sagged in relief, “I promise to never crush someone’s hands ever again.”

Midoriya laughed harder, wheezing for breath as he collapsed against the couch arm.

Iida swooped in from the kitchen, chopping an arm at Midoriya, “What’s with all this racket!? We don’t want to be too loud and disrupt other peoples’ morning routines!!”

“I-Iida! Todoroki... he’s...” Midoriya’s face turned bright red as he fell into another laughing fit.

Ashido popped her head in, “Wow, Todoroki! What did you do to Mido!?”

Todoroki turned to them, his expression gravely serious, “Nothing. I simply told him that I’ve been absolved from being the Hand Crusher.”

A beat of silence. Then, to Ashido’s startled surprise, Iida burst out laughing too. The both of them didn’t calm down until a majority of their classmates came down for breakfast, watching the chaos from the sidelines in utter confusion.

Ren’s heart pounded as he stared up at the USJ.

They were but tiny specks in front of the enormous doors, faint memories of sirens and being dragged by police skirted his memories, paired by burning pain from a bullet ripping through his shoulder. A flash of green eyes had tried to reach out, but the finality of slamming cruiser doors cut off any attempt to save him.

Ren took a deep breath to steel his nerves, though it came out shaky.

“Are you okay, Amamiya-san?” Thirteen, despite being in full costume now, kept their warmth and compassion from this morning.

“I’m fine.” Ren stated with a shake of his head, “Just... processing things.”

“R-right.” Thirteen cleared their throat, “Can I ask why we’re here, Nezu? This trip was so sudden.”

“I am also confused.” The Ectoplasm clone said as he smoothed a wrinkle in his cloak, “I figured the bad memories would be too much for them to handle.”

Mr. Compress scoffed, “Don’t underestimate our leader, hero.”

The Ectoplasm clone bowed his head, “I didn’t mean to offend. I’m only concerned for everyone’s health and well-being.”

“I said I’m fine.” Ren said gently, “I can do this.”

Nezu sighed airily, “Very well, Amamiya. Ectoplasm, Thirteen, I promise to give you answers in time, but I’m afraid that the Phantom Thieves and I will be entering the USJ alone.”

“Alone? But...” Thirteen hesitated when Nezu gave them an encouraging grin, “Well... alright. The various zones have been deactivated, so you can take as long as you need to. Come get us if there are any complications.”

The Ectoplasm clone sighed, “We’ll wait on the bus.”

Nezu waved them off. Thirteen’s gaze lingered on Ren a few seconds more before they followed Ectoplasm.

Morgana shared his leader’s anticipation, along with excitement and palpable impatience. It was like standing in front of a new Palace for the very first time, stocked full of unforeseen challenges. They hoped there weren’t any enemies waiting in the shadows. Quite literally.

Ren took another deep breath as his Personas brushed against his mind, “Okay, let’s go.”

The others followed his lead as the massive door opened on its own. The entryway sprawled out before them, wide enough to hold several dozen people, and Ren spotted the arch above the long staircase leading down to the plaza.

Ren stepped into the threshold.

Satanael gasped at the sudden surge of Metaverse energy,
"Trickster-"

A blinding flash of blue erupted around Ren and Morgana. Shrieks and startled gasps came from behind as the pyre withered away into ash. Joker looked down at his costume. Mona's Metaverse form clung to his shoulder.

They stared at one another with impossibly wide eyes.

"A little warning next time, Buddy!" Spinner yelled as he put a hand over heart.

Thirteen and the Ectoplasm clone rushed out of the bus from the commotion, but was stopped by Nezu holding up a paw, staring at Joker and Mona as they were as still as statues.

"... Joker?" La Brava asked, hands clasped together.

Joker closed his gloved hands, then looked over his shoulder to see everyone standing right outside the threshold. Their Thief Outfits manifested by themselves, but it doesn't look as if they were teleported to a different dimension. Joker locked eyes with his partner once more.

"Joker... This is... how can-"

"I don't know." Joker grimaced, "Can you sense anything?"

Mona hopped off Joker's shoulder and pranced forward, vibrant colors rippled from his footsteps.

"It's here. I feel it." Mona whirled around to Joker, eyes glowing with determination, "It... it feels almost like-"

“The heart of Mementos. Yaldabaoth.”

“... Yeah.” Mona closed his eyes, took a breath, and concentrated. After a few moments he scowled, “Damn it, I still can’t directly tap into the Metaverse. What the hell is going on here?”

Behind them, Nezu gestured for Thirteen and the clone to go back in the bus.

“Care to explain what this ‘Metaverse’ is?” Nezu clasped his paws together and walked into the USJ, staggering a step as his fur stood on end, “Oh my.”

“It feels like...” Spinner rubbed his arms and shivered when he and the rest of the team stepped inside, “Like...”

“Like someone just walked over my grave.” Mr. Compress said solemnly as he massaged his temples, “And with a sudden headache from hell to boot.”

“What is this hopeless atmosphere?” Gentle Criminal’s eyes widened as he turned to Joker and Mona, “Why did your costumes appear so suddenly?”

“Our Thief Outfits would only appear if we’re considered hostile.” Mona said as he crossed his arms, “And since our costumes just appeared without us summoning them ourselves....”

“Then something considers you hostile.” Mr. Compress said.

Gentle Criminal clutched his chin in thought, “Ah, so that’s why the two of you wanted to come out of costume, while you told the rest of us to be properly armed?”

“With the special gear you gave us.” La Brava added.

“That’s right.” Mona said, “With any luck, they’ll be able to protect you just in case any Shadows show up.”

Joker looked at Nezu as he tilted his head in a silent question. With a curt nod to Mona, they explained the bare basics of what the Metaverse was, what Shadows were, and how they would access the Metaverse in the past.

“Hmmm, but something must be sorely wrong, then.” Nezu said, “Without this ‘MetaNav’ and with Mona’s innate ability not working...”

“Yeah,” Mona frowned, “Something’s definitely not right here.”

“Let’s bring in the Attendants and get started with our investigation.” Joker reached up to his neck, where the Velvet Key was tied with a silver chain.

Joker summoned the Velvet Room door and tucked the Key back into his costume, where it hung right over his heart. The soft light of the Velvet Room provided some comfort as all four Attendants joined them.

Lavenza’s expression hardened, “The Metaverse is much stronger here.”

“Where is that stupid false god?” Elizabeth cracked her knuckles with a dark smirk.

“Elizabeth...” Theodore sighed.

“Have patience.” Margaret said serenely, “Joker and Mona deserve the first shots, at least.”

Elizabeth rolled her eyes, “Fine.”

Joker ignored them and walked to the edge of the staircase.

His breath caught as he had forgotten just how huge this place was. The central plaza fountain sparkled in the artificial light, and the surrounding forest was cut through with stone pathways leading to the various zones. Each zone was as large as a city. Hell, some of them were cities, like the downpour and conflagration zones containing natural disasters within domes of their own.

There was a lake with a yacht floating in it.

A whole Mountain and a Landslide zone stretched the left side of the USJ, with the last zone being nothing more than a ruin, a broken pile of rubble that could have been a bustling city. The pure destruction reminded Joker of the horrors from Kamino.

“Just how much money does it take to maintain this place?” La Brava asked, expression slack with shock.

Nezu grinned, “We’re lucky to have many generous sponsors from hero agencies and other anonymous individuals!”

“That doesn’t answer the question!” Spinner cried.

“Merp!” Lady Stubbs joined in.

“Stick together,” Joker’s order cut through the banter, “Lavenza, Mona, we’ll take point. Elizabeth, Theodore, Margaret, protect the others.”

“We’re not helpless.” Mr. Compress said cordially.

“I know you’re not helpless.” Joker faced them, his deep frown and sharp amber eyes leaving no room for argument, “But Shadows cannot be hurt by any normal means. We don’t know if your quirks will even work against them, either. I ordered you to bring gear made from my Personas because it could be your only line of defense if you encounter a Shadow by yourself.”

“We’re taking this so seriously because we don’t want anybody to get hurt.” Mona said as he bounced in place, “Joker and I can’t afford to screw this up.”

“We understand.” Gentle Criminal said, his eyes softening.

“Yeah!” Spinner put his hand on his belt, where one of Mona's old scimitars hung, “We’ll be careful, but just say the word and we’ll have your back!!”

“Merp!!”

Joker smiled as he looked at Mr. Compress, who deflated with a sigh and a firm nodded.

Joker took the first step past the blue arch over the stairs, Mona and Lavenza shadowing him.

Theodore walked behind the rest of the Phantom Thieves as they followed behind, while Margaret and Elizabeth exchanged glances when Nezu rubbed his paws together.

“Did he say that their equipment was made from his Personas?” Stars appeared in Nezu’s black eyes, “But how is that even possible? Does it have something to do with the Velvet Room, I wonder?”

Elizabeth raised her foot to punt Nezu down the long flight of stairs, but Margaret tactfully stepped in front of her and urged Nezu on with a pointed look.

Ten...

Thirty....

Sixty...

Joker lost track of how many stairs they climbed down before they reached the bottom.

“Should we spread out to cover more ground, Trickster?” Ishtar asked as a few others shifted uneasily around the mindscape.

“Go ahead, but be careful. Come back if you see anything dangerous.”

Azure sparks fluttered around Joker as Ishtar, Yatagarasu, Pixie, and Alice seamlessly entered reality. Joker was taken aback. It hadn't been that simple before. There was always a certain amount of concentration he needed to anchor them, but right now it was as easy as breathing or blinking.

The Personas went separate directions; Yatagarasu took off towards the lake, Pixie to the mountain region, Ishtar to the decimated city, and Alice trotted happily towards the Conflagration Zone and disappeared into the foliage.

"Are you okay?" Mona asked as they crept closer to the central fountain, "That was four of them at once. You could only safely summon three before."

Joker checked over himself, "I feel fine. I don't even have a headache."

"Several of your bonds have strengthened considerably in the last few days. That, paired with defeating the Reverse Aeon, has granted you an immense boon of strength." Lavenza said with an elegant nod, "But even so, it would be wise to continue your training and deepen your remaining bonds to grow stronger still."

Joker snorted derisively, "Let's get through today first."

They spread out around the plaza, postures tense and alert. Mona suddenly gasped, stopping in his tracks.

Joker stopped in front of the fountain, frowning, "What's wrong?"

"That Treasure-like feeling I keep getting..." Mona walked full circle around the fountain, craning his neck to and fro, "It's the strongest I've ever felt it right here, but it's still fuzzy, like its being protected by something. I don't see anything, either. Not even a formless cloud before a regular Treasure would manifest."

Joker suddenly remembered Skull's idea of a Palace being protected by a barrier, back when they first tried to get into Shido's Palace. He hoped it wasn't the case here. That just wouldn't be fair at this point.

"Could this 'Treasure' be the fountain?" Nezu asked as the rest cautiously approached.

Mona hopped onto the bottom tier and peered into the water, "I don't think so. I'm not sensing anything special about the fountain itself."

Joker spread his senses to the scattered Persona, "Anything suspicious?"

"This city is empty. I sense no Shadow activity." Ishtar said as she perched on the corner of a ruined building.

Yatagarasu landed on the rim of the yacht's bow, "I do not see anything within the lake, either."

"Nothing over here but lame rocks!" Pixie stated.

"How boring," Alice whined, "This place isn't even on fire..."

"There must be something here. The air feels... wrong. Shifting in a way I cannot explain." Satanael said, "Perhaps our sixth sense will uncover what cannot be seen."

Joker touched the center of his mask as he activated Third Eye-

Joker inhaled sharply.

His whole world was painted blue, but the edges of his vision undulated with kaleidoscopic patterns shimmering with blues and greens, a harmless phenomena common within the Metaverse. Then, something moved above the fountain, creeping like a shadowy tendril in the corner of his vision.

He slowly looked up, not comprehending what he was seeing.

It was as if someone took a knife to fabric, ripping a single thin line that floated mid-air. It was pitch black in the way of a black hole, devouring any light that dared to touch it, with hints of purple around the edges reminiscent to Kurogiri's portals. The bottom tail floated serenely over the top of the fountain, while the top end reached all the way to the USJ's ceiling.

The longer he stared at it, the stronger the chill that overcame his body. It was like peering into a bottomless pit of hopelessness. Something that his mind could barely comprehend.

"Joker, what is it!?" Mona asked when Joker went white as a sheet, "What's wrong!?"

"I... I don't know..."

His other personas returned to him the instant his emotions flared.

Satanael stepped into reality, wings fluttering as he rose into the air. He hovered in front of the thickest part of the anomaly, no wider than the width of Satanael's hand.

"The very fabric of reality has been torn here, hidden from mortal eyes." Satanael slowly reached out to it. Icy pins and needles sprouted on Joker and Satanael's hand when the Persona touched it. Satanael closed his eyes to concentrate, "The Metaverse's presence is leeching through here... but I can't sense its origin through the strange void separating it from us. It's oozing Distortion into this facility like a diseased wound."

"Perhaps it was inflicted when Yaldabaoth first banished the Trickster and the Magician here." Margaret said with a delicate frown, "And has been leaking Distortion into this world since the start of Joker's new journey."

"Hmmm," Nezu rubbed his paws together, "That would coincide with the strange energy readings I've been getting since the USJ attack."

Theodore's eyes narrowed at the place where Satanael touched, "It likely started small, but grew over time as the boundaries between worlds gradually weakened to such an extent."

"Wait!" Satanael's eyes snapped open, and Joker, through his true other self, felt the same strange tangles of energy flitting through the void within. Three bright strings of golden starlight leading deeper into the blackness, vanishing as fast as they had appeared, "I thought... I sensed something else, but whatever it was eludes me now."

Nezu clutched his chin as the gears turned in his mind, while the other Phantom Thieves exchanged glances.

"Satanael, can we do anything from our end?" Elizabeth asked, "Perhaps we can open it and look within?"

Satanael looked at Joker, who nodded.

The Persona forced his hand into the tear, wings tensing as he pushed through. The strange sensation travelled up Joker's arm, fire and ice dancing on his nerves. Nothing happened. Satanael shifted so that he gripped the edges of the black void with both hands, clawed fingers dipping into the darkness. With a strained grunt, he tried pulling it apart.

The sound of breaking glass burst throughout the USJ, white cracks spreading through the air around where Satanael gripped. The USJ shifted. The kaleidoscopic colors of Third Eye changed from blues and greens to a sickly yellow.

The hair on Joker's neck stood on end, and as he looked around, the shadows around the treeline stirred. Lazy and slow as a slumbering dragon.

"Satanael, stop!!" Joker shouted.

Satanael lurched backwards with a flap of his wings, staring at his hands as trails of smoke swirled around his palms before sinking back into the tear. Yellow turned back to blue, the shadows went still, as if falling back into a deep sleep. The white cracks slowly disappeared as the invisible wound sealed itself back together.

“This gate is firmly closed.” Satanael whispered as he lowered himself, his boots hovering inches above the ground beside Joker, “Perhaps, if I were to return to my true size, I could open it by force and see what lies within.”

“Wait, you can do that?” Spinner asked.

Satanael nodded with a small smirk, “Yes. I’ve only adopted this current size as to not hinder the Trickster.”

“That would be unwise.” Lavenza said as she crossed her arms, “Messing with it seems to draw unwanted attention. Forcing it open right now may lead to an attack by Shadows.”

“Or worse yet,” Joker grimaced, “Yaldabaoth himself.”

“Yaldabaoth.” Mona startled, “I wonder...”

“Wonder what?” Joker asked.

“I’ve always sensed a Treasure-like thing that’s being ‘protected’ by something, and that feeling has grown stronger and stronger every time I came to U.A. I don’t think the Treasure is in this world yet.” Mona’s eyes hardened as he stared at Joker, “This is just my gut feeling, but I think I’m sensing Yaldabaoth himself from the other side. What if this sensation’s only grown stronger because he’s grown stronger?”

“The Holy Grail.” Lavenza’s eyes widened, “The Distortion born from the will of the masses... he himself is a Treasure and the Ruler of Mementos.”

“That bastard.” Joker growled under his breath, “He’s been playing with us this whole time, knowing we can’t do anything about it.”

“Would you be ready to fight Yaldabaoth at this moment in time?” Nezu asked, his tone light, but there was an edge to it that Joker didn’t like.

“No.” Joker glared up at the tear, “Not without knowing what would happen if we forced it open. Satanael barely touched it and it almost summoned Shadows. We’re underprepared and...” He turned to Mona, frowning, “We don’t know what would happen to the other worlds if we forced our way. I won’t risk putting them all in danger until we get more information.”

“Multiple worlds.” Nezu whispered to himself, grinning from ear to ear. “How exciting!”

“So what, we’re sitting ducks until Yaldabaoth gets off his arse to do something?” Mr. Compress asked.

“Not necessarily.” They all stared at Nezu as he hopped up onto the fountain next to Mona, “Instead of brute forcing our way through, how about we... coax it? Slowly draw it open without calling Yaldabaoth and his army of Shadows down on us all at once?” Nezu looked at Joker’s chest, where the Velvet Key lay hidden, “... Perhaps it would be easier if we had our own key?”

“You mean the Meta-Nav?” Mona said, ears drooping, “Maybe it would work if we had the keywords, but we’re sunk without them. And the phone broke because the Meta-Nav overloaded it. What would happen if we fixed it and turned it on, and then it drew Yaldabaoth here?”

“We could quarantine it in the Velvet Room.” Margaret suggested. “It would be safest there.”

“That could work. If we open this thing on our terms, attract a lone Shadow or two in the process and not a whole army...” Joker’s eyes widened, "Then we could interrogate it and get information that way. Information about what's happening at home, information about our friends and the other worlds..."

Nezu's beady eyes gained an uncomfortable glint, "And we'll need such evidence to convince the other teachers of your origins. Sharing the truth with them would be easier with undeniable proof."

"... And we do need to tell them." Joker said as guilt swam around his heart, "Especially if we drag hostile forces here and try to access other worlds. We'll need all the help we can get."

"It may be as difficult for them as it was for us." Gentle Criminal sighed, "The more evidence we have, the better."

Spinner scowled, "As long as they don't throw us in a loony bin first."

"But where should we even start?" La Brava asked, "It didn't need the Meta-Nav to act up before, right?"

"I believe it has opened once already." Nezu stated.

"When?" Joker asked.

"Why, during the Red Rain!" Nezu beamed as the others gaped at him, "With this newest information, I believe that the Red Rain was Yaldabaoth finally gaining full access to the other worlds. Perhaps he only had a fraction of this power when he first banished Joker and Mona here."

"Why didn't he attack then?" La Brava asked as she looked at Joker and Mona with a taste of fear, "You've said that he had a whole army of these Shadows."

Joker sobered, "Maybe the first Red Rain was just a test."

Mona's eyes widened, "A test?"

Joker's heart sank as he glowered up at the giant wound, "To see if he could exert the full power of Mementos through this thing. Maybe he's just using this time to muster up his army. If that happens, then we've already lost."

"I don't think all hope is lost." Nezu said, "In fact, this could be an opportunity!"

"Spit it out then." Elizabeth said, glaring at the rat, "What do you intend to do?"

Nezu's grin returned with a vengeance, "How about we beat Yaldabaoth at his own game?"

"How in the world would we do that?" Mona asked, "We can't even touch this thing without drawing attention. We can't take the chance of the whole school being overrun by Shadows by not thinking this through!"

"Quite." Nezu nodded, "In truth, the readings from the Distortions reached their highest peak right before the Red Rain occurred... after a certain event where two students displayed an incredible amount of heightened emotions."

"Nezu, who were they?" Joker asked, "We should keep an eye on them, just in case."

"Bakugo Katsuki and Midoriya Izuku."

"The Tower and the Chariot." Joker muttered, "Two powerful Arcanas."

Nezu's ears flicked, "Indeed. I believe the main cause of their altercation was what happened at Kamino." Joker paled as Nezu's gaze intensified, "Bakugo had been bottling up everything since the disaster, thus leading to such an intense outburst."

Joker cursed under his breath.

“Heightened emotions... Cognition... Distortions...” Mona crossed his arms, brow knotted, “It’s all connected.”

Theodore’s expression grew more concerned, “Powerful emotions can grow into Distortions themselves, if left unchecked.”

“Distortions which then blossom into Palaces.” Lavenza said.

Joker whirled to Mona, but the not-cat shook his head, “I don’t sense any separate Palaces in U.A., and I doubt there are any outside the school if it’s all concentrated here.”

“The Magician is right.” Lavenza said as she put a hand on Joker’s arm, “Palaces shouldn’t form as long as Yaldabaoth doesn’t gain complete control of this world.”

At that, Joker relaxed.

“As for how we’ll begin opening the gate-” Nezu looked at the watch on his wrist, “We’ll be getting a baseline about how emotions of the student body will affect it as a whole.”

“And why’s that?” Joker asked.

Nezu looked up with that signature grin, “Homeroom will start soon, and the teachers are announcing your arrival here. Perfect timing, wouldn’t you say?”

Elizabeth rolled her eyes, “Joker, keep an eye on the gate and let us know if anything changes.”

Joker nodded, and carefully watched.

Hitoshi was used to the whispers and stares at this point.

Here he was, after having said goodbye to his parents in their own little apartment within U.A. walls, walking with his head held high as every single student in the whole school watched him. Hitoshi grit his teeth as the whispers slid over his skin like silk and countless eyes dogged his every footstep.

It was pretty annoying.

But still, his good mood would not be ruined today. Reuniting with his best friend, who totally kicked villain ass and rescued his parents again, was probably the best thing that ever happened to him. Well, second only to finding out he was going to be a big brother.

Rumors and questions spread like wildfire the closer he got to his classroom.

"Where do you think Joker went after the raid?"

"I don't know, maybe the heroes arrested him and threw him in Tartarus."

"Nu uh! I thought Nezu's program prevented Joker from being thrown in jail!"

"Are Shinsou's parents okay? The villains were probably nasty towards them..."

"I heard a rumor that Joker is at U.A."

"What!? If that's true, then why hasn't he shown his face yet!? Or made an announcement on Spotlight!? People are going nuts!"

"The teachers have been acting weird since Friday..."

"Yeah, I mean who locks every student in their dorm for an entire day!? That's so messed up! I was sooooo bored."

"You should totally go ask Shinsou about it! I bet he knows!"

"NO WAY! I-I'm not going to pester Joker's protege! You do it!"

And on and on and on .

He spotted Monoma, along with a few of his 1-B cohorts, following him. They thought they were being sneaky by holding themselves back in the crowd, but their whispers and blatant stares gave them away. Hitoshi stopped dead in the hallway and stared them down. Monoma flinched, sweat visible on his forehead as Hitoshi glared, challenging them.

One of the 1-B boys Hitoshi didn't know the name of whispered something to Monoma, who hesitantly nodded and turned away. Good thing too, because Nejire lurked close by, scaring students away with a too-wide smile and obnoxious questions.

His radiant confidence made the other students scamper out of his path as he bee-lined to his classroom. Hitoshi's classmates went dead silent as he opened the door and went inside, all staring as he went to his desk and sat down.

He leaned back in his chair, stilted conversation returning after a few seconds. He stayed like that until the bell rang and all students rushed to their seats.

The door opened and Cementoss walked in carrying a clipboard. Class 1-C sat on the edge of their seats as he stood at the podium. Cementoss made eye contact with him.

Hitoshi braced himself as Cementoss sighed.

"There are a lot of announcements to be made this morning," Cementoss said, "Please remain calm until I'm finished with everything. You can ask questions afterward."

Hitoshi couldn't help but wonder what his best friend was doing as Cementoss began reading from the clipboard.

Aizawa threw open the door to Class 1-A.

“Alright everyone, get to your-” He blinked when every student was seated, eyes forward and alert, “Good. You’ve finally learned not to waste time.”

His eyes roamed over the students who risked life and limb in the raid just yesterday. He wouldn’t blame them if they needed another day or two to recover, but he was proud that they pushed themselves to attend class today.

Aizawa walked to the podium and dumped his clipboard on it, “Alright, listen up. There’s a lot to go through. First off, the Cultural Festival is coming up.” Excited whispers broke out, but a flash of Aizawa’s quirk silenced them, “The Sports Festival was your time to shine as heroes-in-training, but the Cultural Festival gives other classes the chance to get some of the limelight. Iida, Yaoyorozu-” The pair straightened, “Discuss with the rest of the class and let me know what 1-A will be doing by the end of the week.”

“Yes, sir!” Iida said, chopping his arm.

“Of course, Aizawa-sensei.”

“Any questions so far?”

Kaminari’s arm shot up, “So we can do anything for this festival!?”

“Pretty much, as long as Nezu approves of it.” Aizawa droned.

Asui raised her hand, “When is the festival, kero?”

“Once you know what your class will be doing, you’ll spend the next couple of weeks setting it up while balancing classes and hero training. The Cultural Festival will be at the end of the month, so don’t slack off. It’ll also be open invitation, so any family members, friends, and heroes from across Japan are welcome to come.”

More excited whispers broke out, some randomly throwing out ideas or who they would invite. All settled down when Aizawa cleared his throat, turning to the next page of announcements. Aizawa stared down at it, frowning.

Dead silence spread through the classroom as Aizawa read and re-read the next announcement to himself.

“Aizawa-sensei?” Yaoyorozu frowned, “Is everything alright?”

“Of course.” His clipped tone stated otherwise.

Midoriya sank in his seat, and the others from the raid exchanged knowing glances. Bakugo’s eyes were narrowed as he pinned Aizawa with a glare. Most others kept their mouths shut but wore similar expression of concern.

“What I’m about to announce is being told to each and every class. There will be strict rules to follow on both sides. There will be no exceptions.” The tension skyrocketed as the students put on serious faces, some leaning forward. Aizawa decided to bite the bullet and get it over with, “Yesterday, after the raid you no doubt saw plastered all over the news, Joker and his team surrendered. In other words, they turned themselves in to U.A. They’re here on campus right now.”

“I CALLED IT!” Ashido screeched as the other students exploded with various reactions.

Kaminari jumped out of his seat, “HE’S REALLY HERE!?”

“Oh my gosh, oh my gosh!” Hagakure said, waving her arms wildly.

“I wonder if I can get an autograph!?”

“Are we gonna see his creatures!?”

“I want to fight one!!”

“Sero has a death wish...”

Midoriya sank further in his seat as he exchanged a glance with Todoroki.

Bakugo's eyes went wide and he was surprisingly silent, gripping the edge of his desk with white knuckles.

"Quiet." Aizawa's quirk flared to life, his hair floating around him. Once everyone was seated again, he continued, "As I said, there are rules. First rule, and probably the most important; No student will be allowed to harass Joker or his teammates. Especially since one of them was a past member of the League. They came here with a clean slate, and will be treated as such unless they do something to warrant mistrust or punishment."

Uraraka raised her hand, "Um... which class is Joker being placed in? What will the the other vigilantes do since they're adults?"

"D-don't forget the two cats!" Koji said.

Kirishima beamed, "Aniki is totally ours! Right, sensei!?"

"... I'll get to that." Aizawa grumbled.

He wondered how Nezu was going to tell them about their roles here. Aizawa himself was surprised at first and almost objected, but the rat had a few good reasons and was as stubborn as a mule about it.

"Alright, second rule-"

"-Second rule; Joker's summons will be allowed on school grounds granted he has permission from Nezu. If you see any of his summons out and believe he may be going against this rule, then please ask a staff member. The same goes for the other vigilantes' quirks-"

Amajiki looked at Hado as she eagerly danced in her seat. Stars burst through her eyes while his other classmates were too slack-jawed to react.

“Third rule is similar to the first!!” Present Mic shouted with a blinding grin, “The Phantom Thieves will stay with the rest of the staff at the teacher’s dorms!! I don’t want to see any of you Little Listeners hanging in front of the staff dorm without a good reason, you dig!? Like the first rule, we won’t allow any harassment, but same goes for the other way around too! If any of the former vigilantes try to hurt you in any way, then go to a teacher and we’ll take care of it!”

Present Mic doubted the vigilantes would willingly threaten the students in any way, shape, or form, but it was clear a few kiddos were worried as their tense shoulders relaxed.

Midnight licked her lips as she absorbed the shock, awe, excitement, and slight hints of terror across her homeroom.

“Fourth rule!” She cracked her whip, “Whenever you see one of the vigilantes working alongside a teacher, then you will give them the same respect as you would that teacher. They came here willingly to change their outlook on life, and that takes a lot more guts than most people realize! Discrimination will not be allowed just because of what they might have done in the past!”

Monoma slammed his hands on his desk, “Vlad-Sensei, all I’m asking is that we get first dibs for once! More so because my hero name is Phantom Thief !! I obviously have a special connection with Joker that those losers in 1-A don’t have-”

Vlad King pinched the bridge of his nose as Kendo chopped Monoma’s head.

“Last thing.” Aizawa stated, “Yesterday, Joker revealed that his real name is Amamiya Ren, as ‘Kurusu Akira’ was just an alias he created. Depending on the situation, you will refer to him as either Joker or Amamiya unless he says otherwise. The same goes for the other vigilantes; don’t bother them about their real names unless they’re willing to share them with you first.”

Aizawa took a breath, and looked up to see many pale faces.

“Damn, dude...” Kaminari muttered, “That takes some real good acting skills to use an alias for so long!”

“Language, Kaminari.” Aizawa droned.

“An alias...” Midoriya looked down at his desk, “I wonder why he created one?”

“Think of it this way,” Aizawa said, drawing many eyes to him, “Undercover pros use aliases all the time to protect themselves, as well as their friends and family members. It would be too dangerous to walk into a villain’s den and flaunt your real name.”

“To protect himself and others, huh?” Kirishima bit his lip, “Man, he must’ve been so scared if he had to use an alias up until now!”

“Or brave!” Ashido said, “I can’t even imagine what he must’ve been through to even come up with a fake identity like that.”

Yaoyorozu frowned, “His first appearance was at the USJ. If he never worked with the League of Villains, then I wonder what circumstances landed him there in the first place? Was he... escaping from something?”

The whole class paused at the horrible thought, and looked at Aizawa for an answer.

Aizawa sighed, “I don’t know his full story yet, and you won’t either until Joker is ready to share his past.”

The room stewed in another short bout of silence.

“Aizawa-sensei,” Asui raised her hand, “I understand these rules and why he chose to use an alias, but you still haven’t said what Joker and the other vigilantes will be doing here, kero. I’m assuming Joker will be put in a hero class, since he’s younger?”

“I agree with Monsieur Kirishima!” Aoyama said as he struck a pose with radiant sparkles, “Joker will shine best with someone like Moi!”

“But our class is already full!” Iida shouted as he chopped both arms, “And besides, I believe he is a year or so older than us!”

“Yes, he is older than most first years.” Aizawa shuffled his papers as hope died on a few of his students’ faces, “However, he’ll still be included in a classroom setting. Joker and his team will be-”

“Any changes?” Nezu asked after several minutes in silence.

The gate rippled, and Joker felt the oppressive forces grow stronger for a split second, but everything went back to normal. As normal as a giant gateway splitting reality could get, anyway.

“Not really.” Joker frowned as he let Third Eye fade, letting the horrifying thing disappear from view, “It wasn’t enough to make any significant difference.”

“I see.” Nezu hummed.

“Is it the quality or quantity of emotions that matter most, I wonder?” Gentle Criminal mused, “There are hundreds of students at the school and that didn’t affect it in the slightest.”

“The key to first Red Rain could have been extreme quality,” Nezu flicked his tail back and forth, smiling at Joker, “But my plan will utilize vast quantity!”

Joker raised a brow, “How? If hundreds of students didn’t make it budge, then...?”

“U.A.’s Cultural Festival is coming up! Think of this; All students in high spirits as they perform with their classmates, and of the hundreds, no thousands, of people who would come for the festivities!” Nezu looked up and down at Joker, “Especialy if a star vigilante and his Personas put on a spectacular performance of their own!”

“You want him to WHAT!?” Mona looked as if he was a hair’s breadth from shoving Nezu into the fountain.

“We are not show animals to be paraded around!” Satanael’s wings trembled, “Nor should we risk so many innocent lives on a mere whim!”

Joker opened and closed his mouth as a tide of uncertainty washed over the mindscape, fueled by Satanael’s ire.

“Think of it this way,” Nezu continued, “If we were to use this vast quantity of emotional energy as a cover, we may be able to interact more directly with this anomaly. Perhaps we could use the Meta-Nav to open it. Silently crack it open just a hair, rather than kick it down with force.”

Joker looked between the Attendants, “Would that work?”

“... You’re not seriously considering this?” La Brava asked, eyes widened.

“Yeah!” Spinner threw his arms in the air, “That’s a lot of people we’d be putting in danger!”

“Not to mention trying to manipulate thousands of people doesn’t sit well with me...” Gentle Criminal murmured.

“Security would be greatly improved, and I plan on inviting Miruko, Hawks, and dozens of agencies into the mix to help out.” Nezu peered into Joker’s eyes, “And it is a known fact that Personas like Kohryu can change the weather. If another ‘Red Rain’ does occur, then we can disguise it as one of his abilities.”

“It would put Joker in the spotlight,” Mr. Compress ran a finger under his hat, “And if his performance is half as inspirational as he is normally day to day, then it could stir up an immense amount of emotional energy. It’s just what we need for a cover.”

Joker felt his face heat up as the Attendants traded glances.

“We may not have any other choice.” Margaret said after a moment of thought, “If there’s a slim chance that this may work, then we must take it.”

Theodore nodded, “It was a one way trip from our world to here. If we use this prime opportunity... It could go far in reaching our ultimate goal.”

Lavenza stared up at the invisible gateway, “If we study how Yaldabaoth controls the fabric of these realities without drawing notice - perhaps, even learn to wield it ourselves...” She faced Joker, eyes set in determination, “Then we may be able to reach out to the other worlds in which your teammates are trapped, Trickster.”

“Without tipping Yaldabaoth off. He doesn’t seem to know that we’re here, otherwise he would’ve done something already.” Elizabeth added with a sharp smirk, “And after we can plan our counter attack on the dumb rust bucket. He’ll be in for a Last Surprise.”

Joker and Mona exchanged wide-eyed glances, similar wells of hope rising in their hearts.

“Assuming, of course, that this all works in our favor.” Gentle Criminal whispered, “Our plans have not always gone accordingly.”

Joker glanced at Nezu.

“The way I see it, we have three options.” Nezu held up his paw, lifting one finger at a time, “One; Sit around and do nothing until Yaldabaoth attacks in full force, ultimately leading to our end and Yaldabaoth’s victory. Two; Brute force our way through the gate now, and risk the same thing. Three; Manipulate the masses on U.A. grounds as cover, use the Meta-Nav to crack it open, possibly trigger another Red Rain and attracting a few Shadows to interrogate. I believe we all know which one to choose.”

Mona crossed his arms and looked at Joker, “He has a point, you know. We need a plan of action first, time to prepare and lay down the trap.”

Joker shrugged, “We don’t really have a choice. Let’s do it.”

“Then its settled. We have around three weeks to prepare.” Nezu clapped his paws together, “I suggest we return to my office and hammer out a solid plan from here on out. We’ll also have to discuss your new positions at the school as wards of my Vigilante Program!”

“Then... I guess we’re done here for now.” Mona said halfheartedly.

Joker pursed his lips. Satanael said nothing as he returned to the mindscape, stewing in a sour cocktail of emotions.

“There’s actually one more thing I want to do.” Joker shoved his hands in his pockets as Nezu raised a brow at him, “Retrace our footsteps of the USJ attack, starting with the Squall Zone. Mona and Lavenza will come with me.”

“... Very well.” Nezu said, “Shall the rest of us wait here, then?”

He nodded. They separated as Joker turned to the blue dome painted with rain clouds, Mona and Lavenza trailing behind him. The giant door, the one he remembers wrenching open in their initial escape, had been rebuilt, and was already open.

True to Thirteen's word, the dome was inactive, though the 'sky' was dark and broody and there were puddles of water scattered over the damp pavement. No fresh scent of rain graced them, rather it was stale and musty. Thick humidity pressed down on them, accompanied by the drip drip of raindrops on concrete.

Mona shivered as they walked through the empty streets, "This place sure brings back memories."

"Several fake cities specifically made to train children..." Lavenza's said as they passed the empty buildings and into a small maze of alleys, "This world continues to boggle the mind in ways I never imagined."

Joker snorted, "And there are still whole gyms and other facilities like this all across the school grounds. Can you even imagine trying to infiltrate a Palace this big? I thought a space station or a super sized yacht was too much."

Mona groaned, "It was bad enough that one school was turned into a perverted castle. I don't want to do another Palace at a school this large."

"What do you think U.A. would be? An amusement park, maybe?" Joker said, "That's what I thought this place was when we first arrived. Otherwise I don't have a clue on what any Keywords would be for the Nav."

"... Let's not jinx it." Mona said as they came to a stop in an uncannily familiar alley. Mona crossed his arms as Joker knelt and ran a gloved hand on the pavement, "This was where I woke up in my other form and saw you laying there, Joker. I was so terrified and confused. I couldn't even hear Mercurius and I was pretty much powerless until after we got captured."

Lavenza looked downtrodden.

Mona shivered, “Mercurius says he feels bad for not being there at the start.”

“It’s not his fault. Being thrown into a new Sea Of Souls weakened your Personas greatly, for a time.” Lavenza put an arm around Joker’s shoulder, the other around Mona, “Despite the unfair trials you were put through, you did exceptionally well. You found new strength to fuel you, bringing you higher than ever before. I’m so proud of you both.”

Joker’s eyes watered as his face warmed with a genuine smile, “Thanks, Lavenza.”

Mona sputtered, but didn’t resist. Joker slowly raised his arms and hugged back, holding Lavenza and Mona close to him. The three of them spent several seconds within each other’s arms, hesitant to let go even within the solitude of a damp alley.

Lavenza gave one last squeeze before they separated. She cleared her throat and turned her head away, masking the action of wiping watery eyes by fixing her butterfly headband.

“Why did you want to come here, Joker?” Mona asked softly, though his eyes were wet as if he held back tears.

“To see how far we’ve come.” He shrugged, “I wanted to revisit where we started in this world. Maybe we’ll end our journey here at the USJ, too. So much has happened between now and when we first woke up here.”

“Yeah,” Mona looked up and down the alley, “It’s funny, so much time has passed and yet it feels like just yesterday.”

Joker rubbed his neck, “... Let’s get back before we worry the others.”

Joker walked the same path they took at the very start of their second journey, imagining Dark Shadow and Tokoyami chasing them across the rooftops, of his wild desperation as he tried to open the door. Satanael grimaced when Joker tread over the spot where his previous self defended against Dark Shadow with the last of his strength.

The others watched them as they emerged into the plaza, where Joker suddenly stopped in his tracks. He looked around the facility.

He first summoned Seth here, healed Aizawa, got sucker punched by All Might. Met Midoriya, Asui, and Mineta for the very first time. Cerberus shivered with phantom pains from when Todoroki unknowingly exploited Cerberus' fatal weakness to ice. Joker looked down at his feet, then to the entrance all the way at the top of the staircase.

He had stood right here when Snipe's bullet went through his shoulder. His blood had long been cleaned from these stones, but the first splatter of bloodshed would always be an invisible stain. Everything afterward was a hazy blur until he pulled himself together in that interrogation room.

The rest, as they say, is history.

Joker turned fully towards the stairs, "Let's go."

The group solemnly followed with Joker's change in mood, climbing up the steps in silence. When Joker was about to leave, however, Margaret stopped him by grabbing his shoulder.

"We Attendants need a quick word with Joker and the Magician." She said as she looked over the others, "The rest of you please wait outside."

Nezu blinked, the gears cranking away in his mind as he wanted to ask why, but Mr. Compress pushed everyone on.

"We'll be waiting on the bus." Mr. Compress said, wagging a finger.

They visibly relaxed when they stepped out of the USJ, and Joker and Mona watched them board the bus as the Attendants stood behind them.

“What is it, Margaret?” Joker asked when they were alone.

“We can permanently anchor a Velvet Room door here.” Margaret said.

“We’ll keep watch over this place from here onwards.” Theodore said with a nod, “Just in case.”

Lavenza smiled, “You’ll be able to come through this specific Velvet Room door, even from another in a different location.”

“Wait,” Joker’s eyes went wide, “We could teleport between the doors this whole time!?”

“No, you dork,” Elizabeth playfully poked Joker on the forehead, “Not back in our world, as the rules of reality there were a lot more solid. But here...” She waved her hands around the USJ, “They are lax because the boundaries are so weak. I rather enjoy being able to cheat for once.”

“Oh. Cool.”

“Each Attendant can anchor a single permanent gate,” Margaret said as the door appeared behind her, just out of view of the main entrance, “It may be wise to place the other three in strategic locations, such as your dorm room or within the main school building.”

“And don’t worry,” Theodore smiled as if sensing Joker’s sudden concern, “We won’t allow the door to appear for students or any teachers. Not just anybody will be able to waltz into the Velvet Room unchecked.”

“We should return before your teammates get impatient,” Lavenza said as the door opened, “See you soon, Trickster.”

Theodore went in first, followed by Lavenza and Margaret.

Elizabeth snickered, “Oh, and we’ll be working you extra hard now that our goal is in sight! I’ll kick your ass if you think you can slack off from your training!”

Elizabeth pranced into the Velvet Room as Joker winced. The door firmly shut, half fading into a ghostly apparition of itself, but it was still there.

“... They’re gonna kill me, aren’t they.”

Mona sighed, “Let’s just go.”

“Hey, that’s not an answer!”

Joker sulked, but followed Mona outside. As expected, their Thief Outfits disappeared the moment they stepped out of the USJ, dull cinders floating to the ground around their feet.

Morgana jumped onto his shoulder as the others watched from the bus window.

“Is everything alright?” Nezu asked when they boarded, sitting cross legged in one of the front seats, “The others...?”

“Everything’s fine. They went back for now.”

The Ectoplasm clone and Thirteen exchanged obvious looks of confusion as Ren plopped down between Spinner and Thirteen.

With a wave of Nezu’s paw, the Ectoplasm clone started the bus and they began the trip back to the main school building.

Ren leaned against the window, watching as the USJ faded into the distance.

'You've been Christmas Caroled, bitch!' is my new favorite line from a holiday movie.

So yeah, we do have a little set-up to do before they act on their plan, but there will be plenty of character interactions in between, from warm and fuzzy to very intense and just about everything in between. Shite's about to get real now that we're down to the wire in term of story. It's going to be fun :)

Erosion - January 21st

Talk - February 4th

Erosion

Chapter 85: Erosion

Morgana apparently had enough tomfoolery, and opened his mouth to berate the rat-

When Nezu threw up his arms, the tea flying into the air only to land back into the cup with a small splash. Not a drop was spilled... somehow.

I find it funny that most everyone thought that Akiren is doing some sort of song and dance routine for the Cultural Festival. Considering that's literally exactly what Class 1-A is doing(with really no incentive to change it on top of me pretending that the Persona dancing games never existed) I'm not going to go down that route with Joker.

No, I have something very different in mind :)

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

Fanart!!

DANESHIRO NOOO

"I can't believe he's still here." Ren said as he held Admiral Feesh in front of him, smiling at his bow tie.

"Why, of course!" Nezu beamed from his desk, "I consider it a gift, after all!"

Mr. Compress made himself comfortable on one of the couches, studying Nezu's office with a keen eye, "That event is practically cemented in history. Heroes, completely fooled by the genius red herring of a new rising star of vigilantism."

"Totally!" Spinner cackled as he plopped himself down next to Mr. Compress, "That red herring is what inspired me to start saving people on my own! If it wasn't for that.... I would've chosen Stain's ideology over Joker's, probably would've joined the League too. I'm so glad I didn't!"

"Merp!"

"Oh, yeah! I wouldn't have found Lady Stubbs either!!" Spinner nuzzled her as she purred in his arms.

"Spinner..." Morgana whispered from Ren's shoulder, the lizard man smiled at the awe in Morgana's voice.

"It was surprisingly simple to throw off the signal." La Brava raised her chin in pride, "Seeing heroes covered in glitter was totally worth it."

Nezu chuckled, "Don't mention glitter around Tsukauchi or Aizawa. They still have nightmares about it!"

"No regrets." La Brava deadpanned.

"Indeed! Now, before we get down to business, would anyone like a cup of tea?"

Ren set Admiral Feesh in the chair in front of Nezu's desk, then sat down in the other one next to it. Morgana naturally climbed down from Ren's shoulder and settled in his lap.

"Which tea do you prefer, Nezu?" Gentle Criminal said with a bright gleam to his eyes.

“Usually Oolong or Ginseng, but I do have a wide variety stored for any occasion!”

“Would you happen to have Golden Tips Imperial, by any chance?”

“Oho! I do, but I’ve never had the pleasure of brewing any for myself.”

Gentle Criminal gestured to the tea set on the table against the wall, “May I?”

“But of course! I’ll always oblige a fellow tea enthusiast! I store the extra tea in the cupboard next to the table.”

Ren exchanged an amused glance between the rest of his team. Nezu cleared his throat while the delicate clinks of porcelain and the familiar soft aromas graced Nezu’s office.

“I suppose we should get the easiest thing out of the way.” Nezu said as he reached into one of his desk drawers and pulled out a box, which he set out on his desk.

Ren raised a brow when Nezu opened it, leaning forward to get a glimpse inside, “Phones?”

“How else would we keep in touch? U.A. is rather large, after all.” Nezu nodded as he plucked one out and held it up, “Each of you will get one.”

La Brava tilted her head, “I thought I couldn’t request any tech of my own?”

“Without supervision .” Nezu clarified as he waved it back and forth, “These phones are programmed by yours truly, with the latest apps and every convenience of modern technology! I’ve already added the contacts of each staff member, as well as each of your new numbers between one another. You can add new contacts at your discretion!”

“What about my original phone with the MetaNav?” Ren asked.

Nezu frowned, “The way I see it, that phone is an important tool to our predicament, not one for pleasure. I’ll email Power Loader about repairs for it, but I trust you to be responsible for keeping it quarantined in the Velvet Room until its needed. As you said, there are multiple worlds at stake and we can’t afford to be careless. Are these terms suitable for you, Amamiya?”

Ren firmly nodded.

“Uh, these phones look nice and all, but why are you giving them to us so easily?” Spinner said.

“Yes,” Mr. Compress clutched his masked chin, “That’s a lot of freedom for vigilantes fresh into this program. Surely there’s a catch.”

“They’ll be heavily monitored by myself and other staff members. We’ll be immediately notified of any illegal tampering.” Nezu’s beady eyes peered into Ren’s silver and gold, “I am showing a lot of trust because I’m expecting it in return. Remember this privilege can just as easily be taken away.”

“The leash is slack, but it is still a leash nonetheless....” Vasuki reiterated.

Ren met Nezu’s grim seriousness with a determined mask of his own, “I promise we won’t abuse them.” He stated before turning to look at his teammates, “Isn’t that right, everyone?”

A sudden realization flickered between the others. If they broke this promise cemented by their Leader, then he would probably get the blame, or possibly punishment before the phones would be taken from them.

La Brava nodded, “Alright, already. You don’t have to be so serious.”

“Well, I for one, can agree that these amenities are a lot better than what we would get in prison.” Mr. Compress said jovially.

“Yeah!” Spinner grinned at Lady Stubbs, “I hope you don’t mind if I fill mine up with pictures of Lady Stubbs!”

“Merp!”

Ren gave Morgana a similar look, the not-cat accepting his fate by rolling his eyes.

Nezu handed the first phone to Ren, with one extra to give to Kaito later. The others came around to the desk to get theirs, before retreating to their various seats around the office to check them out. Ren immediately made a chatroom and sent a cat emoji, grinning when multiple pings rang out.

“Really, Ren?” Mr. Compress said in exasperation, “You might as well have just thrown Mona right at us.”

“Hey!”

At that moment, Gentle Criminal served the Golden Tips Imperial tea.

Nezu took a sip of the golden liquid, his tail waving, “Hmm! I can see why you enjoy this tea! Subtle, yet complex and delicate at the same time. It’s a shame I’ve never tried it until now.”

“Thank you.” Gentle Criminal beamed as he joined La Brava on the couch opposite to Spinner and Mr. Compress, “It’s always a pleasure to watch others enjoy your hard work.”

Mr. Compress looked into his cup, refusing to take off his mask to enjoy it while the others nursed theirs.

Nezu gently swirled his teacup, “Well, I suppose we can’t doddle on the next topic: Your roles here at U.A.!”

Ren's hand tightened around his cup. The others, sans Mr. Compress, stopped drinking to stare at him. Morgana sharply flicked his tail as Nezu remained silent for several moments more, a grin breaking through his facade. The tension in the room could be sliced and served on a platter as an additional refreshment with Gentle Criminal's tea.

Morgana apparently had enough tomfoolery, and opened his mouth to berate the rat-

When Nezu threw up his arms, the tea flying into the air only to land back into the cup with a small splash. Not a drop was spilled... somehow.

"Teacher's Assistants!!"

Mr. Compress facepalmed as Ren's eyes widened.

"Teacher's Assistants?" La Brava raised a brow, "Not what I was expecting."

"What the heck are we supposed to do?" Spinner said, his jaw slack, "I don't have any experience as a teacher!"

"I am not going to teach a bunch of hero brats." Mr. Compress growled.

Nezu beamed, "Well, of course not. That's why you'll simply be assistants, and be properly trained to fit the role. Of course, since you're in my Vigilante Program, there will be additional lessons with hero laws, morals, and other such things humans hold in high regard!"

Gentle Criminal cleared his throat, "So, are we all assigned to certain teachers, or is it random?"

"Certain teachers, though there will be no problems switching things up when needed. I was originally going to do aptitude tests for each of you, but I've gotten a good grasp on your personalities already." Nezu nodded to Gentle Criminal, "With your inherent kindness and ability to brew calming teas, you'll be assigned to Hound Dog to help with students who seek his counseling. Spinner will switch between Power Loader and Snipe because of his fondness for weapons and his technical ability. Mr. Compress, with your vast knowledge of linguistics, will aid Cementoss and Present Mic in their respective classes!"

Ren could feel Mr. Compress scowl under his mask, his teacup groaning dangerously in his grasp. Gentle Criminal and Spinner exchanged wide-eyed glances.

"La Brava will aid Midnight, Ectoplasm, or Thirteen."

Ren straightened when Nezu's eyes landed on him last. They entered a long staring contest, the curiosity of his Personas bubbling within his mind. Morgana squinted after another bout of silence.

"You, however, are a special case, Amamiya."

"How so?" Ren asked.

"You are the Leader of the Phantom Thieves, the infamous vigilante who stole the heart of the whole country, a 'Jack of All Trades' in terms of abilities. But it cannot be overlooked that you are also a minor." Nezu set his teacup down and laced his paws together, "With that in mind, while being an assistant to the Hero Course, or trading off with other teachers when needed, you will also be my personal student!"

Ren's jaw dropped as the others held similar expressions.

Nezu's smile turned genuine, "Despite your unusual circumstances, I wish to continue your education as much as possible. Have you studied at all since you arrived in this world?"

“I... well...” Ren scratched the back of his neck, “Mona and I looked up the basics of what happened at the dawn of Quirks, but nothing else.”

Morgana scoffed, “Continuing school wasn’t in our agenda considering we got thrown across space and time.”

“Of course.” Nezu relented, “I’m not blaming you for your unusual circumstances.”

“I forged some graduation certificates for homeschooling.” La Brava said, “Just so nobody would come after him while he searched for a job.”

Nezu hummed, “Ah, but forged certificates will do you no good once you return home, yes?”

Ren and Morgana winced.

“I... guess he has a point?” Morgana said.

“What do you have in mind?” Ren asked.

“Simple!” Nezu grinned that same terrifying grin, “I’ll have you do tests over the next few days to get a grasp of where you are academically, and make my own personalized curriculum for you from there. After the Cultural Festival is over with and we enter the next stage of our plan, you’ll spend your mornings with me, have an hour and a half for free time and lunch, then your afternoons will be scheduled for your Teacher’s Assistant duties until the end of the school day! After that, you may do as you please around campus or at the USJ if needed, given that proper permissions have been granted.”

“Tests. Great.” Ren muttered, “It’ll take a bit to get back into the swing of schoolwork.”

“What about Kaito?” Spinner asked. He shoved his hands under Lady Stubbs forearms and held her in the air, “And Lady Stubbs and Morgana! They cant help teach a class!”

“Merp!”

“Hey, I’m fine with teaching people thank you very much!” Morgana griped, “Who do you think taught Joker about the Metaverse in the first place!?”

“We discussed it before the Shie Hassaikai raid.” Nezu smiled softly, “He offered to be Eri’s main caretaker along with the other staff members. She’ll also get a personalized curriculum to begin her education and have sessions with Aizawa to help control her quirk. Mona and Lady Stubbs will have to be with a teacher or one of you during school hours. As for the rest of you, we’ll begin your TA training first thing tomorrow.”

“So early?” Gentle Criminal traced his facial hair with a gloved hand, “That’s not too soon, is it?”

“The earlier we start, the easier it will be for the students to get used to your presence here. The last thing I want, especially for Amamiya and Mona, is to be mobbed by curious students due to surprise appearances. I want this to be as easy as can be for everyone.” Nezu pleasantly smiled, “Also know that I spread you evenly among the teachers because I want mutual trust gained on all sides.”

“And the Attendants?” Ren asked, “I don’t think Elizabeth would enjoy being around the students... without scarring them too much.”

Mr. Compress chuckled, “That would be entertaining to watch.”

“I’ll leave them to your discretion, Amamiya. The teachers were rather vocal in emails demanding an explanation about Lavenza’s ‘disappearance’ last night.” Nezu stared at Ren, his head tilting, “Though I suppose they’ll guard the USJ?”

“Yeah, in case Yaldabaoth tries something before we’re ready.” Ren frowned, “But with that said... I’m wondering why you haven’t asked for our full story yet, Nezu. You somehow put the pieces together about us being from a different world, saw the Velvet Room for yourself, along with everything that happened on our visit to the USJ.”

“I was honestly expecting you to interrogate us.” Morgana said, wrinkling his nose.

“Yes, I’ve had ample time to come to terms with it since the Kamino incident.” Nezu rested his chin on his still laced paws as flickers of surprise went through the iconic pair, “But I’d rather hear your full story at the same time as the rest of the heroes who’ll be in the know. Only explaining it once will be easier for all parties.”

“I suppose your plan for Joker during the Cultural Festival will lead up to that?” Mr. Compress asked with a wave of his gloved hand.

“Indeed!” Nezu looked around the room, eyes landing on each of the Phantom Thieves before locking onto Ren once more, “You’ve been to a Cultural Festival before, correct?”

Ren nodded, “We’ve had one at my school a few months before Yaldabaoth banished us here.”

“Excellent! Do you think you could come up with some sort of act, separate from the rest of the classes?”

Ren turned his thoughts inward.

“I still don’t like the idea.” Satanael glowered.

“Oh come on, sour puss!” Pixie cackled, “It could be fun!!”

“I’ll have to be present, in case we trigger another Red Rain by accident.” Kohryu hummed, “Which means no normal building could contain us. Unless its of gargantuan size.”

Alice sourly fidgeted with the hem of her dress, "I'm sure the rat Devil will do anything to make it happen."

"And U.A. has more than enough space and resources to go around," Gabriel said cordially, "I believe we can pull off something spectacular no matter the venue. We just need to come up with a plan and practice accordingly."

Satanael scowled.

Byakko huffed chilled air towards Satanael, "Come now, Demon Dad Of Doom, it would be in the spirit of the Phantom Thieves and your past self to blow mere mortals away with a jaw dropping performance. Combining our skills into such a show will be child's play."

Cu Chulainn smirked, "And we could use it as a sort of training, utilizing all of our skills at once to come up with any number of combo attacks for Shadows."

"How-hee exciting-ho!" Black Frost cackled.

Satanael sighed, long and drawn out, "Fine. Trickster, simply request ample space somewhere and we'll... figure something out."

Ren stated as such to Nezu.

"Consider it done!"

"But what would we do when Joker is performing?" Mr. Compress said, "Surely you don't expect us to sit on the sidelines?"

Ren frowned, "Maybe La Brava and Gentle Criminal could do a live-stream showing off the festival." He looked at Spinner and Mr. Compress, "You two could back up the Attendants at the USJ."

"I'll station teachers and trusted heroes like Hawks and Miruko there as well. It'll add more vital witnesses for our case." Nezu hummed when Ren frowned, "That is, of course, if you have the spare armaments? You stated before that quirks may not be viable against Shadows, but weapons and armor made of your Personas are.”

Ren leaned back in his chair, mentally going over the list of meager supplies.

“I wouldn’t have enough as is.” Ren looked at Mr. Compress. The man crossed his legs and tilted his head, as if knowing where the boy was going as he turned back to Nezu, “Making weapons and armor would be costly. I can summon my Personas back from the Compendium Lavenza carries, but they’re not free. We’re talking hundreds of thousands of yen to make sure the everyone’s properly armed and ready. There’s the possibility of me getting stronger Personas, too. I’d rather have a full stock and have everyone protected from Shadows in one go.”

Unknown to the rest of them, Mr. Compress held a devious smirk under his mask. Extorting the top hero school for free gear and Persona Fusion, while saving themselves money for their eventual escape? He couldn’t help the swell of pride in his heart.

“I see.” Nezu’s eyes flicked to his computer, “I can allocate resources for our war fund. After all, if there’s any possibility that we have to face Yaldabaoth and his army of Shadows in the future, I would rather be as prepared as possible.”

“Sounds like a done deal.” Ren said with a grin.

“I agree. With this, it seems we have the makings of a plan for the USJ.” Nezu said, nodding, “Also there’s something else you may have neglected to account for.”

Ren stiffened, “What?”

Nezu shook his head, “Like I said before, you’ve practically stolen the hearts of countless individuals in this country. What do you think will happen when you and Mona suddenly disappear without a trace?”

The pair winced.

Gentle Criminal hummed, "It's not like we can come out and say 'Joker and Mona are from a different world!' Not many people would believe something so outlandish unless they see it for themselves. Announcing that there's a giant wormhole in the USJ would simply result in madness, too."

"And since Ren is the only one who can see it, his sanity would be thrown into question." Mr. Compress said.

Ren sulked.

"True." Nezu stated, "Allowing the masses to casually go to the USJ is not feasible even without these unusual circumstances."

"Then what do you suggest?" La Brava asked as she frowned at Morgana and Ren, "We'll be lucky if the rest of the teachers even believe us, let alone all of Japan!"

"Maybe we could do something with Cognition." Morgana said.

"Oh?" Nezu's ears perked forward, "How would Cognition play a part in all this?"

Ren and Morgana nodded to one another before Ren spoke first, "My Personas have continuously grown stronger whenever they appeared in the news. Think of it as them gaining strength over the time they've spent in the public's collective unconscious, it's why I could summon Satanael and every other Persona during Kamino. We tested it with Morgana's bus form to confirm that theory."

"I couldn't turn into a bus before Ren said something with cats and buses on Spotlight, and then after that post I could do it again as if we were back in the Metaverse." Morgana snickered as Nezu's eyes sparkled, "Maybe we could say Ren and I will just... retire and go home after a while at U.A. Not tell the masses the full truth, but put the idea out there that we won't be around forever."

“Oh! We could do another live interview.” La Brava suggested.

Nezu’s chair creaked as he sat back, grinning, “There’s one person with whom you’ve befriended in the news that would like an update on your current status. He could help us in that regard.”

Ren blinked before a cold pang of regret spread through his chest.

“Taneo .” He facepalmed, “I forgot about him when hearing about the Metaverse appearing here. Then everything with Risumi and Ayumu being taken and the raid...”

It hadn’t been that long since the call with Taneo, but so much has happened it had felt like a lifetime.

“I’m sure he’d love to hear from you again.” Nezu chuckled, “As for this Cognition idea, we could set something up with Taneo and Present Mic sometime after the Cultural Festival. But before any of that, we need to announce your arrival here to the wider public! Perhaps,” Nezu glanced at Ren’s new phone, “A photo for Spotlight will suffice? I’ll make the official statement afterwards.”

“Can Mona and I be in costume for it?”

Nezu smirked, “By all means! Perhaps a few of your Personas can join in as well!”

“Maybe we should summon Lavenza too.” Morgana said, “It could be a good opportunity to test whether or not Cognition outside U.A. will have any affect on the USJ. We need to gauge how different this situation is compared to Kamino.”

Ren nodded in agreement.

“I can correlate with her from readings on my computer.” Nezu said, grinning.

The excitement was palpable as the others got to their feet, and Joker and Mona donned their Thief Outfits in swirling blue fire.

Nighteye had been swamped in work since the Yakuza Raid.

Being specialized in networking and intelligence gathering, his team was tasked with making sure nobody accidentally let something slip to the ravenous media. Prime examples being; Shinsou Ayumu being brought back from the dead, Dabi being Endeavor's first born son, and the true leader of the Yakuza being discovered in a heavily fortified room at the deepest part of the complex.

The real leader was in a coma and currently undergoing testing in an undisclosed hospital. Despite this, many people in the know had the same idea. They never stated it outright, but Nighteye could see the subtle requests in reports and off handed comments.

They wanted Joker to heal him.

Personally, Nighteye didn't see a point. Being the leader of a Yakuza group would land the older man in prison for the rest of his life. The other side of the coin was that Joker was at U.A. now, and should not be a part of this anymore than he already has been. To be stuck in a coma or spend the rest of his life in prison...

Either side of the argument was just too horrible to be placed on the shoulders of a teenager.

Nezu agreed, stating over email that it would be best for Joker to stay within U.A.'s walls for the time being.

Joker...

The ultimate Anomaly: An obscenely powerful vigilante that beat a two centuries old villain, one who could summon typhoons and tornadoes at will, generate his own meteor shower as a Demon Lord descended from the heavens. Yet he had the kindness to heal the injured and stand up for the abused. Someone who fought to the bitter end. One who stood strong in the face of Fate, smiling as he ripped out the foundations of reality and rewrote them. But at the heart of it all was a scarred teenager, one who ultimately broke down and passed out in Lavenza's arms after the fight was over.

This Anomaly confused him, yes, but...

His heart had softened after the raid. Perhaps he had misjudged the vigilante just by his attitude or the shock of his own quirk malfunctioning whenever Joker was involved with something.

Nighteye leaned back in his chair, lifting his glasses to rub his eyes as a migraine threatened to form. He internally groaned when there was a knock at the door.

"Come in."

Bubble Girl entered his office, holding a platter with tea and snacks. She approached and set them on his desk, eyeing him carefully.

"You should take a break, Sir."

"I will when the work is done."

"Nu uh, you've been working nonstop for days!" Bubble Girl threw up her hands, "Take a break. Eat something . Or I will sic Centipeder on you! If that doesn't work, then I'll summon Lemillion's puppy dog eyes for the ultimate attack!"

Nighteye snorted, but a smile broke through his exhaustion, "And here I thought you were the sidekick."

She brightened when he pushed his keyboard away and reached for the cup of tea. That was, until his phone rang. She puffed up her cheeks and was about to protest when he reached for it.

"It's Mirio."

Bubble Girl shamelessly leaned closer to listen in.

"Shouldn't you be in class?" Nighteye said in lieu of a greeting.

"There's a few minutes before the next class, Sir! I just thought I'd call you quick to tell you something."

"Is everything alright?"

"Yes! At least... I think so?" After a short pause, Mirio sighed, "The teachers announced that Joker and his crew are at U.A. during homeroom."

"How did that go?"

"The reactions so far have been pretty crazy. It's like the whole school is buzzing over the news! People are talking about it nonstop and the teachers look like they're on high alert. But that's not all! Apparently Joker himself won't be placed in the hero course or anything, he'll actually be a Teacher's Assistant!"

"He what ?" Nighteye gaped, "That's... an interesting development. I wonder what Nezu is thinking, making a teenage vigilante a TA."

"I don't know, but the rest of his team will be Teacher's Assistants too."

"... I see. Have you been able to see them?"

"Nope! Nobody has yet, but I bet it's only a matter of time before they-"

A simultaneous ping came from not only Nighteye's computer, but Bubble Girl's phone and, amused that he could actually hear it, several dozen chimes from Mirio's side. Nighteye tucked his phone between his neck and shoulder and clicked on a Spotlight notification from Joker .

Bubble Girl squealed at her phone.

It was a picture in Nezu's office; Joker and Mona(in his 'Chibi' form) posed together with devilish grins. The rest of the thieves were fanned out around them, either falling into dramatic poses like Spinner or La Brava, or relaxing on a couch and looking dignified like Mr. Compress and Gentle Criminal. Nezu sat at his desk, proudly holding up the Red Herring plush from the live interview incident.

Other fantastical figures were scattered throughout the office.

Cerberus and Byakko stood on either side of Joker, showing off their fanged grins, their glacial and fiery gold eyes peering into Nighteye's soul.

Mercurius held a pile of books in his arms near the back bookshelf, looking unabashed at holding a store of knowledge.

Satanael crouched in the corner beside the floor to ceiling windows, his wings sweeping around the room like great black sails, bright sunlight painting him in harsh contrast to his dark color scheme. Yatagarasu perched on one of his horns, head tilted at the camera.

Lavenza, of all people, sat upon Satanael's shoulder, looking as delicate as a flower as she read the Compendium that was a third of her size. Satanael's eyes were soft as his gaze was focused on her.

At the top was a simple phrase: Mona and I safely arrived at U.A. with our team! Hee Ho!!

A hundred startled responses flooded in. Some took Mona's strange appearance in stride... others didn't. More than a few questioned who Lavenza was. Some comments, though few and far in between, were upset that Joker wasn't going to be put on trial for his crimes. Several variations of 'Hee Ho!' spread like wildfire. Hawks and Miruko immediately shared it, both expressing obvious pride and way too many exclamation points for any sane person.

Unexpectedly, another post appeared seconds later with the caption: First attempt didn't go so well....

Another image.

It was a weird smudge of white, gold, and black. It appears Cerberus charged forward like an excited puppy, capturing a too-close-for-comfort blurred smear of his face. Joker could be picked out behind him, rushing forward to catch the camera before it hit the floor.

He had almost forgotten he was on the phone, if it weren't for the crackled reactions exploding in his ear.

Mirio chuckled as the background noises faded away, he must be walking to a more secluded spot, "I think people are a bit excited, eh Sir?"

"I would say so." Nighteye said, "How are you taking this, especially after what we witnessed at the end of the raid?"

"I'm okay, really!" Nighteye could hear the genuine grin in his boy's voice, "Yeah, it was a bit shocking at first. But! Joker is still Joker, no matter how incredible his powers are! I'm not going to treat him any different for it."

"Good. Can you do me a favor, then?"

"Anything for you, Sir!"

"Can you check in on Midoriya and the Shinsou family? Joker and Eri too, if you can. I want to make sure everyone is doing alright."

"Of course!" Mirio's voice lowered into a more teasing tone, "I told you you would like Midoriya! It seems you actually got a soft spot for Joker, too! I'm so proud of you!"

Nighteye, in a rare moment of being caught off guard, sputtered, "That's not-"

"Oops! The next bell rang, so I have to go Sir!"

Nighteye pulled the phone away from his ear as Mirio hung up, blankly staring at it in shock.

Bubble Girl giggled, "He's grown so much."

"Yes, he has." Nighteye sighed as he set his phone on the desk, reaching for the now cold cup of tea.

"Nope!" Bubble Girl swatted his hand away, "Let me get you a fresh cup."

"... Thanks."

She placed the plate of snacks in front of him and picked up the tray with the cold tea, but paused in front of the door. She looked at him with an ear to ear grin.

He narrowed his eyes, "What?"

"I've always wanted to say this... Hee Ho!!"

She cackled and rushed out the door, leaving a facepalming Nighteye alone in his office.

"There are already thousands of responses on both posts." Ren said as he refreshed the page on his phone again, "Any change in the USJ?"

Margaret, who stood by the wall next to a Velvet Room door, shook her head, "It doesn't appear so. There was only a slight fluctuation at the start before it returned to normal."

Nezu turned his monitor around so everyone could see the jagged graph, "It's actually lower than the readings we've gathered earlier."

"What were they during the Red Rain?" Mr. Compress asked.

The picture changed with a single keyboard tap.

Ren grimaced, "That's almost triple what it is right now, even if they've steadily been going up these past few months."

“Which means the Trickster’s performance will have to be exceptional while people are inside U.A.’s boundaries.” Lavenza said, “Outside stimulus seems to have little effect.”

“A completely different beast compared to what happened in Kamino, then.” Nezu mused.

“No pressure or anything.” Ren muttered.

“Apologies for bringing less than good news.” Margaret said softly, “But we should return in case there are any long term affects we’re not yet aware of.”

Lavenza flicked her gaze between Ren and the Velvet Room door with a questioning glance. He subtly shook his head. Having direct access to Nezu’s office would be fantastic, given that what he needed to safeguard his teammates’ futures was right in front of him on Nezu’s computer. But Nezu was smart. Too smart. If he’d already picked out when Ren was distracted with his Personas, then he could just as easily find out about the permanent Velvet Room doors before they were ready to share it.

Maybe he’d find a supply closet close by. Not ideal... but better than Nezu growing suspicious, or worse yet, Ren getting caught going behind Nezu’s back and getting punished for it.

Lavenza and Margaret left and the Velvet Room door faded from reality. The rat turned his monitor around, growing more amused by watching the stats of those posts skyrocket.

“Wow, the numbers keep going up and up!” Spinner shouted.

Gentle Criminal smiled, “That’s what happens when people have been waiting on the edge of their seats for days .”

“More like months since the Kamino Incident.” Mr. Compress seamlessly rolled a few marbles between his knuckles as they appeared out of nowhere, “The ebb and flow of an audience’s expectations can be a fickle demon, but when tempered by a true master-" With a grand flourish of his hands, the marbles vanished from sight, "That's how you get the best reaction one could ever hope for."

"I dunno, dude." Spinner smirked at Mr. Compress, "We've seen that one a hundred times by now! You got anything new?"

"‘Anything new’?"Mr. Compress grabbed his cane and raised it as if to whap Spinner over the head, "You wouldn't have any idea how hard it is to come up with new acts and keep a loyal audience if it hit you over the head! I've even had some people turn on me at the drop of a hat when they thought I was no longer 'good enough' for their outrageous expectations!"

La Brava sighed in disappointment, "Boys..."

"I'm sure he didn't mean anything by it." Gentle Criminal said as he finished his cup of tea, "Though La Brava and I do understand how hard it can be in the spotlight. We've encountered more than enough of that mindset on my channel alone."

"It can't be all that bad." Ren said with a warm smile, "Didn't you have any supporters? People who kept you going no matter how bad it got?"

Morgana matched Ren's smile, "We've had people like that when things got really bad. They continued to cheer for us even when we were fighting Yaldabaoth. Surely it's the same for you?"

Gentle Criminal chuckled, "Indeed. A few specific individuals always left uplifting comments. They were definitely the brightest spots in a sea of negativity."

Lady Stubbs puffed out her chest and whacked at Mr. Compress' cane with her claws.

"I... suppose you are right. I apologize for overreacting." Mr. Compress lowered his cane, "The negative people stick with you a lot more than the few positive ones. Thank you for reminding me of that."

"You're welcome." Ren stated with a wide grin.

"Apologies for interrupting, but we have a visitor." Nezu pressed a button under his desk, and the door opened to reveal Aizawa, fist raised to knock.

Aizawa blinked slowly before his fist dropped to his side. He stepped in Nezu's office with a pointed glare at the rat.

"I didn't know a Spotlight post was planned, let alone two ." Aizawa came to a stop between Ren and Admiral Feesh's chair, silently seething, "You could've warned us ahead of time."

"Now where's the fun in that?"

Aizawa's eye twitched. He glanced at Ren, who only gave him an equally smug grin in return.

"Well, the students are wound up even more since the announcement during home room. Thanks for that."

Nezu casually waved away Aizawa's concerns, "Did you come here to tell us the obvious?"

"No. Ectoplasm and Hound Dog returned." Aizawa looked between the vigilante group, "They got everything you requested for your rooms. I suggest you spend the rest of the day unpacking and decorating. It would be smart to return to the dorms before the students break for lunch."

Ah, so that's why it was a clone that drove them to the USJ.

"It's that late already? How the time flies when you're having fun! Very well, then." Nezu eyed Ren and Morgana, "After your tests are done, you'll have a few days to rest before you start practicing for your Cultural Festival performance. Do make use of it."

Ren grimaced, "But-"

Nezu held up a paw, "I know things seem grim, what with everything we've discussed today. However, we still have time and you've all travelled a long, hard road to get here. You deserve some down time after everything that's transpired."

Aizawa narrowed his eyes, "What are you talking about? How do things seem 'grim'?"

Nezu grinned, his tone returning to its chipper nature, "You'll find out soon enough!"

Aizawa sighed when he looked to Ren for an answer and only got a shrug. He'd make the man some coffee to make up for it.

"Then let's vacate before the horde of ravenous children are released." Mr. Compress tucked his cane under his arm and straightened his hat, "I'd rather not be bombarded by teenagers, thank you very much. No offence, Ren."

Ren snorted, "None taken."

"You do that. Meanwhile, I'll type up an official statement for the media." Nezu said as he waved them off. He cleared his throat when the group reached the door, "Oh, one more question, if you will Amamiya."

Ren raised a brow, "What?"

"I've been curious about the subject of your Arcana. I'm wondering which people in this room hold such a role?"

"Oh. I evolved into the World after my powers reawakened." Ren then pointed to Morgana hanging from his shoulder, "Mona's the Magician."

He then listed off their Arcana.

La Brava for Lovers.

Gentle Criminal for Temperance.

Spinner was Apostle.

Mr. Compress tipped his hat as Ren stated him as Faith.

Aizawa expression was carefully neutral as he was dubbed the Hierophant.

“And you,” Ren’s pointed at Nezu, and he couldn’t help his impish smirk, “Are the Devil, Nezu.”

Aizawa choked on his own spit as he broke out into a sudden coughing fit, while Nezu fell back into his chair, raging with laughter.

Ren patted Aizawa on the back, “You good, Eraser?”

“Fine .” Aizawa glared at Nezu, who was still laughing his tail off, “Let’s go. He won’t stop for a while.”

Aizawa stormed from the room first, followed by the vigilante group. The man was silent as they walked through the halls, passing a number of classrooms in the process. Ren was thankful that there were no windows from this side of the classrooms, otherwise he could imagine many students pressing themselves into the windows to watch them pass.

Or worse yet, break down the doors to surround them.

“You had quite the reaction to Nezu’s Arcana, Eraser.” Mr. Compress said when they stepped outside, “Why’s that?”

Aizawa stopped in the middle of the sidewalk, “Nezu has always been labeled a devil for his looks and personality, as well as how he runs the school, but I never thought he would literally be a Devil.”

“It’s a natural fit.” Ren said.

“Yeah, it is. Too good of a fit.” Aizawa rolled his eyes and continued down the path, the others following, “And he’s going to lord that fact over us for years. I know it.”

They reached the teacher’s dorm. Despite what happened at the USJ, the uncertainty of their findings, the pressure of an unknown battle ahead... all of that faded when they entered the dorm and Eri ran up and gave them all relieved hugs, and dragged them further inside by pulling at Ren and Spinner’s sleeves.

Over a dozen boxes and shopping bags littered the common room. Ectoplasm, Hound Dog, and Kaito waited patiently.

Kaito was the first to approach, scrutinizing Ren and the others in that certain way of his. Satisfied that nobody was injured, dead, or missing, he relaxed.

“Would you like lunch first, or would you rather decorate your rooms and eat after?” Hound Dog asked.

Several gurgles and growls chose for them.

Ren, holding hands with Eri, smiled, “Let’s do lunch first. You want to help me make curry, Eri?”

Eri energetically nodded, and they trailed into the kitchen together.

“Grr, is it always curry?” Hound Dog asked as he stared after them.

“You’ll get addicted to it in no time,” Kaito said with an ominous smirk, “Believe me.”

By the way their mouths watered at the slightest scent of Ren’s curry, they knew it was already too late.

Midoriya rushed to the infirmary after shoveling food into his mouth and waving goodbye to his flabbergasted friends. Todoroki was the only one who knew. He didn't want to break the news to everyone until Recovery Girl gave him the all clear.

He gently knocked on the door and peeked inside.

"Recovery Girl...?"

Midoriya stepped into the student infirmary. It was empty. Maybe she went out to lunch? He was about to leave and come back again after classes were finished for the day... until his eyes roamed over her office door. It was open a crack, and he could faintly hear shuffling from within it.

He walked over to knock and make his presence known, but froze at the sound of voices.

"Tsukauchi forwarded his initial report from his interrogation with Overhaul." Recovery Girl said, "The man was smart enough to keep Eri up to date on her shots, so we don't have to worry about that. Otherwise, the girl seems to be in perfect health, if a bit underweight. He also admitted to not being her biological father, either."

"Her DNA matched with the previous head of the Shie Hassaikai." Another woman's soft voice said, Midoriya could faintly see a head of silken gold hair through the opening, "And in accordance to Overhaul's interrogation, it's confirmed that Eri is the previous head's granddaughter."

Midoriya backed away. This was obviously meant to be a private conversation, he should leave before he gets caught and scolded by Recovery Girl. Yeah, that was the best course of action. He turned around and crept towards the exit-

"What's with that face, Zoey?"

There was a sigh, “Eri’s tests came back well and good for the most part, but its Amamiya I’m worried about.”

Midoriya froze.

“Yes...” Recovery Girl said, the frown obvious by her tone, “His cortisol levels are extremely high.”

“It’s more than that. All of his levels are elevated across the board.” Zoey stated, “These are the highest I’ve ever seen, and I’ve worked with long-time pros who’ve never shown this amount of stress.”

“I can’t imagine what the boy’s been through. Between what happened in Kamino and trying to recover in the horrible aftermath... It could be a culmination of these last few months plus this recent raid.”

“Maybe. Actually, I might have another theory.”

“Oh?”

“Just a theory, mind you. I’d have no way to test it, since we can’t do anymore in-depth scans at a hospital. Nezu agrees that it would draw too much attention.”

“He reacted negatively to the blood draw, even if he tried to hide it. The boy would probably decline it anyway, as is his right. What’s this theory of yours?”

“The extreme stress may be due to his unique powers. I’ve wondered how they would directly affect him since he doesn’t have a Quirk Factor to channel his Personas through. It’s possible that this pushes his body to-”

Midoriya's world tilted. His brain screeched to a halt as he tried to digest what he just heard.

Joker didn’t have a Quirk Factor?

“Actually,” Akira Ren had pushed up his glasses, keeping his neutral porcelain mask intact, “I’m quirkless.”

The shock and mutual understanding, the pain and misplaced sympathy from his own classmates at the term ‘Quirkless.’ Midoriya happily believed that lie until the stab of betrayal at Kamino, where Joker’s real identity was revealed to the world.

Sure, Ren shared a fake name, but if he just heard correctly, then Ren had never lied about being Quirkless . But with no Quirk Factor... how did he have all of these amazing powers? How could he summon gods and beings of myth who could practically do anything? Summon storms and control other forces of nature. Heal any injury and smooth over ghastly scars? Kill ? Bring people back from the dead?

All without a Quirk. Not a Quirk, but Personas . Was that what they were called?

Mona had the same strange power, too. More than that, he was a talking cat who could shapeshift and had a powerful god from Roman mythology at his back.

Nighteye never saw Joker or Mona in his visions.

As if they were never supposed to be here... Anomalies who didn’t belong...

“If Endeavor pursued my mother to the extent that he did just for her quirk, what do you think people would do if they knew the full truth of Joker’s power? He’s beyond powerful for sure, but bringing back the dead? That’s unheard of.”

“... Do you think people pursued him like that in the past?”

Shoto shrugged, “We can only speculate at this point.”

“Think of it this way,” Aizawa said gravely, “Undercover pros use aliases all the time to protect themselves, as well as their friends and family members. It would be too dangerous to walk into a villain’s den and flaunt your real name.”

“To protect himself and others...” Kirishima bit his lip, “Man, he must’ve been so scared if he had to use an alias up until now!”

“Or brave!” Ashido said, “I can’t even imagine what he must’ve been through to even come up with a fake identity like that.”

Yaoyorozu frowned, “His first appearance was at the USJ. If he never worked with the League of Villains, then I wonder what circumstances landed him there in the first place? Was he... escaping from something?”

How did everything connect? Where did all of these red strings lead? What truth were Joker and Mona hiding from the rest of the world?

A sharp trill startled him from his spiraling thoughts.

“Ah, sorry. It’s Tsukauchi.”

“Oho?”

“N-Not in the way you’re thinking! He’s having me help with a favor in Tartarus and just received permission for me to be there. Something about a suspected Nomu?”

“Well, duty calls.” Recovery Girl warmly chuckled, “But after work, do be a dear and ask him to go out for a coffee.”

“I’m sure he’s got other things to do. I’ve heard he was finally going to accept his promotion to Commissioner after everything with Joker settles down.”

“Nonsense. I know for a fact he was impressed with how you stood against Kunikazu in the Kamino hospital. He’s not an easy man to impress. You both deserve happiness, dearies.”

“C-Chiyo-san! It’s not like that!”

Midoriya snuck out of the infirmary, but he couldn’t make it more than a few steps to the hallway window. He lay his forehead on the cool glass, willing the raging whirlwind to in his mind to still. A few shaky breaths staggered past his lips.

“Midoriya-kun?”

He whirled around to see Recovery Girl and the petite woman with golden hair, staring at him.

“You’re as pale as a sheet! Are you feeling alright?”

“Y-yeah! Yes, I’m fine! Why wouldn’t I be fine!?”

Recovery Girl lost her concern as she sharply tapped her cane, “You didn’t break another bone, did you?”

“Break another bone?” The other woman asked with widened eyes.

“N-no! N-no broken bones, I swear! But, um...” He didn’t know what else to do aside from shove his hands right in Recovery Girl’s face.

She blinked rapidly and then stared at his knuckles, confusion falling away to shock as her eyebrows shot up to her hairline.

“Oh my.” Recovery Girl took his hand, the one she performed surgery on in the Sports Festival, and turned it around several times, “When did this happen? How?”

“During the Overhaul raid, Mona healed me.”

“Well, it looks like you have your hands full.” Zoey smiled at Midoriya, then nodded to Recovery Girl, “I’ll leave you to it.”

“Remember what I said about coffee, young lady!”

A light blush appeared on Zoey’s face before she turned and walked away.

“Now, let’s get you looked at. Why didn’t you come to me right away?”

Midoriya sputtered and let her pull him inside, the same infirmary he stood in moments ago where his whole world shattered. Everything he thought he knew about Ren’s ‘quirk’ would have to be thrown to the wind, he’d need a whole new notebook to keep track of the building storm encompassing his brain.

A single thought consumed him as Recovery Girl worked. Through the motion tests and x-rays and Recovery Girl’s scratching of a pen on a clipboard as she documented all of his healed scars...

Joker really was Quirkless.

Joker was Quirkless.

Ren was Quirkless.

Ren sneezed.

“Are you okay?” Morgana asked from the bed, “That’s like the third time you’ve sneezed. You’re not getting sick, are you?”

“I doubt it. Ishtar wouldn’t let me.” Ren said as he sniffled and focused upwards, “Put that one a little more to the left, Pixie.”

“Kay!”

Pixie’s wings hummed like a dragonfly’s as she stuck the hook to the upper wall, Ishtar floated up and attached the last of the faerie lights to it. Pixie clapped before darting over to the light switch to turn it off, while Ishtar plugged them in.

The darkness became alight with the soft glow of the faerie lights tracing around the upper half of his room. A variety of constellations dotted the ceiling from the stars they stuck on, with a familiar arrangement of seven stars directly under his bed. He and Tobita offered to wash everyone's new clothes earlier, and clean clothes were all perfectly arranged in his closet.

It allowed them to scope out the dorm more before they decorated their rooms. Like the kitchen, the laundry facility within the dorm was massive, with two walls full of high end washing machines and dryers. That brand cost an arm and a leg for each machine. Across from the laundry were the sauna and hot springs, separated by gender. The end of that same hallway lead to an extra entrance to the inner garden.

"Everything looks really nice." Morgana's voice distracted him from his thoughts as Pixie turned the lights back on, "It'll make our stay here more bearable, at least."

"Yeah, I guess." Ren walked over to the desk, where a Phantom Thief Banner hung over it. He stared directly at the familiar hat and mask logo, "What do you think they'll do to this stuff after we leave?"

"I... I don't know." Morgana stood and stretched, before he jumped over to the desk in one agile leap, "I'm pretty sure Nezu will hang some of it in his office or something."

Ren chuckled, "Admiral Feesh won't be alone."

Ishtar and Pixie vanished when there was a sudden knock on the door.

"Come in." Ren said without looking away from the banner.

Mr. Compress waltzed in, holding hands with Eri while the other arm held a small box.

“Are you ever going to change out of costume?” Morgana asked, “It’s been days.”

“And reveal my devilishly handsome face to these heroes? No thank you.”

“Ren-nii is de.... devilishly h-handsome, and he has no problems showing his face. Uncle Compress is just being shy.” Eri stated with the brutal honesty of a small child.

Ren and Morgana burst out laughing as a high-pitched whine escaped Mr. Compress’ throat, “I’m not shy! You wound me so, my dear.”

Eri blinked as their fits of laughter died away. Ren rubbed the mirthful tears from his eyes and had to take another deep breath to calm down.

“Did you need something, Mr. Compress?” Ren asked with a smirk, “Help with either of your rooms?”

“Kaito and Mr. Aizawa helped me, so my room is done!” Eri said.

Mr. Compress recovered what shreds of dignity he had left by clearing his throat, “Nope, I left my room rather bare compared to yours. However, I did request something special, and I wanted Eri to open it after everyone was finished.”

“Hmm,” Morgana’s ears twitched as the slightest groan came from the vents, “I think the others are almost done. Spinner is just lounging around with Lady Stubbs, and the other two are putting their final touches. Kaito is also done, he seems to be reading.”

“Perfect!” Mr. Compress handed Eri the mystery box, and then turned on his heel and marched out, “Wait here while I fetch everyone!”

Eri looked down at the box with wide eyes, “What do you think it is, Ren-nii?”

“I have no idea.” He said, crouching down to her level, “Whatever it is, it has to be good.”

Eri nodded. Ren’s heart tugged a little. She still wasn’t showing much range of emotion, aside from widening her eyes or the occasional crinkle around them. Despite their ultimate goal for the Cultural Festival, maybe he could do something to break through that mask and finally make her smile. Just give her an opportunity to have fun .

The door opened and Mr. Compress pushed everyone inside Ren’s room.

“What’s this about?” Kaito asked with a raised brow.

Mr. Compress firmly shut the door as everyone spread out, ogling the various decorations Ren put up.

“Go ahead, Eri.” Mr Compress said when everyone was situated. He clapped his gloved hands together, a smile radiating from underneath his mask, “I wanted you to open it, my dear, but know that this is a gift for everyone in this room to use.”

“I don’t know if that’s comforting or ominous.” Spinner stated as Lady Stubbs jumped off his shoulder, cautiously sniffing at the box in Eri’s hands.

They waited in anticipation, slowly inching forward, as Eri popped open the top of the box, removed some plastic foam, and pulled out something that made Ren’s heart stutter.

“A polaroid camera?” Ren said.

“Where in the world did you get that?” La Brava asked as her jaw dropped, “You can’t find those anymore, and the ones that exist are in museums!”

“They’re really that rare?” Morgana asked incredulously, “You could still find them where we’re from... in vintage shops.”

“Apparently Nezu had one on hand, in perfect condition at that!” Mr. Compress said as Eri turned the boxy camera around in her hands, studying the lens and the slot on the bottom, “And was more than willing to gift it to us when I asked.”

“But why?” La Brava asked.

“Because of this .”

Mr. Compress gently nudged everyone to line up in front of the desk, making sure the Phantom Thief banner was visible. He squished everyone together and held out the camera, the lens pointed at them. Everyone was blinded by the bright flash.

Ren blinked the spots out of his eyes as the photo came out of the slot.

Mr. Compress snatched it and, after a few moments of waving it through the air, the picture appeared. They all leaned in to see it when he proudly held it up between his middle and pointer fingers. Yes, they were all practically squished together to fit the frame, but they were smiling at the obvious closeness they shared. Aside from Eri, who hugged Ren as she curiously stared right into the lens. Even Kaito bore the smallest of smiles.

“Ooooh, that’s so cool!!” Spinner shouted, “Can I take one next!?”

“You have to share it, you know.” La Brava said with a shake of her head, “Why don’t we let Eri take it for a bit?”

“R-really?”

Eri stared at Spinner with her doe eyes, and the lizard man crumpled.

“Go for it, Eri-chan!” Spinner said with a thumbs up.

Mr. Compress chuckled as he handed the camera to her, the photo still in his other hand.

“I know, how about we go outside?” Gentle Criminal said as he stared out the balcony doors, “We still haven’t explored the gardens yet. Perfect photo opportunities await!”

Spinner threw open the balcony door, “Race you to those trees!”

“Merp!”

“H-hey, that’s cheating! No head starts!” Morgana yowled as he jumped after them, a pleasantly cool breeze sweeping through the room.

La Brava sighed, before smiling at Eri, “Let’s go.”

“O-Okay!”

Kaito pinched the bridge of his nose, “I better make sure they don’t hurt themselves.”

They walked out, leaving Ren and Mr. Compress in the room alone. The man was staring at the photo, and while Ren couldn’t see the expression on his face, the sudden sense of sadness emanating from Mr. Compress nearly smothered him.

“... Why did you really want that camera?” Ren asked softly.

“Ah, I forget how observant you can be.” Mr. Compress cleared his throat and shook his head, as if to rid himself of the sorrow. He walked next to Ren’s desk, where a large cork board hung right beside the banner. Aside from a new mask charm hanging in the corner, it was bare.

“Because I want to make good memories with the time we have left. I want Eri to have good memories of us, and to have physical proof of our time together.” Mr. Compress snatched one of the tacks on the bottom of the board and pinned the photo next to the mask charm, “We better take as many pictures as we can, Ren. You bet every last yen that I’ll make enough copies for everyone to have their own scrapbook by the end of it.”

With that, he walked past a stupefied Ren and joined everyone in the gardens. Ren looked at the photo, smiling softly at the warmth pleasantly floating in his chest, before he turned around and leaned against the balcony door frame.

The garden was rather large, containing two huge trees and a stone path from one end of the dorm to the other. Vibrant gold leaves gently fell from the ginkgo tree, while burning scarlet and hints of purple fell from the maple. There was a pair of benches on the path between the trees, and a variety of flora otherwise bare for the fall season. If he listened closely, he could hear the calming tap of a small bamboo fountain somewhere in the mix.

“With the time we have left...” Byakko whispered.

“Why the sudden melancholy?” Shiva asked, “Were you touched by the Faith’s true motive?”

“Yes... although it’s not that.” Byakko wrapped his long tail around himself, “I’ve just become aware of my own clock steadily counting down.”

“Uh.... what? I don’t hear a clock! Are you going crazy, furball!?” Pixie said.

Byakko snarled, “What I mean is that it would be wise for the Trickster to fuse a stronger Persona than me... permanently.” Ren’s breath stuttered, but Byakko continued as sympathy flowed through his other selves, “We don’t know what lies ahead, and the Trickster needs something better than some old tiger who controls a little bit of ice.”

"Byakko, my dear friend, give yourself more credit. The Overhaul battle would've been more difficult if your war cry didn't bolster the Trickster's attack power." Kohryu reached his whiskers out to touch the tiger, "But... how brave of you to be willing to give yourself fully."

"It's simply the truth." Byakko said as his tufted ears drooped, "We can mess around no longer."

Fafnir puffed out his chest, "We'll be all set if they are as powerful as I!!"

Baal swirled his goblet, "I suppose anything is possible, given that we are in a new Sea of Souls. Fafnir himself is proof that there may be brand new Personas yet unseen."

"I agree." Yatagarasu shuffled his wings, "As the weakest Persona in the stock, I also offer to permanently exchange my place for something stronger."

"Yatagarasu." Orpheus Picaro tilted his head at the raven, "You already have a new power budding within you... we just need to discover what that new strength is. Perhaps a new Persona can be born from you yet."

"How... curious." Satanael said, "We could cultivate this new power with time and training. Let us know if you feel anything different, alright?"

"I shall." Yatagarasu warbled.

"There's also the part where we need weapons and armor for the heroes." Ren sighed, "Let's see what happens over these next few days, then we'll figure this out."

Satanael nodded, "We'll never be apart as long as you master our bonds for the Compendium. After all-"

Every Persona, and even Ren himself, joined together in a single voice that made the very fabric of existence quiver.

“We art thou, thou art us.”

A shriek of laughter snapped him back into reality.

Spinner cackled as he had somehow trapped Mr. Compress in a headlock, with the ‘victim’ wildly waving his arms about in a goofy manner. Gentle Criminal and La Brava were nearby, whispering to Eri and pointing at the antics.

Ren could barely see Eri stick her tongue out of the corner of her mouth as she raised the camera to her face and took a picture, forever locking the moment in a photo.

Spinner dropped Mr. Compress with a dramatic gasp, “No! Not a picture, my weakness!!”

The lizard-man playfully charged. Gentle Criminal scooped up Eri and balanced her on his shoulders, before he and La Brava jumped up onto one of the ginkgo tree’s branches with his quirk. Spinner crashed into the trunk and rag dolled onto the ground, spread-eagle.

There was another bright flash of camera light on Spinner, before Eri and La Brava picked some of the golden leaves and sprinkled them down. Spinner had a pile on top of him when Mr. Compress and Lady Stubbs approached, gently nudging him with a boot or fluffy paw.

“This villain is out for the count.” Mr. Compress dryly remarked.

Morgana and Kaito sat together on one of the benches, both facepalming.

Movement flickered in the corner of Ren’s eye, and he looked to see Midnight, Thirteen, and a few other teachers watching the playful shenanigans from their balconies. Midnight winked when she saw him staring.

He ducked back inside, his eyes catching on the picture. As he looked at it, a new determination sparked within him. The determination to finish this at long last. He mentally listed his goals from here onwards;

-
- 1.) Grow stronger through Velvet Room training and Persona Fusion.
 - 2.) Secretly gather info on U.A. to secure his teammates' freedom.
 - 3.) Deepen his bonds with the Arcanas in this world.
 - 4.) Capture and interrogate a Shadow during the Cultural Festival, blow a few peoples' minds with the truth, reunite with his friends, then make a plan for their Final Attack.
 - 5.) Defeat Yaldabaoth once and for all.
 - 6.)... Go home.
-

It probably wouldn't be that simple. It never was.

But something stirred in Ren, something he hasn't felt in a long time as he finally set his focus to home.

Despite being alone in his room, he grinned at this familiar feeling.

Mission START!!

Current update schedule:

Talk - Feb. 4th

Betrayer - Feb 25th

Duplicitous Devil's Castle - March 11th

I'm really excited for the next few chapters! There are long awaited character interactions, secret plans set in motion, among other fun things as everyone prepares for the festival ;)

Talk

Chapter 86: Talk

Some questions are answered and some answers are questioned.

Heeeey, so after a little more thought there's been a slight change in name for one of the upcoming chapters that fits it way better than Betrayal.

Diversionary Tactic - February 25th

Duplicitous Devil's Castle - March 11th

Improvised Song Dedicated To The Next Prime Minister's Ship -
March 25

Voracious Waltz - April 15th

And yes, these chapters will tie up one of the minor arcs as well as the Cultural Festival. I wish I could say what the chapter name is after Voracious Waltz, but I don't want to give away the surprise ;)

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

FANART!!

time_n_clem on Twitter

Ren should've known better.

The last two days have gone smoothly. Too smoothly . He and Morgana had been escorted to the rat's office early in the morning and returned before lunch. Then after they'd hang out with Eri and Kaito, eating and taking pictures, before the others returned from their TA training after classes ended. There were no surprise encounters with any students.

It was only a matter of time before the inevitable.

He never expected to come face to face with Class 1-A right outside the teacher's dorm on the third and final day of his exams.

It was an accident, a stroke of pure dumb luck, by how both the students and teachers became like deer in the headlights. Painfully familiar faces zeroed in on him, oblivious to how the teachers inched closer to Ren.

Midoriya recoiled when they made eye contact. Shock and awe and a dozen other emotions stewed thickly inside him. His mind cranked away at some puzzle Ren wasn't aware of, but Midoriya's gaze was so intense that Todoroki glanced at Midoriya in concern.

Maybe reviving Ayumu in front of Midoriya spooked him.

Ashido and Kaminari looked between the groups, wondering which would make the first move.

Kirishima and Uraraka looked seconds from breaking out into tears.

Yaoyorozu had her own war raging within her.

Iida was vibrating in place like a stalling engine, but made no move.

Nezu studied everyone from Ectoplasm's shoulder, his beady black eyes not hiding his rampant curiosity and amusement.

The cobblestone sidewalk separating them felt like a gaping canyon, all the secrets and lies poisoning the bare few feet needed for either group to reach the other.

Someone had to give. That someone literally exploded the tension like fragile glass. The Tower stomped forward, harshly knocking Ojiro in the shoulder and out of his venomous glare. Twenty pairs of eyes widened in blatant horror as Bakugo marched across no-man's-lands, his palms smoking yet his expression carefully neutral, and stopped in front of Ren.

Acrid smoke and the scent of burned caramel fluttered between them, but Ren refused to break eye contact as Morgana rubbed his nose with a paw.

Crimson eyes narrowed as Ren smiled, scanning him from head to toe as if looking for something. Ectoplasm made to step forward, but Nezu stopped him with a flick of his tail.

"You and me," Bakugo jabbed Ren in the chest, his voice full of gravel, "We're going to have a talk, got it? I'm not taking no for an answer!"

"Sure thing," Ren's voice made Bakugo flinch for some reason, "Meet me here at lunch?"

Bakugo curtly nodded. He whirled around, the whole class jumping back at another explosion from Bakugo's palm, "And what are you assholes so afraid of, huh!? Glasses, didn't you want to welcome him when he got here or were you just spouting bullshit!?"

"D-don't swear in front of honored guests, Bakugo!" Iida's voice was higher pitched than usual, but he was the second to cross the dead zone, stopping a few feet away from Ren and bowing a full 90 degrees. "On behalf of Class 1-A, w-welcome to U.A. Amamiya-san! Please forgive us for being rude!!"

Ren rubbed the back of his neck as he felt his face heat up. It didn't help that Morgana was smirking at him, clearly relieved. He felt a familiar shadow at his back before he could even utter a word.

“What is going on out here?” Aizawa snapped as he glared at his class.

“It’s okay, Eraser.” Ren said, “We would have to meet face to face eventually.”

Aizawa dangerously narrowed his eyes, the majority of students sunk in on themselves, “I don’t care. It’s no reason to stop and stare at someone like that. Get to class. Now .”

Most all but ran towards the school. Yaoyorozu turned and gracefully walked away with a heaviness in her shoulders. Ren’s heart hurt at the sight of the Empress like that.

Midoriya lagged behind, his expression frozen on his face. He didn’t snap out of it until Todoroki grabbed his arm and gently led him away.

Iida bowed once more before he marched off after them.

Bakugo stayed in place a moment longer, staring at Ren as if he would vanish any second. He only walked away when Aizawa cleared his throat and gave him a pointed look.

“Well, that was... certainly something.” Morgana said when all students were gone.

“Why didn’t you do anything?” Aizawa said as he turned the full force of his glare on Nezu.

Nezu chuckled, “It was a good way to ‘break the ice!’ Bakugo did the job splendidly, wouldn’t you say? As Amamiya stated, his first interaction with students would happen eventually. We can’t hide him away forever.”

Ectoplasm facepalmed, muttering rapidly under his breath.

The rat laughed as Aizawa’s scowl deepened, “Come now. It just made it easier for when when he officially starts his TA duties after the Festival!”

“Whatever.” Aizawa said, “Let’s just get them to your office before any other class decides to crowd them. We’re not running a damn zoo.”

“Someone should inform the reporters lingering outside the school’s walls then!” Nezu chuckled as Ren shivered at the new articles about him being pumped out by the dozen, “In any case, enough fun for now. Time for the last of your testing, Amamiya!”

“Joy.” Ren deadpanned.

Nezu never lost his satisfied smirk, even after they arrived in his office and handed Ren a packet so thick it could be used as a bludgeoning weapon.

An eerie stillness overcame the block where the Blue Lotus once stood, other storefronts and businesses drained of their usual vibrancy as if they mourned their neighbor. Surrounded by yellow police tape, swept of broken concrete and glass shards, a cleansing of a murder scene that had once been their home and livelihood. The autumn sun shed rare rays of warmth, but none of it touched these stones.

It took every drop of courage within Risumi to not break down right then and there.

“There’s really nothing left…” Risumi whispered, standing where the front counter had once been.

“No.” Ayumu placed a hand on his wife’s shoulder, trying to keep the lump in his throat at bay, “But at least we still have each other. And Hitoshi and Ren and our next child, too. That’s what matter most.”

“I know.” Risumi squeezed her husband’s hand as her chest tightened, “But we created so many memories here. All of our pictures, our things... every memory we've ever built with Hitoshi is just.... gone. How are we ever going to recover from this? Will we even have a home to bring our new child into?"

"Risumi." Ayumu's expression hardened as she faced him fully, "U.A. wouldn't throw us out into the street. Especially in your condition."

"We can't impose on them forever, either." Risumi's hands went to her stomach, "I don't... Nezu has been more than generous, but we need our own home. Our own space." She looked around, heartbreak creasing her face. "We need to get back up on our feet again.."

"Then we'll rebuild."

Risumi stared at Ayumu, "But we don't have enough money. Sure, w-we've saved since Ren came to us, but not enough for a whole new building and all of the supplies we need..."

Shuffling footsteps turned their attention the where the front door had been. A hero, Kamui Woods, stood beside a familiar face.

"This woman says she knows you." The hero said, "She's the one who informed Officer Akane when the incident occurred."

"Haru-san!!" Risumi ran to the woman and gave her a hug, "You're okay!"

Haru-san warmly chuckled as she wrapped her arms around Risumi, "Of course I am, deary. I was so worried about you two!"

Ayumu glanced at the hero, "Could you give us a moment alone?"

"Of course." Kamui bowed his head and walked away.

Haru-san let go, gripping Risumi by the shoulders, "Are you two alright? After what happened.... I can't even imagine what those villains put you through."

“Yes, we’re fine.” Risumi’s smile was watery, her eyes filling with tears, “Joker made sure we were okay, a-and Nezu is letting us stay at U.A. for the time being. They let us come here to see the damage ourselves.”

“And I was just telling Risumi that we’d rebuild.”

“Rebuild?” Haru-san’s smile gained the serenity of a fresh spring rain. “Then I suppose you’ll want this. I saved them for you.”

She reached into her bag and placed something in Risumi’s hand. The gentle bell tinkled as Risumi and Ayumu stared at it with wide eyes. Tied to it was the mask charm they hung in the front window.

“Thank you.” Risumi said as she enclosed her fingers over them and held them to her chest, “At least there will be pieces of the original Blue Lotus with us. Even if we can’t rebuild right away.”

A twinkle entered Haru-san’s eyes, “You haven’t been online much, have you?”

“No, we’ve stayed away from the news.” Ayumu said, raising a brow, “Why?”

“I don’t think you’ll have any problems rebuilding with all the support you’ve been getting since the Blue Lotus was destroyed.” Haru-san smirked, “And I hear U.A. is going to host its Cultural Festival soon. It’s a perfect opportunity for a fundraiser, and to draw in new customers with your food, wouldn’t you think?”

“Th-that’s...”

Ayumu chuckled, “That’s a great idea. There’s no way Nezu would say no.”

“I’m sure Joker would vouch for us, maybe he’ll help us cook if he has the time.” Hope flickered through Risumi’s eyes, her grip on the bell tightening. “Yes. We can do it.”

“I told you.” Ayumu planted a kiss on Risumi’s cheek, “We’ll rebuild, and I’ll be damned if we don’t do it bigger and better than before.” He placed a hand on Risumi’s stomach. “We’ll need more room for the little one anyway.”

Haru-san blinked in astonishment, and then burst into tears of joy as she trapped Risumi and Ayumu in a bone-breaking embrace.

Kamui Woods rushed to the scene, fearing the worst, but ended up sighing in relief when he saw them all hugging and crying with bright smiles.

The block around the Blue Lotus felt warmer as hope returned.

Nezu forced himself to retain a calm exterior as the scratch of Amamiya’s pen filled the room, his bursting excitement was curbed with a harsh flick of his tail. The boy was hard at work at the small desk Nezu set up for him, his brow furrowed in concentration.

Judging by the previous tests, Amamiya was a natural Erudite. He’d easily take the top spot of the second-year class... maybe up into the echelons of the third-years too! He mastered each subject with only a few mistakes... aside from history over the last 200 years, but he digresses.

That’s not what excited him the most.

The boy had said his summons were called Personas, and the very definition of a persona is an aspect of someone’s character. I am thou, thou art I. We are thou, thou art us.

To test how deep that went, Nezu put several languages in the tests... which showed the unexpected results that made him so excited.

French from Arsene, Greek from Cerberus, Celtic from Cu Chulainn, Hindu from Shiva and Vasuki, and a few languages from around Asia to test whether there was a difference between Huang Long and Baihu versus Kohryu and Byakko, among others he spent the small hours of the morning studying with obsessive fervor. It didn't matter what language, the boy usually answered in the same language the question had been typed in.

Not only that, the writing style itself changed quite often, with some shifting right in the middle of the same sentence. The range was impressive; from the delicate and beautiful script of a goddess, to the bold and thick lines of beastly proportions, to exaggerated and carefree scrawls of a child. A few were answered with short, sharp strokes as if scratched in with a claw or talon.

A relieved sigh drew Nezu out of his thoughts, and he looked up from his grading to see Amamiya set down his pen and rub his eyes.

Mona, who had been dozing on the couch, cracked his eyes open.

"Need a break?" Nezu asked, "I can whip up some tea!"

"No." Amamiya stood up, collected the packet, and marched over to Nezu's desk, "I just finished."

"Oho!" Nezu beamed, "Very well done, Amamiya!"

"Geez," Mona grumbled as he scrambled up Amamiya's shoulder, "I thought a packet like that would take you several more days! Did you get even smarter since we last took exams in Shujin?"

Shujin ? Was that the name of Amamiya's school back in his world? Quite ironic to name a school 'prison.' He dearly hoped it wasn't an actual prison.

Amamiya smirked and tapped his temple, "You'd be surprised. I have the knowledge of several gods, you know."

Mona rolled his eyes, "Yeah, yeah. Mercurius and I are pretty smart too!"

“I never said you weren't.” Amamiya said as he scratched Mona under the chin. Then, he paused and looked at Nezu, “Mona and I were talking last night, and there's something we forgot to mention the other day.”

Nezu put on a more business-like smile, “Go on.”

Amamiya planted himself in one of the chairs in front of Nezu's desk, ignoring Admiral Feesh in the other, “First, in order to make my Personas into weapons or armor, they need a catalyst for the transformation to stick to.”

Nezu's ears perked up, “Such as?”

“Black Kogatanas for melee weapons, Black Robes for armor, Model Guns for anything ranged.” Ren frowned, “Back before we faced Yaldabaoth, I got rid of most of them when I thought we had the strongest gear possible for our whole team, plus a few extras just in case. We don't have enough to outfit everyone.”

“Hmm, do you have some of these items on hand?” Nezu asked.

“About one or two of each.” Mona said, “Why?”

“Do you think, if someone made perfect copies, that the copies would work just as well as the original material?”

Amamiya and Mona exchanged a long glance, before Mona slowly nodded, “They should work, in theory. How do you intend to copy them?”

“There is a student in Class 1-A we could ask to make such copies for us, should she be able to see one of each item. However...” Nezu sighed as he leaned back in his chair, “That student would be Yaoyorozu.”

“... Oh.” Amamiya sank in his chair, “Oh .”

“Indeed.” Nezu steepled his paws.

“So, she won’t help us?” Mona asked, wincing, “N-not that I would blame her for not helping us! It’s just... we need these items.”

Nezu’s expression softened with a fond smile, “She has been through much, but she is smart enough to know that what her parents did was wrong in the first place. Otherwise, she would not have testified against them. Would you have something to sweeten the deal, say... a certain family heirloom?”

“Wha- How did you know about that!?” Mona snapped.

“I have my sources!”

“It would be a fair trade.” Amamiya said, his expression falling into careful thought, “Gentle Criminal said he would be willing to give it back to Yaoyorozu if the time came.”

“I see. That works well enough for us.” Nezu glanced at the time, “I can call her here after classes end today, and we can have a meeting to discuss her role in this plan.”

“You won’t tell her the truth?”

“We may have to tell her a small portion of it, but not the full extent. Not unless you want to, Amamiya.” Nezu said, “We could say it is a joint exercise between you and the staff, which wouldn’t be a complete lie.”

“She is the Empress, and I would hate to lie to her.” Amamiya shook his head, “But I want to wait until the other teachers know the full truth first.”

“Then that’s what we’ll do.” Nezu firmly nodded, “I presume there’s enough time between your talk with Bakugo and the end of the school day to get it from Gentle Criminal? I can have Hound Dog dismiss him early.”

“That should work.”

“Very well,” Nezu turned to his computer, “I’ll email Hound Dog about it right away. Was there anything else?”

Amamiya nodded, “We’re wondering if we can use Power Loaders lab to make additional items, such as elemental bombs and smoke screens.”

“I see.” Nezu cupped his cheek with a paw, “I’ll inform Power Loader of the situation, but I’ll have him give everything to me for safekeeping, aside from your phone. I’ll distribute everything evenly before the designated heroes go to the USJ on the day of the Cultural Festival.”

“I suppose that’s fair.” Amamiya said with a surprisingly accepting tone, “Thank you for trusting us with this.”

“Of course. I appreciate you taking all of the extra time and effort to protect my staff, too.” Nezu’s ears twitched, “Ah, what perfect timing for a visitor.”

Nezu pressed the button under his desk to open the door. Ectoplasm walked in, not even bothering to knock. He must’ve been used to it.

“I’m here to take Amamiya and Mona back to the dorms before the students get out for lunch.” Ectoplasm said as his ghostly white eyes locked onto the pair.

“Very well. Amamiya finished with his testing!”

Ectoplasm’s eyes widened as he stared at the gargantuan packets within Nezu’s reach, “Quite impressive.”

“Run along then!” Nezu said to cover Amamiya’s embarrassment, “It would be unfortunate for them to be caught up in the lunch rush!”

Amamiya stood, bowed respectfully to Nezu, and walked out with Ectoplasm.

Nezu sighed in contentment, his previous excitement returning in droves as he finished his emails to the respective teachers, then returned to grading Amamiya's work.

He was thrilled to craft much more challenging courses for the boy. It's been so long since his last personal student. He hoped Amamiya would stick around long enough to enjoy them.

Oh, he's going to have so much fun !

Ren leaned against the gate, scrolling through the Phantom Thief chatroom on the phone Nezu gave them. Spinner and the others flooded it with what the teachers made them do today. The other chatroom was a much more calm conversation between him and Hitoshi.

He frowned as a sudden thought came to him.

Ren had never forgotten a certain number given to him. He added the number and sent a picture. The reaction was immediate.

[Gang Orca]

Really? I gave you my number ages ago in Sapporo for any emergency, was worried sick for months after Kamino, and your first message to me right now is a picture of Mona sleeping on a couch?

[Joker]

No regrets?

He could feel Orca's exasperation oozing from the device. Ren thought the whale man would disown him before the next reply finally came several minutes later.

[Gang Orca]

...

Mona is rather adorable.

I suppose I'll forgive you if you let me ruffle your hair at the Festival.

Nezu has been very direct in saying that he wants us there for some reason.

[Joker]

I won't tell Mona you said that.

He'd have a fit.

... And that's fair.

[Gang Orca]

The others in our little hero group have been worried about you, kid.

I have the number for the chatroom we created, if you would like to join it. I'm sure everyone would be ecstatic to hear from you.

[Joker]

Sounds great!

... Just keep in mind that Nezu and the other teachers can see everything on this phone.

[Gang Orca]

I see. I'll remind Miruko to behave.

The next few minutes were comprised of a lot of screaming text messages and a constant barrage of questions. Within minutes, he, Hawks, and Miruko had started a relentless meme war. Ryukyu, Tensei, and Gang Orca replied with obvious exasperation, and though Best Jeanist replied the least, he still read every message and stated he was glad Ren was settling in at U.A.

Ren looked up at the sound of heavy footfalls, staring as Bakugo stomped over to him with shoulders slumped. His white knuckles gripped a wrapped bento. He stopped a few feet away, shuffling in place with a signature scowl.

“Come on,” Ren silenced his phone and stuck it in his pocket. He nudged the gate open and waved Bakugo forward, “There’s a place we can talk in the teacher dorms. It’ll be... mostly private.”

Bakugo’s scowl deepened, “Define ‘mostly.’”

Ren shrugged as they crossed the front lawn, “Ectoplasm will be nearby for ‘safety’ reasons. They never specified who it was for, though.”

Bakugo scoffed, “Whatever.”

They went inside. Morgana looked at Ren from his spot on a couch, but Ren shook his head as they passed. Bakugo shadowed him as Ren stopped in the kitchen to grab his own bento, before going to a side entrance to the gardens, near the laundry room. Waiting there with the door already open, was Ectoplasm.

He leaned against the door frame with his arms crossed, idly watching the two boys pass.

Ren went ahead and sat at the bench underneath the fiery maple tree, placing his bento on his lap as Bakugo studied the garden.

“Are you just going to stand there and admire the scenery?” Ren asked, smirking.

Bakugo huffed as he marched over to the bench and sat down, leaving a sizable gap between them. He practically ripped off the cloth tied around his bento and opened it. He stabbed into his food as if it had personally insulted his ancestors.

Ren watched Bakugo wolf down the first bite, before opening his own. Surprise, it was curry and an apple swan Eri made for him for dessert. The uneven cuts made the wings look wonky, but Eri was so happy to have done it. Well... ‘happy’ in her own little way.

The food caught Bakugo’s eye, but the other boy grumbled and turned away. They ate in a tense silence.

“It’s like watching a noble prince dine next to a ravenous street dog.” Satanael commented.

Ren held in a snort as he picked through his food. The quiet became disturbed with the wind gently rustling the leaves overhead, Morgana’s way of saying he was close if things went south. There was no excuse for the extended silence once their food had disappeared into their stomachs.

The awkward atmosphere crystallized like fine glass, it would take a soft breath or a whispered word to shatter it. Strange, how Bakugo broke it so easily earlier, and now he glared daggers into his empty lunch as he grit his teeth together. His shoulders trembled, his grip tightening on the box so much it looked as if it would break under the pressure.

“Why?” Bakugo growled, his voice was like gravel as he all but spit the word out.

“You’ll have to be a little more specific.”

Bakugo pinned his ruby red glare on Ren, "I called you names for weeks, taunted and insulted you, and during Kamino I still demanded answers from you! I was a complete asshole since I first saw you, and yet you still saved my sorry ass when it came down to the wire. Why ?"

Ren raised a brow, "Because I don't let the people who need my help die, no matter how they acted towards me before."

Bakugo bristled, "So you died instead?"

Ren flinched. He stared down at his bento as Bakugo's gaze drilled into the side of his head.

"You don't even deny it." Bakugo's shoulders sagged with a tired sigh, more exhausted than a boy his age should be. Ren felt the same. "How many times?"

Ren glanced towards Ectoplasm, who had turned fully towards them, ghostly eyes wide. Nezu and the rest of the staff would learn the truth eventually, and trying to sugarcoat it with Bakugo would just end badly.

Ren set his bento aside, leaned back on the bench, and looked up towards the leaves. A light breeze brushed his face. Satanael's silent encouragement gave him the strength to utter the truth.

"My Personas are a part of me, as much as I am a part of them. They are all me, and I am all of them. We are all pieces of the same being." Ren started, keeping his voice as level as possible, "The first time I died was when All For One killed Seth."

Ectoplasm went as still as a statue in the left corner of Ren's eye, Bakugo froze in equal measure on his right. Ren continued.

"Orpheus brought me back after that piece of our soul died, shattering the rest of us as Seth's body turned to ash."

“That black stuff that came from your eyes and mouth when Satanael came down...” Bakugo, one not usually attuned to being quiet, whispered in horror.

“That was the result of pushing on when my mind and soul were actively crumbling.” Ren grimaced, “The details after that are a bit fuzzy, but I died at least once more in the hospital, and Cerberus used the same skill as Orpheus to bring me back again. The third and final time was when my luck finally ran out, and my body couldn’t take the strain anymore. I stayed dead until Mona could revive me.”

Bakugo paled, then cursed under his breath as he scrubbed his face.

Ren glanced at Ectoplasm. The hero balled his hands into tight fists as his white eyes glared at the ground, though whether in regret, anger, or some other emotion, Ren didn’t know.

Bakugo suddenly shot to his feet, “Stay here.”

“What?”

“Are you deaf or something!? I said stay here!!” Bakugo snapped as he threw his chopsticks in his bento before scooping it under his arm, “I’ll be right back!”

Ren watched him storm away with wide eyes, brushing past Ectoplasm and disappearing into the teacher’s dorm. Ectoplasm stared at Ren with a question in his eyes. Ren shook his head and relaxed back into the bench as he waited.

Bakugo returned minutes later with another item. Something that sent chills through Ren’s whole body as if he had been splashed with ice water. Bakugo’s expression was unreadable as he shoved the figure in Ren’s hand and returned to his seat, leaning forward as his arms rested over his knees. He watched Ren carefully as he gaped at it.

Ren had meant to buy more figures of his Personas earlier in the year. Hell, Arsene's figure was sitting on the corner of his desk in his dorm. He hadn't had the chance to buy others before the Summer Camp.

"Seth..." Ren's throat tightened as he turned the figure around in his hands, his heart twisting at Seth's valiant pose as if he were about to take off with a mighty roar. He cleared his throat and smiled sadly at Bakugo, "How long have you had this?"

"A while. Seth found Icy Hot and I during the Summer Camp. Saved our asses from that creepy villain with the blade teeth, and then I yelled at him for it... yelled at you for it." Bakugo scuffed his shoe into the ground, "Looking back now, I think he was pretty badass. I even named one of my signature moves after him."

"Really? What's it called?"

Bakugo smirked, "Dragon Cannon."

"Is it powerful?"

"You're damn right it is. Strong enough to take down Gang Orca."

"I'd like to see it sometime." Ren traced a finger over the spines around Seth's head, "Wait, why are there scratch marks here?"

"The bastards who made it got the wrong number of spikes, so I filed them off to have the right amount." Bakugo rolled his eyes, "Anyone with half a brain could see they got it wrong."

Ren burst out into laughter, a crystal clear sound that mixed with the breeze sifting through the leaves. Grinning, he wiped his eyes with the edge of his sleeve, "You know Seth said the same thing when we first saw these being made. He would be... happy that you paid attention."

Bakugo sobered, "Would he be happy that I noticed, or happy because I'm the Tower?"

"I think it'd be a mix of both. Each Persona wields an Arcana, just like the people I've forged bonds with." Ren looked in between the Seth figure and Bakugo, "Seth was proud to have someone with as much fight as you to be our Tower. He wouldn't accept anything less."

"Don't bullshit me. I know what the Tower means." Bakugo muttered as he looked down at his open hands, a small explosion popped in his palm before he closed his fist, "Destruction. Chaos. Tragedy. I destroy any good thing that comes to me." He glared at Ren, "I got you killed in Kamino, for fuck's sake. I've been a jerk and a douche bag for most of my life. How could anybody be proud of something like that?"

"The Tower looks like a bad card at first, but it doesn't always mean you cause death and destruction everywhere you go." Ren channeled his inner Chihaya as Bakugo gave him a disbelieving look, "It just means that there is a chance for you to learn and grow through sudden changes. Take Kamino, for example. Yes, it was a horrible experience, but we've all grown stronger and learned from it. Without that, I never would've awakened my true power through Satanael. From what I can see, you got much stronger too."

Bakugo shook his head as his expression fell, looking up again when Ren nudged him with an elbow.

"Let's face it; Would you have admitted you were an asshole before Kamino?"

Bakugo thought it over for a moment, "No."

"Would you repeat your past mistakes, knowing now that they were wrong?"

"... No."

“Then you’ve grown from your experiences. Change is never easy, Bakugo, but sometimes its necessary to make us better people.”

“If you say so.” Bakugo said with a scoff.

“I know so.” Ren held out the Seth figure for Bakugo.

Bakugo pushed it back towards Ren, “Keep it. I can always get another.”

“Oh, thanks.” Ren held the figure to his chest, then smirked at Bakugo, “And you’re even giving out presents now. See? You’ve grown so much as a person! I’m so proud.”

“Shut up!” Bakugo sputtered as anger flushed his face. He suddenly grimaced as if he remembered something, “Hey, you know about the Red Rain, right?”

Ectoplasm startled in the corner of Ren’s eye, “What about it?”

Bakugo scrutinized him. He opened and closed his mouth several times, before running a hand through his hair.

“I saw a red sky over U.A. long before those shitty extras. You actually know what’s going on in this place, and not whatever bullshit Nezu is trying to hide.”

Ren stiffened as every Persona snapped to attention. His demeanor shifted, becoming the Leader so many looked up to. He sat up straight, regarding Bakugo with a terrifying sharpness to his eyes.

“What do you mean you saw it before? When and how?”

Bakugo’s eyes narrowed at Ren’s sudden shift, “It happened whenever I stepped into U.A. It was only a quick flash of red sky when I first saw it, and I got a killer migraine. I asked Raccoon Face and Shitty Hair if they saw anything, but they didn’t. What the hell is it? Why the fuck did I see it before everyone else?”

Raccoon Face? Shitty Hair? Ren could guess who those horrible nicknames belonged to, but he pushed that aside as he clutched his chin in thought.

What made Bakugo so different that he saw it first? Long before Ren or Morgana returned to the USJ... and they didn't even witness the hellish sky that currently dominated their home.

Satanael shuffled his wings, "I hate to imply this, Trickster, but what if he were a candidate for a change of heart?" Ren's blood ran cold as Satanael continued with a bowed head, "Nothing as big as a Palace Ruler. Perhaps he would be a smaller target such as those found in Mementos. He admitted to being... a less than stellar person before. If he was a bully or someone of ill repute, then it's possible he had some abstract form of a Treasure that reacted to the Metaverse's presence in the USJ."

"I sense no budding Treasure within him." Shiva said, "Are you certain?"

"The Moon of our world changed his own heart once he realized his wrongdoing. Perhaps this Tower went through something similar." Kohryu whispered with a sweeping breath, "He could have become something much worse considering the Metaverse's slow corruption of this world."

"Too bad. I would love to rip his heart out for how he treated Big Brother before."

"Alice." Ishtar admonished, "He may not be the shining bastion of chivalry, but we can all agree that he's changed for the better."

Bakugo stared at him, picking up on Ren's subtle change in his expression, "If you figured it out, then tell me!"

Ren set the Seth figure on top of his bento and crossed his arms, "You won't like it."

“I can take it.”

“Alright.” Ren sighed as he stared off at some inscrutable thing in the distance, “Back home, my friends and I used our powers to make someone have a ‘Change Of Heart’. We’d steal the Distorted Desires that turned people into twisted and deranged individuals, and without their Distorted Desires they’d feel remorse and confess their crimes.”

Bakugo stiffened, but listened aptly.

Ectoplasm was a forgotten ghost by the door, though he committed every detail to memory.

“Our targets ranged from a gym teacher who sexually harassed students, an artist who abused and stole work from his pupils, all the way up to a politician who used the same sort of power to murder and blackmail his way to the top. But not everyone was a big target. We had all manner of stalkers, abusers, cheaters-” Ren stared Bakugo in the eye, “... and bullies.”

Bakugo flinched as if Ren just slapped him. A hoarse, mirthless chuckle escaped Bakugo as he pinched the bridge of his nose.

“So you’re saying I’d be one of those targets?”

“Maybe, several months ago. But it seems you changed your own heart, so you wouldn’t have anything Distorted in you anymore. See what I mean about the Tower and change?”

“... I guess.” Bakugo sulked as he met Ren’s gaze once more, “But what does all of that have to do with the Red Rain?”

Ren’s heart beat faster. He’d have to tell the truth, or some sliver of it. Bakugo was smart enough to pick up on any lie, and trying to hide it now after everything they’ve just discussed not only felt wrong, but could permanently sour their relationship.

“What’s behind the veil is the source of everything. The Distorted Desires, the blood Red Rain, the feeling of wrongness pervading the whole school.” Ren stood up and turned to Bakugo with a mask of conviction, his eyes flooding with golden fire, “Mona and I were fighting against it with our friends when we... when that thing pulled a fast one and banished us here. We’ve been separated from everyone ever since.”

Bakugo’s eyes widened, “That’s why you suddenly appeared at the USJ.”

Ren nodded.

“... What is it? This thing you were fighting?”

Ren kept eye contact, his gold gaze glowing with righteous fury as his other Personas stirred with a flurry of emotions.

“The God Of Control, Yaldabaoth.”

A breeze kicked up, cutting through their clothes with an icy chill. It definitely wasn’t Morgana’s magic, given the dizzying sourness poisoning it. No Shadows appeared, at least, but the foulness of the Metaverse clung to it.

Bakugo studied him intently as the sudden wind died down, scanning Ren for any lie. He scowled when he found nothing but the truth, the raw conviction in Ren’s voice and the sickly wind the only shreds of evidence.

“You’ll kick his ass next time, right?”

“He won’t know what hit him.” Ren’s smirk was like the tip of a blade, “That’s what Mona and I came here for. You won’t have to worry about the Red Rain for much longer.”

Bakugo stiffened. There was a firm finality in Ren’s voice that must’ve tipped him off to something, but Ectoplasm stepped into the garden before he could say anything.

"I'm sorry to interrupt, but the lunch period is almost over." The hero said solemnly, "Bakugo, you should return to the main building now, otherwise you'll be late for your next class."

Bakugo released a breath and got to his feet. He pinned Ren with another odd look, "Nobody else knows about this, do they? Everyone at U.A., especially the extras in 1-A?"

Ren gave Ectoplasm an apologetic look before turning towards Bakugo, "Not yet. Nezu put most of the pieces together, though. We're working with him to get to the bottom of this."

"Are you going to tell them?"

"... In time. I'm not ready to tell everyone the whole truth yet."

Bakugo stiffly nodded, "Then your secret is safe with me until you do."

He shoved his hands in his pockets and stalked into the dorm.

Ren turned to Ectoplasm, who simply stared at him.

"I... I have many questions after what I just heard." Ectoplasm shuffled his cloak as Ren held his breath, "But Nezu assured me that we'd get answers at a later time, so I won't ask them right now. This may not mean much coming from me, but if you or Mona ever need anything, anything at all, you can ask me. Nobody should have gone through what you did."

"Thank you." Ren said with a relieved smile, "You didn't get to eat lunch. Do you want me to make you a plate of curry? I'll even whip up some fresh coffee to go with it."

Ectoplasm hummed, "... My free period is right after lunch."

"It's settled then."

Ren gathered his empty bento and the Seth figure from the bench. He and Ectoplasm walked together back into the building, and within ten minutes the whole dorm took on the scent of coffee and curry.

It kept Ren's hands busy as he thought over his talk with Bakugo.

He hoped the impending encounter with the Empress wouldn't be half as difficult as the Tower.

Class 1-A waited with their breaths lodged in their throats as Cementoss walked out with Mr. Compress following like a sulking phantom. The door shut, and the pressure in the room abated with a unified sigh of relief.

"Wow, and I thought Aizawa-sensei was intense!" Kaminari blurted.

"Right?" Ashido clapped her hands together, "I never thought someone handing out graded homework could be so aggressive!"

"He barely did anything though, aside from handing out papers." Sero said as he stared at the door, "Otherwise he just kinda... sat around and stared at us with that freaky mask of his? He didn't even talk after Cementoss introduced him!"

"Most likely because he and the other vigilantes are still training! La Brava with Midnight, even though she was much kinder, acted much the same way!" Iida chopped an arm at the smaller desk next to the teacher's, which Mr. Compress used, "It's common for them to take a more passive role until they are properly equipped for the job! At least, that's what happens with sidekicks at my brother's agency!"

"I honestly thought it would be a lot worse, kero." Asui said as her eyes turned to Bakugo, "You two barely looked at each other. Considering what he did to you at the Summer Camp-"

Bakugo bristled, "The hobo said he's not part of the League anymore, obviously. So drop it frog breath."

“I-I agree!” Aoyama lacked his usual flair and sparkles, taking on a sweaty and pale complexion, “Let bygones be bygones, oui?”

“I guess...” Ashido suddenly perked up and whirled to Bakugo, “Hey, what did you and Joker talk about over lunch? We didn’t get a chance to ask!”

“Mina.” Yaoyorozu warned.

“Mind your own damn business, Racoon Face!” Bakugo snapped.

“You don’t have to answer that question, Bakugo.” Todoroki’s smooth voice resonated through them like cold river water, “But... was he okay? Joker, I mean.”

“I know we saw him this morning,” Midoriya piped up, fidgeting with a certain notebook he’d been pouring over for days, “B-but none of the other students have, and he hasn’t shown up with any of the teachers for a class either.”

“He’s fine.” Bakugo said with a roll of his eyes, “He’s still the same annoying pain in the ass as he was back at the Blue Lotus.”

“And yet you say that with a much warmer tone than you have before!” Kirishima said, beaming, “You guys must’ve had a real manly talk, huh?”

“Shut up!”

“Enough about Joker.” Ojima stood from his chair and collected his bag, “We should all get together and talk about what we’re going to do about the Festival instead. We narrowed it down to a concert, but we still need to dish out roles for practice.”

Iida puffed out his chest, “You’re correct! I’ll need to make a list and-”

The door opened to reveal Aizawa. He briefly scanned them before zeroing in on a certain student.

“Yaoyorozu, Nezu wants to see you in his office.”

She nodded and stood in one flowing movement, “Everyone, discuss the Festival back in the dorms, alright? I’ll be there as soon as I can.”

“Leave it to us, Vice Rep!” Ashido gleefully shouted as Yaoyorozu left with Aizawa.

They walked only a few steps down the hall before the whispers started, weaving through the school like fine silk.

“Oh my god, did you get to see any of them today?”

“Yes! Spinner was with Snipe-sensei, and he was so cool! He smiled and let us take pictures with him and his cat!”

“Lucky. Mr. Compress was really distant and glared at anyone who even approached him. His mask is so terrifying!”

“La Brava was so adorable! She and Midnight-sensei really work well together!”

“One of my friends had to see Hound Dog yesterday over a family emergency, and she said Gentle Criminal was there. Apparently, the tea he made was divine and helped calm her down a lot.”

“I’m still mad that nobody has seen Joker yet. When are the teachers gonna let him out?”

“Right? Oh! I heard that one of the Hero Courses bumped into him this morning!”

“Really!? They’re so lucky! Which class was it?”

“1-A.”

“Ugh, of course it was. They always hog Joker’s attention!”

Yaoyorozu turned to Aizawa when he sighed, "One of the other teachers must've let it slip."

"Word gets around fast in this school." Yaoyorozu said as they continued, the flow of students thinning as they neared Nezu's office, "What did Nezu need to see me for?"

Aizawa shrugged, "Nezu hasn't shared anything with me."

"Oh... I see."

They reached the door, which opened before Aizawa could knock. She swore she saw her teacher's eye twitch before his expression faded to neutral.

"Come in!" Nezu chirped.

They stepped inside, but Yaoyorozu stopped dead in her tracks at the other person in the room, sitting on the couch holding a cup of coffee. Joker, dressed in casual clothes, blinked at her, his expression melting her hesitation with a warm smile.

Aizawa narrowed his eyes, "Nezu, what is this about?"

"I'm afraid that's between Amamiya, Miss Yaoyorozu, and myself."

Aizawa opened his mouth for a retort, but Yaoyorozu put a hand on his shoulder, "It's alright, Sensei. I'll talk with them."

"Come on, Eraser." Joker's smile, or rather Amamiya's, morphed into a teasing smirk, "We won't bite. Besides, she's a hero-in-training who can take care of herself."

Aizawa deadpanned, before looking at her. She firmly nodded. Nezu waved him off, and he left with one last warning glare at Nezu, and a nod to Amamiya.

Nezu gestured to the chair in front of his desk, "Please, sit! Would you like some tea?"

“Yes. Thank you.” Nezu set a porcelain cup in front of her and poured from a pot that had been prepared beforehand, filled with golden tea. She held it before taking a sip. “Oh! Is this Golden Tips Imperial?”

“You know of it?”

She looked over at Amamiya, and nodded, “Of course I do. It’s been a staple in my family for years.”

“Hmm!” Nezu grinned after he took another sip of his own tea, “Gentle Criminal recommended this blend to me recently, and I have to say I’ve grown quite fond of it myself!”

Yaoyorozu’s smile tightened, “I see.”

Amamiya and Nezu shared a look, before Nezu sighed. He put down his cup, his expression falling into something more serious, “I would like to apologize for springing this on you out of the blue, Miss Yaoyorozu. If circumstances were different, I would let you set this up at your own pace. However, time is not on our side at the moment. It hardly ever is, it seems.”

“What do you mean?”

Amamiya set his empty coffee cup on the table, stood up, and walked over to Nezu’s desk. He set Admiral Feesh aside before taking the other chair for himself, directly facing her. Her shoulders tensed as his eyes met hers, a mixture of vibrant silver splashed with drops of sunlight. It wasn’t the full-on blazing gold when they met at the manor so long ago now, but it was just as piercing.

Amamiya took in a breath to speak, when she held up her hand. He paused, furrowing his brow at her as her expression hardened.

“I don’t want an apology from you, if that’s what you were about to say.” She said, surprised at the gentleness of her tone. She meant to be a little harsher, but some warm feeling in her heart didn't allow her to be, "I just want to know why ."

"Why?" Amamiya parroted, "Bakugo asked the same thing, you know."

"Please don't change the subject."

His smile faltered, "I wasn't trying to." Amamiya crossed his legs and leaned back in his chair, not losing eye contact with her, "What happened to your parents was a price for something else."

"Explain."

"Did you happen to notice all of those kidnapping rings taken down after I visited your manor?"

"Yes, I did." She ran a finger over Flit's brooch as her wings twitched again, "It was an exchange of information in return for what happened to my parents?"

Amamiya nodded, "Reveal your parents' dirty laundry for information on missing people. Children, elderly, people who were sold on the black market for their quirks, child prostitution on top of experimentation. That same trail eventually lead to where Quirkless people were being held captive in Sapporo."

Her face drained of blood.

Nezu sipped his drink as his eyes flicked between them.

Amamiya bowed his head, "Your parents were the price to save all of them. You said you didn't want an apology, so let me offer this instead."

He picked up a small box that had been sitting on the edge of Nezu's desk, and held it out to her.

She downed the rest of her tea as her mouth suddenly went dry. It was clear that the two of them waited for her to make the next move, as Amamiya was frozen, waiting for her to take it. Yaoyorozu set her cup on the desk and reached for it. It was heavy, for something so small.

She popped it open, the lid dropping from her grasp as she stared at the intricate silver pocket watch resting in a bed of purple velvet. The metal sent ice into her skin as she picked it up, mouth agape.

“My grandfather’s pocket watch? This is... it’s a family heirloom that’s been passed down for generations. I remembered it wasn’t working the last time I saw. I was only a little girl, then.”

“We found it in the old mansion.” Amamiya’s expression softened, “It was broken, but I managed to fix it up. It works like a charm now.”

Yaoyorozu opened it, the intricate gears visible under the mechanism ticking like a heartbeat. That Hatsume woman had been correct. It was well taken care of, with nary a scratch or any sign of it being mishandled.

She held the watch as delicately as if it were a baby bird, willing her eyes not to water as she looked between Nezu and Amamiya.

“Is this why you wanted me to come here? To give this back?”

“Partly.” Nezu stated evenly, “I wish to add that Amamiya left out a vital piece of information about why these events happened the way they did-”

“Nezu.”

“Amamiya was manipulated into revealing your family’s wrongdoings because All For One orchestrated everything behind the scenes.”

“That’s not an excuse.” Amamiya pinched the bridge of his nose, “There was probably another way to find those people, but I was so desperate that I didn't see any. I should've looked for the information elsewhere."

"No."

Amamiya turned to her, "But-"

"No. You did what you did because people needed help." She held the watch to her chest, "I admit I have mixed feelings about you, Joker. When we met that night at the Blue Lotus, you were very kind and offered me admirable advice. You've continued to treat me with respect, even when we came face to face within my home. On the other hand, though I understand why you did it now, you're the cause of what happened to my parents. They did wrong and will be justly punished for it, but they are still my parents. It was... difficult for me to stand up to them."

Amamiya pursed his lips, but weathered her words with dignified grace, "That's... fair."

That feeling in her heart nudged the next words out of her, almost like a guiding hand, "I don't think we can start over, but-" She held out her right hand, the left still holding her grandfather's watch, "how about we call a truce instead? Perhaps we can both work to better things from here on out."

"A truce." He smiled as he took her hand in his, "It's better than what I was expecting, honestly."

They shook once and then let go. That spark within her seemed to purr with satisfaction, growing in strength as it wrapped around her heart, as warm as a cat sleeping in a patch of sunlight. Amamiya blinked oddly, as if he had felt it too. Their smiles, previously small and polite, widened.

Nezu subtly leaned forward and studied them with a strange look in his eyes.

Yaoyorozu cleared her throat as she broke eye contact, "Is this all we needed to discuss?"

Like a popped bubble, the mood changed again. Nezu and Amamiya exchanged a long glance.

With a nod from Amamiya, Nezu started, "There is one serious matter with which we'd like your aid."

"My aid?"

She found herself under the intense, scrutinizing gaze of the principal, "You can back out if you wish, but understand that what is discussed from here onward cannot leave this room."

She straightened at his strict tone, "What's going on?"

"We're preparing for another Red Rain." Amamiya said plainly.

Yaoyorozu's stomach dropped, "Another one? There's going to be more?"

"Yes, unfortunately. It will most likely happen during the Cultural Festival." Nezu said, causing her heart to beat faster, "And no, we cannot cancel it. Avoiding this will only worsen the situation in the long run."

She frantically looked between them, "Everyone will be safe, right? Witnessing one was terrifying enough."

"Of course, we'll do everything in our power to protect everyone." Nezu said, "If you would, Amamiya?"

He stood. Her breath was stolen from her as his costume materialized in a flowing veil of blue cinders. She, like the rest of her classmates, saw his new costume from Spotlight. But seeing it in person was a marvel, a brilliant mix of deep onyx with gold trimming, with a pop of scarlet and glittering gold from his gloves. The raw power and majesty he exuded made the hair on her arms stand on end, as if she sat before a regal monarch of which thousands would eagerly bend the knee to.

Which, whenever she saw the comments on his Spotlight, wasn't so far fetched in reality.

Joker searched through his pockets, oblivious of her gawking, and set items on Nezu's desk. A folded Black Robe, a Black Kogatana, a Black Model Gun, and a blank card last.

She stared into Joker's demonic gold and black mask, so different to the white and black domino mask she saw months ago.

"I know what the cause of the Red Rain is," Joker stated, "And it is far more dangerous than it appears. What you witnessed with the rest of your classmates was barely the tip of the iceberg, and if we don't do something about it soon..."

"Then it won't only be U.A. that will pay for it," Nezu interjected with a deep frown, "But it will affect the entire world at large."

This news deeply unsettled her.

But right now they didn't need a terrified girl floundering for answers, they needed a hero to work with them. Her heart pounded in her ears and her palms became sweaty, but she took a deep breath and slowly let it out. She donned her hero persona, Creati.

"What do you need me to do?" She asked, her voice sharp and alert.

Joker smiled. He lifted the Black Kogatana and handed it to her. She placed the watch in her pocket and took it with both hands, running her fingers down the cold metal.

"If possible, I need you to create exact replicas of each of these items." Joker said, donning an equal air of grave seriousness, "With them, I can create weapons and armor that will greatly increase our chances for a successful mission."

Her eyes widened, “Will normal weapons and support items not work?”

Joker shook his head, “We can’t risk it. Whatever comes with the Red Rain will most likely be packing heat, and normal support items and certain quirks may not work against them.”

So not just another Red Rain, but an attack during the Cultural Festival on top of it? Were they insane?

She glanced at Nezu, who rested his chin on his interlaced paws, “How are you planning to keep this from the media? There’s already a fairly large group of them right outside U.A. Plus with all of the people coming to the Cultural Festival, surely this is too dangerous!”

“We believe the event will be centered around the USJ, miles away from the festivities.” Nezu said with a nod, “But even so, security will be increased to the max, and several top pros, Joker’s teammates, and robots will be guarding the facility at all times during the Festival. If things do according to plan, then the mass majority won’t even suspect anything.”

“Kohryu and a few others will be covering for us while we deal with it.”

“... Kohryu?” The pieces of this shocking revelation came together, “So you are doing something during the Festival like the rest of the classes, except you’ll have a secret mission on top of it.” She looked at the black blade in her hands, her brows hardening in determination.

She set the knife down, and picked up the robe to feel what material it was made of. The kogatana was just a carbon steel blade painted black, and the robe was simple cotton and dyed the same color. The card wasn’t made of any special material, either. The Model Gun was made from a certain type of plastic rather than metal.

With a nod, she rolled up her sleeves. Multicolored lights sprouted on her forearm and an exact copy of the black blade was born from it. She gripped the hilt as she gave it a once over before handing it to Joker.

He studied it with a practiced eye, and nodded towards Nezu. Before long, perfect replicas of each item lay next to the original.

“Will it work?” Nezu asked Joker.

“Well, there’s one way to find out, but...” Joker looked at her, uncertain.

Nezu chuckled, “She’s come this far, Joker. Do you doubt her now?”

“Of course not. The Empress is made of sterner stuff than most people.”

Yaoyorozu put her hand over her heart, “I understand the gravity of the situation, and whatever is shared will be kept secret until you or Nezu state otherwise. I’ll stake my hero name on it.”

Joker released a long sigh through his nose, “Alright.”

He grabbed the copies she made, then walked towards wall. Her brow furrowed when he took a key from a silver chain around his neck and turned it mid-air. She jumped when a glowing barred door appeared out of nowhere, and he vanished inside without a trace. A chill permeated the whole room along with the soft light, a cloud of ghostly blue fog clinging to the floor.

Nezu chuckled as she sat there, frozen in shock, “I never suspected he had something like this up his sleeve, either. I had very much the same reaction!”

She blinked rapidly at Nezu, “His powers are truly unique, aren’t they?”

“Something like that.”

“Nezu...”

“Hmm?”

“There’s something bigger going on here, isn’t there? You said that whatever is happening at the USJ could affect the entire world. It has something to do with Joker specifically, doesn’t it? He wouldn’t know so much otherwise.”

Nezu grinned, “Ah, you are wise beyond your years, Miss Yaoyorozu. However, I cannot fully share everything yet.”

“Why not?”

“Let’s just say...” Nezu looked at the glowing door, his tail drooping over the back of his chair, “Some truths are stranger than fiction. We need a solid foundation of heroes to believe us before anyone else can know the full reality of his situation. That’s one of the challenges for us to overcome during the Cultural Festival.”

She was stunned by the cryptic answer, but had no choice but to accept it.

Nezu poured them another cup of tea while they awaited Joker’s return.

Several minutes passed before the barred door opened and Joker waltzed in with an impressive (and equally alarming) bounty in his arms. He set the pile on Nezu’s desk. She didn’t comment on how pale Joker turned since disappearing into the door, his hands trembling.

“It worked. It actually worked.” He said as he held up two weapons.

The quality would make the most experienced Support Company salivate. There was something to these weapons, like a presence lingering inside. The whip was garish in looks, from its bright gold handle studded with sparkling jewels, to the whip itself being a pink strand of light ending in a studded golden spike.

The gun was its equal, a combat shotgun painted black. Though it had no jewels or bright gold, it felt as alive as the whip.

“Dainaraka Whip from Black Frost and a Megido Blaster from Shiva. Midnight could use the whip, and Snipe could take the shotgun, or he could borrow one of my pistols if it came down to it. Vasuki could also make a rifle, too.”

Nezu hummed, “Snipe is competent in many different arms, so there’s no need to worry about that.”

Joker nodded as he set them down, then he held up a beautiful robe of black feathers next, “Black Wing Robe from Yatagarasu. He’s the only one who can make armor in my current stock. The heroes should be able to wear it under their costumes with no hindrance, just like my teammates with the armor I gave them.”

He reached for a beautiful ring next. It looked as if it were carved from the purest turquoise ice from the arctic circle, it left a faint sheen of frost on Nezu’s desk.

Joker hesitated, staring at the ring as he held it in his palm.

“What is it, Joker?” Nezu asked.

“I...” Joker scratched the back of his head, “Byakko was supposed to make a Skill Card, but it didn’t work. Elizabeth said Byakko wouldn’t become a Skill Card, or a weapon, or any piece of armor. She suggested that he needed something else and gave me a rock. A rock. I thought she was joking, but we got this ring out of it. So I tested Cerberus for the Skill Card, and instead of Megaton Raid he became God’s Hand.”

This whole conversation was officially lost on her.

Nezu nodded along as if he understood everything Joker said.

“Not only that. These weapons... this armor...” Joker frowned at them, some emotion flickering across his eyes. She didn’t like to think it was pain, but... “They’re stronger than before. Upgraded versions of the items I would get back home. Much higher attack power for either weapon, with more defence on the robe.”

“Why such a drastic change?” Nezu asked, clearly intrigued.

“Lavenza said its because we’re using a completely different source. It’s how Fafnir was born in the first place.” Joker paced a small circle around Nezu’s office, fidgeting with the ring between his thumb and pointer finger, “But if this ring does what I think it does, then it could add a whole new level of strategy and bigger advantages over Shadows-”

Nezu cleared his throat. Joker froze and stared at them, horrified.

“... Sorry.”

“It’s quite alright. What do you want to do?”

“I’d like to keep the ring for now.” Joker said as he met Nezu’s void black gaze, “To test something before we give it to anyone. Just to be safe.”

“By all means, keep the Skill Card and the ring. However, I’ll request that the weapons and armor stay with me for the time being.”

Joker nodded. He pocketed the Skill Card and the ring before his costume disappeared in a shower of bright blue embers. The blue door faded away along with the ghostly mist, and if she didn’t know any better she’d think nothing out of the ordinary had ever occurred here.

“How much do I owe for the gear?” Nezu asked.

“Well, since you asked.” Amamiya dug out a phone to text something.

Nezu picked up his phone after it chimed. Whatever it was, he didn’t react beyond a flick of his ear.

“... I see. This will be quite the expensive ordeal, indeed.”

“This is nothing.” Amamiya chuckled, “Just wait until I start fusing.”

“Um, is there anything else for me to do?”

“Ah, my apologies.” Nezu smiled at her, “But could you come back every day after classes to make copies of these items? I don’t want you to overuse your quirk by doing them all in one go.”

“It would be no problem for me, Principal Nezu.”

“Excellent! That marks one thing off the list. Now then...” Nezu mischievously grinned, “Could you escort Amamiya to the support lab?”

He raised a brow, “I thought you wouldn’t let me be alone with any of the students? Bakugo definitely wasn’t an exception earlier.”

Nezu waved his paw, “Most students are out of the main building and other teachers are otherwise occupied. I’m sure a two minute walk with Miss Yaoyorozu would be no trouble. Unless, of course, you feel like you need a babysitter for such a trivial task?”

Amamiya shook his head with a weary sigh.

“Good. Run along now. I’ll collect your payment and meet you in the lab in twenty minutes!”

Amamiya grumbled under his breath, but the dismissal was obvious.

Yaoyorozu stood and gave Nezu a polite bow. They walked out together, and stopped when the door to Nezu’s office closed.

“You don’t have to take me there if you don’t want to.” He said as he stuck his hands in his pockets, “I can probably get there by myself. Eventually. This place is huge.”

“It’s no trouble.” She said, waving her hand, “It’s this way.”

They walked in silence through the empty halls. Amamiya took to scanning their surroundings, his eyes lingering over windows and doors, occasionally winking at any cameras they passed under. Her curiosity got the better of her.

“Can I ask a question?” She asked to distract herself.

“Shoot.”

“Am I really the Empress?”

Amamiya stopped, his eye brows raising, “Yes, you are. Did the whole class figure out the Arcanas? Bakugo asked me about being the Tower earlier.”

“We did, somewhat. Tokoyami was of great help in that regard.” They continued walking at a leisurely pace, “Why do you assign Arcanas to people?”

Amamiya smirked, “That’s two questions.”

“O-Oh.” She felt her face heat up as her eyes went to the ground, “You don’t have to answer-”

“I don’t assign them to people.”

She blinked, “You don’t?”

“It’s the other way around, really.” He said, smiling wistfully, “The Arcana takes to whoever I develop a deeper relationship with. In return, that bond provides me with strength. You’re the Empress because of the way you are naturally, Yaoyorozu, not my personal interpretation of you.”

“I see.” Her mind turned over the possibilities, “Can I ask who holds other Arcanas? I’ve read that there are many, and I can’t help but wonder.”

“There’s quite a list. Nezu is the Devil, Aizawa is the Hierophant. Midoriya is the Chariot while Bakugo is the Tower. Believe it or not, Miruko herself is the High Priestess and Hawks has the Star.” He leaned closer and whispered, “Judgement is All Might .”

She gaped, “No way.”

“Yes way. Miruko was so excited she punched me when she found out.”

“Do you yourself have an Arcana?”

“I started out as the Fool, and evolved to the World after Kamino...” He frowned suddenly, “But there have been some new developments, an extended deck if you wanted to call it that. A few are in the Reversed position, while another person can be the Upright of the same Arcana. That’s... never happened before. There’s also extra cards such as Apostle, Aeon, and Faith. There’s also Hunger, but let’s just say I’m glad that one didn’t get very far and leave it at that.”

“Why are there so many extras?”

“My original Strength said it was my body’s way of coping for a sudden lack of a deck, and to stockpile extra power from this unique Sea-” He cut himself off and cleared his throat, “Nevermind. Sorry for chatting your ear off. I haven’t had the chance to talk about this with someone else in quite some time.”

She stiffened. Original Strength? A sudden lack of a deck? A Fool evolving to the World...

That begs the questions she asked mere days ago in class; Where was Joker from? What happened to him before the USJ?

Had he been torn way from his 'original deck'? An entire group of people with whom he's forged deep bonds with. Were they gone? Or was the distance so great he had to forcefully adapt to less than ideal circumstances. But if they were still around, why didn't Joker go to them instead of staying here to develop new ones?

... That implication made her stomach sink deeper.

"No, don't apologize." She whispered before the silence stretched too long, "I was the one who asked such sensitive questions in the first place. Come, the Support Lab is just down this hall."

They turned the corner and came to the heavy steel door.

There was a sharp intake of breath before Amamiya grabbed her arm and yanked her back. She could barely cry out before an explosion rocked the hallway, the thick door of the Support Lab getting blown off of its hinges. Two bodies flailed with the black smoke flowing into the hallway, one coughing and the other cackling with mad glee.

"That was a voice modulator for my hero costume!" A vaguely familiar voice yelled, "How did you make it explode!?"

"I thought I could improve it by adding a jet engine!"

"That could've been my head!"

"Come onnnn! You have to admit that it would've been cool!"

"It's not cool if my head gets exploded, Mei!"

Amamiya sighed in relief as he let go of her arm, the smoke fading away to reveal Shinsou Hitoshi and Hatsume Mei. Soot covered Hatsume head to toe, but she had a face-splitting grin.

Annoyed lavender eyes landed on them, equally filthy, but Shinsou's expression lit up like Christmas lights.

“Ren!!” Shinsou was a blur as he ran to Amamiya and threw his arms around him, backing off just as fast, “I was wondering when you’d-”

“JOKER!!” Hatsume tackled Amamiya, who stumbled but didn’t fall as Hatsume squeezed the life out of him. She stepped back, grinning, as she locked her hands on his shoulders and looked at him up and down, “I’m so glad you’re here! Momma and I were so worried after Kamino, all of our babies overran the shop for days!!”

Yaoyorozu flinched when Hatsume’s gaze landed on her, her expression falling flat, “Oh. It’s you.”

“Um... I-”

Flit suddenly came to life from her brooch form, her wings singing like wind chimes as she buzzed around Hatsume’s head. Amamiya and Shinsou blinked rapidly as Hatsume stuck out her finger.

“Flit! Momma said you went with your person!” She glanced at Yaoyorozu, her previous iciness melting away, “And Flit’s always been a good judge of character. Wanna be friends!?”

“I-I... Um... of course.”

“Great! You and me, we’re gonna take the Support world by storm!!”

“HATSUME!!!”

Power Loader emerged from the Support lab, looking livid.

“Woopsie doodles. Sorry Power Loader-sensei!!” Hatsume shouted.

Power Loader looked down the hall, “Oh, you’re here, Amamiya. Nezu said you were on your way.”

“On your way for what!?” Hatsume said, bouncing in place, “Are you here to make babies with us!?”

“Mei!” Shinsou snapped, his red face falling in his hands, “Please stop wording it like that.”

“There’s no fun in that, Hitoshi!!”

“‘Hitoshi’? ‘Mei’?” Amamiya’s grin grew sly as Shinsou’s face turned a deeper red under his hands, “On a first name basis now, are we?”

“I-it’s not like that!”

“What!?” Hatsume shrieked, “You said we could make babies together!! Your hero costume needed a complete overhaul anyway!”

Shinsou looked as if he wished for the earth to swallow him.

“Are you sure you don’t want advice?” Amamiya locked an arm around Shinsou’s shoulders, “As your big brother, it’s my job to tease you and give you pointers on dating. Do I need to give you the talk or have your parents covered that already?”

Hatsume cackled.

Shinsou’s neck and ears were brighter than cherries, “Ren!!”

“Ugh, enough teenage drama.” Power Loader stomped over and put a firm hand on Hatsume’s shoulder, “You’ve got some cleaning up to do, young lady.”

“Fiiine! Oh!” Hatsume smiled at Yaoyorozu, “Can I borrow Flit for a while? I haven’t seen her in so long! We gotta catch up! I’ll give her back later!”

“Sure? Just don’t make her explode, my classmates would be very upset.”

“I wouldn’t dare! She’s Momma’s favorite little baby! Aside from me, of course!”

Power Loader grumbled as he pushed her towards the lab with Flit floating after her, then turned to Amamiya, "I'll show you where everything is, if you'll just follow me."

"I guess this is where we part ways, Joker." She said with a smile.

"Just call me Ren." He said with a wink, "See you later, Empress."

"Hey, if I can call you Ren, then you can call me Momo. Or Yaomomo, as my classmates do."

"Will do, Yaomomo."

Power Loader and Shinsou stared at him oddly as they went into the lab, leaving her alone in the hallway stained with smoke and ash. The metal door had been embedded in the opposite wall, deep cracks spread around it like lightning. With a sigh, she collected herself and headed towards the dorms, the events over the past hour encompassing her thoughts.

She grabbed her phone from her pocket and scrolled through explanations of the Arcana as she walked.

The High Priestess.

The Star.

The Devil.

The Hierophant.

The Aeon and Apostle.

... The Empress.

But it was the description of the World that gave her pause in front of the 1-A dorms.

The World: When this card appears in the Upright position, it signals that a long-term project, relationship, or career has come full circle. A major goal is either completed, or just needs a few more steps in order to do so. The hardships of the World's journey have finally come to fruition, gaining enrichment and vast knowledge along the way. The World would do well to fully contemplate this journey before it comes to an end.

Full circle. Joker first appeared at the USJ, and from the way they were preparing for another Red Rain centered around the USJ... it might end there too.

She shook her head as she pocketed her phone, her fingers brushing the cool metal of her grandfather's pocket watch. She walked into the dorms, familiar voices filling her ears.

"No no NO!!! Deku and Iida, you're way too stiff!! You have to be loose and flexible, like this!"

Yaoyorozu stepped into the common room in time to see Ashido perform a fluid break dance in the middle of the floor. Her movement stopped, and she saw Yaoyorozu standing there, albeit upside down from being in a headstand.

"Yaomomo!!" Ashido fluidly rolled to her feet as other eyes turned to her, "Welcome back!!"

"Thank you." She said with a smile, "Where do you need me?"

Tokoyami stood from the couch, "We could use another person in the band. Can you play an instrument?"

"Yes, I can play a few."

Tokoyami waved her to follow, and they walked to the other end of the room. Guitars and a drum set were already being set up. Bakugo sat by the drums, expression soured by annoyance. They met eyes.

There must have been some internal spark, a glint of forbidden knowledge Joker shared, visible between them that only they knew of.

Bakugo's brow hardened, and he gave her a nod.

She nodded back.

With that, the Tower and the Empress vowed to do what they were able for their classmates as the next Red Rain loomed over the near future.

Heeeey so I want to chat about something quick.

So, from here one out we'll be wrapping up remaining arcs and focusing on the character interactions as Joker and co march forth towards the inevitable confrontation with Yaldy. I know this fic is long, very long, so I really appreciate everyone's patience and want to thank those who have read this far and will continue stick with me to the end. Heck, I've even counted the chapters we have left and have known what the final words of the whole fic are going to be for a very long time. We only have limited room to fit so many interactions. Once we reach the true Endgame, that's it. No more cute interactions with Eri, no more joking around with Spinner or any of the other Thieves of the BNHA world, no more interactions with the students or teachers. That'll be it. The End. I guess what I'm trying to say is that we should savor the last leg of the story and these characters as much as we can before it all comes to a close.

Speaking of arcs, I will say that there won't be an arc with the MLA. Sure, I will add some of the characters in token appearances, but honestly I don't think the MLA would be that stupid to pick some big fight with Joker or U.A., and without the League Of Villains to kick that arc off... well, I don't really see a point. And it would be forcefully extending the story longer than it already is, so... yeah.

I'm So Tired, ya'll

Diversiónary Tactic

Chapter 87: Diversiónary Tactic

“Ah, that.” Nezu’s tail flicked and Ren caught Cementoss giving Nezu a side-eyed look, “I promise they’re in good health! In fact, they’re working on something with a few of the other teachers for extra credit. You may not see much of them for the remainder of the week, I’m afraid.”

Morgana narrowed his eyes, “Extra credit.”

“Extra credit!”

(See the end of the chapter for notes.)

Fanart!

sosothesoap on Twitter!

The four forms surrounded a single imposing figure, the mist of the Challenge Room churned as they prepared their final attack.

“Take this!!” Mona shouted as he jabbed the pointed tip of a beautifully curved horn.

“No hard feelings, of course.” Mr. Compress said, flicking a gorgeous lily made from diamond through the air, as a painter would the final stroke of his brush.

“I’ll join this waltz!” Gentle Criminal held up an orb the fit perfectly in the palm of his hand, shifting through a thousand colors.

“Hey, don’t leave me out!!” Spinner yelled as the icy ring on his right middle finger glistened.

Two components of ice crackled and writhing electricity danced in tandem, swallowing the figure in the center within the wrath of elements. The ice was repelled, swirling away in beautiful fractals and jagged points. The Dragon’s Heart in Gentle Criminal’s hand stopped the ice from reaching his comrades, warping reality in a dizzying vortex of neon. The elements stilled, the Challenge room grew thick with mist from the chaotic fallout.

The four combatants, all panting in exhaustion, waited as stray ice shards shattered over the stones.

A shadow moved within, blowing away the mist with a flick of his wrist. His white cape and pitch black hair bellowed with the movement, his cape settling down around his feet. His gold helmet, with two long horns pointing straight up, shined oddly in the cool light that made the Challenge Room so ominous. An eye patch covered his left eye.

He slammed the butt of his spear into the ground, “I commend thine valor and camaraderie,” His deep voice echoed, “But thine attacks did nothing. Now, you shall feel my might!”

Static washed over their skin as the figure held up his hand.

“Enough, Odin.” Joker, who leaned on the entry to the hallway, pulled himself up and walked to the middle of the room as the others all but collapsed onto the floor.

Odin lowered his hand and bowed to Joker, an odd sight considering Joker didn’t even reach Odin’s shoulder. He returned to Joker, the other Personas welcoming their newest self into the mindscape.

“Our attacks really did nothing!” Spinner cried, “Just how powerful was that guy, Joker!?”

Lavenza, who sat next to La Brava and Lady Stubbs by the entry, chuckled, "Odin was born between Fafnir and Shiva. It's no wonder he's so strong."

"Well, that plus three passive skills for extra defences." Joker said as he rubbed his neck.

Fafnir preened within the mindscape, ignoring Cu Chulainn's slight jealousy over another caped spear wielder.

The last few days were filled with executions to gain arms and armor for the heroes. Yesterday, due to Fafnir's insistence, they performed their very first fusion since entering U.A. The result was none other than Odin himself, an absolute powerhouse and a master of thunder and lightning. Shiva didn't mind being replaced by Odin since they had similar builds, and now he was safely in the Compendium with Titania.

"I'd fear for the sanity of this world if you'd had that one earlier in your budding vigilante career." Mr. Compress said as he stood and dusted off ice chips from his coat. He looked at the sparkling diamond lily in his grip, "Just as I'd fear anyone who held this and had ill intentions. I can tell for a fact that this is made from real diamond and would sell for a kingly sum if people knew about its powers."

"No kidding." Spinner sat up, "But I'm totally bushed! These things take a lot of energy. I feel like I'll sleep for the rest of the week!"

"Really?" Gentle Criminal said as he rolled his shoulders, "I'm a bit tired, but otherwise I feel fine."

Mona sighed, "These spells use your own energy, with each spell costing a different amount depending on how strong they are. Although..." Mona chuckled, "Your Blizzard Ring needs only a fraction of what the rest of us used."

“Really?” Spinner gaped at the others, “How the hell are you guys still standing?”

“You’d probably be more of a physical build, like Skull was.” Joker said, clutching his chin, “He wasn’t really good with casting magic too often, but he really packed a punch with his bigger health pool and raw attack power. I’ll see if I can’t get you one with a physical ability, somehow. I haven’t fused any new Personas except for Odin, so I’ll keep you posted.”

Spinner beamed at him, “I’d appreciate it, Buddy!”

“Well, now that our test is over, what should we do with these?” Gentle Criminal asked as he stared down at the orb, “Holding Kohryu’s heart in my hands is... rather strange, but I feel his immense power as if it were my own.”

“It’s more than that.” Mr. Compress turned the diamond flower over in his hands, “These things feel alive. A constant presence that’s as comforting as it is empowering.”

Mona exchanged a look with Joker, before he held up the curved horn, “We are technically holding pieces of Joker’s soul after all, so it’s no wonder why they feel this way.”

“Dude.” Spinner’s eyes went wide, “Are these even safe for you to make!? I remember the last time you said your soul was broken!”

“This is a lot different.” Joker said as he waved off their concerned looks, “It’s a natural process in the Velvet Room, so there’s no need to worry about me getting sick again.”

“Oh, that’s good.” Gentle Criminal said, sighing in relief.

“We would never intentionally harm Joker that way.” Lavenza stated with grim determination, “However, might I suggest keeping these powerful items hidden until they’re needed?”

“They’re more dangerous than the arms and armor I’ve given Nezu, so it would be smart not to flaunt them around.” Joker waved the others to follow him to the bag nestled by La Brava, “We’ll keep them in here for the time being.”

They handed him the items; the Blizzard Ring from Byakko, Goddess Horn from Ishtar, Dragon’s Heart from Kohryu, and the Diamond Dust Lily from Gabriel, and placed them into the bag. Joker’s hand brushed the small box from Power Loader, full of the parts he’d need to fix his original phone.

Joker zipped the bag shut.

“When are you going to repair your old phone?” Gentle Criminal asked, who watched from over Joker’s shoulder.

Joker winced, “Soon.”

Mona cleared his throat at the sudden silence, “How’s it looking, La Brava?”

“Wellll,” She looked at her laptop, another item they kept hidden here, “It doesn’t have internet access of course, but I should be able to make a virus from U.A.’s security. We just need to get the information first.”

“Which is basically impossible.” Spinner stated as he plopped down, rubbing both hands down Lady Stubb’s back as she jumped on his lap, “We’re watched 24/7 when school is in session, and we don’t have an excuse to leave the dorms in the afternoon.”

“Going off by ourselves will seem suspicious.” Gentle Criminal said, frowning as his hand traced over his facial hair, “We’re lucky to even meet like this so early in the morning.”

Joker shrugged, “Nezu technically hasn’t forbade us from the Velvet Room.”

Lavenza smiled, her eyes crinkling in a truly terrifying way, “Let me know if he does give you trouble. A simple Megidolaon would be able to show him the error of that way of thinking.”

Mr. Compress chuckled, “It’s not that Nezu wants to ban us from coming here, it’s that he knows he can’t because the Attendants are too powerful even for U.A. to handle.”

Joker shivered. He had yet to beat any of them. Yet. Sure, he had beaten Caroline and Justine once, but he had a full team of Phantom Thieves. Lavenza and the other Attendants played by completely different rules in their battles and, quite literally in Lavenza’s case, were twice or thrice as strong as Justine or Caroline.

He was getting close though, judging by how there was a single bead of sweat on Elizabeth’s brow last time, or Margaret being slightly winded before she wiped the floor with him. It was only a matter of time before he tasted his first victory.

Hopefully.

“In any case,” Mr. Compress picked up his cane resting against the wall, “I may have an idea about our security predicament.”

Joker and Mona exchanged glances before Joker asked, “What idea?”

“Nezu is allowing you to practice for your upcoming performance, correct?”

“Yeah, in one of the gyms around campus.” Joker raised a brow, “But the area will be heavily monitored too.”

Mr. Compress hummed, pacing small circles as he muttered to himself. They haven’t seen his face since coming to U.A., though Joker and the others could tell that his brow was furrowed in deep thought.

“Earth to Mr. Compress!” Mona said, jumping and waving his arms, “What did you have in mind?”

The man cleared his throat, “There may be an opportunity for one of us to sneak into Nezu’s office if we all play our cards right.”

“Should we make an attempt so early?” Gentle Criminal asked. “If we get caught, the consequences could be disastrous.”

“We’ve only been here a week.” La Brava said.

“Yes, one week, out of how many?” Mr. Compress asked, to which nobody replied, “Exactly. We don’t have a concrete timeline for when we have to... part ways. Wouldn’t it be better to be as prepared as we can at the earliest we can manage?”

“I see your point.” Joker said dimly, “So, what’s your plan then?”

“The Cultural Festival is in two weeks.” Mr. Compress resumed his pacing, hands and cane tucked behind his back, “The students are turning their focus to their respective Festival duties, while the teachers will be keeping a close eye on everything from here on out.”

“Okay, and?” La Brava asked.

“What if the heroes had an additional distraction? A situation they truly could not turn away from?”

“Uh, I dunno if I like where this is going.” Spinner muttered.

Joker studied Mr. Compress, “A major distraction will mean less eyes on us, which means someone has a better chance to sneak away undetected.”

“The best option would be you, Joker.” Mona said, giving his partner a determined look, “Since you can teleport between Velvet Room doors. If you put multiple Personas at play when ‘practicing’ while a few doors around the school are active...”

“Right. I could sneak in when they’re focused on my Personas.”

“What’s this distraction, Compress?” Gentle Criminal asked, “It must be good if you’re so sure it’ll work.”

Mr. Compress turned his back on them, “It’s a matter that concerns all of us, really. But it’s also a deeply personal one. I don’t want to share it until after it’s over, Joker. Spinner, however, can come with me for insurance.”

“Me!?” Spinner gasped.

“Yes, you. It may take a few days for the heroes to prepare, giving Joker time to put up the doors he needs.”

Joker studied Mr. Compress’ back with a hardened gaze, “You promise to tell us what it was when it’s over?”

He faced Joker and drew an X over his chest, “Cross my heart and hope to die, Ren.”

A few moments of intense silence pass before Joker sighed.

“... Okay. I’ll trust you.”

Mr. Compress’ shoulders relaxed, “Thank you. You won’t regret it.”

“In that case...” La Brava pulled out a USB drive and put her laptop aside. She stood up and handed it to Joker, “Just plug this in Nezu’s computer and it’ll copy everything I need from it.”

Joker held it in his palm, chuckling at the irony, “Now I know how Queen felt.”

“Remember team, we can pull this off.” Morgana said as he straightened his posture, “If we’re careful, Nezu and the other heroes won’t know a thing until its too late.”

Joker enclosed the drive in his fist, “No pressure or anything.”

“And no regrets either!” Spinner said.

“Merp!” Lady Stubbs helpfully added.

~~ 14 days until the Festival ~~

“Okay, maybe I do regret this. Just a teensy bit.” Shuichi muttered the following evening.

Mr. Compress wagged a finger, “You worry too much, my dear Spinner.”

Present Mic and Snipe, the teachers he and Shuichi had been assigned today, exchanged confused glances as they escorted them to Nezu’s office.

“Sooooo, what do you Listeners need to talk to Nezu about!?” Present Mic tried, breaking into his signature energetic grin.

“That’s for Nezu’s ears to hear first, I’m afraid.” Mr. Compress remarked dryly.

Snipe said nothing, though they could feel him watching through his gas mask.

They approached Nezu’s door, which opened by itself when they got close enough. An entirely electric lock, he noted, without so much as a keyhole to pick. Mr. Compress made a mental note to inform Ren while he marched in without breaking his stride.

“My, my.” Nezu turned away from his computer to face them, smiling, “To what do I owe the unexpected pleasure, gentlemen?”

Mr. Compress planted himself in the chair in front of Nezu’s desk, then turned his masked face to the heroes. Nezu nodded to Snipe and Present Mic, who hesitantly left after staring at one another in concern.

Shuichi stood behind Mr. Compress, arms crossed and expression set in hesitant curiosity.

“Shall I prepare some tea?” Nezu asked, “Whatever needs to be discussed seems serious.”

“No.” Mr. Compress stated, “I’d rather get this little chat over with so we can assemble the war party. It’s a dire matter that’s been on my mind for quite some time, and now I want to put this issue to bed. Permanently .”

Shuichi sputtered as his eyes nearly bugged out of his head, while Nezu frowned.

“Oh my. That bad?”

“That bad.” Mr. Compress leaned closer to Nezu’s desk, the rat leaning in to listen, “After all, I just happen to know where All For One’s elusive doctor is hiding.”

A beat of silence passed. Nezu was taken aback, his ears and tail shot straight up, his brilliant white coat standing on end. There was a sharp inhale behind him-

“YOU WHAT!?”

The pair of heroes listening in jumped back at the sheer volume.

“My coffee is totally better.”

“It is not .”

“It so is!”

“You can’t even make your own cup on a good day, Kayama. How do you expect me to believe yours is better?”

“Then we let Ren decide!” Nemuri eagerly grinned at Ren, “What do you say, kiddo?”

The kitchen island was a disaster. Honestly, it looked like a tornado came through here and spat out all assortments of coffee beans and brewing instruments everywhere.

Eri sat on the stool, sipping on a jelly packet given to her by Aizawa. The others were scattered around the dorm, Manami, Kaito, and Morgana were in the common room while Tobita offered to do everyone’s laundry to keep himself busy.

Lady Stubbs left the dorm in the afternoon, and since school was out the heroes had no objection to her sudden absence. A few hours had passed, and she hadn’t come back yet. Ren had no idea what she was up to.

“Alright, alright.” Ren chuckled as he held up his hands in surrender, “I’ll taste them and give the verdict.”

“Yes!” She smirked at Aizawa, “A thousand yen says mine’s better.”

Aizawa groaned and looked up to the ceiling as if he regretted his life choices. His eyes then snapped to her, “Two thousand.”

She licked her lips and rubbed her palms together before they stared at Ren in expectation.

Ren poured coffee from Aizawa’s container into his mug, then downed it in one go. He kept his expression neutral as pure caffeine coated his tongue, followed by a burnt aftertaste. He did the same for Nemuri’s.

Hers was too weak in taste, with a cloying sweetness that didn’t compliment this blend.

He firmly set his mug down on the messy island. "You both failed."

"What!?"

"How?"

Ren sighed, Kohryu noted that it sounded very similar to one of Sojiro's, "Aizawa, you put way too many grounds in the filter and the water temperature was too high. Nemuri, why in the world is yours so sweet? Mexican Altura is supposed to be savory."

"Was I not supposed to put sugar and powdered coffee creamer into the grounds?"

"No. You weren't. How much did you add?"

"About six tablespoons of each?"

Ren facepalmed. "I even did a demonstration right before the both of you tried. Why did you think it was a good idea to do that?"

She sheepishly shrugged.

"Does that mean Ren-nii gets two thou... thousand yen from both of you?" Eri asked, "Since you both lost?"

"Great question, Eri." Ren's hand dropped as he smirked at the two teachers, "Does it?"

Nemuri and Aizawa stared at Eri, who stared back in complete innocence as she loudly slurped the last of her apple jelly pack. At that moment, both of their phones pinged. Ren heard a few more in the common room.

"Saved by a text from the boss." Nemuri said as she whipped hers out.

Ren recognized the moment their internal switches flipped from civilian to hero mode. Their relaxed postures hardened into furrowed brows with grim glints in their eyes.

“What is it?” Ren asked.

Midnight shoved hers in her pocket, “Nezu called a meeting with the teachers.”

Genuine worry flowed through his face, “Is something wrong?”

“He didn’t say.” Eraserhead sighed as he pocketed his phone, “But it must be serious. He never calls meetings out of the blue like this.”

Hound Dog popped his head into the kitchen, “Did you get it?”

“Yeah, we did.” Midnight said.

“Grrrr, you two go ahead with the others.” Hound Dog shook his mane, looking equally worried, “I’m supposed to stay here and watch over things with an Ectoplasm clone.”

“Sorry to cut the lesson short, Ren.” Midnight turned to him with a soft smile, “I promise I’ll make better coffee next time!”

“You wish.” Eraserhead muttered.

They left, joining the march of footsteps rushing out the front door. The dorm was eerily silent. It was only this quiet in the early mornings, as the evenings were full of bustle with all the pros in one place.

The sudden disquiet was off putting. The constant ringing in his soul from the Metaverse’s presence only made it worse.

Hound Dog studied him with a worried look, “Nezu told me to tell you not to worry about anything, in case you asked.”

“So... everything is okay?”

“For the most part. Just try to relax for the rest of the night.” Hound Dog approached the messy island with a kind smile, “I can go ahead and clean this up, if you want.”

“I can help.”

Hound Dog grinned, revealing his rows of sharp canines. Ren didn't feel anything threatening, rather the opposite. How this hero, who was literally a giant vicious-looking dog walking on two legs, made his fanged smile so comforting... Ren had no idea. They made quick work of the mess and went into the common room, Ren holding hands with Eri. Hound Dog gave them a respectful nod before going to one of the couches.

Ren and Manami shared a subtle look.

“Well, I'm turning in early.” Manami said as she slid off a couch, “Good night, everyone.”

“Night.” Kaito sighed when Manami disappeared into her room, then he glanced at Ren and Eri, “It's almost her bath time.”

Ren looked at Eri, “Do you want to try the indoor hot springs instead of having your usual bath? You and Ishtar will have it all to yourselves tonight.”

“Oh. O-Okay.”

Ishtar stepped into reality and swept Eri into her arms, stopping at her room to gather clothes first. The heroes were slowly getting used to the Personas appearing out of nowhere, Hound Dog and the clone barely flinched this time.

Morgana jumped to Ren's shoulder, “What do you want to do?”

“I don't know.” Ren said, “Be lazy in my room and scroll through all the new articles that came out about us today?”

“Please don’t take any of those seriously.” The Ectoplasm clone stated, his eyes softening as he met Ren’s gaze, “Some of those news sites have not been sympathetic to your situation.”

The media were relentless and cast him in every shade of the morality spectrum; From being the obvious choice as the future #1 hero and the epitome of all things heroic and good, to a vigilante that should be put in jail for his crimes because he’d never follow the law, down to the nastiest articles claiming U.A. was wasting their time ‘raising the next Demon Lord of the underground’ who take All For One’s place.

Ren couldn’t wait to tell them he wouldn’t be around long enough to fulfil any of the twisted expectations they threw on a teenager’s shoulders.

“I never do.” Ren turned on his heel and walked to his door, “Good night.”

“Good night, Ren.” Kaito said.

The other two replied in kind before Ren went into his room, then into the bathroom. He closed the door with a long sigh and leaned against it.

Morgana jumped onto the counter gave him a once over, “You’re not going to relax, are you?”

“Nope.”

“Why not? Whatever Mr. Compress and Spinner are doing seems to be working so far.”

“I need a distraction, that’s all. Not knowing what’s going on bothers me.” He turned on the shower, the hot water forming a lazy cloud of steam, “I’m going into the Velvet Room to train. I want to test Odin out more and master his bond while I’m at it.”

“I’ll cover for you in case the heroes check in, but don’t take too long.” Morgana glared at him, “And don’t overdo it. You’ll need to conserve your energy.”

“I know.” Ren opened the bathroom door for Morgana.

Morgana gave him one last pointed look before stepping out. Ren closed the door and locked it with a click . He summoned his costume, brushing the stray embers that fell to the tile floor with his boot. The familiar cold weight of his Key hung from his neck.

The Velvet Room door cast a mystical glow as steam flooded the bathroom and fogged up the mirror. It opened with a clank of chains, and Joker disappeared inside.

An air of anticipation painted the meeting room as all participants took their seats around the U-shaped table. Spinner sat on Nezu's right, Mr. Compress on his left.

“Thank you for coming on such short notice, everyone.” Nezu said.

“What’s this about?” Eraserhead wasted no time asking.

“And why call a meeting so late?” Power Loader asked.

“Apologies for the surprise,” Nezu never apologized for anything he suddenly sprang on the teachers, but they all stiffened at the genuine note in his voice. The first one in... well, the first time ever. “But some vital information came to my attention that must be taken care of at the earliest possible time.”

“Spill it, then.” Vlad King folded his hands on the table and leaned forward, “What information?”

Nezu looked at Mr. Compress, who stood to take the center stage, “In short, I know where All For One’s doctor is hiding.”

“What!?” Yagi shot up from his chair, face pale and eyes wide, “Where? People have been trying to find him ever since the raid on his lab in Sapporo, and all leads have long gone cold!”

“Yagi.” Midnight gently put her hand on his arm. He sat down, all but deflating in his chair, “Mr. Compress, how did you come by this information? How do we know that the doctor hasn’t moved on from this supposed location, and why are you telling us now?”

“I would like to know why you didn’t say anything before, either!” Spinner said, his hands balled into tight fists, “You could’ve told us where that snake was hiding all this time!”

Mr. Compress sighed, “To answer Miss Midnight’s question first, I came upon it accidentally. The doctor first introduced me to All For One when I joined the League, and I overheard him talk about this location once I left. I don’t think they knew I was eavesdropping.”

Midnight nodded.

“For the second question, I believe he’s stranded there without his master’s boundless resources. His cover was blown wide open after Sapporo, and without Kurogiri and anybody else from the League to support him... well, he has nowhere to go. I doubt he would leave anyway.”

“And why’s that?” Nezu asked, attention zeroed in.

“Because it’s the last bastion for his Nomu research. Moving such big pieces of delicate equipment without help would draw too much attention.”

The temperature plummeted. Livid anger appeared in most of the heroes’ faces, barely masked by their heroic professionalism.

Mr. Compress turned to Spinner, his tone patient and apologetic as he fidgeted with a few marbles, “And to answer your demands, Spinner, there was never a good time.”

Spinner frowned, "But you... you could have at least said something."

"When? After Kamino, where Ren was severely ill? The time where his health had improved somewhat, but he had no powers and hardly the strength to fight on? How about when Eri came into the picture and Overhaul kidnapped Risumi and Ayumu?"

Spinner opened and closed his mouth several times, "... Okay. I get your point."

"What's stopping you from telling Joker now, when he's the strongest he's ever been?" Power Loader asked, "Shouldn't he and the other vigilantes be at this meeting, too?"

"No." Nezu stated, his beady eyes sharpening, "I believe we owe this to Joker to take down the doctor ourselves."

"What? But..." Snipe floundered, "With his powers, apprehending the doctor would be much easier. Especially if there are a lot of Nomu."

"And that's exactly why he shouldn't be." Mr. Compress snapped, the full force of his angry mask staring Snipe down, "People have relied far too much on Ren because of how powerful he is. Ren was a victim to this madman, too. The doctor contacted him during the Overhaul Raid through Gigantomachia. Most of you weren't there to listen on how terrified the boy was when he heard the doctor's voice."

"I was there." Eraserhead said, his expression dark and thunderous, "I heard it too."

"I..." Spinner glared at the table, "I saw it first hand, you know. At Sapporo. Ren had a Quirk Suppressant on, and the guards there gave him a really bad head injury." Spinner slammed a fist on the table, most heroes' expressions falling into shock at the sudden and violent display, "That low-life piece of shit enjoyed psychologically torturing a kid when he was out of it from a bad concussion. Drugged him up to the gills and everything after. We're lucky Hawks found us when he did, otherwise we wouldn't have made it outta there alive."

The air turned from a chilly winter's day to as frigid as the arctic.

Midnight and Present Mic's eyes were glossy with tears of rage, though they had enough self-control to not let them fall. Eraserhead and a few of the others looked seconds from murdering something, while Nezu's calculating gaze was sharp enough to cut through glass.

Just the way Mr. Compress wanted.

"I don't want Ren to know about this until that monster is put away for good." Mr. Compress spoke after several seconds in stifling silence, "You know the second he hears of this, he'll push down his own trauma and throw himself headfirst into danger if it means keeping people safe."

"I agree." Nezu stated, "Do we not owe this to Joker and the other victims? To those who've been turned into brainless puppets against their will? Let's prove that we can serve justice without relying so much on a single teenage boy."

Yagi stood once again, calmer, yet his blazing blue eyes ignited that same fire in everyone, "I don't have a quirk to fight anymore, but I'll provide support where I can. Let's bring in the last of All For One's most loyal lackeys and put an end to the Nomu once and for all!"

The teachers agreed with hearty cries.

Nezu jumped up on the table when they settled down, "I've already reached out to Nighteye's Agency, along with Hawks and other heroes to help. He won't escape this time."

"Will Endeavor be there?" Midnight asked, "He fought the first High-End Nomu, and we could use his strength in case the doctor has any more stored in that lab."

Nezu sighed, “I’m afraid Endeavor has taken a leave of absence, so that’s not an option. We’ll have to rely on solid teamwork to get this done.” Nezu looked at each of his staff with utmost seriousness, “Remember; We don’t want to tip off Joker and the other vigilantes until the doctor is in Tartarus. We’ll set up another meeting with the other heroes in a confidential location before we go into more detail. I’ve already compiled a list of which heroes here will be present in this attack and which will stay at the school-”

Mr. Compress and Spinner didn’t need to look at one another to know that they had the same thought. So far, this had gone down as well as could be.

With any luck, they’d kill two birds with one stone and not get caught with bloody feathers.

~~ 13 Days until the Festival ~~

“Don’t we have the right to interview Joker at least once!?” A familiar voice grated in Taneo’s ears, “Why has Principal Nezu kept him locked up in U.A.? Why hasn’t Joker been able to get his Hero License right away and be out in the field where his powerful quirk will be put to good use!? What about those stuck in hospitals with incurable diseases and injuries!? Shouldn’t it be their duty to help these people in need!?”

Taneo sighed as he leaned against the wall a good ways away from the metal gate that sealed U.A. He retrieved his phone from his pocket and messaged his new boss.

[T]

Kizuki Chitose is at it again.

You might want to do something, she gets more and more desperate as the days go on. The other journalists are getting feral with her around.

[Rat God]

I see.

Thank you for keeping up the good work, but unfortunately my hands are tied unless they try to break into the school directly.

[T]

I'll let you know if they get their hands on any tanks

[Rat God]

Please do, I would love to shut down more uncouth news studios if anything happens! ;))

Taneo cursed under his breath.

Nezu paid extraordinarily well, but dealing with him long term has become a thing of nightmares. Being a plant in this group of ravenous reporters with nothing better to do with their lives was easy... at first. This was the fifth morning he stood outside the gates of the school, bored out of his mind but steadily growing more concerned when Kizuki Chitose's obsession stooped to dangerous levels.

Demizu Mika never gave off the weird vibes he got from this woman, and he hadn't seen her on the news scene with Joker before. Why the sudden obsession now? Has she always been this way about Joker and just kept on the down-low about it? Honestly, she just gave him the creeps.

At least Joker was okay.

The kid contacted him a few days ago with an apology, but Taneo had to keep his messages few and far between. If any of these reporters knew that he was in direct contact with Joker, then they would be on him like bloodhounds on a fresh scent.

He tucked his phone away and settled in for another long day outside U.A.

Ren waved to the group of students outside the main school building as whispers, gasps, shrieks and everything in between peppered the air. He stepped onto the bus before any phones were whipped out for pictures or video. He nodded at the Ectoplasm clone in the driver's seat, then turned to where Cementoss and Nezu sat.

"You're fitting in well, all things considered." Nezu said as he crossed his legs, Ren chose to sit directly across from the heroes. Morgana, and surprisingly Lady Stubbs, were on either shoulder, "Smaller appearances have worked in our favor. Perhaps your Personas can appear around U.A. if things continue to go well!"

The clone started the bus. The vehicle lurched forward, and they were off towards one of U.A.'s many gyms. Several students tried to take one last look at the bus until the growing group faded into the distance.

"You mean we're just not getting mobbed because teachers are always around us." Morgana muttered as he jumped into Ren's lap, "I'd hate to see what happens otherwise."

"Hmmm, but say something does happen without any staff around." Nezu said as he studied Ren, "Would you be able to handle yourself accordingly? Like what happened with 1-A, I can't guarantee you won't be caught unawares by curious students, especially with the hustle and bustle of the upcoming Festival."

Lady Stubbs chose that moment to roll off Ren's shoulder, flopping onto her back with her legs up into the air, puffy paws splayed. She tried to correct herself, but the bulk of her belly cemented her in place. With a deep huff, she melted into a pile of thick fur.

Ren chuckled as he rubbed her belly, earning deep motorboat purrs, "I've survived Bakugo and Yaoyorozu, haven't I? I can handle anything else these students throw at me."

Morgana snickered, "That's our Leader."

Nezu nodded in satisfaction, "I'm glad to hear it."

Ren couldn't ignore his curiosity any longer. Especially since Lady Stubbs was with them instead of Spinner. Ren had found her spread out in the corner of his bed when he woke up, the door to his balcony cracked open.

How she got in through the enclosed gardens or what she spent her night doing was a mystery he didn't want to know the answer to. She refused to leave his side since.

"Where are Spinner and Mr. Compress?" He asked, "They didn't come back to the dorms last night and they weren't at breakfast this morning."

"Ah, that." Nezu's tail flicked and Ren caught Cementoss giving Nezu a side-eyed look, "I promise they're in good health! In fact, they're working on something with a few of the other teachers for extra credit. You may not see much of them for the remainder of the week, I'm afraid."

Morgana narrowed his eyes, "Extra credit."

"Extra credit!"

The bus pulled to a stop and the clone set it in park, putting this conversation to a swift end.

Nezu hopped off the bench, Cementoss following with a resigned sigh. Morgana jumped to Ren's shoulder as he nudged Lady Stubbs. The feline rolled off the chair to land perfectly on her feet. She stuck her nose high in the air and marched out of the bus like a princess covering some sort of social blunder.

Ren shook his head with a smile, and they found themselves standing before a massive wall when they stepped out. The giant gate was already open to a wide street lined with office buildings, tall skyscrapers peeked over them in the distance.

"Welcome to Ground Beta!" Nezu said as he held up his arms, "This is where you'll spend your time practicing!"

Ren blinked in astonishment, "We get a whole city all to ourselves?"

"Precisely." Cementoss spoke up for the first time, "You and your... Personas will have plenty of room to maneuver around and do as they wish. I'll be watching in the observation room by the gate, and will fix up any building in case something happens."

"Unfortunately, I have an important meeting to attend so I can't stick around to watch." Nezu said as he walked back to the bus. He stopped on the bottom step and grinned at Ren over his shoulder, "Have fun!"

The bus door closed, and it drove off.

"Wait, wasn't that our ride back?" Morgana said.

Cementoss snorted, "I'm sure the clone will come back. Eventually."

"Kohryu could give us a ride to the school."

"No!" Morgana yelled, "No way! Nu uh! Rejected!! If anything, I could turn into a bus and you drive us!"

“Do you even have a driver’s license, Amamiya?” Cementoss asked.

“Uh, no.”

“Then doing it Mona’s way is a no go, unless you’re fine with me driving.”

“... No offence, but I prefer Ren’s driving. Nobody else is allowed to drive me like a maniac! Ive had enough of that for a lifetime!”

Ren grinned, “Then it’s settled. We’ll ride Kohryu!”

“NO!”

“Aw, come on! Nezu even said that our Personas could start exploring the school grounds soon! What better way to introduce them to the students than with Kohryu? The other ones would be a piece of cake after him!”

Cementoss sighed, “I make no promises, but I’ll speak to Nezu about it.”

“Yes!”

Morgana groaned.

Cementoss chuckled as he turned towards the gate, “I’ll get situated in the observation room, you have the green light to do anything you want as long as it stays in Ground Beta.”

“Wait.”

Cementoss stopped, staring in surprised as Ren donned his costume in brilliant flame. Lady Stubbs caught an ember between her paws, looking disappointed when she lifted her paw off the concrete to find nothing. Joker dug around in his pockets for a thermos. He held it out to Cementoss with a cheeky grin.

“Made coffee for you. I hope you won’t get too bored watching us mess around for a while.”

Cementoss smiled as he took it, “Thank you. I did bring some books along to help pass the time, so I appreciate the gesture. Oh, and the other teachers all have a running bet on whether Eraser or Midnight will make a successful cup of coffee first.”

“I know.” Joker smirked, “Thirteen told me this morning when they weren’t around. I bet 500 yen on Eraser.”

“Of course you did.” Morgana muttered, “Isn’t that illegal since you’re the one teaching them?”

Joker waved his hand, “Details, details.”

They took their first steps onto the barren streets. Cementoss hadn’t even stepped away when Joker let Kohryu out. The golden dragon’s musical roar echoed through the heavens, the winds kicking up as he playfully twirled through the sky.

His mindscape was filled with laughter, and the joy of flying freely just for the sake of it became contagious. There was no big battle. No enemies to worry about. No obvious threat other than the pinpricks of the Metaverse on the edge of their mind, which was mostly harmless... for the moment. He could let his Personas play for a while.

Gabriel appeared and rose into the sky with a flap of her viridian wings, scattering blue cinders everywhere. Pixie and Alice took off down the road, giggling.

Odin entered reality in a small twister of blue flame next to Joker, towering over everyone as his long cape fluttered in the wind. He stood at Joker’s side like a dutiful body guard. Joker could summon six Personas at once, though it would give him a migraine after a while. Five was good enough for now.

Kohryu circled a tall building on the other side of Ground Beta, his golden scales sparkling in the crisp clear sunlight. Gabriel was a bright sparkle chasing after him.

"Your wings are young yet, Gabriel. You'll never catch an experienced flyer such as I!"

"Oh yeah?" Gabriel teased, "Bring it on, Grandpa Danger Noodle!"

"Heeeeeeeey, save some fun for us!!" Pixie shouted.

Joker smiled as Cementoss stared in stupefied awe, "Sorry. I think they got a little stir crazy."

"It's fine." Cementoss said after a moment, his eyes landed on Odin as the Persona posed with such regal authority, "Is that a new one?"

"Yep! Meet Odin, the chief god of Norse mythology!"

Odin barely took notice of the hero gaping, his focus solely on Joker and that of his brethren. Cementoss shook himself out of it and headed into his designated observation room.

"Should we start on the rooftops?" Morgana said as his eyes traced Kohryu and Gabriel's paths through the sky, "We'll need a better view of the city before we can come up with anything."

Joker looked at the grappling hook on his wrist, "There's one easy way up-"

Lady Stubbs grabbed one of his coattails with her mouth and tried to pull him towards the closest building.

"... Or not." Joker chuckled as he followed along, the chubby feline trying to drag him along like a troublesome kitten. "What's gotten into you all of a sudden?"

"Mrph."

“This alien creature always dictates thy destination?” Odin asked as he walked alongside Joker.

“Uh, not usually?” He said, “She’s been acting strange all morning.”

“Hmmm.”

Joker looked at Morgana, who gave the feline version of a shrug.

They went inside, an office by the looks of it. Empty cubicles littered the first floor, but that was the extent of the decorations. They went up the first set of stairs they found, the space opening up into empty floors and barren rooms from then on.

Odin had to duck under the doorways and hunch his shoulders lest his grand horned helmet pierce through the ceiling, a sight that Joker found funny.

Joker used Third Eye as they reached the third floor, Lady Stubbs continuing to drag him.... somewhere, the blue world highlighted by threads of gold wires in the walls. Bright green cones were shed from otherwise well-hidden cameras. Joker stopped as they reached a hallway on the top floor that split off in several directions.

This was a blind spot, no cameras were pointed to this intersection and no listening devises were in sight.

“What’s up, Joker?” Morgana asked.

“This is a good place for a permanent door,” He said as he looked around, “But coming in here too often could look suspicious, especially if we’re going to explore other parts of Ground Beta.”

“You could wait until the other door by Nezu’s office is put up first.” Morgana said, “That way, we can search the other buildings with blind spots and not be stuck with one option.”

“That’s.... actually pretty smart, Morgana.”

Morgana chuckled, "Of course it is! Who do you think you're talking to!?"

"Mrph." Lady Stubbs finally let go of Joker's coat. She planted herself in front of Joker, her hackles raised and ghoulish eyes staring deep into Joker's soul.

"What's wrong, Lady Stubbs?" Joker asked, "Do you feel sick or something?"

"Mrph." She scratched at the yellow-gold bandanna tied around her neck, something she wore alongside Spinner every day.

Joker frowned, "Oh, is it too tight?"

"Mrph."

"Why didn't you say so earlier?"

"Mrph!"

Joker knelt down, his frown deepening as he tried to undo a rather complicated knot. Lady Stubbs sat perfectly still as he worked. The fabric loosened with a final tug, but something fell out as the bandanna's knot fully came undone, dropping onto the floor with a sharp clack .

"Uh... what." Morgana stated as they stared at the blue marble.

"Merp!" Lady Stubbs puffed out her chest in pride. When nobody moved, she pushed the marble towards Joker.

The moment Joker's fingers touched it, it broke apart to reveal a folded note.

"Oooh, a message! What does it say!?" Morgana said eagerly.

Joker plucked it from the ground and flipped it open.

Dearest Joker and Mona,

Apologies for the bizarre delivery of this note, as speaking openly in person is dangerous outside the Velvet Room and using our bugged phones isn't an option. I wanted to inform you that the lock on Nezu's door is completely electronic. No lock pick will help you there, so you'll have to get creative.

P.S. I've located a perfectly suitable supply closet one hallway from the objective. It'll provide the path of least resistance to the Devil's abode.

P.P.S. Do be sure to burn this note after you memorize it.

P.P.P.S I'll inform you when it is time to strike using this same method. Be prepared.

~From, your favorite Faith Arcana!

"Wow." Morgana deadpanned, "He really doesn't do things by half measures, does he? He even drew a map of that hallway on the back."

Joker committed it to memory and used a flick of Cerberus' flames to turn the note to ashes, "No, he doesn't." He looked at Lady Stubbs, "Do I even want to know how you got this from Mr. Compress when he was with the pros?"

"Merp!"

"You won't reveal his secrets, huh? I can respect that." Joker retied the bandanna around her neck and gave her an affectionate pet.

"Let's get to the roof. We don't want to stay out of the camera feed for too long."

"We'll pretend this never happened." Morgana said.

“Agreed.”

They walked onwards to the final set of stairs to the roof, Lady Stubbs prancing ahead as if proud of her accomplishment.

Odin stared at the spot where the marble dropped.

“A strange creature, indeed.” Odin muttered before he followed his Trickster.

~~ 12 days until the Festival ~~

Hawks expected a longer break between major raids, but he couldn't say no when Kagome informed him of Nezu's urgent request. With his speed, it was a simple task to fly through the night to reach his destination in secret. He had sent in a bunch of feathers into the Jakku Hospital's air conditioning system before hiding on an opposite rooftop with a lot of coverage.

Child's play, really.

Night became morning, morning turned into afternoon. Afternoon strolled lazily into early evening.

His feathers picked through the whole hospital, memorizing the patient rooms to the doctors' offices, to even the bathrooms and the laundry down in the basement. But then, he discovered a new passage. An air duct that sunk several hundred feet below the earth.

The air became chilled as his feathers went down.

Screeching metallic sounds and mysterious rumbles trickled in from the grates. Bubbling liquids in tubes. A gurgled breath and a muffled scream trapped in fluids. A hiss of steam. A frantic half-mad voice echoing in a vast underground space.

The bunch of feathers flowed around the small maze of vents until each feather picked up the vibrations that sent a clear voice back to Hawks.

“That heathen... taking away my master’s most prized possession! But don’t worry... I’ll get him back... oh yes, just wait until these High-Ends are done... Not even Tartarus can stand against them... The real work will begin once Shigaraki is reclaimed, and then that boy will be mine”

Hawks whipped out his phone and called the #1 speed-dial, the other person picked up before the second ring.

“The information is accurate.” Hawks stated, almost letting the snarl bleed into his voice, “He’s down there right now with what sounds like a bunch of Nomu in tanks.”

Several voices spoke on the other end, though he could clearly hear the ‘I told you!’ from Mr. Compress.

“Thank you for your hard work, Hawks.” Nighteye said in a tight voice, “We’ll begin preparations right away. Bubble Girl and Centipeder are on route to your location. Switch with them when you need to rest, but don’t go too far if you can help it.”

“Got it.” Hawks hung up. A happier chime broke through his sour mood, his scowl softening with buttery warmth.

Joker had sent a selfie to the ‘Joker’s Squad’ chatroom. Joker had an ear to ear grin, Mona was beaming from his shoulder, the background a carpet of sparkling gold scales with one entire corner being taken up by a giant ruby red eye.

Joker left several messages, and Hawks felt bad that he and the others couldn’t answer since they were preoccupied .

[Big Bro Birb]

Looking cool Joker!

[#1Troublemaker<3]

Uh oh.

Mona's mad you stole one of his catchphrases.

[Big Bro Birb]

Uh.... I did???

[#1Troublemaker<3]

Yep, you did.

He's demanding tuna for the emotional damage you just put him through.

Lots and lots of tuna...

I hope you don't mind going into debt over sushi ;)

[Big Bro Birb]

Ah, hell.

I'll give him so much tuna he'll be sick of it for the rest of his life.

[#1Troublemaker<3]

We'll be counting on you!

Those words hit him like a sledge hammer to the chest. Rage built in his heart like a Star ready to go supernova, his phone creaking as his grip dangerously tightened. His thoughts flickered to the wild, desperate, and severely injured kid he saw in the bowels of a sickening Sapporo lab. He shoved his phone in his pocket before his anger got the better of him.

“Yeah, you can count on your big bro alright.” He muttered darkly.

Hawks looked to the Jakku Hospital, his gaze as sharp as a blade. His feathers twitched, aching to slice through something, anything . Preferably that doctor. He forcefully settled them as he got comfortable.

Right now, he was a patient hunter awaiting the demise of the prey that hurt his family.

~~ 10 days until the Festival ~~

Hitoshi knew something was going on with the staff.

None of his classmates noticed their serious eyes or darker demeanors, as they were focused on setting up for the upcoming Cultural Festival. Innumerable boxes of ribbons, confetti shooters, and any number of other supplies littered the hallways. An unthinkable mess for a normal school day, but it was the new normal in the coming days before the Festival. He was excited too, of course, but the sudden flip in the teachers' attitudes put him on edge.

Should he blame Ren?

Maybe, maybe not. Ren didn't know what was going on when Hitoshi texted him about it. His phone chimed. Hitoshi reached into his bag for it.

It was five minutes of class before the lunch bell, so Ectoplasm didn't seem to mind.

"Speak of the devil." Hitoshi whispered.

[The World]

Hey, wanna have lunch together?

[The Moon]

Are you allowed to have lunch with me or...?

[The World]

Nezu won't mind. We need to catch up on everything that's happened since the summer.

I wanted to show you something too.

Meet me at the west entrance?

[The Moon]

Sure?

There was something I wanted to ask you anyway.

[The World]

Sweet.

Also, look out your window ;)

Hitoshi blinked and did just that.

A smudge of light, as bright as the northern star, appeared over the school grounds. And it was getting closer. And bigger . Much, much bigger. He wasn't the only one to notice. The girl who sat in front of him shot to her feet, her chair screeching back drew the attention of everyone in the room.

"Sensei!" She shouted, jabbing her finger at the window, "What's that!?"

"Remember this morning's announcement during homeroom?" Ectoplasm said as he looked out, "Nezu is allowing Joker's summons to put on a small show during the lunch period today. He means no harm."

Excitement broke out as Kohryu's body became more distinct, vibrant gold against a chilled blue sky. The sheer size of Kohryu floored Hitoshi. He'd seen the dragon on the news before, but seeing Kohryu in person stole the breath out of his lungs.

Kohryu veered away when he got close, the windows completely covered with a carpet of shining amber scales. The bell rang for lunch, and everyone else rushed out of the room. Ectoplasm remained in place, his stoic graveness obvious to Hitoshi.

"Are you not going to join your classmates?" Ectoplasm asked.

"Uh, I just... are you okay, Sensei?"

"Hmm? I'm alright. Why do you ask?"

"Nothing. I... it's nothing."

Hitoshi left before it got too awkward. The hallways were an organized madhouse. Everyone was in a hurry to see Kohryu up close, but they took turns going through doors and didn't push or shove. No boxes or decorations got knocked over. Nobody got trampled.

Maybe people did learn from the mad lunch fiasco before the USJ attack.

Hitoshi followed the crowd outside. Groups of students were spread around the front of the school, many faces turned up in glee or awe as Kohryu danced through the sky. The dragon twisted and turned and swirled before diving towards the students. Some in the second and third year Hero Course dropped into battle stances.

Many cried out before Kohryu pulled up, flying close enough for everyone to get a detailed look at his scale pattern, but not so close that the wind he generated knocked anyone over. Some cheers and laughter spread around, the older Hero Course students relaxed.

Then, Kohryu coiled around himself mid-air and hovered there, his shadow engulfing the students.

His golden body was a flowing ribbon, his whiskers floating peacefully on a breeze. A bright white light sparked in his throat, and everyone gasped when he shot a bright white beam into the sky. Blink and you would miss the tiniest form of a fairy nestled between Kohryu's horns. A boom struck their chests when the beam collided with another white explosion that came out of nowhere.

All went silent as showers of beautiful white stars floated serenely down onto the students, the dragon's shadow making them all the brighter. Hitoshi held out his hand as one fell over him like a snowflake. It radiated warmth, but it was the same type of comforting warmth when you had hot chocolate on a cold winter's day.

The tiny star shattered the moment he touched it, spreading an array of different colors all over the grass before fading away. Hundreds of other reactions took place all around him as the stars fell on students or the ground. Stillness overtook the school when all the stars were gone, then students began cheering.

Hitoshi spotted a couple of teachers hanging around, smiling at one another.

His phone pinged.

Oh, right. Lunch with Ren.

He snuck away as everyone's eyes were on Kohryu. Hitoshi went back into the school, which was now nearly empty.

Ren waited by the west entrance, his hair ruffled as if blown back by a powerful wind.

"Hey." Hitoshi said as he approached, "What's with your new hairdo?"

"Hey!" His eyes oddly flicked to Hitoshi's side for a moment, but he smiled at him all the same as he tried and failed to fix his fluffy hair, "Oh, riding Kohryu when he's going so fast will do that. He dropped me off before starting the show outside."

"Speakin of, I didn't know you could do something like that."

Ren shrugged, "It's a small part of our performance for the Festival."

"Wait, that was just one part?" Hitoshi said, eyes wide, "That was cool as hell."

"Thanks. We kind've discovered it by accident. I didn't know that Almighty spells could react to each other like that, and we're trying to find other ways to combine that sort of magic." Ren said, chuckling, "It could still use some work though. We're trying to figure out how to have those stars go off mid-air to spread more color around. I won't spoil the rest of it."

Hitoshi stared at him, "Huh. And here I was excited for a haunted house."

"Your class is doing a haunted house?"

“Yeah. That’s what I wanted to ask you about.”

“Come on,” Ren chose a direction and stepped away. Hitoshi wasn’t stupid, they were getting farther from where a majority of the students and teachers were, “We can walk while we talk.”

“And find a spot for lunch?”

“That too. We’ll get lunch after I show you something.”

“That’s totally not ominous at all.” Hitoshi remarked.

Ren stuck his hands in his pockets as they walked side by side, “What did you want to ask?”

“Could I borrow Alice for our haunted house? A terrifying little girl would totally make ours way cooler than any other class.”

“I don’t think I’m technically allowed to-” Ren stopped mid-sentence, the golden flecks in his eyes shining for a moment. “Well, never mind. Alice wants to do it and she doesn’t care what Nezu says.”

“Sweeeeet. My classmates are going to be stoked. ”

“But for your own safety,” Ren patted him on the back, “Don’t ever ask her about teddy bears.”

“What’s that supposed to mean?”

“Just that.”

Hitoshi was left in a puzzled silence. He followed Ren through a half dozen hallways until Ren stopped in front of a door, looking at it up and down as if appraising a piece of jewelry. Then he looked around the hallway, absently touching the bridge of his nose.

“He was right. This one is perfect.”

“A perfect... supply closet?”

Ren chuckled as he opened the door, “It’s what’s inside the closet that counts.”

“Uh huh. Sure. This isn’t confusing me in the slightest. Nope.”

Ren winked before he stepped inside. Hitoshi good-naturedly rolled his eyes and followed. The door closed and his vision drowned in black.

“Okay, we’re in a dark supply closet. Now what?” A few moments of silence pass, making him uneasy, “Uh... Ren? Are you done being all mysterious and slightly terrifying?”

Hitoshi scrunched his eyes shut at the sudden, yet soft, flash of velvet light. He opened his eyes to see the last of Ren’s vigilante costume disappear into normal clothes, but his gaze locked on the barred door that appeared from nowhere.

“Nezu and Aizawa have already met the Attendants, same with the rest of my teammates.” Ren smiled, his body highlighted by the purple light, “I figured you’d want to meet them too. Well, we’ll start with Lavenza for now. The others are terrifying if you’re not ready for them.”

Hitoshi blinked slowly, “I have many questions. Who are these Attendants? What is that door? Could you do that the whole time and why the heck didn’t you tell me ?”

Ren’s expression turned somber, “They’re people from home. We reunited shortly before the Overhaul raid.”

“They’re-” Hitoshi froze. “Oh .”

The door opened. Velvety mist pooled around their feet as the clink of chains and iron hounded his ears. He heard footsteps somewhere in the impenetrable mist, growing louder with each one.

Someone walked out.

Hitoshi stared at the small girl wearing a blue dress and a butterfly headband. Her long pale hair flowed down her back and she carried a book half her size under her arm.

“Greetings, Moon.” Her voice, like the door, had a velvety softness to it, “I am Lavenza.”

“Uh, hi. You don’t have to call me the Moon. Just Hitoshi.” Hitoshi crossed his arms and smirked, “You know, from your footsteps I expected someone taller to come out of that door.”

Ren and Lavenza blinked in astonishment, before Ren clutched his stomach in laughter. Lavenza huffed, but she was smiling.

“Be careful, Hitoshi.” Ren said as his expression smoothed out, though there was still a hint of humor in his eyes, “The Attendants are stronger than me.”

Hitoshi’s stomach dropped as the smirk fell off his face. He thought of Kohryu dancing through the sky over U.A., and what the dragon accomplished by itself. That, on top of Satanael descending during Kamino and practically every other amazing feat from the rest.

How could anybody be stronger than Joker?

“I’m sorry I called you short?” Hitoshi said, his voice higher pitched than normal.

“It’s alright. You meant it in jest.” Lavenza’s citrine eyes gained a playful spark, “Elizabeth is going to have fun teasing this one, Trickster.”

“Just don’t let her take it too far. Besides, he’s just meeting you for today.”

“I see.” She turned back to Hitoshi, “Make sure to bring a lot of jam filled cookies. That’ll get you on her good side.”

Hitoshi looked to Ren, who only had that smirk on his face. “Okay?”

Lavenza glanced at the door, "Is this where-"

"I think its time for you to get back, Lavenza." Ren said suddenly, "Hitoshi and I aren't going to have much time for lunch if we linger here too long."

Lavenza blinked.

Hitoshi glanced in between them, an invisible conversation he had no context for going right over his head. Ren's nod to her wasn't seen in this dreary lighting.

"Very well, you're right. I shouldn't keep you." Lavenza said after a moment. She politely bowed to Hitoshi, "I hope we can speak again soon, Hitoshi. Remember what I said about those cookies."

She walked through the door before he could say anything, which closed with a slam of iron.

Ren stared at something behind Hitoshi, "Isn't this enough eavesdropping, Mirio?"

Hitoshi whirled around. Mirio's face was, in fact, sticking out of the wall.

"What's with you and spying on me in closets!?" Hitoshi snapped.

"This has happened before?" Ren asked dubiously.

Mirio beamed, "Oh, I didn't mean to take it this far! Honest!"

"Then explain yourself." Ren said with a slight edge to his voice, "Why were you following Hitoshi before?"

"Can we take this conversation outside the closet?" Mirio asked jovially.

"Sure." Ren deadpanned.

Mirio followed him? When? It must've been when he came back inside the school. And here he thought he knew all the tricks of knowing when someone was tailing him. Guilt must've been written on his face, as Ren's expression softened when he saw it.

Hitoshi looked where Mirio's face was to find it gone, "Why didn't you say anything before?"

"Mirio following you wasn't expected, but its something we can work with. I'll explain everything later." Ren whispered as he passed.

The Velvet door faded. At first Hitoshi thought it was gone, but something in his chest tightened whenever he looked at the spot. He could faintly see the air shifting, and when he squinted, a ghostly outline of the door could be picked out.

"You coming, Hitoshi?" Ren asked as he held the closet door open.

Hitoshi decided to ignore the weird magic door and walked out with Ren. They both stared at Mirio, who looked completely unabashed.

"I'm sorry, really!" Mirio rubbed the back of his neck, "I saw Shinsou going off by himself, and I remember what happened the last time-"

"What happened last time?" Ren asked.

"It's not a big deal." Hitoshi said, "Just some other students who followed me."

"It sounds like a big deal to me." Ren said, frowning.

"Hey, I handled it." Hitoshi smirked at Ren, "Just like you taught me."

"He did!" Mirio beamed, "He sure gave them the run around before pulling a disappearing act!"

The worry drained out of Ren, "Okay, if you say so. You were just concerned for him, Mirio?"

“Yeah. I was going to stop when I made sure he got to wherever he was going safely, but then I saw you.”

Ren raised a brow, “Me?”

“Yeah, you!” Mirio’s grin held the brightness of the sun, “I haven’t seen you since the raid! Tamaki and Nejire wanted to know how you were doing too! Oh! And Sir Nighteye!” Mirio’s expression turned sheepish, “We all wanted to make sure you were alright? The teachers wouldn’t say anything or let me ask the new TAs, so here I am by pure luck?”

“Back up. Nighteye was concerned for me?” Ren asked with obvious doubt, “He certainly didn’t give off that vibe when... I saw him last.”

“Don’t take it personally. Sir is like that with everyone at first! You should have heard the way he talked about you after. I think you got him to like you.”

Damnit. Mirio’s innocent expression could melt anyone’s heart. Hitoshi’s bullshit detector wasn’t going off either. After a long moment of Ren staring him down, he relented.

“Okay, I believe you.” Ren said. Mirio somehow brightened even further, but Ren held up his hand, “But you can’t tell your friends about Lavenza. Nighteye, Nezu, and Eraserhead already know about her. She’s one of my close friends, and I wanted to introduce her to Hitoshi before we eat lunch.”

“Oh! I see. Was that weird door part of your ambush tactic in the raid?”

“It was. You should have seen the look on Overhaul and Shigaraki’s faces when all those heroes came out of nowhere.” Ren grinned, “Priceless.”

“I would pay good money to see Ren kicking Overhaul’s ass.” Hitoshi said bitterly.

Mirio looked at Hitoshi strangely. He passed that same look to Ren, who shook his head.

“What?”

“Nothing.” Ren said, though there was a tone in his voice that put Hitoshi on edge, “Should we get lunch? I was thinking we can head to the dorm for curry. Kohryu can cover for us so we don’t get spotted.”

The sudden change in subject only deepened Hitoshi’s suspicion, “Uh, sure?”

“Can I join?” Mirio asked, “I also wanted to see Eri, if that’s okay? I was going to ask Nezu, but he’s been pretty busy the last couple of days so I haven’t had the chance.”

Ren stiffened, “That’ll be up to her.”

Mirio firmly nodded, his expression turning grim yet determined.

“Who’s Eri?”

“I’ve never told you about her, have I?” Ren’s eyes widened as he stared at Hitoshi.

“Nope.” Hitoshi stated, “We haven’t had the chance to fully catch up yet. Kinda the point of having lunch together today?”

Ren nodded, “Eri was one of Overhaul’s experiments.”

A cold ball of rage settled in Hitoshi’s stomach, “Well, now I’m even more happy that you took that bastard down.”

Ren smiled sadly. They walked towards the dorms in silence until they got outside. Many students had scattered around the school, watching Kohryu as they sat on blankets and ate from bento boxes. They skirted the edge of the crowd, and true to Ren’s word Kohryu drew their attention away, miraculously nobody saw them until they got to the cobblestone path leading to the dorms.

It was then that Hitoshi saw Kaito for the first time in several months, standing next to Aizawa as they watched Kohryu.

Then Hitoshi saw her .

Sitting on Kaito's shoulders, her moonlight hair done in complicated braids, was a little girl. Her red eyes were filled with wonder as they followed Kohryu, but the rest of her expression was a blank, stoic mask. A tiny horn poked out of her hairline.

"What are you guys doing out here?" Ren asked.

"She wanted to see Kohryu." Kaito said, the man's eyes flicking between him and Mirio, "Good to see you, Hitoshi."

Hitoshi smiled, "Likewise."

"Ren-nii!" Eri's small voice tugged on Hitoshi's heartstrings, Mirio flinched in the corner of his eye, "Why haven't I met this one yet? He's so cool!"

"He was a little too big, and I didn't want him to scare you." Ren turned to look up at Kohryu, then back at her, "Would you like to meet him now?"

"Are you sure that's a good idea?" Aizawa said, "He's a lot bigger than the rest of them."

Ren looked at Eri, who eagerly nodded.

"The boss has spoken, Eraser." Ren said with a smirk.

Ren turned around and looked up to Kohryu, who stopped mid-air. The dragon looked right at them. He descended. Hitoshi heard the cries of awe from the massive crowd of students, and several eyes fell from Kohryu to their group.

Sweat broke out on the back of Hitoshi's neck as the ginormous dragon drew closer and closer. Hell, the tip of the claw on Kohryu's pinky finger could easily crush several people without even trying. His vision was filled with dazzling scales, horns, and spikes as Kohryu lowered his head to the ground, the rest of his body floating peacefully in the breeze.

Ren put a hand on Kohryu's snout. "Eri, meet Kohryu. If Ishtar is the mother of the group, then Kohryu is definitely the grandfather."

Kohryu snorted, blowing their hair and pulling at their clothes, "I have long awaited to meet you face to face, young Aeon. It is my pleasure to finally make your acquaintance."

Kohryu's voice was like deep rumbles in the earth.

Any other little girl would probably scream and burst into tears. But instead, Eri reached for him. Kaito stepped closer until her tiny hand touched the tip of Kohryu's snout, unafraid of his size or the fangs poking out of his lips that were as tall as her.

Eri leaned forward and kissed Kohryu on the tip of his nose, "Thanks for being there for Ren-nii, Grandpa Kohryu."

The dragon froze, his blazing red eyes dulling as the rest of his body stilled in the air. His breathing stuttered to a stop.

"You okay, Kohryu?" Ren asked.

Kohryu's eyes blazed to life, a sharp breeze rustling the trees as he suddenly ascended. A joyous roar sang through the whole of U.A. as the dragon happily thrashed through the air at thrice the speed he did before. He did loop-de-loops and barrel rolls, and circled around the main school building like there was no tomorrow.

Aizawa pinned Ren with a look, "What just happened?"

Ren chuckled, "I believe that's what we call 'cuteness overload.' He just needs to work it off."

"Uh... Ren?" They all looked at Hitoshi, who pointed towards the school.

At least a hundred pairs of eyes were on them, and more than a few had their phones out. All in full view of Eri kissing Kohryu. A couple of phones obviously recorded Kohryu's reaction as they struggled to follow the dragon's erratic movements.

Aizawa sighed, "I'll handle this. The rest of you get to the dorm."

They followed Aizawa's order, their footsteps almost racing over the pavement. Several smaller robots zoomed by them to aid Aizawa. They stopped at the front of the teacher's dorms, thankfully nobody had gotten through Aizawa or the robots, so they were alone. Even if a wily student snuck past, they wouldn't get close because of the way Mirio guarded their flank.

They stood a moment in front of the dorm to catch their breath, but Mirio shifted between his feet.

"So... the coast is clear, but I can come back later." Mirio said with a sheepish smile, "It doesn't seem like this is a good time, so-"

"Wait!" Eri cried.

She patted Kaito's shoulder, and he knelt so she could get down. She straightened her ruffled dress and walked up to Mirio, the faintest knot appearing in her brow. She pointed to the ground.

Mirio blinked in confusion, but followed her order and crouched in front of her.

"It's not your fault." Eri stated.

"Huh?"

“R-Ren-nii s-said that what Overhaul did to me w-wasn’t my fault,” Her little hands bunched into fists as she stared Mirio in the eye, “S-so what happened w-wasn’t your f-fault either. Heroes save people, s-so you would have s-saved me later, right?”

Ren, Hitoshi, and Kaito exchanged alarmed looks when Mirio’s blue eyes flooded with tears. The hero student nearly crumpled under the small girl’s gaze.

“Yes! I would have, I swear!” Mirio said, “I should have never left you with him in the first place! I’ve promised myself that I would never leave anybody like that ever again!”

“It’s okay.” Eri wrapped her arms around Mirio’s neck, “I never would’ve met Ren-nii, a-and Overhaul would have hurt you if you tried. P-please don’t cry.”

Mirio hugged her back while tears fell down his cheeks, but he had the biggest grin on his face as Eri buried her face in his neck. After a few moments of respectful silence, Ren cleared his throat.

“So you’ll be staying for curry, then?”

Eri let go of Mirio, her hands gripping the front of his blazer, “Please?”

Mirio sniffled and wiped his eyes, “Well, I can’t say no now, can I?”

“Yes! Ren-nii’s curry is the best!”

Eri grabbed Mirio’s hand and dragged him through the gate of the teacher’s dorm.

“Go on ahead, Kaito. I need a quick word with Hitoshi.”

Kaito nodded, then followed Eri and Mirio into the teacher’s dorm. Hitoshi looked at Ren with wide eyes.

“What’s up?”

“Seeing her with Mirio just now made me realize something.” Ren sighed, his gaze falling to the ground, “Eri needs to have more good people in her life aside from me. She’ll need them when Mona and I are gone. I hate to ask this of you Hitoshi, but-”

“I’ll protect the baby unicorn with my life.”

Ren sputtered.

“We should introduce her to my parents.” Hitoshi said with a grin, “You know they’d fall in love with her on the spot. And who knows, maybe she’ll be like a little sister to me. She could be a big sister to my next sibling, too.”

“....Thanks, Hitoshi.” Ren said softly, “It would mean a lot to me.”

Hitoshi felt his ears heat up, “Don’t mention it.”

Their phones suddenly chimed at the same time. Hitoshi unlocked his to see a notification from a news site he follows. He blinked several times, reading and re-reading the newest title several times to make sure he got it right.

“They work fast.” Ren muttered, “And people say that I’m not human.”

Hitoshi smirked, “Breaking News: Joker Has A Daughter!?!?!’ I think they need a few more exclamation points to really sell it.”

“Talk about jumping to conclusions. You’d think they’d guess she was more related to Kaito, since they almost have the same hair color.”

“Don’t worry about it too much. This news station creates crazy click-bait headlines all the time, most aren’t actually true and people know it. They’re probably just jumping on the bandwagon because people posted footage already.” Hitoshi held out his phone, “See?”

Ren squinted at the screen, watching a muted version of Eri kissing Kohryu on the nose followed by the dragon’s reaction.

Ren sighed as if he had thousand pound weights on his shoulders, "I'll talk to Nezu to see if he can do anything about it."

"Next thing you know people will start saying you're Aizawa's kid just because you both have black hair."

Ren playfully glared at him, "No curry for you."

"W-wait! It was just a joke, Ren!" Hitoshi startled when Ren waltzed past the gate without him, "Ren!!"

Ren laughed as he broke out into a sprint with Hitoshi chasing after him through the yard.

They had loads to talk about and events to catch up on, and though some of those topics weren't fun or easy, it was the best lunch period Hitoshi's had in ages.

"They're really all gone?" Morgana asked later that night, curled up on Ren's chest as they scrolled through news sites.

"Yup. Nezu said he'd 'take care of it' and they all disappeared right after, and no other article like them came out as far as I can tell." Ren said, "Nezu is scary when he wants to be."

"In this case, that's good." Morgana glared at the phone, "Eri doesn't deserve that kind of attention."

"The videos are still up though."

Morgana's ears drooped, "There are so many all over the place. It's not surprising. Look on the bright side, people will know they'll have an angry dragon to deal with if they try to bother her."

Ren smirked, "Make that two angry dragons, a murder rabbit, a whale, and a hawk on top of that. Best Jeanist and Tensei were ready to throw hands too."

“They weren’t too happy, huh?”

“Nope. Miruko already named herself as Eri’s ‘Best Aunt Ever’ on the chat. She and Ryukyu are probably going to battle over the title.”

Morgana chuckled, “Well, we should get some sleep. You’ll be working on that special move tomorrow for your performance, right?”

“Yeah.” Ren shut off his phone and put it under the pillow. Just in case Nezu decided to listen in on top of active monitoring. Futaba taught them well enough to know they couldn’t be too careful. “Kohryu and Pixie think they know what to do to make it better-”

A scratching noise, like claws on glass, crept through the room. Morgana and Ren stiffened when the balcony door moved, sliding open a few inches before stopping. There was an indignant huff before a familiar shape jumped on Ren’s bed.

“Lady Stubbs?” Morgana said, “What are you doing here?”

“Mrph!”

Ren’s heart stopped as he sat up, “... Is your bandanna too tight again?”

“Mrph!”

Ren and Morgana exchanged serious looks. He untied the tough knot and, like before, a small marble plopped onto the comforter. Ren grimaced as it broke to reveal a small note. He held it to the pale moonlight streaming in from the open door.

It had but a single word.

Tomorrow

HECK YES NEW PERSONAS!!

You can start expecting brand new Personas to make appearances real soon, I already have the next 3 chosen out for the next couple of chapters! I like doing them one or two at a time as compared to just replacing the whole stock in one go, because I think that would be insulting to the other Personas who've been on this journey with us and we get to properly explore the new ones personalities without them being squished or overtaken by others! Ghost just recently read the upcoming interactions between the next pair and, five minutes after their introduction, said that they were forever changed. I honestly can't wait to show them off! I'll probably also do a Chapter 9 on the Thieves Den for the 'Endgame Persona Builds' starting with Odin. Hooooo booooy if people thought Joker was 'too powerful' before, just wait until you see what's planned for the Endgame ones ;)

Any predictions of what Personas are coming next? Which ones would you like to see? What are your favorite Personas and why? I'd love to know!!

Fun fact: I did consider putting Odin in at the start of the fic, but didn't because both he and Cu Chulainn were too similar. I ended up choosing Cu over Odin because he's one of my personal favorites.

I just finished the first draft of Improvised Song recently, and as I looked at the list of remaining chapters after that one I nearly did a spit take with my coffee because Holy Canoli that's even less chapters than I thought. Who knows though, there's still the possibility of a chapter or two getting split in half to let one of the final plot threads have a little more breathing room.

Overall, I am EXCITED!

Duplicitous Devil's Castle

Chapter 88: Duplicitous Devil's Castle

“Okay. But be careful. I don’t want you hurting yourself by doing something crazy.”

“Merp!” Lady Stubbs rubbed against his ankles.

Ren winked, “You know me, I’ll be fine!”

An extra long chapter for you guys because I didn't want to split this one in half. Enjoy the chaos!

(See the end of the chapter for more notes.)

MULTIPLE IMPORTANT UPDATES Please check them out!

Fanart!

MissNoir17 on Twitter

~~ 9 Days Until the Festival ~~

The citizens in Jakku never thought twice when the hospital director suddenly announced that the hospital would be going under emergency renovations, following a report that one of the crucial support pillars in the building had cracked. Within days patients were moved to other hospitals, nurses and doctors took a short leave for the work to be done.

The blocks around the hospital were cut off from traffic, and citizens pointed and whispered at the various trucks from an unknown construction company who were allowed to pass. That was the extent of the excitement. People moved on with their lives, unaware of the scarlet hawk watching from so high above. Overlooked were the workers driving trucks full of gear not meant for construction, their muscular physiques and colorful costumes hidden under baggy, plain uniforms.

Nobody would think twice until the rumbles deep underground began hours later.

“Nezu’s not joining us?” Ren asked as he and Cementoss stood by the bus, “Not even on the way there?”

“No, he’s needed elsewhere. My apologies, but I won’t be there with you, either.”

“Why not?”

“I’ll begin building your venue for the Cultural Festival. Nezu sent the blueprints for me earlier this morning.”

“By yourself ?” Morgana gaped, clinging to Ren’s shoulder, “That’s crazy!”

“Merp!” Lady Stubbs chirped from Ren’s other shoulder.

Several plans were made and scrapped for the venue. Ren and Nezu slowly refined their ideas as Joker’s routine became more concrete, until they settled on their final design just a few days ago.

Large enough to hold an enormous Persona like Kohryu, while also shielding thousands of people from the Red Rain. Smaller pieces of their plan would be sprinkled across the Festival Grounds, every part building up to their ultimate performance.

Cementoss chuckled at their concern, “Don’t worry. I constructed the Sports Festival stadiums within a few days by myself. This time I’ll have the help of a few Ectoplasm clones and robots. It’s no trouble for me.”

“Well, if you’re sure.” Ren said.

Ectoplasm appeared on the steps of the bus, “We better get going, Amamiya. We’re gathering the usual crowd.”

They looked over towards the school building. Students, both familiar and not, came to this spot every morning just to get a look at him. One particular student was at the front of the group.

Monoma puffed up when Ren simply glanced at him.

“Right.” Ren turned away from the onlookers, “Let’s go.”

Cementoss guarded the bus as they boarded. Instead of their usual place in the middle, they chose the chair right behind the driver’s seat. Ectoplasm shuffled his cloak and sat down, within the minute they were off.

“It’s not just Nezu who isn’t here today, is it?” Morgana said to Ectoplasm, “Most of the teachers left before the sun rose this morning. Spinner and Mr. Compress, too.”

The only heroes who stayed were Cementoss, Ectoplasm, Lunch Rush, Thirteen, Hound Dog, and more than enough Ectoplasm clones to fill in for the rest. Ren learned how to differentiate between the clones and the real Ectoplasm, as the clones glowed green during Third Eye while the real one glittered gold. The one driving the bus had been gold when Ren checked, his grip tight over the steering wheel.

“Everyone should return later today, if things go according to plan.” Ectoplasm said coolly, “We’ll inform you if anything changes.”

Ren frowned. Morgana didn't look happy either.

"Merp..." Lady Stubbs sagged from Ren's shoulder and flopped onto the seat next to him.

Ren comforted her with pets. It wasn't only the heroes bearing some invisible weight. Ren's heart beat was extraordinarily loud in his ears, and while he pretended to be fine to the heroes, Morgana picked up on his nervousness.

"Worry not." Kohryu whispered, "We'll give you time to do what you need to do."

Sanatael nodded, "Believe in us, Trickster."

"And have faith in yourself as well. Your skills have been honed to a razor sharp point." Baal raised his goblet, "We art thou, thou art us."

"Our Trickster fears no obstacle!" Odin slammed his spear down, the reverberating sound chased away the last of Ren's nerves, "I'll not allow it!"

Ren's lips quirked in a small smile, "You're right. We'll have this in the bag if we're careful."

Fafnir bellowed with laughter, "That's more like it!"

"Ren, we're here." Morgana snapped him out of his thoughts.

Ectoplasm stood by the open door, ghostly white eyes narrowed in concern, "Are you alright, Amamiya? You were spacing off for quite some time."

Ren got to his feet, "I'm fine. My Personas and I were just going over what we wanted to practice today."

Ectoplasm did another once over on Ren before he walked out of the bus.

Lady Stubbs rolled off the chair and followed them. Ren stopped when he got to the gate, drawing Ectoplasm's attention when he frowned at Morgana.

"We'll be practicing some riskier moves today, Morgana. Why don't you and Lady Stubbs wait with Ectoplasm so you don't get hurt by accident?"

The tip of Morgana's tail twitched. In other words: Watch the hero so he doesn't see through us.

"Okay. But be careful. I don't want you hurting yourself by doing something crazy."

"Merp!" Lady Stubbs rubbed against his ankles.

Ren winked, "You know me, I'll be fine!"

"Whatever you say, Leader." Morgana dropped from Ren's shoulder, and with a mutual nod to Ectoplasm, they trailed towards the observation room.

Ren donned his costume and turned towards the empty city.

Kohryu appeared behind him, a long ribbon of golden scales glittering in the sunlight.

The tip of the dragon's nose touched Joker's back, "Shall we go, Trickster?"

Joker smirked as he hopped on Kohryu's head, "Let's do this."

Kohryu took off towards the skyscrapers on the other side of the fake city, the other Personas buzzing in excitement as their true mission loomed near.

The atmosphere around the Jakku Hospital flooded with a sense of quiet urgency. Trucks hauling large trailers arrived, the trailer doors to some opening to a small army of officers equipped with heavy riot armor and shields, a few carried guns slung over their shoulder.

Another truck opened its trailer doors too, but instead of police ready for a fight, it dumped a small mountain of earth over the pavement.

Miruko threw open the door to the vehicle she drove and hopped out. She ripped off the stuffy construction uniform and the hat, shaking her long snowy hair free of its tresses. She tossed the clothes into the truck and slammed the door shut.

Pixie Bob did much the same from the other door.

They nodded to one another, no words exchanged as they marched towards the command center in the middle of the parking lot. White tents all interconnected together, with coils of wires and cables powering computers and other tech tapping into the hospital. A medical tent was off to the side, protected by the larger ones.

Nighteye turned to them, his body highlighted by the several dozen screens, "Pixie Bob, the last of the trucks carrying earth are arriving now. You know what to do."

"Got it." Pixie Bob smiled at Ragdoll and Mandalay, who sat in front of their own respective computers before she walked out.

Miruko huffed as she went to stand by Nezu, "When can we go in and kick ass?"

"Soon!" Nezu said, mad glee oozing from his tiny body, "We're doing our final preparations as Pixie Bob makes her beasts."

"I have tabs on everyone." Ragdoll said as her visor lit up, "... Including Spinner and Mr. Compress."

"Are you sure they should be allowed on this mission?" Mandalay asked, her expression firm, "I know Spinner helped us during the Summer Camp alongside Joker, but Mr. Compress was with the League at that time.”

“Yes, I’m sure. Mr. Compress has proven to be a true ally, according to Joker’s own word.” Nezu typed away on his computer, some screens changing to a camera feed nearby, “They have as much stake in this as we do.”

“I agree. We worked with Compress on the Shie Hassaikai raid.” Iida Tensei said from another monitor, “We can trust them with this mission.”

The screens showed Pixie Bob hard at work making another small army of creatures of all sizes. Giant serpents, dragons, tiny lizards and feline shapes, large chimeras of all combinations of animals, to tall earthen knights wielding great-swords of stone. Each was trapped in a marble by Mr. Compress and added to the box Tiger carried.

Tiger’s job was to pass them around with Spinner, who stood at his side.

“His quirk will be vital for this operation to be successful.” Nighteye adjusted his glasses, eyes glued to Nezu’s screen, “Arming our teams with Pixie Bob’s creatures will give us another advantage over any Nomu they encounter, but they obviously can’t fit down the hidden elevator Hawks found in the morgue. Transporting them this way is indefinitely easier and adds a layer of surprise.”

Mandalay still looked unsure.

Ragdoll squeezed her shoulder, “If Joker says he’s trustworthy, then he’s trustworthy. The least we can do is believe in Joker, especially after everything he did for us.”

Mandalay relaxed, and firmly nodded. Ragdoll smiled at her before they resumed their duties.

“Speaking of, how’s it looking, Hawks?” Nezu asked.

“I don’t know.” Hawks’ voice trickled in through the speakers, “The doctor doesn’t seem to know we’re here, but...”

“What’s wrong?” Nighteye asked.

“Something feels off with this guy. He’s been muttering and talking himself in circles for hours about Joker and Shigaraki, and what he’d do to either if he got his hands on them. It makes me sick.”

“So the wacko completely lost it.” Miruko smirked as she cracked her knuckles, “This’ll be easy then!”

“Don’t underestimate him.” Yagi was like a ghost secluded around his own computer screens, “All For One kept him close for a reason.”

“Yes, I wouldn’t discount the doctor’s mental state just yet.” Nezu said, “He may have been driven to madness from All For One’s death and the League being dismantled, but that could also make him more dangerous and volatile. We’ll need to take extra precautions.”

Nighteye gained a critical gleam to his eyes, “Underestimating him could prove fatal. I’d rather not make that mistake.”

Miruko sobered, “... I guess you’re right.”

At that moment Aizawa walked in, his posture tense and alert, “Nezu, everyone’s ready.”

Nighteye glanced at Iida.

“Pixie Bob, are you almost done?” Iida Tensei asked into his headset.

“Yep! The beasties are all packed and ready to go!”

“Very well.” Nighteye turned to Aizawa and Miruko, “Meet with your assigned team by the elevator. It’ll get hectic once I give the green light to go down.”

“On it!” Miruko rushed out, “Let’s go, Eraser!”

Eraserhead sighed, but followed her out and kept pace as they entered the hospital.

They’d be the first to go in.

Team 1 would be the heaviest hitters who would protect the strike team, whose sole purpose was to capture the doctor; Miruko herself, Gang Orca, Hawks, Eraserhead, Snipe, Present Mic, Mr. Compress, and the largest share of Pixie Bob’s earthen beasts.

Team 2 would focus on restraining any defeated Nomu from Team 1: Best Jeanist, Tiger, Pixie Bob, Spinner, Vlad King, Midnight, Bubble Girl and Centipeder, along with a majority of the armed officers and the lesser share of the beasts.

Team 3 was full surface support, led by Ryukyu as she circled overhead to prevent any possible escape attempts. Those who would provide intel and back-up communications; Nighteye, Yagi, Nezu, Iida Tensei, Ragdoll to keep tabs on everyone’s location while Mandalay would relay orders in case something happened to their tech. The smallest group of beasts and remaining police, under the command of Tsukauchi, would maintain the hospital’s perimeter.

Tsukauchi’s... acted strange. An ice cold fortitude overtook him. Miruko thought it was business as usual for a detective. But yesterday as they finalized their plans, Tsukauchi gave Eraserhead and Present Mic the most brokenhearted expression when they had their backs turned. She’d only ever seen such despair on his face once... after Kamino. He caught her looking and kept his stoicism from there.

There was obviously something immensely personal in this raid that the detective wasn't sharing. She wouldn't pry as long as she got to kick ass and make a madman pay, but it stuck to the back of her mind.

She and Eraserhead raced through the small maze of hallways and down a set of stairs until they reached the morgue. It was cold and musky, the scent of iron slabs and chemicals made her stomach churn. The elevator had been hidden behind some false walls next to the cold storage she absolutely refused to look at.

The others, aside from Mr. Compress, were already here. The elevator was guarded with two police officers, who saluted as they entered the room.

Gang Orca, Hawks, and Snipe huddled next to each other, rearing to go.

Present Mic's expression brightened when Eraserhead came in, but the hero maintained his professionalism by staying quiet.

Mr. Compress shot into the room last, breathless.

"I'm here! And I brought presents." He reached into his coat pocket and shoved several blue marbles in each of their hands.

Gang Orca stared at the tiny orbs rolling around his palm, "How are we to use these?"

"And are they safe to put in our pockets?" Snipe asked, "I'd hate to have my costume torn apart by accident, partner."

Mr. Compress snorted, "Simply throw them down on the ground and they'll break. But do give them ample space just in case your marble has a bigger beast."

“What about the other teams?” Present Mic shoved the marbles in his jacket pocket, “You gave them the warning too, right?”

“Have a bit of Faith in me, won’t you?” Mr. Compress wagged a finger at the heroes, “Yes, I gave the same instructions to the others. And yes, I’ll make sure they work as intended every time. I have a mental link with every marble, so I know what each of them contains, their exact location, and those who hold them.”

Hawks’ wings twitched, “Huh, so it’s not that much different to the link I have with my feathers. Nice.”

“Enough chit-chat.” Nighteye’s voice came through their comms, cleaving their mood like a ruthless executioner, “I’m giving you the green light to go in. Team 2 will follow after exactly 5 minutes have passed. Good luck.”

Gang Orca nodded, “Understood. Team 1, going in.”

One of the guards pressed a button for the elevator. They tensed as the door let out a pleasant ding, its doors scraping open. The elevator was empty. Nothing happened.

They piled inside and Miruko jammed the only button with her thumb.

The doors closed with a metallic groan, and they descended into the bowels of a true devil’s castle.

Joker closed his eyes and took a deep breath. The wind caressed his hair and made his long coat tails flutter around his legs, the dull murmur of its breath whispering in his ears. After a few moments of reveling in the fresh air, he opened his eyes to the full might of the chilled autumn sun.

The fake city stretched out all around him. The rest of the school could be seen from his vantage point at the top of the tallest skyscraper in Ground Beta. The main building, that giant H shaped monument to heroism, was a shining speck in the distance.

He looked down as the cool wind gained strength, the dull murmur becoming something of a small roar. To any witness, the situation would look grim. A single teenager standing at such a height that made the streets and surrounding buildings look like tiny smudges of color, nothing stopped the tips of his boots hanging from the edge of a sheer drop that made him dizzy. One step and he could surrender to gravity.

Before his thoughts strayed too far, a bright ribbon of golden scales swirled in his vision. Kohryu circled the lone skyscraper, floating as free as a baby otter taking its first swim away from its mother. He turned his ridged back to the ground, his belly exposed to the sky as he kept his eyes locked on Joker.

“Are you prepared for such a drop?”

“It’s daunting, but I know you’ll be there. Fafnir, Alice, Pixie, are you in position?”

Fafnir cackled, Joker could see nothing more than the silver reflection of his scales on the roof of a building far below, “Ready for chaos!”

Alice curtsied from another rooftop, “Ready, big brother.”

“Let’s get this show on the road!!” Pixie yelled from a third rooftop.

Joker stepped forward. Wind wailed around him as he plummeted, coat tails flapping wildly in the wind. The raging sense of freedom from his free-fall boiled in his chest until bubbles of laughter escaped him, and he grinned as he pulled his momentum forward into a head-first dive. He stared at his own faint reflection in the glass skyscraper, a smudge of ebony swimming in gold as Kohryu rushed to meet him.

Joker shot out his grapple, the coiling wire wrapping around one of Kohryu's great horns.

His stomach dropped at the sudden shift in momentum as he swung in a large arc over the city skyline. He imagined a bright spotlight and thousands of people cheering under his feet during the real thing, but for now Kohryu circled the skyscraper with Joker dangling like a spider on a web.

"Now!" Joker commanded.

Kohryu roared as he cast the first spell in the chain of magic.

Concentrate's blue light filled the city with dancing aurora. Fafnir followed with a bellow of his own as he added Cosmic Flare to the stream of enhanced magic. A blanket of darkness covered the sky, shifting the whole of Ground Beta from a bright and sunny day to a mask of blackness shimmering with a galaxy of stars. A blue meteor of astronomic proportions streamed overhead.

Their united soul shivered as Pixie and Alice's bonds tangled together, combining their Almighty magic to concoct a refined version of the Megidolaon Stars. The darkness of Cosmic Flare masked the bright white flash, and the stars rained down as if they were tears shed by the cosmos itself.

A sea of twinkling white lights fell around them as gentle as snowflakes, rainbows of a thousand colors shimmering through the air as they burst in timed intervals. The colors reflected from Kohryu's scales and sent additional speckles of light in all directions.

Joker activated Third Eye as the cosmic show neared its end, "Time to 'stick the landing'."

"Understood!" Kohryu replied.

Kohryu dropped towards a particular set of buildings, one of which Third Eye highlighted in gold. The dragon suddenly veered upwards when they got close enough. Joker retracted the grapple and soared. He pulled himself into acrobatic twirls, and looked as if he would pull off a majestic landing at the center of the designated rooftop.

But Kohryu purposely overshot.

Joker zoomed over that building and towards the glass windows of the taller one next to it. He covered his head with his arms as the glass shattered, his vision blurring as he rolled several times, his boots skidding across the floor as he slid to a stop. Glass peppered the floor around him in tinkling shards.

Joker's heart pounded frantically, the adrenaline coursing through him ebbing away as he caught his breath. He stood and brushed stray pieces of glass from his costume and shook some from his hair. As if on cue, his phone rang from within his pocket. Ectoplasm's number showed on screen and he answered.

"Are you alright, Joker!?" Ectoplasm exclaimed before Joker could open his mouth.

"Yep! I'm perfectly unharmed. Why, were you worried about little old me?"

Ectoplasm breathed a long sigh of relief, "Geez, kid. You sure know how to keep people on the edge of their seats."

Joker smirked, "It's my job."

"You idiot!" Morgana yowled in the background, "I told you not to do anything crazy and get yourself hurt! Mercurius was twitchy the entire time!"

"Merp!!"

"But I didn't get hurt. I'm fine, honest. You know Fafnir has the best physical defence in my stock." Joker turned towards the camera in the corner of the room and gingerly waved, "See? There's not a single scratch on me."

Morgana grumbled under his breath as Ectoplasm chuckled, "As long as you're really okay, Joker, that's all I care about. That show was impressive though. Is that your finale?"

"No, but it does lead directly into it. Can't tell you the rest though or my Personas would be mad."

"Fair enough. Did you want to keep practicing or take a break?"

Joker pretended to think it over, "I'll make my way down and take five while my Personas keep practicing."

"Very well. We'll stay in the observation room in the meantime."

"Roger." Joker hung up, and gave a two finger salute to the camera before taking an easy stride out of the room. He turned off his phone when he was out of camera view.

This building could not be more perfect. While not the tallest by any means, there were still 34 floors chock-full of blind spots they could use for their cover. Kohryu shot him into the 31st floor. There'd be plenty of time for him to 'walk' his way down to ground level. Joker strolled through the first blind spot on the 30th level, then another one the 28th. But he broke out into a sprint once he entered the largest one on the 26th floor.

"We'll keep Ectoplasm busy with our light show!" Pixie said as he shot around the first corner.

"He won't even notice that big brother is gone."

"We'll cover you as best we can, Trickster, but make haste regardless." Kohryu said.

Joker slowed to a stop at an intersection, double checking his surroundings with Third Eye to make sure they were in the clear.

With a nod to himself, he retrieved his Key and opened a door. Elizabeth stepped out and held it open to him, her golden eyes alight with mischief.

“Have fun!”

Joker handed her his phone and stated dryly, “I’ll try.”

Joker dove inside.

Lavenza, Margaret, and Theodore stood around the entry point, the wall of light at the top of the stairs. Lavenza touched the stones around the frame of the white light. It rippled like a stone dropped in water, then returned to normal.

“It should be connected to the other door now, Trickster.” Lavenza said with a polite smile, “Please be careful.”

“And remember you can use your Key for a quick escape as well. There’s no need to sneak back to the closet.” Theodore frowned, “... Just in case.”

Joker nodded before he walked through the light.

The elevator door opened to a nightmare.

A single long hallway stretched before them, covered in pitch black pools of darkness with the occasional dot of light. The single bright bulb in front of the elevator flickered and sparked. This would be prime real estate for a B-rated horror flic, Miruko thought, as long as the heroes weren’t too stupid to be reduced to bloody pulps by the end.

“What’s that smell!?” Present Mic covered his nose as a thick pungent stench hit them, “Why didn’t you say anything, Hawks!?”

His voice carried through the cold iron hallways.

“Shh!” Eraser shoved his hand over Present Mic’s mouth, “Be quiet. Unless you want the Doctor to know we’re here.”

“Ugh, my feathers only pick up sound, not smell.” Hawks whispered as he pinched his nose, looking rather green in the face, “We’ll just have to deal with it.”

“Y’all should invest in gas masks.” Snipe said as he tapped his mask with his left pointer finger, his right hand holding on to the gun at his hip, “I don’t smell a thing.”

“Or any normal masks, for that matter.” Mr. Compress tipped his hat, “The smell is greatly reduced for me. I don’t envy those with enhanced senses.”

“Lucky.” Miruko grumbled as her stomach turned sour.

“Focus.” Gang Orca took the first step out of the elevator, “Be prepared for anything.”

A few scarlet feathers shot from Hawks’ wings and pinned themselves in everyone’s clothes, “I’ll guide everyone through here, and get the strike team away if it gets too heated.”

They crept onward, keeping their footsteps silent as they melded into the first stretch of darkness. Hawks kept his wings half open when they fell into shadow, searching for any sign of life. Miruko’s ears twitched for a similar reason. She picked up their faint footfalls and the metallic groans and creaks throughout the tense silence. The hairs on the back of her neck stood on end as they ventured further into the lion’s den. The pungent scent only got thicker as they reached another hallway

Odd stains and scratch marks littered the walls and floors, and they stiffened when an animalistic groan echoed from somewhere ahead.

“Stop.” Hawks commanded in a hushed tone. A pair of feather blades flew into his hands as he pointed at an intersection ahead,

“Something’s coming.”

Snipe unlatched his gun from his belt and whispered, “Is it the Doctor?”

“I don’t think so?” Hawks squinted, his head tilting like an owl listening for a mouse, “It’s.... as small as a child? It’s not an animal, as it’s walking on two limbs. I didn’t sense it before now.”

The hero teachers’ expression darkened considerably. Gang Orca’s hands tightened into fists, his grip powerful enough to crush skulls into powder.

“A child?” Mr. Compress mused, “I don’t remember the Doctor saying anything about children-”

The squeak of shoes reached them. They froze when a strange creature walked into view. A tiny green-skinned Nomu who traipsed awkwardly on arms laced up in bright yellow shoes, a long wire trailed from its backside and down the hall it came from, a glass cage encompassed its exposed brain. Soulless blank eyes and a toothy smile turned to them.

Its mouth cracked open... and it screamed.

Shock-waves of deafening noise hit them. The walls and floors cracked under its power, and Miruko clamped her hands over her ears as a sharp pain pierced her skull. A bang skirted her muffled hearing, and the screeching stopped as soon as it started.

Miruko gasped as her hands fell to her side, a small trickle of blood speckled on her left palm. A sharp pounding hammered her left ear, accompanied by the feeling of cotton being stuffed in her brain.

By the looks of it, most of them were either dizzy or gently prodding bleeding ears. Hawks had his eyes scrunched shut as he massaged his temples, his feather blades forgotten as his wings became a frazzled mess.

“What the hell was that!?” Present Mic said.

Gang Orca looked in shock at Snipe, who pointed the smoking barrel of his gun towards the pile of guts and blood staining the floor.

“What?” Snipe jabbed his thumb at Present Mic, “Being with this guy every day taught me about the importance of having a stock of good quality earplugs.”

“Thank heavens for that.” Mr. Compress muttered, “Otherwise we’d all be rendered unconscious before the fight even began.”

“We should move.” Eraser shook his head as if to clear his muddled thoughts, a small trickle of blood leaking from his right ear, “We don’t know if we alerted-”

“Johnny, what’s wrong!?” A voice called out, “Johnny!!”

Skittering shuffles and footsteps rushed towards them, and their target appeared. He staggered to a stop in front of the bloody corpse of the tiny Nomu, his doctor’s coat littered with tears and grisly stains. His bushy mustache was untamed.

“Johnny!?” Fat tears leaked from the Doctor’s goggles as his voice broke, “How did... what-”

Stupefied, he looked at the group of heroes still trying to recover. He cried out and scrambled away, the silver flick of Eraserhead’s capture weapon missing him by a hair’s breadth.

“After him!” Gang Orca roared as he lunged forward, digging his meaty claws in the wall to help throw his unsteady gait around the corner.

All notion of stealth was thrown to the wind as the sounds of breaking glass, sloshing liquids, and the grating shrieks of Nomu heralded the true nightmare of the underground lab.

Three steps was all it took to travel from Ground Beta to a dark supply closet several miles away.

“Why couldn’t I have this back home?” Joker muttered.

He smiled sadly as he wondered how Yusuke and the others would react to teleporting across Tokyo to cheat the system. It would’ve saved him time and train fair. He idly wondered if it was possible to teleport across Japan’s major cities. He doubted he’d be allowed to test it though.

Kohryu, Fafnir, Pixie, and Alice’s presences pulled at him like a magnet. The distance prodded his brain like the end of a sharp stick. He pinched the bridge of his nose and shoved the unease to the corner of his mind, instead focusing on his current objective. He searched his pockets for the one and only item he had been able to sneak under Power Loader’s nose; a Convertizer.

An upgraded version of Stealthanol he created through experimenting with Hatsume and Hitoshi, and it was thanks to Hitoshi distracting Power Loader when they were in the lab a few days ago that he was able to swipe it.

Vasuki could use a skill to make the heroes forget if Joker got caught, but having a weird gap in their memory would have its own risks. He used the upgraded Convertizer on himself, and then crept towards the door.

He put his ear to it.

Silence.

The remaining teachers should be in class with their students for the next half hour. He closed his eyes and listened for a few seconds more before cracking open the door. A sliver of light spilled in, but it looked like he was in the clear.

He took a deep breath, activated Third Eye, and left the closet.

His steps were quick and agile, and he stuck to the short route Mr. Compress set out for him. There was only a few corners to turn before Nezu's door became visible at the end of the hallway. It looked too easy to the naked eye.

Third Eye told a different story.

Cameras shed green cones of light to touch every facet of the hallway, bright red invisible lasers would let none pass their ridiculously complicated web undetected.

"Mr. Compress said Nezu had an electronic lock on his door, but what the heck are we supposed to do about this? There was no mention of invisible lasers back at the Sports Festival!"

"Perhaps Nezu added such security because of your break in at the Sports Festival?" Ishtar said.

"You mean this is all my fault?"

Ishtar smiled sweetly, "It's not impossible, no?"

Joker sighed sharply through his nose. Third Eye revealed all the wires to the security system fed into Nezu's office, and his office alone. There would be no way to shut them off from the outside. Someone as small as Pixie could slowly flutter through this mess and get to the other side, but she was busy at Ground Beta, and without an accessible off-switch that would be pointless anyway.

Baal's chuckle echoed through the mindscape, "Remember, Trickster, there's always a path through the stickiest of situations for those who think outside the box."

Joker's eyes trailed towards the windows lining the hallway.

"Oh you have got to be kidding me." He muttered.

He walked towards one of the windows and to the drop below. He wondered if Fafnir's defences covered such a fall so he wouldn't get injured, or would he be uninjured but make a perfect indent of himself in the concrete like in old American cartoons? Since it was Repel Physical... would he just bounce right back up? He wasn't keen to find out.

There was a slight ridge running along the outside, so if he could just shimmy himself across...

But Nezu's office had floor to ceiling windows, with no obvious way to open them. He squinted and looked to the end of the hallway at Nezu's door. There were one or two windows he could enter through, untouched by the visible cones from the cameras and the wall of lasers.

"I could carry you across from the outside." Gabriel offered.

"Like a princess!?" Alice teased.

"It's too risky," Joker looked at the sunlight shining through the windows, "The cameras could pick up on our shadows. I'll just do it the old fashioned way."

"Very well, but do be careful." Gabriel said, "I would hate to see you end up as a stain on the pavement..."

The window opened without protest and he hopped on the sill, crouching there like some demented gargoyle. He gripped the window sill and clambered out. His boots slipped over the smooth glass, and he scrambled for several moments before he found proper traction.

"I almost can't bear to watch..." Byakko said as he placed a paw over his eyes.

"It's fine. We're fine." Joker said with a breathy laugh. "It's going to be just fine."

"Keep telling yourself that, and maybe you'll believe it one day."
Byakko replied.

Joker used his head and shoulder to close the window, and then he began his perilous journey across.

"Get out of our way!!" Miruko howled as blood splashed and Nomu bodies fell all around her.

She flipped and kicked her way through the long hallway, Hawks' blades cut through them like butter, while a targeted sonic attack from Gang Orca tore through another. Eraserhead trapped a smaller Nomu in his capture weapon and left it vulnerable enough for Snipe to shoot it through the head.

Mr. Compress hopped merrily around their strikes, sealing large parts of their bodies in his marbles and leaving a bloody mess behind.

The Nomu fell like dominoes. Miruko cackled as a heavily reinforced door appeared at the end of the hallway, her bulging leg muscles tensing as she launched herself at it like a rocket.

The underground lab trembled as the door crumpled like aluminum foil.

They streamed into a large room, hazy purple light and a low fog clung to the floor. Several Nomu tanks lined the walls. But these were no baseline Nomu. They had more unique body types and intelligence gleamed from their eyes as they screamed and writhed in their tanks, glass cracking under their pounding fists.

"High-ends!" Gang Orca yelled.

A shriek of terror came from the other side of the room, and they saw the Doctor flee through another door.

Gang Orca grabbed Hawks' jacket and flung him towards the door, "Take Eraserhead and Snipe and go after him!"

"What!?" Hawks straightened himself out and hovered, "We can't leave you here!"

"But we can't let the doctor get away either." Eraserhead stated.

"Just go, you dumb bird brain!!" Miruko screamed as bigger cracks lined the tanks, fluid spewing out, "We can handle these losers!"

Hawks swore.

He, along with Eraserhead and Snipe, tossed down their marbles just as the tanks gave way to the High-Ends' relentless assault. Several stone beasts and warriors rose like valiant titans in the face of an impossible wave.

With a hard flap of his wings, Hawks zoomed towards the door the Doctor went through, dragging Eraserhead and Snipe along from the feathers in their costumes. Their escape was covered by a beast sacrificing itself, a tiger with bat wings and a scorpion's tail that was impaled with a tentacle extending from one of the Nomu's head.

Sprays of dirt peppered their backs, but they didn't look back as the horrible sounds of battle battered their injured eardrums.

"We're never doing that ever again." Joker said as he massaged the burning soreness out of his fingers.

"I admit, watching you nearly fall again at the end almost gave me a heart attack." Satanael said.

Joker rolled his eyes. He almost lost his grip trying to get the second window open. He ended up having to slide the tip of Paradise Lost into the window to open it. Maybe he closed it a bit too hard out of spite, but at least they were out of camera view.

Joker turned towards Nezu's door, just a few feet ahead without any cameras or lasers. "Now that that's over, let's just-"

"STOP!"

Joker froze at Satanael's roar.

"What's all this ruckus, Demon Dad Of Doom!?" Pixie snapped.

"Joker, look at your feet."

Joker looked down, and Third Eye revealed a single laser cutting across the floor inches from his boots.

"Between the silent alarms, cameras, and motion detectors, its no wonder how Nezu knows whenever someone is close to his office." Joker said, "I figured it was just his enhanced hearing."

He gathered up his coat tails and gingerly stepped over it, double checking the last foot and a half to Nezu's door for any more traps before letting his coat tails down. Joker gave a silent sigh of relief when there were none. Now, to the final obstacle: The door itself.

Joker ran his gloved hand down it. The door handle proved it was locked, but like Mr. Compress informed them, there was no keyhole to pick through. Maybe he could do the same thing he did to open the window, but shoving a dagger through it might leave obvious damage.

A presence rose in his mind like a building storm, "Such a meager security measure is no match for my power." Odin's lightning trickled through Joker's veins, "It requires but a fraction of the might we wield!"

"Too much and we'll blow out the circuitry and leave our entry obvious, too little won't do anything." Satanael said.

"Hmph." Odin ignored Satanael, "Well, Trickster?"

Joker closed his eyes and concentrated on Odin's bond, a long stream of bifrost crackling with golden lightning. The prismatic energy stream, oddly enough, had quite a potent smell of mead to it. It took three hours of meditation in the Velvet Room to master the intoxicating force of nature.

He pulled on the smallest stream of Odin's magic, and opened his eyes to the tiny snap of lightning buzzing from his palm into the door. Joker waited, holding his breath at the electronic hum inside the door, and the door opened without protest.

Odin beamed with pride as Joker rushed in and closed the door. He went straight to Nezu's desk and turned on the computer monitor. He paused, looking at Admiral Feesh sitting innocently in one of the chairs.

"You don't mind, do you, pal?" Joker chuckled after a moment, "Of course not. Thanks."

Then he looked at the monitor and frowned.

"Password protected. Of course."

He dug through his pockets for La Brava's flash drive and plugged it into the tower hidden under Nezu's desk. Joker smirked as La Brava's virus within the flash drive cracked through the password with ruthless efficiency. The screen gave a happy chime as it opened to the home screen.

"He-hee has the background set to a picture of himself and the stuffed fish, ho? How-he strange-ho!" Black frost commented.

Joker ignored this as a pop-up appeared and began the copy of Nezu's whole hard drive.

"Wow. Over 20 petabytes?" Joker said, "Oracle would salivate at this much data."

"Can La Brava's tiny device hold that much?" Baal asked.

"I guess we'll find out." Joker watched the download meter sluggishly hit 5%, "This is going to take ages. Let's see what else he has on here."

Joker decided a little extra snooping was in order. He found the camera feed. Hallways, busy classrooms, the cafeteria, and various points from all of the training gyms could be viewed from here. Joker lazily scrolled through them, but froze on one of them in a nearby hallway.

Hound Dog walked with a folder under his arm with Gentle Criminal at his side. On the outside, Gentle Criminal seemed calm. Joker knew his tells. Twice Gentle Criminal tried to smooth down his immaculate hair or fix his scarf and tailcoat.

Time already wasn't on their side, but it was about to get a whole lot worse.

Joker watched the screen like a hawk as Hound Dog led him through the familiar hallways until he reached a certain intersection, farther down than where Joker entered.

Don't turn left.

Don't turn left.

Hound Dog turned left, now directly facing Nezu's door and confidently striding closer.

Sweat broke out on the back of Joker's neck when Hound Dog walked under the first camera, nose twitching as he curiously sniffed the windows. Just a few windows down, right out of the camera feed, and Hound Dog would have the exact window Joker clambered out of. Gentle Criminal said something, and Hound Dog simply shrugged before he continued. Hound Dog passed under the cameras and through the invisible lasers without a care in the world. A little notification appeared on Nezu's toolbar when the first laser was broken.

Joker looked at the download progress as his heart rate picked up.

15%

He reached up and traced his gloved fingers around the Key.

17%

It wasn't enough for La Brava to make a virus. He could leave it here to finish, but this was supposed to be their one and only shot to get this information. Joker looked between the screen and the door, which Hound Dog was less than ten feet from.

19%

Hound Dog passed though the last motion sensor closest to Nezu's door, another notification appearing on his computer.

Muffled voices halted at the door, giving Joker the time to make his snap decision. The drive would be hidden since the computer tower was under Nezu's desk, so if he just turned off the screen... maybe Hound Dog wouldn't notice anything out of place.

"Damnit." Joker whispered.

He turned the monitor off and whipped out the Key, the Velvet Room door vanishing as Nezu's door opened.

Hawks swung his feather blade down.

Blood splattered as he sliced another tiny Nomu in half, blood, organs, and sickly yellow skin falling to the floor with a nauseating splat.

"Mocha!!" The Doctor screamed as he backpedaled, "You monsters!"

"It's the end of the line." Hawks stated, his voice toned with biting ice. "Give up."

They had chased the Doctor into the final chamber with a huge tank connected to a network of thick tubes and wires all throughout the room. Thankfully, it was empty.

The Doctor fell over the front console when Eraserhead wrapped him up in a silvery cocoon, but something strange happened when Eraserhead activated his quirk. The Doctor's skin melted like clay, sagging and swimming in wrinkles, leaving behind a decrepit old man.

The shock of the change made Eraser blink, the doctor returning to normal when the quirk stopped.

Before they could say a word, their prisoner broke out into heaving laughter. Streams of tears leaked from his goggles as he collapsed onto the floor, gasping for breath between fits. He fully succumbed to his madness as the horrible wheezing laughter grated their ears and made them shiver.

Snipe grumbled under his breath as he walked up to the Doctor and smacked him in the head with the butt of his pistol. Eerie silence filled the room as the Doctor collapsed, unconscious.

"Nighteye, we have the target in custody." Hawks said, scowling as he kept eyes on their captive, "What's the status of everyone else?"

Dust rained down on them as another rumble shook the lab.

"... Still fighting." Nighteye said, "Team 2 joined the battle against the High-Ends right after you chased the Doctor. Tsukauchi has a transport ready for him, but it's not safe to bring him up yet."

"I'm going to back them up." Hawks looked between Eraserhead and Snipe, "I'll come back for you when its safe."

Eraserhead tightened his capture weapon over the Doctor's body, "Snipe and I have him."

"Damn right we do." Snipe kept his gun pointed at the Doctor, "Even if he wakes up, this snake's not going anywhere."

Hawks nodded and dove out of the room.

He never wanted to know what the Doctor originally had in store for that huge tank, and thankfully, they'd never have to find out.

A few minutes before...

Gentle Criminal made a pained grunt before Hound Dog could take another step.

"Are you alright?" Hound Dog asked as they stood before Nezu's office, "You've been acting off today. Don't think I haven't noticed."

"Ah," Gentle Criminal put on an easy smile, "I'm afraid my breakfast isn't agreeing with me very much. I'm hoping it won't evolve into food poisoning."

Hound Dog's expression softened, "Recovery Girl isn't here today. We'll finish this up and you can go back to the dorms to rest, if you want."

"It would be appreciated."

Hound Dog nodded. He turned back to the door, but stopped halfway through. His nose twitched by another window, his brow heavily furrowing.

"Is something the matter?"

"No... It's nothing." Hound Dog shook his head and reached into his pocket for a key card.

Ah, all this preparation and they didn't know about these cards. This secret mission of theirs would have been much easier if they knew about them, but a missing card might lead to its own troubles.

Relief washed over Gentle Criminal as it opened and they walked into an empty office.

"It feels strange to walk in here without Nezu present." Gentle Criminal said as he scanned the bookshelves and desk, "Why have we come here? Could this not wait until he returns?"

"These files need to be dropped off now in case things get... busier later." Hound Dog pocketed the key card and gestured to the files in his hands, "Besides, these can't wait too long."

"What are they?"

Hound Dog's toothy grin turned sad, "A list of students and various programs separate from U.A. We offer counseling, but sometimes the students and their families need a little extra help to get by. Nezu takes care of any fees, especially for medications students need but can't afford."

"That's..." Gentle Criminal blinked rapidly, "That's incredibly kind of him."

Hound Dog nodded, "It's something I suggested ages ago, and Nezu was more than happy to do it."

The hero walked to Nezu's desk and set the file on it.

Gentle Criminal knew Hound Dog sensed something when his shoulders suddenly tensed, his fur bristling as he put his hands flat on Nezu's desk and smelled the air around it.

"What's wrong?"

"I smell... nothing ."

“Isn’t that good?”

“I’ve delivered dozens of these folders to Nezu’s office, both when he was here and not.” A growl rumbled through his throat, “I know the scents like the back of my hand; his collection of teas, paper and ink, the slight musky smell around Nezu himself. Nezu’s scent is too weak here. Any scent is too weak for it to be natural.” Hound Dog turned towards Gentle Criminal, his eyes piercing through Gentle Criminal. “There has only been one time where there was a suspicious lack of scent... right outside Musutafu General Hospital.”

“Perhaps its because Nezu hasn’t been in here at all today? He’s been gone quite often as of late.”

“Hmm...” Hound Dog stared at him, as if searching for something, “I need to make a quick call. Return to the dorms, you’re dismissed for the day.”

Gentle Criminal nodded, turned tail, and did just that, keeping a natural pace without looking like he was running away.

Red feathers pinned the female High-End Nomu to the wall, screaming and thrashing, “I’ll kill you! I’LL KILL YOU!!”

Miruko was a blur as her kick smashed into the female Nomu’s head, blood and brains flowing into the deepening cracks spreading all across the wall. They expected the Nomu to regenerate at a rapid rate, and be back in the fight within seconds, as with what happened with all of these High-Ends. The Nomu’s arms went limp and she fell into a heap against Hawks’ feathers.

“Crush the head...” Hawks whirled around to the bedlam of blood and earth, of heroes being pushed to the brink against a losing battle.

“Crush the head!!” Miruko screamed as she launched herself at her next target, the largest High-End currently grappling with Gang Orca,

“These assholes can’t regenerate without the brain!!”

Many tired voices howled in renewed vigor as the tide of battle changed.

“Woah! Look at that!” Mona bounced on all fours as they watched another shower of stars fall, “It gets cooler every time.”

“Merp!” Lady Stubbs declared.

Ectoplasm chuckled, “Joker’s never done anything like this before, for fun?”

“No...” The excitement died on Mona’s face, replaced by a sadness that tugged on Ectoplasm’s heart, “We’ve been too busy just trying to survive. We haven’t been able to let loose and have fun in a really long time.”

“Merp...” Lady Stubbs gently rubbed her head against Mona’s, making the other cat smile.

“... I see. Oh, one moment.” Ectoplasm reached for his phone as it rung, frowning at Hound Dog’s number on the screen. He answered it, “Yes?”

“Do you have eyes on Joker and the cats?”

Ectoplasm glanced across the collection of screens. He frowned, as he hadn’t seen Joker in the last several minutes. He was about to answer, when the kid finally showed himself, calmly walking across a hallway as he looked down at the phone in his hand. Mona and Lady Stubbs were, of course, right beside him.

“Yes, I do. Why?”

“Grrrr, I just wanted to check something.”

“You’re not making much sense, my friend.”

“Are the cats around you right now?”

“Yes?”

Hound Dog hung up. Ectoplasm looked at his phone in bewilderment as Hound Dog sent a text seconds later.

[Hound Dog]

So Joker and the cats have been in Ground Beta all day?

[Ectoplasm]

Yes, I'm positive. I've been watching Joker and his Personas practice since we got here this morning.

[Hound Dog]

Hmm....

Gentle Criminal was at my side throughout the day and Thirteen confirmed the same for La Brava. Kaito is with Eri at the dorms, being watched over by one of your clones. All cards and keys have been accounted for.

I'm going to check Joker's phone, just in case.

Ectoplasm's stomach sank.

Did Hound Dog suspect Joker of something? In all honesty, the thought of spying on a teenager's phone didn't sit well with him. But in this instance, with Hound Dog acting so strange, he decided to check on it, too.

Joker's GPS information for today started at the dorms and followed the bus route from the school to Ground Beta, and perfectly mimicked everything he did at Ground Beta today. Not a single line was out of place. Joker's current conversation with Kaito was just... normal.

[Grandpa]

Did you have any plans for dinner tonight?

[Joker]

I'm craving something hot and sour.

You don't think the heroes would let us order take out, would you?

[Grandpa]

You could ask Nezu when he gets back.

[Joker]

And insult Lunch Rush? No way!

Ectoplasm backed out before he felt too invasive.

[Ectoplasm]

All information points to him being in Ground Beta. His GPS information proves it.

What exactly are you insinuating right now?

Do you suspect him of something?

[Hound Dog]

I don't know.

It could be nothing and I just overreacted. If so, I'll need to apologize to Gentle Criminal. We'll see when everyone comes back to the dorms.

Hound Dog said nothing else. Ectoplasm sighed and switched to a chat with Joker.

[Ectoplasm]

You've been in that building for a while, kid.

Everything okay?

[Joker]

Yep!

That botched landing took a little more out of me than I realized, so I had to sit down for a few minutes.

Sorry to worry you!

[Ectoplasm]

Are you sure you want to continue practicing?

[Joker]

I'll be fine :)

I really want to try that landing with Kohryu again before we call it quits.

[Ectoplasm]

Very well, just don't push yourself too hard.

User Joker changed Ectoplasm's name to Best Ghost Uncle

[Best Ghost Uncle]

... Seriously?

[Joker]

I haven't had many people check in to make sure I was alright.

So... I appreciate it.

Congrats on the new nickname, Ghost Uncle! ;)

Ectoplasm startled.

"Are you okay?" Mona asked as both cats stared in concern, "You've been gawking at your phone for a while."

"Yes." Ectoplasm awkwardly cleared his throat as he willed his heart to stop being so darned warm, "I'm fine."

"If you say so." Mona said with a teasing lilt.

Ectoplasm ignored them and watched Joker descend to the ground level.

Kaito grimaced.

Last night their little group gathered in the Velvet Room, minus Mr. Compress and Spinner, to come up with dozens of flavor or food combinations as code words for Joker's mission.

Sweet and salty - Complete success with no trouble.

Umami - Some trouble, but still a success.

Bitter like dark chocolate - Too risky to leave Ground Beta for any reason.

Cold and savory - Left Ground Beta, but couldn't access Nezu's office.

Among many others.

But hot and sour meant that he reached Nezu's office and began the copy, but had to bail without the drive because he was about to get caught.

"Shit."

"What's 'shit'?"

Kaito looked up at Eri. The dorm's kitchen table was a mess of papers, paint, and more crayons than one little girl could shake a stick at. Eri's current work was a scribble of gold that looked somewhat like Kohryu, with stars all around him in different colors.

"It's a bad word." Kaito said, "Don't repeat that to anybody, okay?"

"Oh." She resumed coloring in Kohryu's scales with a yellow crayon, "I heard a lot of bad words... and other things... from Overhaul's friends."

Kaito frowned, but he decided to change the subject as his brain scrambled to find a way to fix their situation before it ended in disaster.

“Say, we’ve been cooped up in here all day.” Kaito said, “Why don’t you grab the camera and we can take pictures around the school? We can show Nezu how good you are at photography when he gets back.”

Eri’s eyes lit up as she dropped the yellow crayon, “Okay!”

She hopped off and ran out of the kitchen to get the camera from her room. Curious, the Ectoplasm clone popped his head in.

“Is everything alright?”

“Yes.” Kaito stood and began collecting Eri’s artwork and supplies into a neat pile, “I want to take some more photos with Eri. Nezu’s been wanting to see her pictures, and I was thinking we could show him when he gets back today. Is that alright?”

The clone nodded, “As long as you don’t mind me coming with you.”

“Of course. We could all use some fresh air.”

“Very well. I’ll wait for the two of you by the door.”

Kaito frowned when the clone left.

He could pull off his half-baked plan with no small amount of luck. He just needs to pull the wool over the eyes of the smartest beings in the world. Hopefully he could pull it off without a hitch.

... Hopefully.

“Has anyone ever called you Doc Jeanist?” Miruko asked.

“A few of my sidekicks, but it’s a nickname that doesn’t come up in the public.” Best Jeanist said as his quirk controlled the clean thread stitching a grisly gash going down Miruko’s arm, “People usually think of clothing lines when my name comes up, not the fact that I have years of medical training under my belt. My quirk always came in handy with this sort of thing.”

Miruko snickered as she gently kicked her legs off the side of the cot, “Well, it makes your job easier since we’re literally in a hospital.”

“Quite.” With a fluid flick of his wrist, the thread tied itself at the end of the wound while a long roll of gauze wrapped around Miruko’s arm, “Keep the wound dry and change the gauze every day. If it feels hot to the touch after a few days, or any sign of infection shows, then go to the hospital right away.”

“Aye aye, Doc Jeanist!”

Best Jeanist smiled and shook his head before he helped her to her feet.

They were all on the surface now to have their wounds tended to in the medical tent. The more critically wounded had been shuffled to the surface first with Hawks’ feathers, while the rest of them slowly walked up. He, of course, offered to cover when Recovery Girl had to do emergency surgery on Gang Orca.

Miruko was his last patient, as she simply shoved him away to help others before herself.

Meanwhile, the lab was, for a lack of a better term, completely destroyed. Before they left, dozens of police officers had scattered around, highlighted by the spooky purple lighting while taking notes of the headless High-End Nomu bodies lying on the floor surrounded by pools of their own blood. Mounds of earth revealed the final resting sites of Pixie Bob’s beasts, most of which sacrificed themselves against attacks that otherwise would’ve been fatal to the heroes.

Best Jeanist was glad to have left that behind.

One of the tent flaps opened, and Gang Orca and Recovery Girl walked through.

“Gang Orca, you’re okay!!” Miruko said in obvious relief.

“Orca, you shouldn’t even be on your feet!” Best Jeanist said. “Come and sit down.”

Orca chuckled and waved them off with his good arm, “I’m fine, I promise.”

